War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent.

K. Lew. What ! has your king married the Lady Grey ?

* And now, to sooth⁵ your forgery and his,

* Sends me a paper to persuade me patience ?

* Is this the alliance that he seeks with France ?

* Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner ?

* Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before :
Tis proveth Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty.

War. King Lewis, I here protest,—in sight of heaven,

And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,—

That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's ;

1 Steevens thinks that envy in this place, as in many others, is put for malice or hatred. His situation places him above these, though it cannot secure him from female disdain.

2 Johnson is inclined to think this ironical. The poverty of Margaret's father being a frequent topic of reproach.

3 The queen here applies to Warwick the very words that King Edward, p. 69, addresses to the Deity. It seems doubtful whether these words in the former instance are not in the old play addressed to Warwick also.

4 Conveyance is used for any crafty artifice. The word has already been explained. Vide King Henry VI. Part I. Act I. Sc. 3.

No more my king, for he dishonours me ;
But most himself, if he could see his shame,—
Did I forget, that by the house of York
My father came untimely to his death ?

* Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece ?

* Did I impale him with the regal crown ?

* Did I put Henry from his native right ;

* And am I guerdon'd⁶ at the last with shame ?

* Shame on himself ! for my desert is honour.

* And, to repair my honour lost for him,

* I here renounce him, and return to Henry :

* My noble queen, let former grudges pass,

And henceforth I am thy true servitor ;

I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bona,

And replant Henry in his former state.

* Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd my hate to love ;

* And I forgive and quite forget old faults,

* And joy that thou becom'st King Henry's friend.

War. So much his friend, ay, his unfeigned friend

That, if King Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us

With some few bands of chosen soldiers,

I'll undertake to land them on our coast,

And force the tyrant from his seat by war.

* 'Tis not his new-made bride shall succour him :

* And as for Clarence,—as my letters tell me,

* He's very likely now to fall from him ;

* For matching more for wanton lust than honour,

* Or than for strength and safety of our country.

* Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be re-veng'd,

* But by the help to this distressed queen ?

* Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor
Henry live,

* Unless thou rescue him from foul despair ?

* Bona. My quarrel, and this English queen's, are one.

* War. And mine, fair Lady Bona, joins with yours.

* K. Lew. And mine with hers, and thine, and Margaret's.

Therefore, at last, I firmly am resolv'd,

You shall have aid.

* Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once.

K. Lew. Then England's messenger, return in post ;

And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—

That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,

To reveal it with him and his new bride :

* Thou seest what's past, go fear⁷ thy king withal.

Bona. Tell him, In hope he'll prove a widower shortly,

I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.

Q. Mar. Tell him, My mourning weeds are laid
aside,

And I am ready to put armour on.

War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong ;

And therefore I'll uncrown him, ere't be long.

There's thy reward ; be gone.⁸ [Exit Mess.]

K. Lew. But, Warwick, thou,

And Oxford, with five thousand men,

Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle :

* And, as occasion serves, this noble queen

* And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.

* Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt ;—

* What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty ?

5 To sooth, in ancient language, was 'to countenance a falsehood or forged tale, to uphold one in his talk, and affirm it to be true which he speaketh.' Baret. Malone blunders strangely, taking to sooth in its modern acceptance of to soften.

6 King Edward did attempt a thing once in the earle's house, which was much against the earle's honesty (whether he would have deflowered his daughter or his niece, the certaintie was not for both their honours revealed,) for surely such a thing was attempted by King Edward.—Holinshead, p. 668.

7 Rewarded.

8 Fright.

9 Here we are to suppose that, according to ancient custom, Warwick makes a present to the herald or messenger, who in the old play is called a Post. See note on King Henry V. Act iii. Sc. vii.

War. This shall assure my constant loyalty:—
That if our queen and this young prince agree,
I'll join mine eldest daughter,¹ and my joy,
To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.

Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion:—

*' Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous,
' Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick;
' And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
' That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.*

 Prince.* Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it;

 And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.*

[He gives his hand to WARWICK.]

' K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied,

*' And thou, Lord Bourbon, our high admiral,
' Shall wait them over with our royal fleet.—*

*' I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,
' For mocking marriage with a dame of France.*

[Exeunt all but WARWICK.]

War. I came from Edward as ambassador,
But I return his sworn and mortal foe:
Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,
But dreadful war shall answer his demand.
Had he none else to make a stale,² but me?
Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.
I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again:
Not that I pity Henry's misery,
But seek revenge on Edward's mockery. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter GLOSTER, CLARENCE, SOMERSET, MONTAGUE, and others.

' Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you

' Of this new marriage with the Lady Grey?

 Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?*

 Clar.* Alas, you know, 'tis far from hence to France;

 How could he stay till Warwick made return?*

 Som.* My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the king.

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD, attended; LADY GREY, as Queen; PEMBROKE, STAFFORD, HASTINGS, and others.

 Glo.* And his well chosen bride.

 Clar.* I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

' K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice,

' That you stand pensive, as half malcontent?

' Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick;

Which are so weak of courage, and in judgment,
That they'll take no offence at our abuse.

' K. Edw. Suppose, they take offence without a cause,

They are but Lewis and Warwick; I am Edward,
Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will.

' Glo. And you shall have your will, because our king:

Yet hasty marriage seldom proveth well.

K. Edw. Yea, brother Richard, are you offended too?

' Glo. Not I:

' No; God forbid, that I should wish them sever'd

' Whom God hath join'd together: ay, and 'twere pity,

To sunder them that yoke so well together.

' K. Edw. Setting your scorns, and your mislike, aside,

*' Tell me some reason, why the Lady Grey
' Should not become my wife, and England's queen:—*

' And you, too, Somerset, and Montague,

' Speak freely what you think.

' Clar. Then this is my opinion,—that king Lewis

' Becomes your enemy, for mocking him

' About the marriage of the Lady Bona.

' Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge,

' Is now dishonoured by this new marriage.

' K. Edw. What, if both Lewis and Warwick be appeas'd,

' By such invention as I can devise?

' Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance,

Would more have strengthen'd this our common-wealth

'Gainst foreign storms, than any home-bred marriage.

' Hast. Why, knows not Montague, that of itself England is safe, if true within itself?³

 Mont.* Yes; but the safer, when 'tis back'd with France.

 Hast.* 'Tis better using France, than trusting France:

 Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,⁴*

 Which he hath given for fence impregnable,*

 And with their helps only defend ourselves;*

 In them, and in ourselves, our safety lies.*

Clar. For this one speech, Lord Hastings well deserves

' To have the heir of the Lord Hungerford.

' K. Edw. Ay, what of that? it was my will, and grant;

 And, for this once, my will shall stand for law.*

' Glo. And yet, methinks your grace hath not done well,

' To give the heir and daughter of Lord Scales

' Unto the brother of your loving bride;

' She better would have fitted me, or Clarence:

' But in your bride you bury brotherhood.

' Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir⁵

' Of the Lord Bonville on your new wife's son,

' And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.

K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife,

' That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee.

' Clar. In choosing for yourself, you show'd your judgment;

' Which being shallow, you shall give me leave

' To play the broker in mine own behalf;

' And to that end, I shortly mind to leave you.

' K. Edw. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king,
And not be tied unto his brother's will.

' Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleased his majesty

' To raise my state to title of a queen,

' Do me but right, and you must all confess

' That I was not ignoble of descent,⁶

 And meaner than myself have had like fortune.*

 But as this title honours me and mine,*

 So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,*

 Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.*

⁴ This has been the advice of every man who in any age understood and favoured the interest of England.—Johnson.

⁵ Until the Restoration minors coming into possession of great estates were in the wardship of the king, who bestowed them on his favourites, or in other words gave them up to plunder, and afterwards disposed of them in marriage as he pleased. I know not (says Johnson) when liberty gained more than by the abolition of the court of wards.

¹ This is a departure from the truth of history, for Edward prince of Wales was married to Anne, second daughter of the earl of Warwick. In fact Isabella, his eldest daughter, was married to Clarence in 1468. There is, however, no inconsistency in the present proposal; for at the time represented, when Warwick was in France, neither of his daughters were married. Shakspeare has here again followed the old play. In King Richard III. he has properly represented Lady Anne, the widow of Edward prince of Wales, as the youngest daughter of Warwick.

² A stale here means a stalking horse, a pretence.

³ See King John, note on the final speech.

K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns :

' What danger, or what sorrow can befall thee,
' So long as Edward is thy constant friend,
' And their true sovereign, whom they must obey ?
' Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,
' Unless they seek for hatred at my hands :
' Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
' And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.

* Glo. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more.
[Aside.]

Enter a Messenger.

' K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters, or what news,
From France ?

' Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters ; and few words,

' But such as I, without your special pardon, Dare not relate.

' K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee : therefore, in brief,

' Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them.

' What answer makes King Lewis unto our letters ?

Mess. At my depart, these were his very words ;
Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel it with him and his new bride.

K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave ? belike he thinks me Henry.

' But what said Lady Bona to my marriage ?

Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain ;

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.

K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less ;

' She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen ?
' For I have heard, that she was there in place.¹

Mess. Tell him, quoth she, my mourning weeds are done,²

And I am ready to put armour on.

' K. Edw. Belike, she minds to play the Amazon.
But what said Warwick to these injuries ?

' Mess. He, more incens'd against your majesty
' Than all the rest, discharg'd me with these words ;
Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore I'll uncrown him, ere't be long.

K. Edw. Ha ! durst the traitor breathe out so proud words ?

' Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd :

' They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption.

' But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret ?

Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign ; they are so link'd in friendship,

' That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

Clar. Belike, the elder ; Clarence will have the younger.³

* Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,

* For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter ;

* That though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage

* I may not prove inferior to yourself.—

You, that love me and Warwick, follow me.⁴

[Exit CLARENCE, and SOMERSET follows.]

* Glo. Not I :

* My thoughts aim at a further matter ; I

* Stay not for love of Edward, but the crown.
[Aside.]

K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick !

* Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen ;

* And haste is needful in this desperate case.—

' Pembroke, and Stafford, you in our behalf

' Go levy men, and make prepare for war ;

' They are already, or quickly will be landed :

' Myself in person will straight follow you.

[Exeunt PEMBROKE and STAFFORD.]

' But, ere I go, Hastings,—and Montague,—

' Resolve my doubt. You twain, of all the rest,

' Are near to Warwick, by blood, and by alliance :

' Tell me, if you love Warwick more than me ?

' If it be so, then both depart to him ;

' I rather wish you foes, than hollow friends ;

' But if you mind to hold your true obedience,

' Give me assurance with some friendly vow,

' That I may never have you in suspect.

Mont. So God help Montague, as he proves true !

Hast. And Hastings, as he favours Edward's cause !

' K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us ?

Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you.

' K. Edw. Why so ; then am I sure of victory.

' Now therefore let us hence ; and lose no hour,

' Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Plain in Warwickshire. Enter WARWICK and OXFORD, with French and other Forces.

War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well ;
The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter CLARENCE and SOMERSET.

But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come :—

Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends ?

Clar. Fear not that, my lord.

War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwick ;

And welcome, Somerset :—I hold it cowardice,

To rest mistrustful where a noble heart

Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love ;

Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's brother,

Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings :

But welcome, sweet Clarence ; my daughter shall be thine.

And now what rests, but, in night's coverture,

Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd,

His soldiers lurking in the towns about,

And but attended by a simple guard,

We may surprise and take him at our pleasure ?

Our scouts have found the adventure very easy :

* That as Ulysses,⁵ and stout Diomed,

* With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents,

* And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds ;

* So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle,

* At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,

* And seize himself ; I say not—slaughter him,

* For I intend but only to surprise him.—

' You, that will follow me to this attempt,

' Applaud the name of Henry, with your leader.
[They all cry Henry !]

Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort :

For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George !
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Edward's Camp, near Warwick.
Enter certain Watchmen, to guard the King's Tent.

* I Watch. Come on my masters, each man take his stand ;

* The king, by this, is set him down to sleep.

* 2 Watch. What, will he not to bed ?

* 1 Watch. Why, no : for he hath made a solemn vow

¹ In place signifies there present. The expression is of frequent occurrence in old English writers. It is from the French en place.

² I. e. my mourning is ended.

³ This is consonant with the former passage of this play, though at variance with what really happened.

⁴ Johnson has remarked upon the actual improbability of Clarence making this speech in the king's hearing. Shakspeare followed the old play, where this line was also found. When the earl of Essex attempted to raise a rebellion in the city, with a design, as was supposed, to storm the queen's palace, he ran about the streets with his sword drawn, crying out, 'They that love me, follow me.'

⁵ See the tenth book of the Iliad. These circumstances were accessible, however, without reference to Homer in the original.

⁶ We are told by some of the writers of the Trojan story, that the capture of these horses was one of the necessary preliminaries of the fate of Troy.

* Never to lie and take his natural rest,
 * Till Warwick, or himself, be quite suppress'd.
 * 2 Watch. To-morrow then, belike, shall be the day,
 * If Warwick be so near as men report.

* 3 Watch. But say, I pray, what nobleman is that

* That with the king here resteth in his tent?

* 1 Watch. 'Tis the Lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend.

* 3 Watch. O, is it so? But why commands the king,

* That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,

* While he himself keepeth in the cold field?

* 2 Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because more dangerous.

* 3 Watch. Ay; but give me worship and quietness,

* I like it better than a dangerous honour.¹

* If Warwick knew in what estate he stands,

* 'Tis to be doubted, he would waken him.

* 1 Watch. Unless our halberts did shut up his passage.

* 2 Watch. Ay; wherefore else guard we his royal tent,

* But to defend his person from night foes?

Enter WARWICK, CLARENCE, OXFORD, SOMERSET, and Forces.

'War. This is his tent; and see, where stand his guard.

Courage, my masters: honour now, or never!

But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

1 Watch. Who goes there?

* 2 Watch. Stay, or thou diest.

[WARWICK, and the rest, cry all—Warwick! Warwick! and set upon the Guard; who fly, crying, Arm! Arm! WARWICK, and the rest, following them.

The Drum beating, and Trumpets sounding. Re-enter WARWICK, and the rest, bringing the King out in a Gown, sitting in a Chair; GLOSTER and HASTINGS fly.

'Som. What are they that fly there?

'War. Richard, and Hastings: let them go, here's the duke.

K. Edw. The duke! why, Warwick, when we parted last,

Thou call'dst me king?

War. Ay, but the case is alter'd:

'When you disgrac'd me in my embassy,

'Then I degraded you from being king,

And come now to create you duke of York.

Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,

That know not how to use ambassadors;

Nor how to be contented with one wife;

Nor how to use your brothers brotherly;

* Nor how to study for the people's welfare;

Nor how to shrowd yourself from enemies?

* K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here too?

* Nay, then I see, that Edward needs must down.—

'Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,

'Of thee thyself, and all thy complices,

Edward will always bear himself as king:

* Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,

* My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

War. Then, for his mind,² be Edward England's king:

[Takes off his Crown.

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,

And be true king indeed; thou but the shadow.—

'My lord of Somerset, at my request,

'See that forthwith Duke Edward be convey'd

'Unto my brother, archbishop of York.

'When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows,

'I'll follow you, and tell what answer

'Lewis, and the Lady Bona, send to him;

Now, for a while, farewell, good duke of York.

¹ This honest watchman's opinion coincides with that of Falstaff. See the First Part of King Henry IV Act v Sc. 3.

* K. Edw. What fates impose, that men must needs abide;

* It boots not to resist both wind and tide.

[Exit KING EDWARD, led out; SOMERSET with him.

* Oxf. What now remains, my lords, for us to do,

* But march to London with our soldiers?

War. Ay, that's the first thing that we have to do;

'To free King Henry from imprisonment,

And see him seated in the regal throne. [Exit.

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH and RIVERS.

'Riv. Madam, what makes you in this sudden change?

'Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to learn,

'What late misfortune is befall'n King Edward?

Riv. What, loss of some pitch'd battle against Warwick?

'Q. Eliz. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

'Riv. Then is my sovereign slain?

'Q. Eliz. Ay, almost slain, for he is taken prisoner;

'Either betray'd by falsehood of his guard,

'Or by his foe surpris'd at unawares:

'And, as I further have to understand,

'Is new committed to the bishop of York,

'Fell Warwick's brother, and by that our foe.

'Riv. These news, I must confess, are full of grief:

'Yet, gracious madam, bear it as you may:

'Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.

'Q. Eliz. Till then, fair hope must hinder life's decay.

* And I the rather wean me from despair,

* For love of Edward's offspring in my womb:

* This is it that makes me bridle passion,

* And bear with mildness my misfortune's cross;

* Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear,

* And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs,

* Lest with my sighs or tears I blast or drown

* King Edward's fruit, true heir to the English crown.

* Riv. But, madam, where is Warwick then become?

'Q. Eliz. I am informed, that he comes towards London,

* To set the crown once more on Henry's head:

* Guess thou the rest; King Edward's friends must down.

'But to prevent the tyrant's violence

'(For trust not him that hath once broken faith,

'I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary,

'To save at least the heir of Edward's right;

'There shall I rest secure from force, and fraud.

'Come, therefore, let us fly, while we may fly;

'If Warwick take us, we are sure to die. [Exit.

SCENE V. A Park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.³

Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, SIR WILLIAM STANLEY, and others.

'Glo. Now, my Lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley,

'Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither,

'Into this chiefest thicket of the park.

'Thus stands the case: You know, our king, my brother,

'Is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands

'He hath good usage and great liberty;

'And often, but attended with weak guard,

'Comes hunting this way to disport himself.

'I have advertis'd him by secret means,

'That if, about this hour, he make his way,

'Under the colour of his usual game,

'He shall here find his friends, with horse and men,

'To set him free from his captivity.

² I. e. in his mind; as far as his own mind goes.

³ Shakespeare follows Holinshed in the representation here given of King Edward's capture and imprisonment. The whole, however, is untrue. Edward was never in the hands of Warwick.

Enter KING EDWARD and a Huntsman.

Hunt. This way, my lord; for this way lies the game.

* K. Edw. Nay, this way, man; see, where the huntsmen stand.—

* Now, brother of Gloster, Lord Hastings, and the rest,

Stand you thus close, to steal the bishop's deer?

* Glo. Brother, the time and case requireth haste;

* Your horse stands ready at the park corner.

* K. Edw. But whither shall we then?

* Hast. To Lynn, my lord; and ship from thence to Flanders.

* Glo. Well guess'd, believe me; for that was my meaning.

* K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.

* Glo. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talk.

* K. Edw. Huntsman, what say'st thou? wilt thou go along?

* Hunt. Better do so, than tarry and be hang'd.

* Glo. Come then, away; let's have no more ado.

* K. Edw. Bishop, farewell: shield thee from Warwick's frown;

And pray that I may repossess the crown. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. A Room in the Tower. Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, WARWICK, SOMERSET, Young RICHMOND, OXFORD, MONTAGUE, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.

* K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and friends

* Have shaken Edward from the regal seat;

* And turn'd my captive state to liberty,

* My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys;

* At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

* Lieu. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;

* But, if an humble prayer may prevail,

* I then crave pardon of your majesty.

* K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?

* Nay, be thou sure, I'll well requite thy kindness,

* For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure:

* Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds

* Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,

* At last, by notes of household harmony,

* They quite forget their loss of liberty.—

* But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free,

* And chiefly therefore I thank God, and thee;

* He was the author, thou the instrument.

* Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,

* By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me;

* And that the people of this blessed land

* May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars;

* Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,

* I here resign my government to thee,

* For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

* War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous;

* And now may seem as wise as virtuous,

* By spying, and avoiding, fortune's malice,

* For few men rightly temper with the stars;¹

* Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace,

* For choosing me, when Clarence is in place.²

* Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,

* To whom the heavens, in thy nativity,

* Adjudg'd an olive branch, and laurel crown,

* As likely to be blest in peace, and war;

* And therefore I yield thee my free consent.

* War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.

* K. Hen. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your hands;

* Now join your hands, and, with your hands, your hearts,

* That no dissension hinder government:

* I make you both protectors of this land;

* While I myself will lead a private life,

* And in devotion spend my latter days,

To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise.

* War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's will?

* Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent:

* For on thy fortune I repose myself.

* War. Why then, though loath, yet must I be content:

* We'll yoke together, like a double shadow

* To Henry's body, and supply his place:

* I mean, in bearing weight of government,

* While he enjoys the honour, and his ease.

* And, Clarence, now then it is more than needful,

* Forthwith that Edward be pronounced a traitor,

* And all his lands and goods be confiscate.

* Clar. What else? and that succession be determin'd.

* War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.

* K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,

* Let me entreat (for I command no more)

* That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,

* Be sent for, to return from France with speed:

* For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear

* My joy of liberty is half eclips'd.

* Clar. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed,

* K. Hen. My lord of Somerset, what youth is that, Of whom you seem to have so tender care?

* Som. My liege, it is young Henry, earl of Richmond.

* K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope: If secret powers [Lays his Hand on his Head.]

* Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,

* This pretty lad³ will prove our country's bliss.

* His looks are full of peaceful majesty;

* His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,

* His hand to wield a sceptre; and himself

* Likely, in time, to bless a regal throne.

Make much of him, my lords; for this is he,

* Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Messenger.

* War. What news, my friend?

* Mess. That Edward is escaped from your brother,

* And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.

* War. Unsavoury news: But how made he escape?

* Mess. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloster,

* And the Lord Hastings, who attended⁴ him

* In secret ambush on the forest side,

* And from the bishop's huntsmen rescued him;

* For hunting was his daily exercise.

* War. My brother was too careless of his charge.

* But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide

* A salve for any sore that may betide.

[Exeunt KING HENRY, WAR. CLAR. Lieut. and Attendants.]

* Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's:

* For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help;

² See note 1, p. 78.

³ This was adopted from Hall by the author of the old play; Holinshed also copies Hall almost verbatim:—'Whom when the king had a good while beheld, he said to such princes as were with him, Lo, surelie this is he, to whom both we and our adversaries, leaving the possession of all things, ech hereafter give roome and place.' p. 678. Henry earl of Richmond, was the son of Edmond earl of Richmond, and Margaret, daughter to John the first duke of Somerset. Edmond was half brother to King Henry VI. being the son of that king's mother, Queen Catharine, by her second husband, Owen Tudor. Henry the Seventh, to show his gratitude to Henry VI. for this early presage in his favour, solicited Pope Julius to canonize him a saint; but either would not pay the price, or, as Bacon supposes, the pope refused lest 'as Henry was reputed in the world abroad but for a simple man, the estimation of that kind of honour might be diminished if there were not a distance kept between innocents and saints.'

⁴ i. e. waited for him.

* And we shall have more wars, before't be long.
 * As Henry's late presaging prophecy
 * Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond;
 * So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts
 * What may befall him, to his harm, and ours:
 * Therefore, Lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
 * Forthwith we'll send him hence to Britany,
 * Till storms be past of civil enmity.
 * Oxf. Ay; for if Edward repossess the crown,
 * 'Tis like, that Richmond with the rest shall down.
 * Som. It shall be so; he shall to Britany.
 * Come, therefore, let's about it speedily. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Before York. Enter King Edward, GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and Forces.

* K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest;
 * Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends,
 * And says—that once more I shall interchange
 * My waned state for Henry's regal crown.
 * Well have we pass'd, and now repass the seas,
 * And brought desired help from Burgundy:
 * What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
 * From Ravenspurgh haven¹ before the gates of York,
 * But that we enter, as into our dukedom?
 * Glo. The gates made fast!—Brother, I like not this;
 * For many men, that stumble at the threshold,
 * Are well foretold—that danger lurks within.
 * K. Edw. Tush, man! abodements must not now affright us:
 * By fair or foul means we must enter in,
 * For hither will our friends repair to us.
 * Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more, to summon them.

Enter, on the Walls, the Mayor of York, and his Brethren.

* May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,
 * And shut the gates for safety of ourselves;
 * For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.
 * K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your king,
 * Yet Edward, at the least, is duke of York.
 * May. True, my good lord; I know you for no less.
 * K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my dukedom;
 * As being well content with that alone.
 * Glo. But, when the fox hath once got in his nose,
 * He'll soon find means to make the body follow. [Aside.]
 * Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?
 * Open the gates, we are King Henry's friends.
 * May. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open'd. [Exeunt from above.]
 * Glo. A wise stout captain, and persuaded soon!
 * Hast. The good old man would fain that all were well,
 * So'twere not 'long of him:² but, being enter'd,
 * I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade
 * Both him, and all his brothers, unto reason.

Re-enter the Mayor, and Two Aldermen, below.

* K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not be shut,
 * But in the night, or in the time of war.
 * What! fear not, man, but yield me up the keys;
 * For Edward will defend the town, and thee,
 * And all those friends that deign to follow me.

Drum. Enter MONTGOMERY, and Forces, marching.

Glo. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery, Our trusty friend, unless I be deceiv'd.
 * K. Edw. Welcome, Sir John! But why come you in arms?
 * Mont. To help King Edward in his time of storm, As every loyal subject ought to do.
 * K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery: But we now forget
 * Our title to the crown! and only claim
 * Our dukedom, till God please to send the rest.
 * Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again; I came to serve a king, and not a duke,—
 * Drummer, strike up, and let us march away. [A March begun.]
 * K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, a while; and we'll debate,
 * By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.
 * Mont. What talk you of debating? in few words,
 * If you'll not here proclaim yourself our king,
 * I'll leave you to your fortune; and be gone,
 * To keep them back that come to succour you:
 * Why should we fight, if you pretend no title?
 * Glo. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points?
 * K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make our claim;
 * Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.
 * Hast. Away with scrupulous wit! now arms must rule.
 * Glo. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crowns.
 * Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand;
 * The bruit³ thereof will bring you many friends.
 * K. Edw. Then be it as you will; for 'tis my right,
 * And Henry but usurps the diadem.
 * Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like himself;
 * And now will I be Edward's champion.
 * Hast. Sound, trumpet; Edward shall be here proclaim'd:—
 * Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. [Gives him a Paper. Flourish.]
 * Sold. [Reads.] Edward the Fourth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, &c.
 * Mont. And whosoe'er gainsays King Edward's right,
 * By this I challenge him to single fight.
 * [Throws down his Gauntlet.]
 * All. Long live Edward the Fourth!
 * K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery;—and thanks unto you all.
 * If fortune serve me, I'll requite this kindness.
 * Now, for this night, let's harbour here in York:
 * And, when the morning sun shall raise his car
 * Above the border of this horizon,
 * We'll forward towards Warwick, and his mates;
 * For, well I wot,⁴ that Henry is no soldier.—
 * Ah, froward Clarence!—how evil it besems thee,
 * To flatter Henry, and forsake thy brother!
 * Yet, as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwick.—
 * Come on, brave soldiers; doubt not of the day;
 * And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.⁵ London. A Room in the Palace.
Enter King Henry, Warwick, Clarence, MONTAQUE, EXETER, and Oxford.

War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belgia, With hasty Germans, and blunt Hollanders, Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas, And with his troops doth march amain to London; And many giddy people flock to him.

these plays. Warwick has but just gone off the stage, when Edward says:—

'And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course, Where peremptory Warwick now remains.'

In the original play this scene follows immediately after King Henry's observations on young Richmond, the sixth scene of the present play.

1 In the old play this is written Raunspurhaven, we may therefore infer that such was the pronunciation.

2 The mayor is willing we should enter, so he may not be blamed.

3 Report. Vide Macbeth, Act v. Sc. 7.

4 Know.

5 This scene is perhaps the worst contrived of any in

* Oxf. Let's levy men and beat him back again.¹

Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out;
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.

War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends,

Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war;
Those will I muster up:—and thou, son Clarence,
'Shalt stir, in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent,
'The knights and gentlemen to come with thee:
'Thou, brother Montague, in Buckingham,
'Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find
'Men well inclin'd to hear what thou command'st:
And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well belov'd,
In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.—
My sovereign, with the loving citizens,—
* Like to his island, girl in with the ocean,
* Or modest Dian, circled with her nymphs,—
Shall rest in London, till we come to him.—
Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply.—
Farewell, my sovereign.

K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's true hope.²

* Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness' hand.
* K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate!

* Mont. Comfort, my lord,—and so I take my leave.

* Oxf. And thus, [Kissing HENRY's hand,] I seal my truth, and bid adieu.

* K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,

* And all at once, once more a happy farewell.
War. Farewell, sweet lords; let's meet at Coventry.

[Exeunt WAR. CLAR. OXF. and MONT.]

* K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest a while.

* Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?

* Methinks, the power, that Edward hath in field

* Should not be able to encounter mine.

* Eze. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.

* K. Hen. That's not my fear, my meed³ hath got me fame.

* I have not stopp'd mine ears to their demands,

* Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;

* My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,

* My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,

* My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears:

* I have not been desirous of their wealth,

* Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,

* Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd:

* Then why should they love Edward more than me?

* No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace;

* And, when the lion fawns upon the lamb,

* The lamb will never cease to follow him.

[Shout within. A Lancaster! A Lancaster!]

Eze. Hark, hark, my lord! what shouts are these?

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers.

* K. Edw. Seize on the shame-fac'd Henry, bear him hence,

* And once again proclaim us king of England.—

* You are the fount that makes small brooks to flow;

* Now stops thy spring; my sea shall suck them dry,

* And swell so much the higher by their ebb.—

* Hence with him to the Tower; let him not speak.

[Exeunt some with KING HENRY.]

* And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,

* Where peremptory Warwick now remains:⁴

¹ This line, in the folio copy, is given to the king, to whose character it is so unsuitable, that it has been thought best to give it to Oxford, who is the next speaker in the old play.

² Shakespeare has twice repeated this passage, which made an impression upon him in the old play. He has applied the same expression to the duke of York, where his overthrow at Wakefield is described:—

'Environed he was with many foes,
And stood against them as the hope of Troy
Against the Greeks.'

In the former instance no trace is to be found of these lines in the old play. Several similar repetitions are found in this Third Part of King Henry VI.

³ Merit.

* The sun shines hot, and, if we use delay,
'Cold biting winter mars our hop'd for hay.'

* Glo. Away betimes, before his forces join;

* And take the great-grown traitor unawares:

* Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Coventry. Enter, upon the Walls, WARWICK, the Mayor of Coventry, Two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?

* 1 Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How far off is our brother Montague?

Where is the post that came from Montague?

* 2 Mess. By this at Dainty, with a puissant troop.

Enter SIR JOHN SOMERVILLE.

* War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

* And, by the guess, how nigh is Clarence now?

* Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces.

* And do expect him here some two hours hence.

[Drum heard.]

* War. Then Clarence is at hand, I bear his drum.

* Som. It is not his, my lord: here Southam lies:

* The drum your honour hears, marcheth from Warwick.

* War. Who should that be? belike, unlook'd-for friends.

* Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

Drums. Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Forces, marching.

* K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle.

* Glo. See how the surly Warwick mans the wall.

War. O, unbid spite! is sportful Edward come?

Where slept our scouts,¹ or how are they seduc'd,

That we could hear no news of his repair?

* K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city gates,

* Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee?

* Call Edward—king, and at his hands beg mercy,

* And he shall pardon thee these outrages.

* War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,

Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down?—

Call Warwick—patron, and be penitent,

And thou shalt still remain the duke of York.

* Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said—

the king;

Or did he make the jest against his will?

* War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

* Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give;

* I'll do thee service for so good a gift.

* War. 'Twas I, that gave the kingdom to thy brother.

* K. Edw. Why, then 'tis mine, if but by Warwick's gift.

* War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:

And, weakening, Warwick takes his gift again:

And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

⁴ Warwick has but just left the stage, declaring his intention to go to Coventry. How then could Edward know of that intention? Shakespeare here again followed the old play. Some of the old dramatic writers seem to have thought that all the persons of the drama, must know whatever was known to the writers themselves, or to the audience.

⁵ The allusion is to the proverb, 'Make hay while the sun shines.'

⁶ Thus in King John:—

'O, where hath our intelligence been drunk?

Where hath it slept?'

⁷ That is, enroll myself among thy dependents, Cowell informs us that servitium is 'that service which the tenant, by reason of his fee, oweth unto his lord.'

* K. Edw. But Warwick's king is Edward's prisoner:

'And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this,—
What is the body, when the head is off?

'Glo. Alas, that Warwick had no more forecast,
But, whiles he thought to steal the single ten,
'The king was slyly finger'd from the deck!¹
You left poor Henry at the bishop's palace,²
And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.

K. Edw. 'Tis even so; yet you are Warwick still.

* Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time, kneel down, kneel down:

* Nay, when? ³ strike now, or else the iron cools.

* War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,

* And with the other fling it at thy face,

* Than bear so low a sail, to strike to thee.

* K. Edw. Sail how thou canst, have wind and tide thy friend;

* This hand, fast wound about thy cold-black hair,

* Shall, whiles the head is warm, and new cut off,

* Write in the dust this sentence with thy blood,—

* Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more.

Enter OXFORD, with Drum and Colours.

* War. O cheerful colours! see, where Oxford comes!

Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaster!

[OXFORD and his Forces enter the City.

'Glo. The gates are open, let us enter too.

* K. Edw. So other foes may set upon our backs.

* Stand we in good array; for they, no doubt,

* Will issue out again, and bid us battle:

* If not, the city, being but of small defence,

* We'll quickly rouse the traitors in the same.

War. O, welcome, Oxford, for we want thy help.

Enter MONTAGUE, with Drum and Colours.

* Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaster!

[He and his Forces enter the City.

'Glo. Thou and thy brother both shall buy this treason

* Even with the dearest blood your bodies bear.

* K. Edw. The harder match'd, the greater victory;

* My mind presageth happy gain, and conquest.

Enter SOMERSET, with Drum and Colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster!

[He and his Forces enter the City.

'Glo. Two of thy name, both dukes of Somerset,⁴

Have sold their lives unto the house of York;

And thou shalt be the third, if this sword hold.

Enter CLARENCE, with Drum and Colours.

War. And lo, where George of Clarence sweeps along,

Of force enough to bid his brother battle;

* With whom an upright zeal to rights prevails,

* More than the nature of a brother's love:—

* Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick calls.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means;

[Taking the red Rose out of his Cap.

'Look here, I throw my infamy at thee:

I will not ruinate my father's house,

Who gave his blood to lime⁵ the stones together,

'And set up Lancaster. Why, trow'st thou, Warwick,

* That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt,⁶ unnatural,

'To bend the fatal instruments of war
'Against his brother, and his lawful king?

* Perhaps, thou wilt object my holy oath:

* To keep that oath, were more impiety

* Than Jephtha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter.

* I am so sorry for my trespass made,

* That, to deserve well at my brother's hands,

* I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe;

* With resolution, wheresoe'er I meet thee

* (As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad,)

* To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.

And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee,

And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.—

* Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends;

And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,

For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

* K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd,

Than if thou never hadst deserv'd our hate,

* Glo. Welcome, good Clarence: this is brother-like.

War. O passing⁷ traitor, perjurd, and unjust!

* K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town, and fight?

Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears?

* War. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence:

I will away towards Barnet presently,

And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st.

* K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way:—

Lords, to the field; Saint George, and victory.

[March. Exeunt.

SCENE II. A Field of Battle near Barnet. Alarums, and Excursions. Enter KING EDWARD, bringing in WARWICK wounded.

* K. Edw. So, lie thou there: die thou, and die our fear;

* For Warwick was a bug,⁸ that fear'd us all.—

* Now, Montague, sit fast; I seek for thee,

* That Warwick's bones may keep thine company. [Exit.

War. Ah, who is nigh? Come to me, friend, or foe,

And tell me who is victor, York or Warwick?

Why ask I that? my mangled body shows,

* My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows

That I must yield my body to the earth,

And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,

Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle,

Under whose shade the ramping lion slept;

Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,

* And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.

* These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's

black veil,

* Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,

* To search the secret treasons of the world:

The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,

Were liken'd oft to kingly sepulchres;

For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave?

And who durst smile, when Warwick bent his brow?

Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood!

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,

Even now forsake me; and, of all my lands,

Is nothing left me, but my body's length!¹⁰

Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust?

And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

² The palace of the bishop of London.

³ This expression of impatience has been already noticed in The Tempest, and King Richard II.

Enter OXFORD and SOMERSET.

- * Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! wert thou as we are,
 * We might recover all our loss again!
 * The queen from France hath brought a puissant power:
 * Even now we heard the news: Ah, could'st thou fly!
 * War. Why, then I would not fly.—Ah, Montague,
 * If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,
 * And with thy lips keep in my soul a while!
 * Thou lov'st me not; for, brother, if thou didst,
 * Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood,
 * That glues my lips, and will not let me speak.
 * Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.
 * Som. Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
 * And, to the latest gasp, cried out for Warwick,
 * And said—Commend me to my valiant brother.
 * And more he would have said; and more he spoke,
 * Which sounded like a cannon in a vault,¹
 * That might not be distinguish'd; but, at last,
 * I well might hear deliver'd with a groan,—
 * O, farewell, Warwick!

War. Sweet rest to his soul!—
 Fly, lords, and save yourselves: for Warwick bids
 You all farewell, to meet again in heaven. [Dies.
Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power! [Exeunt, bearing off WAR. Body.

SCENE III. Another Part of the Field. Flourish.
Enter KING EDWARD in triumph; with CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and the rest.

- K. Edw.* Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course,
 * And we are grac'd with wreaths of victory.
 * But, in the midst of this bright-shining day,
 * I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
 * That will encounter with our glorious sun,
 * Ere he attain his easeful western bed:
 * I mean, my lords,—those powers, that the queen
 * Hath rais'd in Gallia, have arriv'd on our coast,
 * And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.
 * Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud,
 * And blow it to the source from whence it came:
 * Thy very beams will dry those vapours up;
 * For every cloud engenders not a storm.
 * Glo. The queen is valu'd thirty thousand strong,
 * And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her;
 * If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd,
 Her faction will be full as strong as ours.
 * K. Edw. We are advertis'd by our loving friends,
 That they do hold their course towards Tewksbury;
 * We having now the best at Barnet field,
 * Will thither straight, for willingness rids way;
 * And, as we march, our strength will be augmented
 In every county as we go along.
 Strike up the drum; cry—Courage! and away.
 [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Plains near Tewksbury. March.
Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD, SOMERSET, OXFORD, and Soldiers.

- * Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss,²
 * But cheerly seek how to redress their harms.

order to dissuade a person from covetousness, drew out with his lance the length and breadth of a man's grave, adding, 'This is all thou shalt have when thou art dead, if thou canst happily get so much.'

Johnson observes that Warwick's mention of his parks and manors diminishes the pathetic of these lines. It is true that it is something in the strain of the whining ghosts of the Mirror for Magistrates; but it was the popular style of the time: Cavendish, in his Metrical Legends, introduces Wolsey's shade lamenting to leave his palaces and gardens.

 'Which sounded like a clamour in a vault.'
 I cannot but think that cannon is an error of the press in the first folio. 'The indistinct gabble of undertakers

- 'What though the mast be now blown overboard,
 * The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
 * And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood?
 * Yet lives our pilot still: Is't meet, that he
 * Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
 * With tearful eyes add water to the sea,
 * And give more strength to that which hath too much;⁴
 * Whiles, in his moan, the ship splits on the rock,
 * Which industry and courage might have sav'd?
 * Ah, what a shame! ah, what a fault were this!
 * Say, Warwick was our anchor; What of that?
 * And Montague our top-mast; What of him?
 * Our slaughter'd friends the tackles; What of these?
 * Why, is not Oxford here another anchor?
 * And Somerset another goodly mast?
 * The friends of France our shrouds and tacklings?
 * And, though unskilful, why not Ned and I
 * For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge?
 * We will not from the helm, to sit and weep;
 * But keep our course, though the rough wind say
 —no,
 * From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck.
 * As good to chide the waves, as speak them fair.
 * And what is Edward, but a ruthless sea?
 * What Clarence, but a quicksand of deceit?
 * And Richard, but a ragged fatal rock?
 * All these the enemies to our poor bark.
 * Say, you can swim; alas, 'tis but a while:
 * Tread on the sand; why, there you quickly sink:
 * Bestride the rock; the tide will wash you off,
 * Or else you famish, that's a threefold death.
 * This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
 * In case some one of you would fly from us,
 * That there's no hop'd-for mercy with the brothers,
 * More than with ruthless waves, with sands, and rocks.
 * Why, courage, then! what cannot be avoided,
 * * 'Twere childish weakness to lament, or fear.
 * Prince. Methinks, a woman of this valiant spirit,
 * Should, if a coward heard her speak these words,
 * Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
 * And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.
 * I speak not this, as doubting any here:
 * For, did I but suspect a fearful man,
 * He should have leave to go away betimes;
 * Lest, in our need, he might infect another,
 * And make him of like spirit to himself.
 * If any such be here, as God forbid!
 * Let him depart, before we need his help.
 * Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage!
 And warriors faint! why, 'twere perpetual shame.—
 * O, brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
 Doth live again in thee; Long may'st thou live,
 To bear his image, and renew his glories!
 * Som. And he, that will not fight for such a hope,
 * Go home to bed, and like the owl by day,
 * If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at.
 * Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset:—sweet
 Oxford, thanks.
 * Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.

(says Steevens,) while they adjust a coffin in a family vault, will abundantly illustrate the preceding simile. Such a peculiar hubbub of inarticulate sounds might have attracted our author's notice; it has too often forced itself on mine.

² Arriv'd is here used in an active form.
³ This speech in the original play is expressed in eleven lines. Malone thinks its extraordinary expansion into thirty-seven lines a decisive proof that the old play was the production of some writer who preceded Shakespeare.

⁴ Thus Jaques moralizing upon the weeping stag in As You Like It, Act I. Sc. 2:—

—Thou mak'st a testament
 As worldlings do, giving the sum of more
 To that which has too much.
 A similar thought is found in Shakespeare's Lover's Complaint.

Enter a Messenger.

'Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand,

Ready to fight; therefore be resolute.

'Oxf. I thought no less: it is his policy,

'To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.

Som. But he's deceiv'd, we are in readiness.

Q. Mar. This cheers my heart, to see your forwardness.

Oxf. Here pitch our battle, hence we will not budge.

March. Enter, at a distance, KING EDWARD, CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and Forces.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,

'Which, by the heavens' assistance, and your strength,

'Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.

* I need not add more fuel to your fire,

* For, well I wot,² ye blaze to burn them out:

* Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords.

Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say,

'My tears gainsay:³ for every word I speak,

'Ye see, I drink the water of mine eyes.

'Therefore, no more but this:—Henry, your sovereign,

'Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd,

'His realm a slaughterhouse, his subjects slain,

'His statutes cancell'd, and his treasure spent;

'And yonder is the wolf, that makes this spoil.

'You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,

'Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

[Exeunt both Armies.]

SCENE V. Another part of the same. Alarums: Excursions: and afterwards a Retreat. Then enter KING EDWARD, CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and Forces; with QUEEN MARGARET, OXFORD, and SOMERSET, Prisoners.

'K. Edw. Now, here a period of tumultuous broils.

Away with Oxford to Hammes castle⁴ straight:

For Somerset,⁵ off with his guilty head.

'Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them speak.

Oxf. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words.

'Som. Nor I, but stoop with patience to my fortune. [Exeunt Oxf. and Som. guarded.]

* Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublous world,

* To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.

* K. Edw. Is proclamation made,—that who finds Edward,

* Shall have a high reward, and he his life?

* Glo. It is: and lo, where youthful Edward comes.

Enter Soldiers, with PRINCE EDWARD.

* K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant, let us hear him speak:

* What! can so young a thorn begin to prick?

'Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make,

'For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,

* And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?⁶

Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York!

Suppose, that I am now my father's mouth;

Resign thy chair, and, where I stand, kneel thou,

Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee,

Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to.

Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolv'd!

'Glo. That you might still have worn the petticoat,

And ne'er have stol'n the breech from Lancaster.

Prince. Let Æsop's fable in a winter's night;

His curish riddles sort not with this place.

Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that word.

Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to men.

Glo. For God's sake, take away this captive scold.

Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back rather.

'K. Edw. Peace, wilful boy, or I will charm⁷ your tongue.

Clar. Untutor'd lad, thou art too malapert.

Prince. I know my duty, you are all undutiful:

Lascivious Edward,—and thou perjurd George,

And thou misshapen Dick, I tell ye all,

I am your better, traitors as ye are:—

* And thou usurp'st my father's right and mine.

K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this railer here.⁸ [Stabs him.]

* Glo. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agony. [Glo. stabs him.]

* Cl. And there's for twitting me with perjury. [Cl. stabs him.]

Q. Mar. O, kill me too!

Glo. Marry, and shall. [Offers to kill her.]

'K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we have done too much.

Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with words?⁹

K. Edw. What! doth she swoon? use means for her recovery.

Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother:

I'll hence to London on a serious matter:

'Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.

Clar. What? what?

'Glo. The Tower, the Tower! [Exit.]

'Q. Mar. O, Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy!

'Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murderers!—

They, that stabb'd Cæsar, shed no blood at all,

Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,

* If this foul deed were by, to equal it.

'He was a man; this, in respect, a child;

And men ne'er spend their fury on a child.

'What's worse than murderer, that I may name it?

* No, no; my heart will burst, an if I speak;—

* And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.—

* Butchers and villains, bloody cannibals!

* How sweet a plant have you untimely cropp'd!

'You have no children, butchers! if you had,¹¹

'The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse.

'But if you ever chance to have a child

Look in his youth to have him so cut off,

'As, deathsmen! you have rid¹² this sweet young prince!

K. Edw. Away with her; go, bear her hence perforce.

Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, despatch me here;

Here sheath thy sword, I'll pardon thee my death:

What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou.

Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.

Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it.

Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear, I would not do it?

ness; and the poet following nature makes Richard highly incensed at the reproach.

8 See King Henry VI. Part II. Act IV. Sc. 1.

9 That is, 'thou who art the likeness,' &c. The old copies describe Edward as striking the first blow, and Gloster the next; and this is according to history, which informs us that Edward smote the prince with his gauntlet, on which the rest dispatched him.

10 i. e. dispute, contention.

11 The same sentiment is repeated by Macduff in the tragedy of Macbeth; and this passage may serve as a comment on that.

6 We have nearly the same words in the Tempest:—

'——— O, my heart bleeds,

'To think of the teen that I have turn'd you to.'

7 The prince calls Richard Æsop for his crooked-

Q. Mar. Ay, but thou usest to forswear thyself; 'Twas sin before,¹ but now 'tis charity.
'What! wilt thou not? where is that devil's butcher, Hard-favour'd Richard? Richard, where art thou? Thou art not here: Murder is thy alms-deed; Petitioners for blood thou ne'er put'st back.

K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge ye, bear her hence.

Q. Mar. So come to you, and yours, as to this prince! [Exit, led out forcibly.]

K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?

Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess, To make a bloody supper in the Tower.

K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head.

'Now march we hence; discharge the common sort

'With pay and thanks, and let's away to London;

'And see our gentle queen how well she fares;

'By this, I hope, she hath a son for me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. London. A Room in the Tower.

KING HENRY is discovered sitting with a Book in his Hand, the Lieutenant attending. Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good day, my lord: What, at your book so hard?

K. Hen. Ay, my good lord: My lord, I should say rather;

'Tis sin to flatter, good was little better:

Good Gloster, and good devil, were alike,

* And both preposterous; therefore, not good lord.

* Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer. [Exit Lieutenant.]

* K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf:

* So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,

* And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.—

What scene of death hath Roscius now to act?

Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind;

The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

'K. Hen. The bird, that hath been limed in a bush,

'With trembling wings misdoubteth² every bush:

And I, the hapless male³ to one sweet bird

Have now the fatal object in my eye,

Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.

'Glo. Why, what a peevish⁴ fool was that of Crete,

'That taught his son the office of a fowl?

'And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd.

'K. Hen. I, Dædalus; my poor boy, Icarus;

Thy father, Minos, that denied our course;

'The sun, that sear'd the wings of my sweet boy,

'Thy brother Edward; and thyself, the sea,

'Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life.

* Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words!

'My breast can better brook thy dagger's point,

Than can my ears that tragic history.—

* But wherefore dost thou come? is't for my life?

'Glo. Think'st thou, I am an executioner?

K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art;

'If murdering innocents be executing,

'Why, then thou art an executioner.

Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.

K. Hen. Had'st thou been kill'd, when first thou didst presume,

Thou hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine.

'And thus I prophecy,—that many a thousand,

'Which now mistrust no parcel⁵ of my fear;

'And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's,

'And many an orphan's water-standing eye,—

1 She alludes to the desertion of Clarence.

2 To misdoubt is to suspect danger, to fear.

3 The word male is here used in an uncommon sense, for the male parent: the sweet bird is evidently his son Prince Edward.

4 Peevish, in the language of our ancestors, was used to signify mad or foolish. See note on Comedy of Errors, Act iv. Sc. i.

5 Who suspect no part of what my fears presage.

6 To rook, or ruck, is to cower down like a bird at roost or in its nest. The word is of very ancient use in our language.

'Men for their sons, wives for their husbands' fate,
'And orphans for their parents' timeless death,—
'Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born.
The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
'The night-crow cried, aboding luckless time;
Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempests shook down
trees;

The raven rook'd⁶ her on the chimney's top,
And chattering pies in dismal discords sung.
Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
'To wit,—an indigest deformed lump,
Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head, when thou wast born,
To signify,—thou canst not bite the world:
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
'Thou canst—

Glo. I'll hear no more;—Die, prophet, in thy speech;
[Stabs him.]

For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd.

K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after this.

O God! forgive my sins, and pardon thee! [Dies.]

Glo. What, will the aspiring blood of Lancaster Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted.
See, how my sword weeps for the poor king's death!

'O, may such purple tears be always shed

'From those that wish the downfall of our house!

'If any spark of life be yet remaining,

Down, down to hell; and say—I sent thee thither.

[Stabs him again.]

I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear.—

Indeed, 'tis true, that Henry told me of;

For I have often heard my mother say,

I came into the world with my legs forward:

Had I net reason, think ye, to make haste,

'And seek their ruin that usurp'd our right?

The midwife wonder'd; and the women cried,

O, Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth.

'And so I was; which plainly signified—

That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.

'Then, since the heavens have shap'd my body so,

Let hell make crook'd my mind to answer it.⁷

I have no brother, I am like no brother:

'And this word—love, which greybeards call divine,

Be resident in men like one another,

And not in me; I am myself alone.—

Clarence, beware; thou keep'st me from the light

But I will sort⁸ a pitchy day for thee:

For I will buz abroad such prophecies,

'That Edward shall be fearful of his life;

And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death.

'King Henry, and the prince his son, are gone:

'Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest;

Counting myself but bad, till I be best.—

'I'll throw thy body in another room,

And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom. [Exit.]

SCENE VII. The same. A Room in the Palace,

KING EDWARD is discovered sitting on his Throne;

QUEEN ELIZABETH with the infant Prince, CLA-RENCE, GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and others, near

him.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal throne,

Repurchas'd with the blood of enemies.

What valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn,

Have we mow'd down,⁹ in tops of all their pride?

Three dukes of Somerset, threefold renown'd

For hardy and undoubted champions:

Two Cliffords, as the father and the son,

And two Northumberlands; two braver men

Ne'er spur'd their coursers at the trumpet's sound:

7 '—— rudis indigestaque moles.'

Ovid. Met. l. 7.

8 Dryden seems to have had this line in his mind when writing his Ædipus:—

'It was thy crooked mind hunch'd out thy back,

And wander'd in thy limbs.'

9 Select, choose out.

10 A kindred image occurs in King Henry V. v. c.

—— moving like grass

Your fresh-fair virgins, and your flow'ring infants.'

' With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Montague,
That in their chains fetter'd the king's lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roar'd.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security.—
Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy :—
Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles, and myself,
Have in our armours watch'd the winter's night ;
' Went all a foot in summer's scalding heat,
That thou might'st repossess the crown in peace ;
And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain.
Glo. I'll blast his harvest, if your head were laid ;
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thick, to heave ;
And heave it shall some weight, or break my back :—
Work thou the way,—and thou shalt execute.'

Aside.

K. Edw. Clarence, and Gloster, love my lovely queen ;

And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.

Clar. The duty, that I owe unto your majesty,
I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe.

K. Edw. Thanks, noble Clarence ; worthy brother, thanks.²

Glo. And, that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st,

' Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit :—

To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master ; }
' And cried—all hail ! when as he meant— } Aside.
all harm.

K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
Having my country's peace, and brothers' loves.

Clar. What will your grace have done with Margaret ?

Reignier, her father, to the king of France

Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,

And hither have they sent it for her ransom.

K. Edw. Away with her, and wait her hence to France.

And now what rests, but that we spend the time
With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
Such as befit the pleasures of the court ?
Sound, drums and trumpets !—farewell, sour annoy !
For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. [Exeunt.]

² The old quarto play appropriates this line to the queen. The first and second folio, by mistake, have given it to Clarence. In Stevens's copy of the second folio, which had belonged to King Charles the First, his majesty had erased Clar. and written King in its stead. Shakspeare, therefore, in the catalogue of his restorers, may boast a royal name.

THE three parts of King Henry VI. are suspected, by Mr. Theobald, of being supposititious, and are declared by Dr. Warburton, to be certainly not Shakspeare's. Mr. Theobald's suspicion arises from some obsolete words ; but the phraseology is like the rest of the author's style ; and single words, of which, however, I do not observe more than two, can conclude little.

Dr. Warburton gives no reason ; but I suppose him to judge upon deeper principles and more comprehensive views, and to draw his opinion from the general effect and spirit of the composition, which he thinks inferior to the other historical plays.

From mere inferiority nothing can be inferred : in the productions of wit there will be inequality. Sometimes judgment will err, and sometimes the matter itself will defeat the artist. Of every author's works, one will be the best, and one will be the worst. The colours are not equally pleasing, nor the attitudes equally graceful, in all the pictures of Titian or Reynolds.

Dissimilitude of style and heterogeneity of sentiment, may sufficiently show that a work does not really belong to the reputed author. But in these plays no such marks of spuriousness are found. The diction, the versification, and the figures, are Shakspeare's. These plays, considered, without regard to characters and incidents, merely as narratives in verse, are more happily conceived, and more accurately finished than those of King John, King Richard II. or the tragic scenes of King Henry IV. and V. If we take these plays from Shakspeare, to whom shall they be given ? What author of that age had the same easiness of expression and fluency of numbers ?

Of these three plays I think the second is the best. The truth is, that they have not sufficient variety of action, for the incidents are too often of the same kind ; yet many of the characters are well discriminated. King Henry, and his Queen, King Edward, the Duke of Gloster, and the Earl of Warwick, are very strongly and distinctly painted.

The old copies of the two latter parts of King Henry VI. and of King Henry V. are so apparently mutilated and imperfect, that there is no reason for supposing them the first draughts of Shakspeare. I am inclined to believe them copies taken by some auditor, who wrote down during the representation what the time would permit ; then, perhaps, filled up some of his omissions at a second or third hearing, and, when he had by this method formed something like a play, sent it to the printer.—JOHNSON.

* This note by Dr. Johnson has been preserved notwithstanding the full answer to his argument which is given in the abstract of Malone's dissertation prefixed to these plays, which discriminates between what is and what is not from the hand of our great poet. No fraudulent copyist (says Malone) or short-hand writer would have invented circumstances totally different from those which appear in Shakspeare's new modelled draughts, as exhibited in the folio, or insert whole speeches of which scarcely a trace is to be found in that edition.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING RICHARD THE THIRD.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THIS Tragedy, though called in the original edition 'The Life and Death of King Richard the Third,' comprises only fourteen years. The second scene commences with the funeral of King Henry VI, who is said to have been murdered on the 21st of May, 1471. The imprisonment of Clarence, which is represented previously in the first scene, did not, in fact, take place till 1477-8.

Several dramas on the present story had been written before Shakspeare attempted it. There was a Latin play on the subject, by Dr. Legge, which had been acted at St. John's College, Oxford, some time before the year 1583. And a childish imitation of it, by one Henry Lacey, exists in MS. in the British Museum; (MSS. Harl. No. 6926;) it is dated 1586. In the books of the Stationers' Company are the following entries:—'Aug. 15, 1586, A Tragical Report of King Richard the Third: a ballad.' June 19, 1594, Thomas Creede made the following entry: 'An enterlude, intituled the Tragedie of Richard the Third, wherein is showne the Deathe of Edward the Fourth, with the Smotheringe of the Two Princes in the Tower, with the lamentable Ende of Shore's Wife, and the Contenton of the Two Houses of Lancaster and Yorke.' A single copy of this ancient Interlude, which Mr. Boswell thinks was written by the author of Lochnie, unfortunately wanting the title-page, and a few lines at the beginning, was in the collection of Mr. Rhodes, of Lyon's Inn, who liberally allowed Mr. Boswell to print it in the last Variorum edition of Shakspeare.* It appears evidently to have been read and used by Shakspeare. In this, as in other instances, the bookseller was probably induced to publish the old play, in consequence of the success of the new one in performance, and before it had yet got into print.

Shakspeare's play was first entered at Stationers' Hall, Oct. 20, 1597, by Andrew Wise; and was then published with the following title:—'The Tragedie of King Richard the Third: Containing his treacherous Plots against his Brother Clarence; and the pitiful Murder of his innocent Nephewes; his tyrannical Usurpation: with the whole course of his detested Life, and most deserved Death. As it hath been lately acted by the Right Honourable the Lord Chamberlaine his servants. Printed by Valentine Sims, for William Wise, 1597.' It was again reprinted, in 4to, in 1598, 1602, 1612 or 1613, 1622, and twice in 1629.

This play was probably written in the year 1593 or 1594. One of Shakspeare's Richards, and most probably this, is alluded to in the Epigrams of John Weever,† published in 1599; but which must have been written in 1595.

AD GULIELMUM SHAKESPEARE.

Hunie-tong'd Shakespeare, when I saw thine issue,
I swore Apollo got them, and none other:
Their rosie-tainted features clothed in tissue,
Some heaven-born goddesses said to be their mother.
Rose cheek'd Adonis with his amber tresses,
Faire fire-hot Venus charming him to love her,
Chaste Lucretia, virgine-like her dressee,
Proud lust-stung Tarquine, seeking still to prove her,
Romeo, Richard, more whose names I know not,
Their sugred tongues and power attractive beauty,

* A complete copy of Creed's edition of this curious Interlude, (which upon comparison proved to be a different impression from that in Mr. Rhodes's collection,) was sold by auction by Mr. Evans very lately. The title was as follows:—'The true Tragedie of Richard the Third, wherein is showne the death of Edward the Fourth, with the smothering of the two young Princes in the Tower: With a lamentable end of Shore's wife, an example for all wicked women; and lastly, the conjunction of the two noble Houses Lancaster and Yorke, as it was played by the Queenes Maiesties players. London, printed by Thomas Creede; and are to be sold by William Barley at his shop in Newgate Market, neare Christ Church door, 1594; 4to.' It is a circumstance sufficiently remarkable that but a single copy of each of the two editions of this piece should be known to exist.

† This very curious little volume, which is supposed to be unique, is in the possession of Mr Comb, of Hen-

Say they are saints, although that saints they shew not,
For thousand vowes to them subjective dutie,
They burn in love thy children Shakspeare let them,
Go wo thy muse more nymphish brood beget them.

21th Epig. 4th Weeke.

The character of Richard had been in part developed in the last parts of King Henry VI. where, Schlegel observes, 'his first speeches lead us already to form the most unfavourable prognostications respecting him: he lowers obliquely like a thunder-cloud on the horizon, which gradually approaches nearer and nearer, and first pours out the elements of devastation with which it is charged when it hangs over the heads of mortals.' 'The other characters of the drama are of too secondary a nature to excite a powerful sympathy; but in the background the widowed Queen Margaret appears as the fury of the past, who calls forth the curse on the future: every calamity which her enemies draw down on each other, is a cordial to her revengeful heart. Other female voices join, from time to time, in the lamentations and imprecations. But Richard is the soul, or rather the demon, of the whole tragedy, and fulfils the promise which he formerly made to — set the murderous Machiavel to school.' Besides the uniform aversion with which he inspires us, he occupies us in the greatest variety of ways, by his profound skill in dissimulation, his wit, his prudence, his presence of mind, his quick activity, and his valour. He fights at last against Richmond like a desperado, and dies the honourable death of the hero on the field of battle.—But Shakspeare has satisfied our moral feelings:—He shows us Richard in his last moments already branded with the stamp of reprobation. We see Richard and Richmond on the night before battle sleeping in their tents; the spirits of those murdered by the tyrant, ascend in succession and pour out their curses against him, and their blessings on his adversary. These apparitions are, properly, merely the dreams of the two generals made visible. It is no doubt contrary to sensible probability, that their tents should only be separated by so small a space; but Shakspeare could reckon on poetical spectators, who were ready to take the breadth of the stage for the distance between the two camps, if, by such a favour, they were to be recompensed by beauties of so sublime a nature as this series of spectres, and the soliloquy of Richard on his awaking.†

Steevens, in part of a note, which I have thought it best to omit, observed that the favour with which the tragedy has been received on the stage in modern times 'must in some measure be imputed to Cibber's reformation of it.' The original play was certainly too long for representation, and there were parts which might, with advantage, have been omitted in representation, as 'dramatic encumbrances;' but such a clumsy piece of patchwork as the performance of Cibber, was surely any thing but 'judicious;' and it is only surprising, that the taste which has led to other reformations in the performance of our great dramatic poet's works, has not given to the stage a judicious abridgment of this tragedy in his own words, unencumbered with the superfluous transpositions and gratuitous additions which have been so long inflicted upon us.

The title is as follows:—'Epigrammes in the old est Cut and newest Fashion. A twise even Hournes (in so many Weekes) Studie. No longer (like the Fashion) not unlike to continue. The first seven, John Weever. Sit voluisse sit valuisse. At London: printed by V. S. for Thomas Bushele; and are to be sold at his shop, at the great north doore of Faules. 1599. 12s.' There is a portrait of the author, engraved by Cecill, prefixed. According to the date upon this print, Weever was then twenty-three years old; but he tells us, in some introductory stanzas, that when he wrote the Epigrams, which compose the volume, he was not twenty years old; that he was one

'That twenty twelvemonths yet did never know.'
Consequently, these Epigrams must have been written in 1595.

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. A Street. Enter GLOSTER.
Gloster.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun¹ of York;
And all the clouds, that lour'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;²
Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.³
Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now,—instead of mounting barbed⁴ steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,—
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.⁵
But I,—that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,⁶
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionable,
That dogs bark at me, as I halt by them;—
Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time;
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity;
And therefore,—since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair well-spoken days,—
I am determin'd to prove a villain,
And hate the idle pleasures of these days.
Plots have I laid, inductions⁷ dangerous,
By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence, and the king,
In deadly hate the one against the other:
And, if King Edward be as true and just,

1 The cognizance of Edward IV. was a sun, in memory of the three suns which are said to have appeared at the battle which he gained over the Lancastrians at Mortimer's Cross.

2 'Made glorious by his manly chivalry,
'With bruised arms and wreaths of victory.'

Rape of Lucrece.

3 Dances.

4 i. e. steeds caparisoned or clothed in the trappings of war. The word is properly barbed, from equis bardatus, Latin of the middle ages.

5 'Is the warlike sound of drum and trumpet turned to the soft noise of lyre and lute? The neighing of barbed steeds, whose loudness filled the air with terror, and whose breaths dimmed the sun with smoke, converted to delicate tunes and amorous glances.'—Lyly's Alexander and Campaspe, 1594. There is a passage in the

As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up;
About a prophecy, which says—that G
Of Edward's heirs the murderer shall be.^a Dive, thoughts, down to my soul! here Clarence comes.

Enter CLARENCE, guarded, and BRAKENBURY.

Brother, good day: What means this armed guard,
That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,
Tendering my person's safety, hath appointed
This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glo. Upon what cause?

Clar. Because my name is—George.
Glo. Alack, my lord, that fault is none of yours;
He should, for that, commit your godfathers:—
O, belike, his majesty hath some intent,
That you shall be new christen'd in the Tower.
But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know?

Clar. Yea, Richard, when I know; for, I protest,
As yet I do not: But, as I can learn,
He hearkens after prophecies, and dreams;
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G,
And says—a wizard told him, that by G
His issue disinherited should be;
And, for my name of George begins with G,
It follows in his thought, that I am he:
These, as I learn, and such like toys⁹ as these,
Have mov'd his highness to commit me now.

Glo. Why, this it is, when men are rul'd by women:—

'Tis not the king, that sends you to the Tower;
My Lady Grey, his wife, Clarence, 'tis she,
That tempers¹⁰ him to this extremity.
Was it not she, and that good man of worship,
Antony Woodville, her brother there,
That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower;
From whence this present day he is deliver'd?
We are not safe, Clarence, we are not safe.

Clar. By heaven, I think, there is no man secure,

Legend of the Death of King Richard III. in the Mirror for Magistrates, evidently imitated from Shakspeare.

6 Feature is proportion, or beauty, in general. By dissembling is not meant hypocritical nature, that pretends one thing and does another; but nature, that puts together things of a dissimilar kind, as a brave soul and a deformed body.

7 Preparations for mischief.

8 This is from Hollinshed. Philip de Comines says that the English at that time were never unfurnished with some prophecy or other, by which they accounted for every event.

9 i. e. fancies, freaks of imagination.

10 i. e. frames his temper, moulds it to this extremity. This word is often used in the same figurative sense by Spenser and other contemporaries of Shakspeare.

But the queen's kindred, and night-walking heralds
That trudge betwixt the king and Mistress Shore.
Heard you not, what an humble suppliant
Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.
I'll tell you what,—I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery:
The jealous o'er-worn widow, and herself,¹
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me;
His majesty hath straitly given in charge,
That no man shall have private conference,
Of what degree soever with his brother.

Glo. Even so? an please your worship, Brakenbury,

You may partake of any thing we say:
We speak no treason, man;—We say, the king
Is wise and virtuous; and his noble queen
Well struck in years;² fair, and not jealous:
We say, that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
A cherry lip,
A bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue;
And that the queen's kindred are made gentlefolks:
How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought to do.

Glo. Naught to do with mistress Shore? I tell thee, fellow,

He that doth naught with her, excepting one,
Were best to do it secretly, alone.

Brak. What one, my lord?

Glo. Her husband, knave:—Would'st thou betray me?

Brak. I beseech your grace to pardon me; and,
withal,

Forbear your conference with the noble duke.

Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey.³

Glo. We are the queen's subjects,⁴ and must obey.
Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;

And whatsoever you will employ me in,—
Were it, to call king Edward's widow—sister,—
I will perform it to enfranchise you.

Mean time, this deep disgrace in brotherhood,
Touches me deeper than you can imagine.

Clar. I know it pleaseth neither of us well.

Glo. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you:⁵

Mean time, have patience.

Clar. I must perforce; farewell.
[Exeunt CLARENCE, BRAKENBURY, and

Guard.

Glo. Go, tread the path that thou shalt ne'er return,

Simple, plain Clarence!—I do love thee so,
That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven,

If heaven will take the present at our hands.
But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings?

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord!
Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain!
Well are you welcome to this open air.

How hath your lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must:

But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks,
That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too;

For they, that were your enemies, are his,
And have prevail'd as much on him, as you.

Hast. More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Glo. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so bad abroad as this at home;—
The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy,
And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glo. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is bad indeed.

O, he hath kept an evil diet long,
And over-much consum'd his royal person;
'Tis very grievous to be thought upon.

What, is he in his bed?

Hast. He is.
Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you.

[Exit HASTINGS.

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die
Till George be pack'd with posthorses up to heaven.

I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments;

And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live:

Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to bustle in!

For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter:⁷
What though I kill'd her husband, and her father?

The readiest way to make the wench amends,
Is—to become her husband, and her father:

The which will I; not all so much for love,
As for another secret close intent,

By marrying her, which I must reach unto.
But yet I run before my horse to market:

Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives, and reigns;

When they are gone, then must I count my gains.
[Exit.

SCENE II. The same. Another Street. Enter

the Corpse of KING HENRY THE SIXTH, borne in an open Coffin, Gentlemen bearing Halberds, to guard it; and LADY ANNE as mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load,—

If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,—
Whilst I a while obsequiously lament

The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster—
Poor keyhole⁸ figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!

Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,

Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son, Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds!

Lo, in these windows, that let forth thy life,
I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes:—

O, cursed be the hand that made these holes!
Cursed the heart, that had the heart to do it!

Cursed the blood, that let this blood from hence!
More direful hap betide that hated wretch,

That makes us wretched by the death of thee,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads,

Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives!
If ever he have child, abortive be it,

Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
Whose ugly and unnatural aspect

To lie signified anciently to reside, or remain in a place, as appears by many instances in these volumes.

⁶ A mew was a place in which falcons were kept,
and being confined therein, while moulting, was metaphorically used for any close place or places of confinement. The verb to mew was formed from the substantive.

⁷ Lady Anne, the betrothed widow of Edward prince of Wales. See King Henry VI. Part III.

⁸ Funereal.

⁹ A key, on account of the coldness of the metal of which it is composed, was often employed to stop any slight bleeding. The epithet is common to many old writers.

² This odd expression was preceded by others equally singular, expressing what we now call 'an advanced age.'

³ This and the three preceding speeches were probably all designed for prose. It is at any rate impossible that this line could have been intended for metre.

⁴ I. e. the lowest of her subjects. This substantive is found in Psalm xxxv. 13.—'Yea the very subjects came together against me unawares, making mouths at me, and ceased not.'

⁵ He means, 'or else be imprisoned in your stead.'

May fright the hopeful mother at the view ;
And that be heir to his unhappiness !¹
If ever he have wife, let her be made
More miserably by the death of him,
Than I am made by my young lord, and thee !—
Come, now, toward Chertsey with your holy load,
Taken from Paul's to be interred there ;
And, still as you are weary of the weight,
Rest you, whilst I lament King Henry's corpse.
[The Bearer take up the Corpse, and advance.]

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Stay you, that bear the corpse, and set it down.

Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,

To stop devoted charitable deeds ?

Glo. Villains, set down the corpse ; or, by Saint Paul,

I'll make a corpse of him that disobey's.²

1 Gent. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

Glo. Unmanner'd dog ! stand thou when I command :

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast,
Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,
And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

[The Bearer set down the Coffin.]

Anne. What, do you tremble ? are you all afraid ?

Alas, I blame you not ; for you are mortal,
And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.—
Avaunt, thou dreadful minister of hell !

Thou hadst but power over his mortal body,
His soul thou canst not have ; therefore, be gone.

Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curst.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not :

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell,
Fill'd it with cursing cries, and deep exclaims.

If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,
Behold this pattern³ of thy butcheries ;—

O, gentlemen, see, see ! dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh !⁴—

Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity ;
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood

From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells ;
Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural,

Provokes this deluge most unnatural.—
O God, which this blood mad'st, revenge his death !

O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death !
Either, heaven, with lightning strike the murderer

dead,
Or, earth, gape open wide, and eat him quick ;

As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered !

Glo. Lady, you know no rules of charity,
Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.

Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor man ;

No beast so fierce, but knows some touch of pity.

Glo. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.

Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the truth !

Glo. More wonderful, when angels are so angry.—
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,

Of these supposed evils, to give me leave,
By circumstance, but to acquit myself.

Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus'd⁵ infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,

By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.

Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me have

Some patient leisure to excuse myself.

Anne. Foulter than heart can think thee, thou canst make

No excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Glo. By such despair, I should accuse myself.

Anne. And, by despairing, shalt thou stand excus'd ;

For doing worthy vengeance on thyself,
That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.

Glo. Say, that I slew them not ?

Anne. Why then, they are not dead :
But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.

Glo. I did not kill your husband.

Anne. Why, then he is alive.

Glo. Nay, he is dead ; and slain by Edward's hand.

Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest ; Queen Margaret saw

Thy murderous falchion smoking in his blood ;
The which thou once didst bend against her breast,

But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glo. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue,
That laid their guilt⁶ upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind,
That never dreamt on aught but butcheries :

Didst thou not kill this king ?

Glo. I grant ye. I grant ye.

Anne. Dost grant me, hedgehog ? then, God grant me too,

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed !
O, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

Glo. The fitter for the King of heaven that hath him.

Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never come.

Glo. Let him thank me, that help to send him thither ;

For he was fitter for that place, than earth.

Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell.

Glo. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me name it.

Anne. Some dungeon.

Glo. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou liest !

Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.

Glo. I know so.—But, gentle Lady Anne,—
To leave this keen encounter of our wits,

And fall somewhat into a slower method ;—
Is not the causer of the timeless deaths

Of these Plantagenets, Henry, and Edward,
As blameful as the executioner ?

Anne. Thou wast the cause, and most accurs'd effect.

Glo. Your beauty was the cause of that effect ;
Your beauty, which did haunt me in my sleep,

To undertake the death of all the world,
So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.

Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.

Glo. These eyes could not endure that beauty's wreck,

You should not blemish it, if I stood by ;
As all the world is cheered by the sun,

So I by that ; it is my day, my life.

Anne. Black night o'ershadeth thy day, and death thy life !

Glo. Curse not thyself, fair creature ; thou art both.

Anne. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.

Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.

Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,
To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my husband.

Glo. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,
Did it to help thee to a better husband.

Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.

the reason. The opinion seems to be derived from the ancient Swedes, or northern nations, from whom we descended ; for they practised this method of trial in dubious cases.—See Pitt's Atlas ; Sveden, p. 20.

⁵ Diffus'd anciently signified dark, obscure, strange, uncouth, or confused.

⁶ i. e. the crime of my brothers. He has just charged the murder of Lady Anne's husband on Edward.

² 'I'll make a ghost of him that lets me.'—Hamlet.

³ Example.

⁴ This is from Hollinshed. It is a tradition very generally received, that the murdered body bleeds on the touch of the murderer. This was so much believed by Sir Kenelm Digby, that he has endeavoured to explain

Glo. He lives, that loves you better than he could.

Anne. Name him.

Glo. Plantagenet.

Anne. Why, that was he.

Glo. The self-same name, but one of better nature.

Anne. Where is he?

Glo. Here: [She spits at him.]

Why dost thou spit at me?

Anne. 'Would it were mortal poison, for thy sake!

Glo. Never came poison from so sweet a place.

Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.

Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.

Glo. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.

Anne. 'Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead!

Glo. I would they were, that I might die at once; For now they kill me with a living death.¹

Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,

Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops:

These eyes, which never shed remorseful² tear,—

No,—when my father York and Edward wept,

To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made,

When black-fac'd Clifford shook his sword at him:

Nor when thy warlike father, like a child,

Told the sad story of my father's death;

And twenty times made pause, to sob, and weep,

That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,

Like trees bedash'd with rain:—in that sad time,

My manly eyes did scorn a humble tear;⁴

And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,

Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping.

I never sued to friend, nor enemy;

My tongue could never learn sweet soothing word;

But now thy beauty is propos'd my fee,

My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speak. [She looks scornfully at him.]

Teach not thy lip such scorn; for it was made

For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.

If thy revengful heart cannot forgive,

Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;

Which if thou please to hide in this true breast,

And let the soul forth that adoreth thee,

I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,

And humbly beg the death upon my knee.

[He lays his breast open; she offers at it with his sword.]

Nay, do not pause; for I did kill King Henry;—

But 'twas thy beauty that provoked me.⁵

Nay, now despatch; 'twas I that stabb'd young

Edward;—

[She again offers at his breast.]

But 'twas thy heavenly face that set me on.

[She lets fall the sword.]

Take up the sword again, or take up me.

Anne. Arise, dissembler: though I wish thy death,

I will not be thy executioner.

Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.

Anne. I have already.

Glo. That was in thy rage:

Speak it again, and, even with the word,

This hand, which, for thy love, did kill thy love,

Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love;

To both thy devoirs shalt thou be accessory.

1 See notes on King Henry V. Act v. Sc. 2.; and King Henry VI. Part II. Act III. Sc. 2.

2 We have the same expression in Venus and Adonis applied to love:—

'For I have heard it is a life in death

That laughs and weeps, and all but with a breath.'

Pope adopts it:—

— a living death I bear,

Says Dapperwit, and sunk beside his chair.'

3 Pitiful.

4 Here is an apparent reference to King Henry VI.

Part III. Act II. Sc. 1.

5 Shakespeare countenances the observation that no woman can ever be offended with the mention of her beauty.

6 Crosby Place is now Crosby Square, in Bishopsgate Street. This magnificent house was built in 1466, by Sir John Crosby, grocer and woolman. He died in 1475. The ancient hall of this fabric is still remaining, though divided by an additional floor, and encumbered with modern galleries, having been converted into a place of worship for Antinomians, &c. The upper part of it was Anne. I would, I knew thy heart.

Glo. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.

Anne. I fear me, both are false.

Glo. Then never man was true.

Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.

Glo. Say then, my peace is made.

Anne. That shall you know hereafter.

Glo. But shall I live in hope?

Anne. All men, I hope, live so.

Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.

Anne. To take, is not to give.

[She puts on the ring.]

Glo. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy finger,

Even so thy breast encloseth my poor heart;

Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.

And if thy poor devoted servant may

But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,

Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.

Anne. What is it?

Glo. That it may please you leave these sad designs

To him that hath more cause to be a mourner,

And presently repair to Crosby-place:⁶

Where—after I have solemnly interr'd,

At Chertsey monast'ry this noble king,

And wet his grave with my repentant tears,—

I will with all expedient⁷ duty see you:

For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you,

Grant me this boon.

Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys me

too,

To see you are become so penitent.—

Tressel, and Berkley, go along with me.

Glo. Bid me farewell.

Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve.

But, since you teach me how to flatter you,

Imagine I have said farewell already.⁸

[Exeunt LADY ANNE, TRESSSEL, and

BERKLEY.]

Glo. Sirs, take up the corpse.

Gent. Towards Chertsey, noble lord?

Glo. No, to White Friars; there attend my coming

[Exeunt the rest, with the Corse.]

Was ever woman in this humour woo'd?

Was ever woman in this humour won?

I'll have her,—but I will not keep her long.

What! I, that kill'd her husband, and his father,

To take her in her heart's extremest hate;

With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,

The bleeding witness of her hatred by;

With God, her conscience, and these bars against

me,

And I no friends to back my suit withal,

But the plain devil, and dissembling looks,

And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing!

Ha!

Hath she forgot already that brave prince,

Edward, her lord, whom I some three months since,

Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury?⁹

A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,—

Fram'd in the prodigality of nature,

Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,—

The spacious world cannot again afford:

lately the warehouse of an eminent packer. Sir J. Crosby's tomb is in the neighbouring church of St. Helen the Great.

7 i. e. expeditious.

8 Cibber, who altered King Richard III. for the stage, was so thoroughly convinced of the improbability of this scene, that he thought it necessary to make Tressel say:—

'When future chronicles shall speak of this,

They will be thought romance, not history.'

The embassy under Lord Macartney to China witnessed the representation of a play in a theatre at Tien-sing with a similar incongruous plot.

9 This fixes the exact time of the scene to August, 1471. King Edward, however, is introduced to the second act dying. That king died in April, 1483; consequently there is an interval between this and the next act of almost twelve years. Clarence, who is represented in the preceding scene as committed to the Tower before the burial of King Henry VI. was in fact not confined nor put to death till March, 1477-8, seven years afterwards.

And will she yet abase her eyes on me,
That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed?
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
On me, that halt, and am mishapen thus?
My dukedom to a beggarly denier,¹
I do mistake my person all this while:
Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man.²
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass;
And entertain a score or two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body:
Since I am crept in favour with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost.
But, first, I'll turn you fellow in³ his grave;
And then return lamenting to my love.—
Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass,
That I may see my shadow as I pass. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, LORD RIVERS, and LORD GREY.

Riv. Have patience, madam; there's no doubt his majesty
Will soon recover his accustom'd health.

Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse:
Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,
And cheer his grace with quick and merry words.

Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide of me?

Grey. No other harm, but loss of such a lord.

Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly son,
To be your comforter when he is gone.

Q. Eliz. Ah, he is young; and his minority
Is put unto the trust of Richard Gloster,
A man that loves not me, nor none of you.

Riv. If it concluded, he shall be protector?

Q. Eliz. It is determin'd, not concluded yet:⁴
But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and STANLEY.⁵

Grey. Here come the lords of Buckingham and Stanley.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace!

Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!

Q. Eliz. The Countess Richmond,⁶ good my lord of Stanley,
To your good prayer will scarcely say—amen.
Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you, good lord, assur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe
The envious slanders of her false accusers;
Or, if she be accus'd on true report,
Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley?

Stan. But now, the duke of Buckingham, and I,
Are come from visiting his majesty.

Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords?

Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully.

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer with him?

Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement

Between the duke of Gloster and your brothers,
And between them and my lord chamberlain;
And sent to warn⁷ them to his royal presence.

Q. Eliz. 'Would all were well!—But that will never be;—

I fear, our happiness is at the height.

Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and DORSET.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it:—

Who are they, that complain unto the king,
That I, forsooth, am stern, and love them not?
By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly,
That fill his ears with such dissention rumours.
Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemy.

Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth must be abus'd
By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks?

Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks your grace?

Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace.
When have I injured thee? when done thee wrong?
Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction?

A plague upon you all! His royal grace,—
Whom God preserve better than you would wish!—
Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing while,
But you must trouble him with lewd⁸ complaints.

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the matter:

The king, of his own royal disposition,
And not provok'd by any suitor else;
Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred,
That in your outward action shows itself,
Against my children, brothers, and myself,
Makes him to send: that thereby he may gather
The ground of your ill will, and so remove it.

Glo. I cannot tell:—The world is grown so bad,
That wrens may prey where eagles dare not perch:
Since every Jack⁹ became a gentleman,
There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloster;

You envy my advancement, and my friends';
God grant, we never may have need of you!

Glo. Meantime, God grants that we have need of you:

Our brother is imprison'd by your means,
Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility
Held in contempt; while great promotions
Are daily given, to ennoble those
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble.

Q. Eliz. By Him, that rais'd me to this careful height,

From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his majesty
Against the duke of Clarence, but have been
An earnest advocate to plead for him.

My lord, you do me shameful injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Glo. You may deny that you were not the cause
Of my Lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Riv. She may, my lord; for—

Glo. She may, Lord Rivers?—why, who knows not so?

² Marvellous is here used adverbially. A proper man, in old language, was a well-proportioned one.
³ In for into.

⁴ Determin'd signifies the final conclusion of the will: concluded, what cannot be altered by reason of some act, consequent on the final judgment.

⁵ By inadvertence, in the old copies Derby is put for Stanley. The person meant was Thomas Lord Stanley, lord steward of King Edward the Fourth's household. But he was not created earl of Derby, till after the accession of King Henry VII. In the fourth and fifth acts of this play, he is every where called Lord Stanley.

⁶ Margaret, daughter to John Beaufort, first duke of Somerset. After the death of her first husband, Edmund Tudor, earl of Richmond, half-brother to King Henry VI. by whom she had only one son, afterwards King Henry VII., she married Sir Henry Stafford, uncle to Humphrey, duke of Buckingham.

⁷ I. e. summon.
⁸ Lewd here signifies idle, ungracious; and not rude, ignorant, as Stevens asserts.

⁹ I. e. I cannot tell what to say or think of it.
¹⁰ This proverbial expression at once demonstrates the origin of the term Jack, so often used by Shakespeare. It means one of the very lowest class of people, among whom this name is most common and familiar.

She may do more, sir, than denying that :
 She may help you to many fair preferments ;
 And then deny her aiding hand therein,
 And lay those honours on your high desert.
 What may she not ? She may,—ay, marry, may she,—

Riv. What, marry, may she ?

Glo. What, marry, may she ? marry with a king,
 A bachelor, a handsome stripling too ;
 I wis,¹ your grandam had a worse match.

Q. Eliz. My lord of Gloster, I have too long borne
 Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs :
 By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty,
 Of those gross taunts I often have endur'd.
 I had rather be a country servant maid,
 Than a great queen, with this condition—
 To be so baited, scorn'd, and storm'd at :
 Small joy have I in being England's queen.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, behind.

Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech thee !

Thy honour, state, and seat, is due to me.

Glo. What ? threat you me with telling of the king ?

Tell him, and spare not : look, what I have said
 I will avouch, in presence of the king :
 I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.
 'Tis time to speak, my pains² are quite forgot.

Q. Mar. Out, devil ! I remember thee too well :
 Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower,
 And Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury.

Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband
 king,

I was a packhorse in his great affairs ;
 A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,
 A liberal rewarder of his friends ;
 To royalize his blood, I spilt mine own.

Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his, or thine.

Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband
 Grey,

Were factious for the house of Lancaster ;—
 And, Rivers, so were you :—Was not your husband
 In Margaret's battle at Saint Albans slain ?³
 Let me put in your minds, if you forget,
 What you have been ere now, and what you are ;
 Withal, what I have been, and what I am.

Q. Mar. A murderous villain, and so still thou art.

Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father Warwick,

Ay, and forswore himself,—Which Jesu pardon !

Q. Mar. Which God revenge !

Glo. To fight on Edward's party, for the crown :
 And, for his meed,⁴ poor lord, he is mew'd up :
 I would to God, my heart were flint like Edward's,
 Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine ;
 I am too childish-foolish for this world.

Q. Mar. Hie thee to hell for shame, and leave this world,

Thou cacodæmon ! there thy kingdom is.

Riv. My lord of Gloster, in those busy days,
 Which here you urge, to prove us enemies,
 We follow'd then our lord, our lawful king ;
 So should we you, if you should be our king.

1 i. e. I think.

2 Labours.

3 See note on King Henry VI. Part III. Act iii. Sc. 2.
 Margaret's battle is Margaret's army.

4 Reward.

5 To pill is to pillage. It is often used with to poll or strip. 'Kildare did use to pill and poll his friendes, tenants, and retheyners.'—Holinshed.

6 Gentle is here used ironically.

7 'What dost thou in my sight.' This phrase has been already explained in the notes to Love's Labour's Lost, Act iv. Sc. 3. In As You Like It, Act i. Sc. 1, Shakespeare again plays upon the word make, as in this instance :—

'Now, sir, what make you here ?

Nothing : I am not taught to make any thing.'

8 Margaret fled into France after the battle of Hexham, in 1464, and Edward issued a proclamation pro-

Glo. If I should be ?—I had rather be a pedlar.
 Far be it from my heart, the thought thereof !

Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
 You should enjoy, were you this country's king ;
 As little joy you may suppose in me,
 That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.

Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof ;
 For I am she, and altogether joyless.
 I can no longer hold me patient.— [Advancing.]
 Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
 In sharing that which you have pill'd⁵ from me :
 Which of you trembles not, that looks on me ?
 If not, that, I being queen, you bow like subjects ;
 Yet that, by you depos'd, you quake like rebels ?—
 Ah, gentle⁶ villain, do not turn away !

Glo. Foul wrinkled witch, what mak'st⁷ thou in my sight ?

Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd ;
 That will I make, before I let thee go.

Glo. Wert thou not banished on pain of death ?⁸

Q. Mar. I was ; but I do find more pain in banishment,

Than death can yield me here by my abode.

A husband, and a son, thou ow'st to me,—

And thou a kingdom ;—all of you, allegiance :

This sorrow that I have, by right is yours ;

And all the pleasures you usurp are mine.

Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,—
 When thou didst crown his warlike brows with paper,

And with thy scorns drew'st rivers from his eyes ;

And then, to dry them, gav'st the duke a clout,

Steep'd in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland ;—

His curses, then from bitterness of soul

Denounc'd against thee, are all fall'n upon thee ;

And God, not we, hath plagu'd⁹ thy bloody deed.

Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O, 'twas the foulest deed to slay that babe,

And the most merciless that e'er was heard of.

Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.

Dors. No man but prophesied revenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it.¹⁰

Q. Mar. What ! were you snarling all, before I came,

Ready to catch each other by the throat,

And turn you all your hatred now on me !

Did York's dread curse prevail so much with heaven,

That Henry's death, my lovely Edward's death,

Their kingdom's loss, my woful banishment,

Could all but¹¹ answer for that peevish brat ?

Can curses pierce the clouds, and enter heaven.—

Why, then give way, dull clouds, to my quick curses !—

Though not by war, by surfeit die your king,¹²

As ours by murder, to make him a king !

Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales,

For Edward, my son, that was prince of Wales

Die in his youth, by like untimely violence !

Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,

Outlive thy glory, like my wretched self !

Long may'st thou live, to wail thy children's loss ;

And see another, as I see thee now,

Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine !

Long die thy happy days before thy death ;

hibiting any of his subjects from aiding her return, or harbouring her, should she attempt to revisit England.
 She remained abroad till April, 1471, when she landed at Weymouth. After the battle of Tewksbury, in May, 1471, she was confined in the Tower, where she continued a prisoner till 1473, when she was ransomed by her father Regnier, and removed to France, where she died in 1482. So that her introduction in the present scene is a mere poetical fiction.

9 To plague in ancient language is to punish. Hence the scriptural term of the plagues of Egypt.

10 See King Henry VI. Part III. Act i. Sc. 2 :—

'What, weeping-ripe, my Lord Northumberland.'

11 But is here used in its exceptive sense : could all this only, or nothing but (i. e. be out or except) this answer for the death of that brat.

12 Alluding to his luxurious life.

And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief,
Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen!—
Rivers,—and Dorset,—you were standers by,—
And so wast thou, Lord Hastings,—when my son
Was stabb'd with bloody daggers: God, I pray him,
That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off!

Glo. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wither'd hag.

Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me.

If heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
O, let them keep it, till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace!
The worm of conscience still be-gnaw thy soul!
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv'st,
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be while some tormenting dream
Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils!
Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog!¹
Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature, and the son of hell!
Thou slander of thy mother's heavy womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!
Thou rag of honour! thou detested—

Glo. Margaret.

Q. Mar. Richard!

Glo. Ha?

Q. Mar. I call thee not.

Glo. I cry thee mercy then; for I did think,
That thou hadst call'd me all these bitter names.

Q. Mar. Why, so I did: but look'd for no reply.
O, let me make the period to my curse.

Glo. 'Tis done by me; and ends in—Margaret.

Q. Eliz. Thus have you breath'd your curse against yourself.

Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune!

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider,²
Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about?
Fool, fool! thou whet'st a knife to kill thyself.
The day will come, that thou shalt wish for me
To help thee curse this pois'nous bunch-back'd toad.

Hast. False-boding woman, end thy frantic curse;
Lest, to thy harm, thou move our patience.

Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you! you have all mov'd mine.

Riv. Were you well serv'd, you would be taught your duty.

Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do me duty,

Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects:
O, serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty.

Dors. Dispute not with her, she is lunatic.

Q. Mar. Peace, master marquiss, you are malapert:

Your fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current;³

¹ 'Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog.' It was an old prejudice which is not yet quite extinct, that those who are defective or deformed, are marked by nature as prone to mischief. She calls him hog, in allusion to his cognizance, which was a boar. 'The expression (says Warburton) is fine; remembering her youngest son, she alludes to the ravage which hogs make with the finest flowers in gardens; and intimating that Elizabeth was to expect no other treatment for her sons.' The rhyme for which Collingborne was executed, as given by Heywood in his Metrical History of King Edward IV. will illustrate this:—

'The cat, the rat, and Lovell our dog,
Doe rule all England under a hog.
The crooke backt boore the way hath found
To root our roses from our ground,
Both flower and bud will he confound,
Till king of beasts the swine be crown'd:
And then the dog, the cat, and rat
Shall in his trough feed and be fat.'

The persons aimed at in this rhyme, were the king, Catesby, Ratcliff, and Lovell.

O, that your young nobility could judge,
What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable!
They that stand high, have many blasts to shake
them:

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.
Glo. Good counsel, marry;—learn it, learn it, marquiss.

Dors. It touches you, my lord, as much as me.

Glo. Ay, and much more: But I was born so high,
Our airy⁴ buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade!—alas!
alas!—

Witness my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up.

Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest:—

O God, that seest it, do not suffer it!

As it was won with blood, lost be it so!

Buck. Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.

Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd.

My charity is outrage, life my shame,—

And in my shame still live my sorrow's rage!

Buck. Have done, have done.

Q. Mar. O princely Buckingham, I kiss thy hand,
In sign of league and amity with thee:

Now fair befall thee, and thy noble house!

Thy garments are not spotted with our blood,

Nor thou within the compass of my curse.

Buck. Nor no one here; for curses never pass
The lips of those that breathe them in the air.

Q. Mar. I'll not believe but they ascend the sky,
And there awake God's gentle-sleeping peace.

O Buckingham, beware of yonder dog;

Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,

His venom tooth will rankle to the death:

Have not to do with him, beware of him;

Sin, death, and hell have set their marks on him;

And all their ministers attend on him.

Glo. What doth she say, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord.

Q. Mar. What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?

And soothe the devil that I warn thee from?

O, but remember this another day,

When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow;

And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess.—

Live each of you the subjects to his hate,

And he to yours, and all of you to God's?⁵ [Erit.]

Hast. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses.

Riv. And so doth mine; I muse, why she's at liberty.

Glo. I cannot blame her, by God's holy mother;

She hath had too much wrong, and I repent

My part thereof, that I have done to her.

Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.

Glo. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrong.

I was too hot to do somebody good,

That is too cold in thinking of it now.

Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid:

² Alluding to Gloucester's form and venom. A bottled spider is a large, bloated, glossy spider: supposed to contain venom proportionate to its size.

³ He was created marquiss of Dorset in 1476. The scene is laid in 1477-8.

⁵ It is evident, from the conduct of Shakespeare, that the house of Tudor retained all their Lancastrian prejudices, even in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. He seems to deduce the woes of the house of York from the curses which Queen Margaret had ranted against them, and he could not give that weight to her curses, without supposing a right in her to utter them.—Walpole.

He is frank'd¹ up to fattening for his pams;—
God pardon them that are the cause thereof!

Riv. A virtuous and a christianlike conclusion,
To pray for them that have done scath² to us.

Glo. So do I ever, being well advis'd;—
For had I curs'd now, I had curs'd myself. [Aside.]

Enter CATESBY.

Cates. Madam, his majesty both call for you,—
And for your grace,—and you, my noble lords.

Q. Eliz. Catesby, I come:—Lords, will you go with me?

Riv. Madam, we will attend your grace.

[Exeunt all but GLOSTER.]

Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl.
The secret mischiefs that I set abroad,
I lay unto the grievous charge of others.
Clarence,—whom I, indeed, have laid in darkness,
I do bewep to many simple gulls;
Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;
And tell them—'tis the queen and her allies,
That stir the king against the duke my brother.
Now they believe it; and withal whet me
To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey:
But then I sigh, and with a piece of scripture,
Tell them—that God bids us do good for evil:
And thus I clothe my naked villany
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ:
And seem a saint, when most I play the devil.

Enter Two Murderers.

But soft, here come my executioners.
How now, my hardy, stout resolved mates?
Are you now going to despatch this thing?

I Murd. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant,

That we may be admitted where he is.

Glo. Well thought upon, I have it here about me:
[Gives the Warrant.]

When you have done, repair to Crosby-place.

But, sirs, be sudden in the execution,
Withal obdurate, do not hear him plead;
For Clarence is well spoken, and, perhaps,
May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him.

I Murd. Tut, tut, my lord, we will not stand to prate,

Talkers are no great doers; be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Glo. Your eyes drop mill-stones, when fools' eyes drop tears:³

I like you, lads:—about your business straight;

Go, go, despatch.

I Murd. We will, my noble lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Tower.

Enter CLARENCE and BRAKENBURY.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

Clar. O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,
That, as I am a christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days;
So full of dismal terror was the time.

Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell me.

Clar. Methought, that I had broken from the Tower,

¹ A frank is a pen or coop in which hogs and other animals were confined while fattening. To be franked up was to be closely confined. To franch, or frank, was to stuff, to cram, to fatten.

² Harm, mischief.

³ This appears to have been a proverbial saying. It occurs again in the tragedy of Cæsar and Pompey, 607:—

'Men's eyes must millstones drop, when fools shed tears.'

⁴ Clarence was desirous to assist his sister Margaret against the French king, who invaded her jointure lands after the death of her husband, Charles duke of Burgundy, who was killed at Nancy, in January, 1476-7. Isabel, the wife of Clarence, being then dead (poisoned by the duke of Gloucester, as it has been conjectured,) he wished to have married Mary, the daughter and heir

And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;⁴
And, in my company, my brother Gloster:
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatches; thence we look'd toward England,

And cited up a thousand heavy times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster
That had befall'n us. As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought, that Gloster stumbled; and, in falling,
Struck me, that thought to stay him, overboard,
Into the tumbling billows of the main.

O lord! methought, what pain it was to drown
What dreadful noise of water in mine ears:⁵
What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!
Methought, I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men, that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea,
Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in scorn of eyes) reflecting gems,
That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Brak. Had you such leisure in the time of death
To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?

Clar. Methought, I had; and often did I strive
To yield the ghost: but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To seek the empty, vast, and wand'ring air;
But smother'd it within my panting bulk,⁶
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not with this sore agony?

Clar. O, no, my dream was lengthen'd after life;
O, then began the tempest to my soul!

I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cry'd aloud,—What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?

And so he vanish'd: Then came wand'ring by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood,⁷ and he shriek'd out aloud,—

Clarence is come,—false, fleeting,—'perjur'd Clarence,
That stabb'd me in the field by Tewkesbury;—

Seize on him, furies, take him to your torments!
With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that, with the very noise,
I trembling wak'd, and, for a season after,
Could not believe but that I was in hell;

Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brak. No, marvel, lord, though it affrighted you!
I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. O, Brakenbury, I have done these things—
That now give evidence against my soul,—

For Edward's sake; and, see, how he requites
me!

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁸ and my poor children:—

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁸ and my poor children:—

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁸ and my poor children:—

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁸ and my poor children:—

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁸ and my poor children:—

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁸ and my poor children:—

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁸ and my poor children:—

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:

O, spare my guiltless wife,⁸ and my poor children:—

I pray thee, gentle keeper, stay by me;
My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

Brak. I will, my lord; God give your grace good rest!—

[CLARENCE reposes himself on a Chair.
Sorrow breaks seasons, and reposing hours,
Makes the night morning, and the noontide night.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,¹
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares:²
So that, between their titles, and low name,
There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter the Two Murderers.

1 Murd. Ho! who's here?

Brak. What would'st thou fellow? and how cam'st thou hither?

1 Murd. I would speak with Clarence, and I came hither on my legs.

Brak. What, so brief?

2 Murd. O, sir, 'tis better to be brief than tedious:—

Let him see our commission; talk no more.

[A Paper is delivered to BRAKENBURY, who reads it.

Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:—
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.
Here are the keys;—there sits the duke asleep:
I'll to the king; and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

1 Murd. You may, sir; 'tis a point of wisdom:
Fare you well. [Exit BRAKENBURY.

2 Murd. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?

1 Murd. No; he'll say, 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Murd. When he wakes! why, fool, he shall never wake until the great judgment day.

1 Murd. Why, then he'll say, we stabb'd him sleeping.

2 Murd. The urging of that word, judgment, hath bred a kind of remorse in me.

1 Murd. What? art thou afraid?

2 Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant for it;
but to be damn'd for killing him, from the which no warrant can defend me.

1 Murd. I thought, thou had'st been resolute.

2 Murd. So I am, to let him live.

1 Murd. I'll back to the duke of Gloster, and tell him so.

2 Murd. Nay, I prythee, stay a little: I hope, this holy humour of mine will change; it was wont to hold me but while one would tell twenty.

1 Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now?

2 Murd. 'Faith, some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me.

1 Murd. Remember our reward, when the deed's done.

2 Murd. Come, he dies; I had forgot the reward.

1 Murd. Where's thy conscience now?

2 Murd. In the duke of Gloster's purse.

1 Murd. So, when he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out.

2 Murd. 'Tis no matter; let it go; there's few,
or none, will entertain it.

1 Murd. What, if it come to thee again?

1 This line may be thus understood, 'The glories of princes are nothing more than empty titles:' but it would impress the purpose of the speaker, and correspond better with the following lines, if it were read:—
'Princes have but their titles for their troubles.'

Johnson.

2 They often suffer real miseries for imaginary and unreal gratifications.

3 One villain says, Conscience is at his elbow, persuading him not to kill the duke. The other says, take the devil into thy mind, who will be a match for thy conscience, and believe it not. Perhaps conscience is here personified, as in Launcelot's dialogue in the Merchant of Venice; but however that may be, Shakespeare would have used him for it without scruple.

4 i. e. a bold courageous fellow

N

2 Murd. I'll not meddle with it, it is a dangerous thing, it makes a man a coward; a man cannot steal, but it accuseth him; a man cannot swear, but it checks him; a man cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, but it detects him: 'Tis a blushing shame-faced spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom; it fills one full of obstacles: it made me once restore a purse of gold, that by chance I found: it beggars any man that keeps it: it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing, and every man that means to live well, endeavours to trust to himself, and live without it.

1 Murd. 'Zounds, it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.

2 Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee, but to make thee sigh.⁵

1 Murd. I am strong-fram'd, he cannot prevail
with me.

2 Murd. Spoke like a tall fellow, that respects his reputation. Come, shall we fall to work?

1 Murd. Take him over the costard⁶ with the hilts of thy sword, and then throw him into the malmsey butt, in the next room.

2 Murd. O excellent device! and make a sop of
him.

1 Murd. Soft! he wakes.

2 Murd. Strike.

1 Murd. No, we'll reason⁷ with him.

Clar. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of wine.

1 Murd. You shall have wine enough, my lord, anon.

Clar. In God's name, what art thou?

1 Murd. A man, as you are.

Clar. But not, as I am, royal.

1 Murd. Nor you, as we are, loyal.

Clar. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are humble.

1 Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks, mine own.

Clar. How darkly, and how deadly dost thou speak!

Your eyes do menace me: Why look you pale?

Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

Both Murd. To, to, to,— Clar. To murder me?

Both Murd. Ay, ay.

Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so,
And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it.

Wherein, my friends, have I offended you?

1 Murd. Offended us you have not, but the king.

Clar. I shall be reconcil'd to him again.

2 Murd. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to die.

Clar. Are you call'd forth from out a world of
men,

To slay the innocent? What is my offence?

Where is the evidence that doth accuse me?

What lawful quest⁸ have given their verdict up

Unto the frowning judge? or who pronounc'd

The bitter sentence of poor Clarence' death?

Before I be convict by course of law,

To threaten me with death is most unlawful.

I charge you, as you hope to have redemption,

By Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous sins;

5 Head.

6 i. e. talk with him

7 Quest was the term for a jury. 'A quest of twelve men, Duodecim viratus.'—Baret. In Hamlet we have
'crowners' quest law.'

Shakespeare has followed the current tale of his own time. But the truth is, that Clarence was tried and found guilty by his peers, and a bill of attainder was afterwards passed against him. According to Sir Thomas More, his death was commanded by Edward; but he does not assert that the duke of Gloster was the instrument. Polydore Virgil says, though he talked with several persons who lived at the time, he never could get any certain account of the motives that induced Edward to put his brother to death.

8 This line was altered, and the subsequent line omitted, by the editors of the folio, to avoid the penalty of the statute.

That you depart, and lay no hands on me;
The deed you undertake is damnable.

1 Murd. What we will do, we do upon command.

2 Murd. And he, that hath commanded, is our king.

Clar. Erroneous vassal! the great King of kings
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder; Wilt thou then
Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee,

For false forswearing, and for murder too:

Thou didst receive the sacrament, to fight
In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.

1 Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God, Didst break that vow; and, with thy treacherous blade,

Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son.

2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.

1 Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law to us,

When thou hast broke it in such dear degree?

Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?

For Edward, for my brother, for his sake:

He sends you not to murder me for this;

For in that sin he is as deep as I.

If God will be avenged for the deed,

O, know you, that he doth it publicly;

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;

He needs no indirect nor lawless course,

To cut off those that have offended him.

1 Murd. Who made thee then a bloody minister,

When gallant springing, brave Plantagenet,²

That princely novice,³ was struck dead by thee?

Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage.

1 Murd. Thy brother's love, our duty, and thy fault,

Provoke us hither now to slaughter thee?

Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;

I am his brother, and I love him well.

If you are hired for meed,⁴ go back again,

And I will send you to my brother Gloster;

Who shall reward you better for my life,

Than Edward will for tidings of my death.

2 Murd. You are deceiv'd, your brother Gloster hates you.⁵

Clar. O, no; he loves me, and he holds me dear:
Go you to him from me.

Both Murd. Aye, so we will.

Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York

Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm,

And charg'd us from his soul to love each other,

He little thought of this divided friendship:

Bid Gloster think on this, and he will weep.

1 Murd. Ay, millstones; as he lesson'd us to weep.

Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.

1 Murd. Right, as snow in harvest.—Come, you deceive yourself;

'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.

Clar. It cannot be; for he bewept my fortune,
And hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with sobs,
That he would labour my delivery.

1 Murd. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thralldom to the joys of heaven.

2 Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die,
my lord.

1 See note on Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1.

2 Bloming Plantagenet, a prince in the spring of life.

3 Youth, one yet new to the world.

4 Reward.

5 Walpole rightly suggested, from the Chronicle of Croyland, that the true cause of Gloster's hatred to Clarence was, that Clarence was unwilling to share with his brother that moiety of the estate of the great earl of Warwick, to which Gloster became entitled on his marriage with the younger sister of the duchess of Clarence, Lady Anne Neville, who had been betrothed to Edward prince of Wales. This is fully confirmed by a letter

Clar. Hast thou that holy feeling in thy soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And art thou yet to thy own soul so blind,
That thou wilt war with God, by murdering me?—
Ah, sirs, consider, he, that set you on
To do this deed, will hate you for the deed.

2 Murd. What shall we do?

Clar. Relent, and save your souls.

1 Murd. Relent! 'tis cowardly, and womanish.

Clar. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, devilish.

Which of you, if you were a prince's son,

Being pent from liberty, as I am now,

If two such murderers as yourselves came to you,

Would not entreat for life?—

My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks;

O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,

Come thou on my side, and entreat for me,

As you would beg, were you in my distress.

A begging prince what beggar pities not?

2 Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

1 Murd. Take that, and that; if all this will not do, [Stabs him.

I'll drown you in the malmsey-butt within.

[Exit, with the body.

2 Murd. A bloody deed, and desperately despatch'd!

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands

Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Re-enter first Murderer.

1 Murd. How now? what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not?

By heaven, the duke shall know how slack you have been.

2 Murd. I would he knew, that I had sav'd his brother!

Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say;

For I repent me that the duke is slain. [Exit.

1 Murd. So do not I; go, coward, as thou art.—

Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole.

Till that the duke give order for his burial:

And when I have my meed, I will away;

For this will out, and then I must not stay. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace. Enter
KING EDWARD (led in sick), QUEEN ELIZA-BETH, DORSET, RIVERS, HASTINGS, BUCKING-HAM, GREY, and others.

K. Edw. Why, so:—now have I done a good day's work;—

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy

From my Redeemer to redeem me hence;

And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,

Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.

Rivers, and Hastings, take each other's hand;

Dissemble not your hatred¹, swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudging hate;

And with my hand I seal my true heart's love.

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like!

King Edw. Take heed, you dally not before your
king;

Lest he, that is the supreme King of kings,

Confound your hidden falsehood, and award

Either of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love!

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart!

from Sir John Paston to his brother, dated Feb 14, 1471-2:—"Yesterday the king, the queen, my lords of Clarence and Gloucester went to Shene to pardon; men say, not all in charity. The king entreateth my lord of Clarence for my lord of Gloucester; and, as it is said, he answereth, that he may well have my lady his sister-in-law, but they shall part no fellowship, as he saith; so, what will fall, can I not say."—Paston's Letters, vol. ii. p. 91.

6 l. e. do not merely elope and conceal your ill-will to each other, but eradicate it altogether from your bosoms, and swear to love each other.

K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt in this,— Nor your son Dorset,—Buckingham, nor you;—
You have been factious one against the other.
Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;
And what you do, do it unfeignedly.

Q. Eliz. There, Hastings;—I will never more remember

Our former hatred, so thrive I, and mine!

K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him,—Hastings, love lord marquiss.

Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest,
Upon my part shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I. [Embraces DORSET.]

K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this league

With thy embracements to my wife's allies,
And make me happy in your unity.

Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate Upon your grace [To the Queen], but with all dueteous love

Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most love!
When I have most need to employ a friend,
And most assured that he is a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me! this do I beg of heaven,
When I am cold in love, to you, or yours.

K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham,
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart.

There wanteth now our brother Gloster here,
To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble duke.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good-morrow to my sovereign king, and queen;

And, princely peers, a happy time of day!

K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day:—

Brother, we have done deeds of charity;
Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate,
Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.

Glo. A blessed labour, my most sovereign liege.—

Among this princely heap, if any here,
By false intelligence, or wrong surmise,
Hold me a foe;

If I unwittingly, or in my rage,
Have aught committed that is hardly borne
By any in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me to his friendly peace:

'Tis death to me, to be at enmity;
I hate it, and desire all good men's love.—
First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dutious service;—

Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham,
If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us:—

Of you, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey, of you,—
That all without desert have frown'd on me;—
Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen: indeed, of all.

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility.¹

¹ Milton has this observation:—"The poets, and some English, have been in this point so mindful of decorum, as to put never more pious words in the mouth of any person than of a tyrant. I shall not instance an abstruse author, wherein the king might be less conversant, but one whom we well know was the closet companion of these his solitudes, William Shakespeare; who introduced the person of Richard the Third, speaking in as high a strain of piety and mortification as is uttered in any passages in this book, and sometimes to the same sense and purpose with some words in this place. I intended (saith he), not only to oblige my friends, but my enemies. The like saith Richard:—

'I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility.'

Other stuff of this sort may be read throughout the tragedy, wherein the poet used not much licence in depart-

Q. Eliz. A holy-day shall this be kept hereafter:—
I would to God all strifes were well compounded.—
My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness
To take our brother Clarence to your grace.

Glo. Why, madam, have I offer'd love for this,
To be so flouted in this royal presence?
Who knows not, that the gentle duke is dead?

[They all start.]
You do him injury to scorn his corse.

K. Edw. Who knows not he is dead! who knows he is?

Q. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this!
Buck. Look I so pale, Lord Dorset, as the rest?

Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks.

K. Edw. Is Clarence dead? the order was revers'd.

Glo. But he, poor man, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear;
Some tardy cripple bore the countermand,²
That came too lag to see him buried:—
God grant, that some, less noble, and less loyal,
Nearer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,³
Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did;
And yet go current from suspicion.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!

K. Edw. I prythee, peace; my soul is full of sorrow.

Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.

K. Edw. Then say at once, what is it thou request'st?

Stan. The forfeit,⁴ sovereign, of my servant's life;
Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman,
Lately attendant on the duke of Norfolk.

K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,⁵

And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave?

My brother kill'd no man, his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.

Who sued to me for him? who, in my wrath,

Kneel'd at my feet, and bade me be advis'd?⁶

Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?

Who told me, how the poor soul did forsake

The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me?

Who told me, in the field at Tewksbury,

When Oxford had me down, he rescued me,

And said, Dear brother, live, and be a king?

Who told me, when we both lay in the field,

Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me

Even in his garments; and did give himself,

All thin and naked, to the numb-cold night?

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath

Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you

Had so much grace to put it in my mind.

But when your carters, or your waiting-vassals;

Have done a drunken slaughter; and defac'd

The precious image of our dear Redeemer,

You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon;

And I, unjustly too, must grant it you:—

But for my brother, not a man would speak,—

Nor I (ungracious) speak unto myself

For him, poor soul.—The proudest of you all

Have been beholden to him in his life;

ing from the truth of history, which delivers him a deep dissembler, not of his affections only, but his religion.¹

² This is an allusion to a proverbial expression which Drayton has versified in his Baron's Wars :—

'Ill news hath wings, and with the wind doth go,

Comfort's a cripple, and comes ever slow.'

Canto II. Ed. 1619:

³ We have the same play on words in Macbeth :—

'—the near in blood,

The nearer bloody.'

⁴ He means the remission of the forfeit.

⁵ 'This lamentation is very tender and pathetic. The recollection of the good qualities of the dead is very natural, and no less naturally does the king endeavour to communicate the crime to others.'—Johnson. The hint for this pathetic speech is to be found in Sir Thomas More's History of Edward V. inserted in the Chronicles.

⁶ i. e. be circumspect, deliberate, or consider what I was about.

Yet none of you would once plead for his life.—
O God! I fear, thy justice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this.—
Come, Hastings, help me to my closet.¹ O, Poor Clarence!

[Exeunt KING, QUEEN, HASTINGS, RIVERS,
DORSET, and GREY.

Glo. This is the fruit of rashness!—Mark'd you
not,

How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence's death?
O! they did urge it still unto the king:
God will revenge it. Come, lords; will you go,
To comfort Edward with our company?

Buck. We wait upon your grace. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The same. Enter the DUCHESS OF YORK,² with a Son and Daughter of CLARENCE.

Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?

Duch. No, boy.

Daugh. Why do you weep so oft? and beat your breast;

And cry—O Clarence, my unhappy son!

Son. Why do you look on us, and shake your head,
And call us—orphans, wretches, cast-aways,
If that our noble father be alive?

Duch. My pretty cousins,³ you mistake me both;
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loath to lose him, not your father's death:
It were lost sorrow, to wail one that's lost.

Son. Then grandam, you conclude that he is dead.

The king my uncle is to blame for this:
God will revenge it; whom I will importune
With earnest prayers all to that effect.

Daugh. And so will I.

Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love you well:

Incapable⁴ and shallow innocents,
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.

Son. Grandam, we can: for my good uncle Gloster
Told me, the king, provok'd to't by the queen,
Devis'd impeachments to imprison him:
And when my uncle told me so, he wept,
And pitied me, and kindly kiss'd my cheek;
Bad me rely on him, as on my father,
And he would love me dearly as his child.

Duch. Ah, that deceit should steal such gentle shapes,
And with a virtuous visor hide deep vice!
He is my son, ay, and therein my shame,
Yet from my hugs⁵ he drew not this deceit.

Son. Think you, my uncle did dissemble,⁶ grandam?

Duch. Ay, boy.

Son. I cannot think it. Hark! what noise is this?

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, distractedly; RIVERS, and DORSET, following her.

Q. Eliz. Ah! who shall hinder me to wail and weep?

To chide my fortune, and torment myself?
I'll join with black despair against my soul,
And to myself become an enemy.

Duch. What means this scene of rude impatience?

Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence:—
Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead.
Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither the leaves, that want their sap?—
If you will live, lament; if die, be brief;
That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's;

Or, like obedient subjects, follow him
To his new kingdom of perpetual rest.

Duch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow,
As I had title in thy noble husband!
I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:⁷
But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death;
And I for comfort have but one false glass,
That grieves me when I see my shame in him.
Thou art a widow; yet thou art a mother,
And hast the comfort of thy children left thee;
But death hath snatch'd my husband from my arms,
And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble hands,
Clarence, and Edward. O, what cause have I (Thine being but a moiety of my grief),
To overgo thy plaints, and drown thy cries!

Son. Ah, aunt! you wept not for our father's death;

How can we aid you with our kindred tears?
Daugh. Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,
Your widow-dolour likewise be unwept!

Q. Eliz. Give me no help in lamentation,
I am not barren to bring forth laments:
All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I, being govern'd by the wat'ry moon,
May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world!
Ah, for my husband, for my dear Lord Edward!

Chil. Ah, for our father, for our dear Lord Clarence!

Duch. Alas, for both, both mine, Edward and Clarence!

Q. Eliz. What stay had I, but Edward? and he's gone.

Chil. What stay had we, but Clarence? and he's gone.

Duch. What stays had I, but they? and they are gone.

Q. Eliz. Was never widow, had so dear a loss.

Chil. Were never orphans, had so dear a loss.

Duch. Was never mother, had so dear a loss.

Alas! I am the mother of these griefs;
Their woes are parcel'd,⁸ mine are general.
She for an Edward weeps, and so do I;
I for a Clarence weep, so doth not she:
These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I:
I for an Edward weep, so do not they:—
Alas, you three, on me, threefold distress'd,
Pour all your tears, I am your sorrow's nurse,
And I will pamper it with lamentations.

Dor. Comfort, dear mother; God is much dis-pleas'd,

That you take with unthankfulness his doing;
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd—ungrateful,
With dull unwillingness to repay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with heaven,
For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

Riv. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother,
Of the young prince your son: send straight for him,
Let him be crown'd. In him your comfort lives:
Drown desperate sorrow in dead Edward's grave,
And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HAS-TINGS, RATCLIFF, and others.

Glo. Sister, have comfort: all of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining star;
But none can cure their harms by wailing them.—
Madam, my mother, I do crv you mercy,
I did not see your grace:—Humbly on my knee
I crave your blessing.

² Cecily, daughter of Ralph Neville, first earl of Westmoreland, and widow of Richard duke of York, who was killed at the battle of Wakefield, 1460. She survived her husband thirty-five years, living till the year 1495.

⁴ Unsusceptible.

⁵ This word gave no offence to our ancestors; one instance will show that it was used even in the most refin'd poetry:—

'And on thy dugs the queen of love doth tell
Her godhead's power in scrowles of my desire.'
Constable's Sonnets, 1594, Dec. vi. Son. 4

⁶ In the language of our elder writers, to dissemble signified to feign or simulate, as well as to cloak or conceal feelings or dispositions. Milton uses dissembler in this sense in the extract in a note on a former page.

⁷ The children by whom he was represented

⁸ Divided.

Duch. God bless thee; and put meekness in thy breast,

Love, charity, obedience, and true duty!

Glo. Amen; and make me die a good old man!—That is the butt-end of a mother's blessing; [Aside. I marvel, that her grace did leave it out.

Buck. Yon cloudy princes, and heart-sorrowing peers,

That bear this mutual heavy load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other's love:
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.

The broken rancour of your high-swollen hearts,
But lately splinted, knit, and join'd together,
Must gently be preserv'd, cherish'd, and kept:
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fetch'd
Hither to London, to be crown'd our king.

Riv. Why with some little train, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out;
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green, and yet ungo-vern'd:

Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Glo. I hope, the king made peace with all of us;
And the compact is firm, and true, in me.

Riv. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:²
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach,

Which, haply, by much company might be urg'd:
Therefore I say, with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Glo. Then be it so; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that straight shall post to Ludlow.
Madam, and you my mother,—will you go
To give your censures³ in this weighty business?

[Eseunt all but BUCKINGHAM and GLOSTER.]

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God's sake, let not us two stay at home:
For, by the way, I'll sort occasion,
As index⁴ to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the queen's proud kindred from the prince.

Glo. My other self, my counsel's consistory,
My oracle, my prophet!—My dear cousin,
I, as a child, will go by thy direction.
Towards Ludlow then, for we'll not stay behind.

[Eseunt.]
SCENE III. The same. A Street. Enter two Citizens, meeting.

1 Cit. Good morrow, neighbour: Whither away so fast?

2 Cit. I promise you, I scarcely know myself:
Hear you the news abroad?

1 Cit. Yes; the king's dead.

2 Cit. Ill news, by'r lady; seldom comes the better:⁵

I fear, I fear, 'twill prove a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3 Cit. Neighbours, God speed.

1 Cit. Give you good morrow, sir.

¹ Edward, the young prince, in his father's lifetime, and at his demise, kept his household at Ludlow, as prince of Wales; under the governance of Anthony Woodville, earl of Rivers, his uncle by the mother's side. The intention of his being sent thither was to see justice done in the Marches; and, by the authority of his presence, to restrain the Welchmen, who were wild, dissolute, and ill-disposed, from their accustomed murders and outrages.—Vide Holinshed.

² This speech seems rather to belong to Hastings, who was of the duke of Gloster's party. The next speech might be given to Stanley.

³ I. e. your judgments, your opinions.

⁴ That is preparatory, by way of prelude.

⁵ An ancient proverbial saying, noticed in The English Courtier and Country Gentleman, 4to. bk. I. 1586, 3 Cit. Doth the news hold of good King Edward's death?

2 Cit. Ay, sir, it is too true; God help the while!

3 Cit. Then, masters, look to see a troublous world.

1 Cit. No, no; by God's good grace, his son shall reign.

3 Cit. Woe to that land, that's govern'd by a child!⁶

2 Cit. In him there is a hope of government;
That, in his nonage,⁷ council under him,
And, in his full and ripen'd years, himself,
No doubt, shall then, and till then, govern well.

1 Cit. So stood the state, when Henry the Sixth
Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old.

3 Cit. Stood the state so? no, no, good friends,
God wot;

For then this land was famously enrich'd
With politic grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

1 Cit. Why, so hath this, both by his father and mother.

3 Cit. Better it were they all came by his father;
Or, by his father, there were none at all:
For emulation now, who shall be nearest,
Will touch us all too near, if God prevent not.
O, full of danger is the duke of Gloster;
And the queen's sons, and brothers, haught and proud;

And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace as before.

1 Cit. Come, come, we fear the worst: all will be well.

3 Cit. When clouds are seen, wise men put on their cloaks;

When great leaves fall, then winter is at hand;
When the sun sets, who doth not look for night?
Untimely storms make men expect a dearth:
All may be well; but, if God sort it so,
'Tis more than he deserve, or I expect.

2 Cit. Truly, the hearts of men are full of fear:
You cannot reason⁸ almost with a man
That looks not heavily, and full of dread.

3 Cit. Before the days of change, still it is so:
By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust
Ensuing danger; as, by proof, we see
The water swell before a boist'rous storm.⁹
But leave it all to God. Whither away?

2 Cit. Marry, we were sent for to the justices.¹⁰

3 Cit. And so was I; I'll bear you company.

[Eseunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Room in the Palace. Enter the Archbishop of York, the young Duke of York, QUEEN ELIZABETH, and the DUCHESS of YORK.

Arch. Last night, I heard, they lay at Stony-Stratford;

And at Northampton they do rest to-night:¹⁰
To-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Duch. I long with all my heart to see the prince;
I hope, he is much grown since last I saw him.

Q. Eliz. But I hear, no; they say, my son of York Hath almost overtaken him in his growth.

sign. B: '—as the proverb saith seldome come the better. Val. That proverb indeed is ancient, and for the most part true.'

⁶ 'Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child.'

Ecclesiast. c. x.

Shakspeare found it cited in the duke of Buckingham's speech to the citizens in More's Richard III.

⁷ We may hope well of his government under all circumstances; we may hope this of his council while he is in his nonage, and of himself in his riper years.

⁸ See note 6, p. 97.

⁹ 'Before such great things, men's hearts of a secret instinct of nature misgive them; as the sea without wind swelleth of himself some time before a tempest.'—From More's Richard III. copied by Holinshed, III. 721.

¹⁰ This is the reading of the folio. The quarto of 1597 reads:—

'Last night I hear they lay at Northampton:

At Stony-Stratford they will be to-night.'

By neither reading can the truth of history be preserved. According to the reading of the quarto the scene would York. Ay, mother, but I would not have it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin? it is good to grow.

York. Gramdam, one night, as we did sit at supper,

My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow
More than my brother; Ay, quoth my uncle Gloster,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace:
And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,
Because sweet flowers are slow, and weeds make haste.

Duch. 'Good faith, 'good faith, the saying did not hold

In him that did object the same to thee:

He was the wretched'st thing, when he was young:

So long a growing, and so leisurely,

That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious madam.

Duch. I hope, he is; but yet let mothers doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember'd,

I could have given my uncle's grace a flout,
To touch his growth, nearer than he touch'd mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I prythee, let me hear it.

York. Marry, they say, my uncle grew so fast,

That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old;

'Twas full two years ere I could get a tooth.

Gramdam, this would have been a biting jest.

Duch. I prythee, pretty York, who told thee this?

York. Gramdam, his nurse.

Duch. His nurse? why, she was dead ere thou wast born.

York. If 'twere not she, I cannot tell who told me.

Q. Eliz. A parlous boy: Go to, you are too shrewd.

Arch. Good madam, be not angry with the child.

Q. Eliz. Pitchers have ears.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger:

What news?

Mess. Such news, my lord,

As grieves me to unfold.

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news?

Mess. Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey, are sent to Pomfret,

With them Sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them?

Mess. The mighty dukes, Gloster and Buckingham.

Q. Eliz. For what offence?

Mess. The sum of all I can, I have disclos'd;

Why, or for what, the nobles were committed,

Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ah me, I see the ruin of my house!

The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind;

Insulting tyranny begins to jut

Upon the innocent and awless throne:—

Welcome, destruction, blood, and massacre!

I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accurs'd and unquiet wrangling days!

be on the day on which the king was journeying from Northampton to Stratford; and of course the messenger's account of the peers being seized, &c. which happened on the next day after the king had lain at Stratford, is inaccurate. If the folio reading be adopted the scene is indeed placed on the day on which the king was seized; but the archbishop is supposed to be apprized of a fact which, before the entry of the messenger, he manifestly does not know; namely, the duke of Gloster's coming to Stratford the morning after the king had lain there, taking him forcibly back to Northampton, and seizing the Lords Rivers, Grey, &c. The truth is, that the queen herself, the person most materially interested in the welfare of her son, did not hear of the king's being carried back from Stony-Stratford to Northampton till about midnight of the day on which this violence was offered to him by his uncle. See Hall, Edward V. fol. 6. Malone thinks this an unanswerable argument in favour of the reading of the quarto; while Steevens thinks it a matter of indifference, but prefers the text of the folio copy on account of the versification.

How many of you have mine eyes beheld?

My husband lost his life to get the crown;

And often up and down my sons were tost,

For me to joy, and weep, their gain, and loss;

And being seated, and domestic broils

Clean over blown, themselves, the conquerors,

Make war upon themselves; brother to brother,

Blood to blood, self 'gainst self:—O, preposterous

And frantic courage, end thy damned spleen;

Or let me die, to look on death no more!

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy, we will to sanctuary.—

Madam, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.

Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go.
[To the Queen.]

And thither bear your treasure and your goods.

For my part, I'll resign unto your grace

The seal I keep; And so betide to me,

As well I tender you, and all of yours!

Come, I'll conduct you to the sanctuary. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. London. A Street. The Trumpets sound. Enter the Prince of Wales, GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, CARDINAL BOURCHIER, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.^a

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sovereign:

The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No, uncle; but our crosses on the way

Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy:

I want more uncles here to welcome me.

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years

Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit:

No more can you distinguish of a man,

Than of his outward show; which, God he knows,

Seldom, or never, jumpeth^b with the heart.

Those uncles, which you want, were dangerous;

Your grace attended to their sugar'd words,

But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:

God keep you from them, and from such false friends!

Prince. God keep me from false friends! but they were none.

Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.

Enter the Lord Mayor, and his Train.

May. God bless your grace with health and happy days!

Prince. I thank you, good my lord;—and thank you all.—[Exeunt Mayor, &c.]

I thought, my mother, and my brother York,

Would long ere this have met us on the way:

Eye, what a slug is Hastings! that he comes not

To tell us whether they would come, or no.

² The quarto reads to jet, which Mr. Boswell thought preferable; but the folio is right. 'To jut upon the throne,' is to make inroads or invasions upon it. See Cooper's Dictionary, 1584, in voce incurso. Awless is not producing awe, not revered.

³ Afterwards, however, this obsequious archbishop [Rotherham] to ingratiate himself with Richard III. put his majesty's badge, the Hog, upon the gate of the Public Library at Cambridge.

⁴ Thomas Bouchier was made a cardinal, and elected Archbishop of Canterbury in 1464. He died in 1486.

⁵ London was anciently called Camera Regia. See Coke's Institutes, 4, 243; Camden's Britannia, 374; and Ben Jonson's Entertainment to King James, passing in his Coronation. London is called the king's special chamber in the duke of Buckingham's oration to the citizens (apud More), which Shakspeare has taken other phrases from.

⁶ To jump with, is to agree with, to suit, or correspond with.

Enter HASTINGS.

Buck. And in good time, here comes the sweating lord.

Prince. Welcome, my lord: What, will our mother come?

Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not I, The queen your mother, and your brother York, Have taken sanctuary: The tender prince Would fain have come with me to meet your grace, But by his mother was perforce withheld.

Buck. Fye! what an indirect and poevish course Is this of hers?—Lord cardinal, will your grace Persuade the queen to send the duke of York Unto his princely brother presently?

If she deny,—Lord Hastings, go with him, And from her jealous arms pluck him perforce.

Card. My lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory

Can from his mother win the duke of York, Anon expect him here: But if she be obdurate To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid We should infringe the holy privilege Of blessed sanctuary! not for all this land, Would I be guilty of so deep a sin.

Buck. You are too senseless-obstinate, my lord, Too ceremonious, and traditional:¹ Weigh it but with the grossness² of this age, You break not sanctuary in seizing him. The benefit thereof is always granted To those whose dealings have deserv'd the place, And those who have the wit to claim the place: This prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserv'd it; And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it: Then, taking him from thence, that is not there, You break no privilege nor charter there. Oft have I heard of sanctuary men; But sanctuary children, ne'er till now.³

Card. My lord, you shall o'errule my mind for once.—

Come on, Lord Hastings, will you go with me?

Hast. I go, my lord.

Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may. [Exeunt Cardinal and Hastings.]

Say, uncle Gloster, if our brother come, Where shall we sojourn till our coronation?

Glo. Where it seems best unto your royal self. If I may counsel you, some day, or two, Your highness shall repose you at the Tower: Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit For your best health and recreation.

Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any place:—Did Julius Cæsar build that place, my lord?

Glo. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place; Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified.

Prince. Is it upon record? or else reported Successively from age to age he built it?

Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.

Prince. But say, my lord, it were not register'd; Methinks, the truth should live from age to age,

As 'twere retail'd⁴ to all posterity, Even to the general all-ending day.

Glo. So wise so young, they say, do ne'er live long.⁵ [Aside.]

Prince. What say you, uncle?

Glo. I say, without characters, fame lives long. Thus, like the formal⁶ vice, Iniquity, I moralize two meanings in one word. [Aside.]

Prince. That Julius Cæsar was a famous man; With what his valour did enrich his wit, His wit set down to make his valour live. Death makes no conquest of this conqueror; For now he lives in fame, though not in life.— I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham.

Buck. What, my gracious lord?

Prince. An if I live until I be a man, I'll win our ancient right in France again, Or die a soldier, as I liv'd a king.

Glo. Short summers lightly⁷ have a forward spring. [Aside.]

Enter YORK, HASTINGS, and the Cardinal.

Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the duke of York.

Prince. Richard of York! how fares our loving brother?

York. Well, my dread lord; so I must call you now.

Prince. Ay, brother; to our grief, as it is yours: Too late⁸ he died, that might have kept that title, Which by his death hath lost much majesty.

Glo. How fares our cousin, noble lord of York?

York. I thank you, gentle uncle. O, my lord, You said that idle weeds are fast in growth: The prince my brother hath outgrown me far

Glo. He hath, my lord.

York. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. O, my fair cousin, I must not say so.

York. Then is he more beholden to you, than I.

Glo. He may command me, as my sovereign;

But you have power in me, as in a kinsman.

York. I pray you, uncle, give me this dagger.

Glo. My dagger, little cousin? with all my heart.

Prince. A beggar, brother?

York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will give;

And, being but a toy, which is no grief to give.

Glo. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.

York. A greater gift! O, that's the sword to it?

Glo. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.

York. O then, I see, you'll part but with light gifts:

In weightier things you'll say a beggar, nay.

Glo. It is too weighty for your grace to wear.

York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.⁹

Glo. What, would you have my weapon, little lord?

York. I would, that I might thank you as you call me.

Glo. How?

York. Little.

Prince. My lord of York will still be cross in talk:—

Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.

² Grossness here means plainness, simplicity. Warburton, not understanding the word, would have changed it. Johnson has misinterpreted it; and Malone, though he defends the reading, leaves it unexplained.

³ This argument is from More's History, as printed in the Chronicles, where it is very much enlarged upon. 'Verely I have often heard of saintuarie men, but I never heard erste of saintuarie chyldren * * *'. But he can be no saintuarie manne, that neither hath wisdom to desire it, nor malice to deserve it, whose lyfe or libertie can by no lawfull processe stand in jeopardy. And he that taketh one oute of saintuarie to dooe hym good, I saye plainly that he breaketh no saintuarie.'—More's History of Kinge Richard the Thirde. Edit. 1521, p. 43.

⁴ I.e. recounted. Minshew, in his Dictionary, 1617, besides the verb retail, in the mercantile sense, has the verb to retails or retell.

⁵ I have knowne children languishing of the splene, obstructed and altered in temper, talke with gravity and wisdom surpassing those tender years, and their judgments carrying a marvellous imitation of the wisdom of the ancient, having after a sorte attained that by disease which other have by course of yeares; whereon I take it the proverbe ariseth, that they be of shorte life who are of wit so pregnant.'—Bright's Treatise of Melancholy, 1586, p. 52.

⁶ For an account of the vice in old plays, see note on Twelfth Night, Act iv. Sc. 2. 'He appears (says Mr. Gifford) to have been a perfect counterpart of the harlequin of the modern stage, and had a two-fold office, to instigate the hero of the piece to wickedness, and, at the same time, to protect him from the devil, whom he was permitted to buffet and baffle with his wooden sword, till the process of the story required that both the protector and the protected should be carried off by the fiend, or the latter driven roaring from the stage by some miraculous interposition in favour of the repentant offender.'

⁷ 'Short summers commonly have a forward spring.' So in an old proverb preserved by Ray:—

'There's lightning lightly before thunder.'

⁸ Late.

⁹ This taunting answer of the prince has been misinterpreted: he means to say, 'I hold it cheap, or care but little for it, even were it heavier than it is.'

York. You mean, to bear me, not to bear with me:—Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me; Because that I am little, like an ape, He thinks that you should bear me on your shoulders.¹

Buck. With what a sharp provided wit he reasons! To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle, He prettily and aptly taunts himself: So cunning, and so young, is wonderful.

Glo. My gracious lord, will't please you pass along? Myself, and my good cousin Buckingham, Will to your mother; to entreat of her, To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

York. What, will you go unto the Tower, my lord?

Prince. My lord protector needs will have it so.

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, sir, what should you fear?

York. Marry, my uncle Clarence' angry ghost; My grandam told me, he was murder'd there.

Prince. I fear no uncles dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope.

Prince. An if they live, I hope, I need not fear.

But come, my lord, and, with a heavy heart,

Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower.

[Exeunt Prince, YORK, HASTINGS, Cardinal, and Attendants.]

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating York Was not incensed² by his subtle mother, To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously?

Glo. No doubt, no doubt: O, 'tis a parlous boy; Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;³ He's all the mother's, from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest.—

Come hither, gentle Catesby; thou art sworn

As deeply to effect what we intend,

As closely to conceal what we impart:

Thou know'st our reasons urg'd upon the way;—

What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter

To make William Lord Hastings of our mind,

For the instalment of this noble duke

In the seat royal of this famous isle?

Cate. He for his father's sake so loves the prince,

That he will not be won to aught against him.

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? will not he?

Cate. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.

Buck. Well then, no more but this: Go, gentle

Catesby,

And, as it were far off, sound thou Lord Hastings,

How he doth stand affected to our purpose;

And summon him to-morrow to the Tower,

To sit about the coronation.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,

Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:

If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,

Be thou so too; and so break off the talk,

And give us notice of his inclination:

For we to-morrow hold divided⁴ councils,

Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd.

Glo. Commend me to Lord William: tell him,

Catesby,

His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries

To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret Castle;

And bid my friend, for joy of this good news,

Give mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, go, effect this business soundly.

Cate. My good lords both, with all the heed I can.

Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we sleep?

Cate. You shall, my lord.

Glo. At Crosby-place, there shall you find us

both. [Exit CATESBY.]

Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we perceive

Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?

Glo. Chop off his head, man;—somewhat we will do:—

And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me

The earldom of Hereford, and all the movables

Whereof the king my brother was possess'd.

Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand.

Glo. And look to have it yielded with all kindness,

Come, let us sup betimes; that afterwards

We may digest our complots in some form.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.⁵ Before Lord Hastings' House.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord;— [Knocking.]

Hast. [Within.] Who knocks?

Mess. One from Lord Stanley.

Hast. [Within.] What is't o'clock?

Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Cannot thy master sleep these tedious nights?

Mess. So it should seem by that I have to say.

First, he commends him to your noble lordship.

Hast. And then,—

Mess. And then he sends you word, he dreamt

To-night the boar had ras'd⁶ off his helm:

Besides, he says, there are two councils held;

And that may be determin'd at the one,

Which may make you and him to rue at the other.

Therefore he sends to know your lordship's pleasure,—

If presently, you will take horse with him,

And with all speed post with him toward the north,

To shun the danger that his soul divides.

Hast. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord;

Bid him not fear the separated councils:

His honour, and myself, are at the one;

And, at the other, is my good friend Catesby;

Where nothing can proceed, that toucheth us,

Whereof I shall not have intelligence.

Tell him, his fears are shallow, wanting instance:⁷

And for his dreams—I wonder, he's so fond⁸

To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers:

To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,

Were to incense the boar to follow us,

And make pursuit, where he did mean no chase,

Go, bid thy master rise and come to me;

And we will both together to the Tower,

Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say,

[Exit.]

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. Many good morrows to my noble lord!

Hast. Good morrow, Catesby; you are early stirring:

What news, what news, in this our tottering state?

Cate. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord;

And, I believe, will never stand upright,

Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

Hast. How! wear the garland? dost thou mean the crown?

Cate. Aye, my good lord.

5 Every material circumstance in this scene is from Holinshed, except that it is a knight with whom Hastings converses instead of Buckingham.

6 This term rascd or rashed, is always given to describe the violence inflicted by a boar. By the boar, throughout this scene, is meant Gloucester, in allusion to his crest.

7 This was the usual address to noblemen in Shakespeare's time; it was indifferently used with your lordship. See any old letter or dedication of that age.

8 Instance is here put for motive, cause.

9 Weak, silly.

1 York alludes to the protuberance on Gloucester's back, which was commodious for carrying burdens.

2 i. e. incited, instigated.

3 Capable is quick of apprehension, susceptible, intelligent.

4 But the protectours and the duke after they had sent to the lord cardinal, the Lord Stanley, and the Lord Hastings, then lord chamberlain, with many other noblemen, to commune and devise about the coronation in one place, as fast were they in another place, contriving the contrary to make the protectours king. The Lord Stanley, that was after earl of Darby, wisely mistrusted it, and said unto the Lord Hastings that he much misliked these two several counsels.—Holinshed, from Sir T. More.

Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.
But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it?

Cate. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you forward.

Upon his party, for the gain thereof:
And, thereupon, he sends you this good news,—
That, this same very day, your enemies,
The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.

Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news,
Because they have been still my adversaries:
But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do it, to the death.

Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind!

Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelvemonth hence,

That they, who brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy.

Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,
I'll send some packing, that yet think not on't.

Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,
When men are unprepar'd, and look not for it.

Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out
With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: and so 'twill do
With some men else, who think themselves as safe
As thou, and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear
To princely Richard, and to Buckingham.

Cate. The princes both make high account of you,
For they account his head upon the bridge. [Aside.]

Hast. I know, they do; and I have well deserv'd it.

Enter STANLEY.

Come on, come on, where is your boar-spear, man?
Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?

Stan. My lord, good morrow; and good morrow,
Catesby:—

You may jest on, but, by the holy rood,¹
I do not like these several councils, I.

Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as you do yours;

And never, in my life, I do protest,
Was it more precious to me than 'tis now:
Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am?

Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from London,

Were jocund, and suppos'd their states were sure,
And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;
But yet, you see, how soon the day o'ercast.
This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;²
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!
What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, have with you.—Wot³ you what, my lord?

To-day, the lords you talk of are beheaded.

Stan. They, for their truth, might better wear their heads,

Than some, that have accus'd them, wear their hats.

But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before, I'll talk with this good fellow.

[Exit STAN. and CATESBY.]
How now, sirrah? how goes the world with thee?

Purs. The better, that your lordship please to ask.

Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now,
Than when thou met'st me last where now we meet.
Then I was going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;
But now I tell thee (keep it to thyself),
This day those enemies are put to death,
And I in better state than ere I was.

Purs. God hold it,⁴ to your honour's good content!

Hast. Gramercy, fellow: There, drink that for me.

[Throwing him his purse.]

Purs. I thank your honour. [Exit Pursuivant.]

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour.

Hast. I thank thee, good Sir John,⁵ with all my heart.

I am in your debt for your last exercise;⁶

Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest;
Your honour hath no shriving⁷ work in hand.

Hast. 'Good faith, and when I met this holy man
The men you talk of came into my mind.

What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there:

I shall return before your lordship thence.

Hast. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. And supper too, although thou know'st it not.

Come, will you go?

Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. Pomfret. Before the Castle. Enter RATCLIFF, with a Guard, conducting RIVERS, GREY,⁸ and VAUGHAN, to Execution.

Rat. Come, bring forth the prisoners.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this,—
To-day, shalt thou behold a subject die,

For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.

Grey. God keep the prince from all the pack of you!

A knot you are of damned blood-suckers.

Vaugh. You live, that shall cry woe for this hereafter.

Rat. Despatch; the limit¹⁰ of your lives is out.

Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison,
Fatal and ominous to noble peers!

Within the guilty closure of thy walls,
Richard the Second here was hack'd to death

And, for more slander to thy dismal seat,
We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our heads,

When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I,
For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.

Riv. Then curs'd she Hastings, then curs'd she Buckingham,

Then curs'd she Richard:—O, remember, God,
To hear her prayers for them, as now for us!

1 Cross.

2 I. e. suspect it of danger.

3 Know.

4 That is, continue it.

5 See note 1 on the first scene of The Merry Wives of Windsor

6 Exercise probably means religious exhortation or lecture.

7 From the continuation of Harding's Chronicle, 1543, where the account given originally by Sir Thomas More is transcribed with some additions, it appears that the person who held this conversation with Hastings was Sir Thomas Howard, who is introduced in the last act of this play as earl of Surrey.

8 Confession.

9 Queen Elizabeth Grey is deservedly pitied for the loss of her two sons; but the royalty of their birth has so engrossed the attention of historians, that they never reckon into the number of her misfortunes the murder of this her second son, Sir Richard Grey. It is remarkable how slightly the death of Earl Rivers is always mentioned, though a man invested with such high offices of trust and dignity; and how much we dwell on the execution of the lord chamberlain Hastings, a man in every light his inferior. In truth, the generality draw their ideas of English story from the tragic rather than the historic authors.—Walpole.

10 The limit for the limited time.

And for my sister, and her princely sons,—
Be satisfied, dear God, with our true bloods,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt!
Rat. Make haste, the hour of death is expiate.¹
Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaughan,—let us here embrace:

Farewell, until we meet again in heaven. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Tower.
BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS, the Bishop of Ely,² CATESBY, LOVEL, and others, sitting at a Table: Officers of the Council attending.

Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met

Is—to determine of the coronation:

In God's name, speak, when is the royal day?

Buck. Are all things ready for that royal time?

Stan. They are; and wants but nomination.³

Ely. To-morrow then I judge a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?

Who is most inward⁴ with the noble duke?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces; for our hearts,—

He knows no more of mine, than I of yours;

Nor I, of his, my lord, than you of mine:

Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well;

But, for his purpose in the coronation,

I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd

His gracious pleasure any way therein:

But you, my noble lord, may name the time;

And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice,

Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Enter GLOSTER.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the duke himself.

Glo. My noble lords and cousins, all, good morning:

I have been long a sleeper; but, I trust,
My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded.

Buck. Had you not come upon your cue,⁵ my lord,
William Lord Hastings had pronounc'd your part,—
I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king.

Glo. Than my Lord Hastings, no man might be bolder;

His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.—

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,

I saw good strawberries in your garden there;⁶

I do beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.

[Exit Ely.]

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

[Takes him aside.]

Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business;
And finds the testy gentleman so hot,

¹ We have this word in the same sense again in Shakspeare's twenty-second Sonnet:—

'Then look I death my days should expiate.'

I cannot but think with Steevens that it is an error of the press for expiate.

² Dr. John Morton, who was elected to the see of Ely in 1479. He was advanced to the see of Canterbury in 1486, and appointed lord chancellor in 1497. He died in the year 1500. This prelate first devised the scheme of putting an end to the long contests between the houses of York and Lancaster, by a marriage between Henry earl of Richmond, and Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Edward IV.; and was a principal agent in procuring Henry, when abroad, to enter into a covenant for the purpose.—See More's Life of Richard III.

³ The only thing wanting is appointment of a particular day for the ceremony.

⁴ Intimate, confidential.

⁵ See note on Hamlet, Act II. Sc. 2.

⁶ This circumstance of asking the bishop for some of his strawberries seems to have been mentioned by the old historians merely to show the unusual affability and good humour which the dissembling Gloucester affected at the very time he had determined on the death of Hastings. It originates with Sir Thomas More, who mentions the protector's entrance to the council 'fyrst about

That he will lose his head, ere give consent,
His master's child, as worshipfully he terms it,
Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.

Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile, I'll go with you.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM.]

Stan. We have not yet set down this day of triumph.

To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden;

For I myself am not so well provided,

As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Re-enter Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my lord protector? I have sent for these strawberries.

Hast. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning;

There's some conceit or other likes him well,
When he doth bid good morrow with such spirit.

I think, there's ne'er a man in Christendom,

Can lesser hide his love, or hate, than he;

For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Stan. What of his heart perceive you in his face,
By any likelihood? he show'd to-day?

Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offended;

For, were he, he had shown it in his looks.

Re-enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM.

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve
That do conspire my death with devilish plots
Of damned witchcraft, and that have prevail'd
Upon my body with their hellish charms?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord,
Makes me most forward in this noble presence
To doom the offenders: Whoso'er they be,
I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glo. Then be your eyes the witness of their evil,
Look how I am bewitch'd; behold mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up:

And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch,
Consorted with that harlot, strumpet Shore,
That by their witchcraft thus have marked me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble lord,—

Glo. If! thou protector of this damned strumpet,
Talk'st thou to me of ifs?—Thou art a traitor:—

Off with his head: now, by Saint Paul, I swear,

I will not dine until I see the same.—

Lovel, and Catesby, look, that it be done:

The rest that love me, rise, and follow me.

[Exeunt Council, with Glo. and Buck.]

Hast. Woe, woe, for England! not a whit for me;

For I, too fond, might have prevented this:

Stanley did dream the boar did raise his helm;

But I disdain'd it, and did acorn to fly.

Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble,

And startled, when he look'd upon the Tower,

As loath to bear me to the slaughter-house.

O, now I want the priest that spake to me:

I now repent I told the pursuivant,

ix of the clocke, saluting them curtesly, and excusing himself that he had ben from them so long, saleng meryly that he had been a slepe that day. And after a litle talking with them he said unto the bishop of Elye, my lord, you have very good strawberries at your gardayne in Holborne, I require you let us have a messe of them.' It is remarkable that this bishop (Morton) is supposed to have furnished Sir Thomas More with the materials of his history, if he was not the original author of it. See Preface to More's Life of Richard III. ed. 1821.

⁷ i. e. semblance, appearance.

⁸ For foot-cloth see note on King Henry VI. Part 2 Act iv. Sc. 7. A foot-cloth horse was a palfrey covered with such housings, used for state; and was the usual mode of conveyance for the rich, at a period when carriages were unknown.

This is from Hollinshed, who copies Sir Thomas More:—'In riding toward the Tower the same morning in which he [Hastings] was beheaded, his horse twice or thrice stumbled with him, almost to the falling; which thing, albeit each man wot well daily happeneth to them to whom no such mischance is toward: yet hath it bene of an old rite and custome observed as a token oftentimes notable foregoeing some great misfortune.'

W. Marshall.

KING RICHARD III.

Glester, Fuxkingham, Hastings &c. Act. II. Scene. IV.

As too triumphing, how mine enemies,
To-day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,
And I myself secure in grace and favour.
O, Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy curse
Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Cate. Despatch, my lord, the duke would be at dinner;

Make a short shrift, he longs to see your head.

Hast. O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,¹
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast;
Ready, with every nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, despatch; 'tis bootless to exclaim.

Hast. O, bloody Richard!—miserable England!
I prophesy the fearful'st time to thee,
That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.
Come, lead me to the block, bear him my head;
They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.²

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The Same. The Tower Walls. Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM, in rusty armour, and marvellous ill-favoured.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy colour?

Murder thy breath in middle of a word,—
And then again begin, and stop again,
As if thou wert distraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak, and look back, and pry on every side,
Fremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending³ deep suspicion: ghastly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time, to grace my stratagems.
But what, is Catesby gone?

Glo. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor and CATESBY.

Buck. Let me alone to entertain him.—Lord mayor,—

Glo. Look to the drawbridge there.

Buck. Hark, hark! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent for you,—

Glo. Look back, defend thee, here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocence defend and guard us!

Enter LOVEL and RATCLIFF,⁴ with HASTINGS' Head.

Glo. Be patient, they are friends; Ratcliff, and Lovel.

Lov. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I lov'd the man, that I must weep.
I took him for the plainest harmless creature,
That breath'd upon the earth a Christian;
Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts:
So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue,
That his apparent open guilt omitted,—
I mean, his conversation⁵ with Shore's wife,—
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert'st shelter'd traitor.

That ever liv'd.—Look you, my lord mayor,
Would you imagine, or almost believe,
(Were't not, that by great preservation
We live to tell it you,) the subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council-house,
To murder me, and my good lord of Gloster?

May. What! had he so?

Glo. What! think you we are Turks, or infidels?

Or that we would, against the form of law,
Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death;
But that the extreme peril of the case,
The peace of England, and our persons' safety,
Enforc'd us to this execution?

May. Now, fair befall you! he deserv'd his death:
And your good graces both have well proceeded,
To warn false traitors from the like attempts.

I never look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with mistress Shore.

Buck. Yet had we not determin'd he should die,
Until your lordship came to see his end;
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Somewhat against our meaning, hath prevented:
Because, my lord, we would have had you heard
The traitor speak, and timorously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who, haply, may Misconstrue us in him, and wait his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall serve,

As well as I had seen, and heard him speak:
And do not doubt, right noble princes both,
But I'll acquaint our duteous citizens
With all your just proceedings in this case.

Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here,

To avoid the censures of the carping world.

Buck. But since you came too late of our intent,⁶
Yet witness what you hear we did intend:
And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

[Exit Lord Mayor.]

Glo. Go after, after, cousin Buckingham.

The mayortowards Guildhall hies him in all post:—
There, at your meetest vantage of the time,
Infer the bastardy of Edward's children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying—he would make his son
Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed his house,
Which, by the sign thereof, was termed so.⁷
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury,
And bestial appetite in change of lust;
Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters,
wives,

Even where his lustful eye, or savage heart,
Without control, listed to make his prey.

Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person:—
Tell them when that my mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had wars in France;
And, by just computation of the time,
Found, that the issue was not his begot;
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke my father:
Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere far off;
Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord; I'll play the orator,

¹ i. e. familiar intercourse: what is now called 'criminal conversation.'

² 'Too late of our intent.' In common speech a similar phrase is sometimes used; viz. 'to come short of a thing.' Mason would have changed of to for.

³ This person was one Walker, a substantial citizen and grocer, at the Crown in Cheapside. These topics of Edward's cruelty, lust, unlawful marriage, &c. are enlarged upon in that most extraordinary invective, the petition presented to Richard before his accession, which was afterwards turned into an act of parliament. Parl. Hist. 2. p. 396. See also the duke of Buckingham's speech to the citizens in Mora's History, as copied by the Chronicles.

⁴ 'Nescius auræ fallacis.'—Horace.

William Lord Hastings was beheaded on the 13th of June, 1483. His eldest son by Catherine Neville, daughter of Richard Neville, earl of Salisbury, and widow of William Lord Bonville, was restored to his honours and estate by King Henry VII. in the first year of his reign. The daughter of Lady Hastings, by her first husband, was married to the marquis of Dorset, who appears in the present play.

⁵ Those who now smile at me shall shortly be dead themselves.

⁶ i. e. pretending

⁷ The quarto has 'Enter Catesby with Hastings's head.' For this absurd alteration, by which Ratcliff is represented at Pomfret and in London at the same time, it is probable the editors of the folio had to answer.

As if the golden fee, for which I plead,
Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu.

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's castle;¹

Where you shall find me well accompanied,
With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and, towards three or four o'clock,
Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit BUCKINGHAM.]

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to doctor Shaw,— Go thou [To CAT.] to friar Penker;—bid them both Meet me, within this hour, at Baynard's Castle.

[Exeunt LOVEL and CATESBY.]

Now will I in, to take some privy order
To draw the brats of Clarence² out of sight;
And to give notice, that no manner of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. [Exit.]

SCENE VI. A Street. Enter a Scrivener.

Scriv. Here is the indictment of the good Lord
Hastings;

Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd,
That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's.
And mark how well the sequel hangs together:—
Eleven hours I have spent to write it over,
For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me;
The precedent³ was full as long a doing:
And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd,
Untainted, unexamind, free, at liberty.
Here's a good world the while!—Who is so gross,
That cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says—he sees it not?
Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such bad dealing must be seen in thought.⁴

[Exit.]

SCENE VII. The same. Court of Baynard's Castle. Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM, meeting.

Glo. How now, how now? what say the citizens?

Buck. Now by the holy mother of our Lord,
The citizens are mum, say not a word.

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children?

Buck. I did; with his contract with Lady Lucy,⁵
And his contract by deputy in France:
The insatiate greediness of his desires,
And his enforcement of the city wives;
His tyranny for trifles; his own bastardy,—
As being got, your father then in France;⁶
And his resemblance, being not like the duke,
Withal, I did infer your lineaments,—
Being the right idea of your father,

Both in your form and nobleness of mind;
Laid open all your victories in Scotland,
Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace,
Your bounty, virtue, fair humility;
Indeed, left nothing, fitting for your purpose,
Untouch'd, or slightly handled, in discourse.
And, when my oratory grew to an end,
I bade them, that did love their country's good,
Cry—God save Richard, England's royal king!
Glo. And did they so?

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a word
But, like dumb statues, or breathless stones,
Star'd on each other, and look'd deadly pale.
Which when I saw, I reprehended them;
And ask'd the mayor what meant this wilful silence;
His answer was—the people were not us'd
To be spoke to, but by the recorder.

Then he was urg'd to tell my tale again:
Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke infer'd;
But nothing spoke in warrant from himself.
When he had done, some followers of mine own,
At lower end o'the hall, hurl'd up their caps,
And some ten voices cried, God save King Richard!
And thus I took the vantage of those few,— Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends, quoth I;
This general applause, and cheerful shout,
Argues your wisdom, and your love to Richard:
And even here brake off and came away.

Glo. What tongueless blocks were they: Would they not speak?

Will not the mayor then, and his brethren, come?
Buck. The mayor is here at hand; intend⁷ some fear;

Be not you spoke with, but by mighty suit:
And look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll make a holy descent:
And be not easily won to our requests;
Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.

Glo. I go; And if you plead as well for them,
As I can say nay to thee⁸ for myself,
No doubt we'll bring it to a happy issue.

Buck. Go, go, up to the leads: the lord mayor knocks. [Exit GLOSTER.]

Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord; I dance attendance here
I think, the duke will not be spoke withal.—

Enter, from the Castle, CATESBY.

Now, Catesby! what says your lord to my request?

Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble lord,
To visit him to-morrow, or next day:
He is within, with two right reverend fathers, his concubine. Edward, however, had been married to Lady Eleanor Butler, widow of Lord Butler of Sudely, and daughter to the great earl of Shrewsbury. On this ground his children were declared illegitimate by the only parliament assembled by King Richard III.; but no mention was made of Elizabeth Lucy.

6 This tale is supposed to have been first propagated by the duke of Clarence when he obtained a settlement of the crown on himself and his issue after the death of Henry VI. Sir Thomas More says that the duke of Gloster, soon after Edward's death, revived this scandal.
Walpole thinks it highly improbable that Richard should have urged such a topic to the people, or 'start doubts of his own legitimacy, which was too much connected with that of his brothers, to be tossed and bawled about before the multitude.' He has also shown that Richard 'lived in perfect harmony with his mother, and lodged with her in her palace at this very time.'—Historic Doubts, 4to. 1768.

7 It would not be difficult (says Mr. Reed) to fill whole pages with instances to prove that statue was formerly a word of three syllables; and there are several passages in Shakespeare where it is necessary so to pronounce it. It has been thought advisable in these instances to adhere to the old orthography, statua, which distinguishes it as a trisyllable, as in the present instance.

8 Pretend.

9 Buckingham is to plead for the citizens; and if (says Richard) you speak for them as plausibly as I in my own person, or for my own purposes shall seem to deny your suit, there is no doubt we shall bring all to a happy issue.

1 Baynard's Castle was originally built by Baynard, a nobleman who (according to Stowe) came in with the conqueror. It had belonged to Richard duke of York, but was now Edward the Fifth's. This edifice, which stood in Thames Street, has been long pulled down; it is said that parts of its strong foundations may be seen at low water.

2 Edward Earl of Warwick, who, the day after the battle of Bosworth, was sent by Richard from his confinement at Sheriff-Hutton Castle to the Tower, without even the shadow of an allegation against him, and who was afterwards cruelly sacrificed to a scruple of Ferdinand king of Spain, who was unwilling to marry his daughter Katharine to Arthur prince of Wales while he lived, conceiving that his claim might interfere with Arthur's succession to the crown. He was beheaded in 1499. Margaret, afterwards married to Sir Richard Pole, the last princess of the house of Lancaster, who was restored in blood in the fifth year of Henry VIII. and afterwards, in the thirty-first year of his reign (1540,) barbarously led to the block at the age of seventy, for some offence conceived at the conduct of her son Cardinal Pole.

3 I.e. the original draft from which the engrossment was made. This circumstance, like the others, in the play, is taken from Holinshed, who follows Sir Thomas More.

4 I.e. seen in silence, without notice or detection.

5 The king had been familiar with this lady before his marriage, to obstruct which his mother alleged a precontract between them. But Elizabeth Lucy, being sworn to speak the truth, declared that the king had not been affianced to her, though she owned she had been

Divinely bent to meditation ;
And in no worldly suit would he be mov'd,
To draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke ;

Tell him, myself, the mayor and aldermen,
In deep designs, in matter of great moment,
No less importing than our general good,
Are come to have some conference with his grace.

Cate. I'll signify so much unto him straight.

[Exit.]

Buck. Ah, ha, my lord, this prince is not an Edward !

He is not lolling on a lewd day-bed,¹
But on his knees at meditation ;
Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines ;
Not sleeping, to engross² his idle body,
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul :
Happy were England, would this virtuous prince
Take on himself the sovereignty thereof :
But, sure, I fear, we shall ne'er win him to it.

May. Marry, God defend, his grace should say us nay !³

Buck. I fear, he will : Here Catesby comes again :—

Re-enter CATESBY.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace ?

Cate. He wonders to what end you have assembled

Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before.
He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am, my noble cousin should suspect me, that I mean no good to him :
By heaven, we come to him in perfect love ;
And so once more return and tell his grace.

[Exit CATESBY.]

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them thence ;
So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, in a Gallery above, between two Bishops. CATESBY returns.

May. See, where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen !

Buck. Two props of virtue for a christian prince,
To stay him from the fall of vanity :

And, see, a book of prayer in his hand ;
True ornaments to know a holy man.—
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our request ;
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion, and right-christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology ;

I rather do beseech you pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Neglect the visitation of my friends.

But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure ?

Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,

And all good men of this ungovern'd isle.

Glo. I do suspect, I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye ;
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord ; Would it might please your grace,

On our entreaties, to amend your fault !

Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian land ?

Buck. Know, then, it is your fault, that you resign
The supreme seat, the throne majestical,
The accepted office of your ancestors,

Your state of fortune, and your due of birth,
The lineal glory of your royal house,
To the corruption of a blemish'd stock :
Whilst, in the mildness of your sleepy thoughts
(Which here we waken to our country's good,)
The noble isle doth want her proper limbs ;
Her face defac'd with scars of infamy,
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants,⁴
And almost shoulder'd⁵ in the swallowing gulf
Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion.
Which to recure,⁶ we heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land :
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain :
But as successively, from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
For this, consorted with the citizens,
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace.

Glo. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speak in your reproof,
Best fitteth my degree or your condition :
If, not to answer,—you might haply think,
Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded
To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me ;
If to reprove you for this suit of yours,
So season'd with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends.
Therefore,—to speak, and to avoid the first ;
And, then in speaking, not to incur the last,— Definitely thus I answer you.

Your love deserves my thanks ; but my desert
Unmeritable, shuns your high request.

First, if all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As my ripe revenue and due of birth ;
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty, and so many, my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my greatness,—
Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,—
Than in my greatness covet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my glory smother'd.
But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me ;
(And much I need⁷ to help you, if need were ;)
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay what you would lay on me,
The right and fortune of his happy stars,—
Which, God defend, that I should wring from him !

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace ;

But the respects thereof are nice⁸ and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.

You say, that Edward is your brother's son ;

So say we too, but not by Edward's wife :

For first he was contract to Lady Lucy,

Your mother lives a witness to his vow ;

And afterwards by substitute betroth'd

To Bona, sister to the king of France.

These both put by, a poor petitioner,⁹

A care-craz'd mother to a many sons,

A beauty-waning and distressed widow,

Even in the afternoon of her best days,

Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye,

Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts

To base declension and loath'd bigamy :¹⁰

⁵ Shoulder'd in has the same meaning as rudely thrust into.

⁶ Recover. The word is frequently used by Spenser ; and both as a verb and a substantive by Lyly.

⁷ And I want much of the ability requisite to give you help, if help were needed.

⁸ Weak, silly.

⁹ See King Henry VI. Part III. Act iii.

¹⁰ Bigamy, by a canon of the council of Lyons, A. D. 1274 (adopted by a statute in 4 Edw. I.), was made unlawful and infamous. It differed from Polygamy, or having two wives at once ; as it consisted in either mar-

² Fatten, pamper.

³ This pious and courtly mayor was Edmund Shaw, brother to Doctor Shaw, whom Richard employed to prove his title to the crown from the pulpit at Paul's Cross.

⁴ Shakespeare seems to have remembered the text on which Dr. Shaw preached his remarkable sermon at St. Paul's Cross :—

'Bastard slips shall never take deep root.'

By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners call—the prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,¹
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proffer'd benefit of dignity:
If not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing time,
Unto a lineal true-derived course.

May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat you.

Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love.

Cate. O, make them joyful, grant their lawful suit.

Glo. Alas, why would you heap those cares on me?

I am unfit for state and majesty:—

I do beseech you, take it not amiss;

I cannot, nor I will not, yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it,—as in love and zeal,
Loath to depose the child, your brother's son;

As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse,²

Which we have noted in you to your kindred,
And equally, indeed, to all estates,—

Yet know, wher' you accept our suit or no,
Your brother's son shall never reign our king;

But we will plant some other in your throne;
To the disgrace and downfall of your house.

And, in this resolution, here we leave you;
Come, citizens, we will entreat no more.

[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and Citizens.]

Cate. Call them again, sweet prince, accept their suit;

If you deny them, all the land will rue it.

Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?

Well, call them again; I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties,

[Exit CATESBY.]

Albeit against my conscience and my soul.

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM and the rest.

Cousin of Buckingham,—and you sage, grave men,—

Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, wher' I will, or no,

I must have patience to endure the load:
But if black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,

Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me

From all the impure blots and stains thereof;
For God he knows, and you may partly see,

How far I am from the desire of this.

May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will say it.

Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title,—

Long live King Richard, England's worthy king!

All. Amen.

Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be crown'd?

Glo. Even when you please, since you will have it so.

Buck. To-morrow then we will attend your grace;

And so, most joyfully, we take our leave.

Glo. Come, let us to our holy work again.—

[To the Bishops.]

Farewell, good cousin;—farewell, gentle friends.³

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Before the Tower.

Enter on one side, QUEEN ELIZABETH, DUCHESS of YORK, and MARQUIS of DORSET; on the other, rying two virgins successively, or once marrying a widow. This is from Sir T. More, as copied by Hall and Holinshed.

1 The duke here hints at the pretended bastardy of Edward and Clarence. By 'some alive' is meant the duchess of York, the mother of Edward and Richard. This is very closely copied from Sir Thomas More.

2 Pity.

3 To this act should probably be added the next scene, so will the coronation pass between the acts; and

ANNE, DUCHESS of GLOSTER, leading LADY MARGARET PLANTAGENET, Clarence's young Daughter.

Duch. Who meets us here?—my niece¹ Plantagenet

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster?

Now, for my life, she's wand'ring to the Tower,
On pure heart's love, to greet the tender prince.—
Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your graces both
A happy and a joyful time of day!

Q. Eliz. As much to you, good sister! Whither away?

Anne. No further than the Tower; and, as I guess,

Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.

Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks; we'll enter all together:

Enter BRAKENBURY.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes.—

Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,

How doth the prince, and my young son of York?

Brak. Right well, dear madam: By your patience,

I may not suffer you to visit them;

The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary.

Q. Eliz. The king! who's that?

Brak. I mean, the lord protector.

Q. Eliz. The Lord protect him from that kindly title!

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?

I am their mother, who shall bar me from them?

Duch. I am their father's mother, I will see them.

Anne. Their aunt I am in law, in love their mother:

Then bring me to their sights; I'll bear thy blame,
And take thy office from thee, on my peril.

Brak. No, madam, no, I may not leave it so;

I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me.

[Exit BRAKENBURY.]

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,

And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,

And reverend looker-on of two fair queens.—

Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster.

[To the DUCHESS of GLOSTER.]

There to be crown'd Richard's royal queen.

Q. Eliz. Ah, cut my lace asunder!

That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,

Or else I swoon with this dead-killing news.

Anne. Despitful tidings! O displeasing news!

Dor. Be of good cheer:—Mother, how fares your grace?

Q. Eliz. O Dorset, speak not to me, get thee

gone,

Death and destruction dog thee at the heels;

Thy mother's name is ominous to children:

If thou wilt outstrip death, go cross the seas,

And live with Richmond from the reach of hell.

Go, hie thee, hie thee, from this slaughter-house,

Lest thou increase the number of the dead;

And make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse,—

Nor mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.

Stan. Full of wise care is this your counsel, madam:—

Take all the swift advantage of the hours;

You shall have letters from me to my son

In your behalf, to meet you on the way:

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. O ill-dispersing wind of misery!—

there will not only be a proper interval of action, but the conclusion will be more forcible.—Johnson.

4 We have not seen this lady since the second scene of the first act, in which she promised to meet Richard at Crosby Place. She was married to him about the year 1472.

5 I. e. grand-daughter. The words grandson or grand-daughter never occur in Shakespeare.

6 This was the phraseology of Shakespeare's time.

7 I. e. 'I may not so resign my office.'

O my accursed womb, the bed of death;
A cockatrice¹ hast thou hatch'd to the world,
Whose unavowed eye is murderous!

Stan. Come, madam, come; I in all haste was sent.

Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.—

O, would to God, that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to sear² me to the brain!
Anointed let me be with deadly venom;
And die, ere men can say—God save the queen!

Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;
To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm.

Anne. No! why?—When he, that is my husband
now,

Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corse;
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his hands,

Which issu'd from my other angel husband,
And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;

O, when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish,—Be thou, quoth I, accurs'd,

For making me, so young, so old a widow!

And, when thou wed'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;

And be thy wife (if any be so mad,)

More miserable by the life of thee,

Than thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!

Lo, ere I can repeat this curse again,

Even in so short a space, my woman's heart

Grossly grew captive to his honey words,

And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse:

Which ever since hath held mine eyes from rest;

For never yet one hour in his bed

Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,

But with his timorous dreams³ was still awak'd.

Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;

And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu; I pity thy complaining.

Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for

yours.

Dor. Farewell, thou woful welcomer of glory!

Anne. Adieu, poor soul, that tak'st thy leave of it!

Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee! [To DORSET.]

Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!—

[To ANNE.]

Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess

thee! [To Q. ELIZABETH.]

I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!

Eighty odd years⁴ of sorrow have I seen,

And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.⁵

Q. Eliz. Stay yet; look back, with me, unto the

Tower.—

Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babes,

Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls!

Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!

Rude ragged nurse! old sullen playfellow

For tender princes, use my babies well!

So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room of State in the Palace. Flourish of Trumpets. RICHARD, as King upon his throne; BUCKINGHAM, CATESBY, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Buckingham,—

1 A serpent supposed to originate from a cock's egg.
2 She seems to allude to the ancient mode of punishing a regicide, or other criminals, by placing a crown of iron heated red hot upon his head.

3 It is recorded by Polydore Virgil that Richard was frequently disturbed by terrible dreams. The veracity of that historian has been called in doubt; but Shakespeare followed the popular histories.

4 Shakespeare seems here to have spoken at random. The present scene is in 1483. Richard duke of York, the husband of this lady, had been then living, would have been but seventy-three years old, and we may reasonably suppose she was not older: nor did she go speedily to her grave; she lived till 1495.

Buck. My gracious sovereign.

K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high, by thy advice,

And thy assistance, is King Richard seated:—

But shall we wear these glories for a day?

Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?

Buck. Still live they, and for ever let them last!

K. Rich. Ah, Buckingham, now do I play the touch.⁶

To try if thou be current gold, indeed:—

Young Edward lives;—Think now what I would speak.

Buck. Say on, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be

king.

Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned liege.

K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'Tis so: but Edward lives.

Buck. True, noble prince.

K. Rich. O bitter consequence,

That Edward still should live,—true, noble prince!

Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull:

Shall I be plain? I wish the bastards dead;

And I would have it suddenly perform'd.

What say'st thou now? speak suddenly, be brief.

Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure.

K. Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes:

Say, have I thy consent, that they shall die?

Buck. Give me some breath, some little pause,

dear lord,

Before I positively speak in this:

I will resolve your grace immediately.

[Exit BUCKINGHAM.]

Cate. The king is angry; see, he gnaws his lip.⁷

[Aside.]

K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools,

[Descends from his Throne.]

And unrespective boys:⁸ none are for me,

That look into me with considerate eyes;—

High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.—

Boy,——

Page. My lord.

K. Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting gold

Would tempt unto a close exploit⁹ of death?

Page. I know a discontented gentleman,

Whose humble means match not his haughty mind:

Gold were as good as twenty orators,

And will no doubt tempt him to any thing.

K. Rich. What is his name?

Page. His name, my lord, is—Tyrrel.

K. Rich. I partly know the man; Go, call him hither, boy.— [Exit Page.]

The deep-revolving witty¹⁰ Buckingham

No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels:

Hath he so long held out with me untir'd,

And stops he now for breath?—well, be it so.—

Enter STANLEY.

How now, lord Stanley? what's the news?

Stan. Know, my loving lord,

The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled

To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby: rumour it abroad,

That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;

I will take order¹¹ for her keeping close.

Inquire me out some mean-born gentleman,

Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter:

5 Sorrow.

6 'To play the touch' is to resemble the touchstone.

7 Several of our ancient historians observe that this was an accustomed action of Richard's, whether he was pensive or angry.

8 Unrespectful, i. e. devoid of cautious and prudential consideration, inconsiderate, unregardful.

9 Secret act.

10 Witty was not at this time employed to signify a man of fancy, but was used for sagacity, wisdom, or judgment; or, as Baret defines it, 'having the senses sharp, perceiving or foreseeing quicklie.'

11 i. e. take measures.

The boy is foolish,' and I fear not him.—
Look, how thou dream'st!—I say again, give out,
That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:
About it: for it stands me much upon,²
To stop all hopes, whose growth may damage me.

[Exit CATESBY.]

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:—
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! But I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin.³
Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.—

Re-enter Page, with TYRREL.

Is thy name—Tyrrel?*

Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient subject.

K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious lord.

K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?

Tyr. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies.

K. Rich. Why, then thou hast it; two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal⁵ upon:
Tyrrel, I mean those bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them,
And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.

K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come hither, Tyrrel;

Go, by this token:—Rise, and lend thine ear:

[Whispers.]

There is no more but so;—Say, it is done,
And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.⁶

Tyr. I will despatch it straight.

[Exit.]

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind
The late demand that you did sound me in.

K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.

Buck. I hear the news, my lord.

K. Rich. Stanley, he's your wife's son:—Well, look to it.

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by promise,

For which your honour and your faith is pawn'd;
The earldom of Hereford, and the moveables,⁷
Which you have promised I shall possess.

K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife; if she convey Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

1 Shakspeare has here perhaps anticipated the folly of this youth. He was at this time, I believe, about ten years old, and we are not told by any historian that he had then exhibited any symptoms of folly. Being confined by King Henry VII. immediately after the battle of Bosworth, and his education being entirely neglected, he is described by Polydore Virgil, at the time of his death, in 1499, as an idiot; and his account, which is copied by Holinshed, was certainly a sufficient authority for Shakspeare's representation.

2 i. e. it is incumbent upon me.

3 'I am in blood'

Step'd in so far, that should I wade no more Returning were as tedious,' &c. Macbeth.

4 'The best part of our chronicles, in all men's opinions, is that of Richard III. written as I have heard by Moortou, but as most suppose by Sir Thomas More, sometime lord chancellor of England, where it is said, how the king was devising with Tyrrel to have his nephews privily murdered; and it is added, he was then sitting on a draught; a fit carpet for such a counsel.' Sir James Tyrrel was executed for treason in the beginning of King Henry VII.

5 We should now say 'deal with,' but the other was the phraseology of Shakspeare's time.

6 The quarto has the following very characteristic line:—

'King. Shall we hear from thee, Tirril, ere we sleep?'

7 King Henry IV. married one of the daughters and coheirs of Humphrey Bohun, earl of Hereford; and the other was married to Thomas duke of Gloster, fifth son of King Edward III., who was created earl of Hereford, Buck. What says your highness to my just request?

K. Rich. I do remember me,—Henry the Sixth
Did prophesy, that Richmond should be king,
When Richmond was a little peevish boy.

A king?—perhaps—

Buck. My lord,——

K. Rich. How chance, the prophet could not at that time,

Have told me, I being by,⁸ that I should kill him?

Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom,—

K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at Exeter,

The mayor in courtesy show'd me the castle,
And call'd it—Rouge-mont:⁹ at which name, I started;

Because a bard of Ireland told me once,
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord,——

K. Rich. Ay, what's o'clock?

Buck. I am thus bold

To put your grace in mind of what you promis'd me.

K. Rich. Well, but what is't o'clock?

Buck. Upon the stroke
Of ten.

K. Rich. Well, let it strike.

Buck.——

Why, let it strike?

K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack,¹⁰ thou keep'st
the stroke

Betwixt thy begging and my meditation.

I am not in the giving vein to-day.

Buck. Why, then resolve me wh'er you will, or no.

K. Rich. Thou troublest me; I am not in the vein.

[Exeunt KING RICHARD and TYRREL.]

Buck. And is it thus? repays he my deep service
With such contempt? made I him king for this?

O, let me think on Hastings; and be gone
To Brecknock,¹¹ while my fearful head is on. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. Enter TYRREL.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.
Dighton, and Forrest, whom I did suborn
To do this piece of ruthless butchery,
Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children, in their death's sad story.
O thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle babes,—
Thus, thus, quoth Forrest, girdling one another
Within their alabaster innocent arms:
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk, in 1386, by King Richard II.; his only daughter Anne having married Edmund earl of Stafford. The duke of Buckingham, (who was the grandson of this Edmund and Anne,) had some pretensions to claim a new grant of the title, but he had not a shadow of right to the moiety of the estate, which, if it devolved to King Edward IV. with the crown, was now the property of his children, or otherwise belonged to the right heirs of King Henry IV. Many of our historians, however, ascribe the breach between him and Richard, to Richard's refusing to restore him the moiety of the Hereford estate; and Shakspeare has followed them.

8 The duke of Gloster, according to the former play, was not by when King Henry uttered the prophecy, but the poet does not often trouble himself about such minute points of accuracy.

9 Hooker, who wrote in Queen Elizabeth's time, in his description of Exeter, mentions this as a 'very old and ancient castle, named Rugemont; that is to say, Red Hill, taking the name of the red soil or earth whereupon it is situated.' It was first built, he adds, as some think, by Julius Cæsar, but rather, and in truth, by the Romans after him.

10 This alludes to the jack of the clock house, mentioned before in King Richard II. Act v. Sc. 3. It was a figure made in old public clocks to strike the bell on the outside; of the same kind as those still preserved at St Dunstan's church in Fleet Street. Richard compares Buckingham to one of the automats, and bids him not to suspend the stroke on the clock bell, but strike, that the noise may be past, and himself at liberty to pursue his meditations. Jack was a term of contempt, occurring before in this play.

11 His castle in Wales

*Which, in their summer beauty, kiss'd each other.
A book of prayers on their pillow lay;
Which once, quoth Forrest, almost chang'd my mind;
But, O, the devil!—there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on,—we smothered
The most replenish'd sweet work of nature,
That, from the prime creation, e'er she fram'd.—
Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse,
They could not speak; and so I left them both,
To bear this tidings to the bloody king.*

Enter KING RICHARD.

And here he comes:—All health, my sovereign lord!

K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel! am I happy in thy news?

Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Beget your happiness, be happy then,
For it is done.

K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?

Tyr. I did, my lord.

K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel?

Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them;

But where, to say the truth, I do not know.

K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, at after supper,

When thou shalt tell the process of their death.

Mean time, but think how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.

Farewell, till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.]

K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I pen'd up close;

His daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage;

The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom,

And Anne my wife hath bid the world good night.

Now, for I know the Bretagne¹ Richmond aims

At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,

And, by that knot, looks proudly on the crown,

To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. My lord,—

K. Rich. Good news or bad, that thou com'st in so bluntly?

Cate. Bad news, my lord; Morton² is fled to Richmond;

And Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welshmen,

Is in the field, and still his power increaseth.

K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near,

Than Buckingham and his rash levied strength.

Come,—I have learn'd, that fearful commenting

Is leaden servitor to dull delay;³

Delay leads impotent and snail pac'd beggary:

Then fiery expedition be my wing,

Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king!

Go, muster men: My counsel is my shield;

We must be brief, when traitors brave the field.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. Before the Palace. Enter QUEEN MARGARET.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.⁴
Here in these confines slyly have I lurk'd,
To watch the waning of mine enemies.

¹ He thus denominates Richmond, because after the battle of Tewksbury he had taken refuge in the court of Francis II. duke of Bretagne, where by the procurement of Edward IV. he was kept a long time in honourable custody.

² Bishop of Ely.

³ Timorous thought and cautious disquisition are the dull attendants on delay.

⁴ ——— now is his fate grown mellow,

Instant to fall into the rotten jaws

Of chap-fall'n death.⁵

Marston's Antonio and Mellida, 1602.

King Richard III. was printed in 1597, Marston is therefore the imitator.

⁶ Induction is preface, introduction, or prologue.

⁶ In the third scene of the first act Margaret was re-

A dire induction⁶ am I witness to,
And will to France; hoping, the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret! who comes here?

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH and the DUCHESS of YORK.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!

My unblown flowers, new appearing sweets!

If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,

And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,

Hover about me with your airy wings,

And hear your mother's lamentation!

Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right fit⁶ right⁶

Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night.

Duch. So many miseries have craz'd my voice,

That my woe-wearied tongue is still and mute,—

Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?

Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,

Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.

Q. Eliz. Wilt thou, O God, fly from such gentle lambs,

And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?

When didst thou sleep, when such a deed was done?

Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet son.

Duch. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal—living ghost,

Woe's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life usurp'd,

Brief abstract and record of tedious days,

Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth,

[Sitting down.]

Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!

Q. Eliz. Ah, that thou would'st as soon afford a grave,

As thou canst yield a melancholy seat;

Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here!

Ah, who hath any cause to mourn, but we?

[Sitting down by her.]

Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,

Give mine the benefit of senility,⁷

And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.

If sorrow can admit society,

[Sitting down with them.]

Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:—

I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him;

I had a husband, till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.

Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill him;

I had a Rutland too, thou holp'st to kill him.

Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him;

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell hound, that doth hunt us all to death:

That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,

To worry lambs, and lap their gentle blood;

That foul defacer of God's handy work;

That excellent grand tyrant of the earth,

That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,

Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves—

O upright, just, and true disposing God,

How do I thank thee, that this carnal⁸ cur proached with the murder of young Rutland, and the death of her husband and son were imputed to divine vengeance roused by that wicked act. ⁷ So just is God to right the innocent.' Margaret now, perhaps, means to say, 'The right of me, an injured mother, whose son was slain at Tewksbury, has now operated as powerfully as that right which the death of Rutland gave you to divine justice, and has destroyed your children in their turn.'

⁷ Seniority.

⁸ Vide Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 2:—

'Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts.'

Its apparent signification is cruel, sanguinary, fleshly-minded.

Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
And makes her pew-fellow¹ with others' moan!

Duch. O, Harry's wife, triumph not in my woes;
God witness with me, I have wept for thine.

Q. Mar. Bear with me, I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward;
Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;
Young York he is but boot,² because both they Match not the high perfection of my loss.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward;
And the beholders of this tragic play,
The adulterate³ Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves.
Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligencer;
Only reserv'd their factor, to buy souls,
And send them thither: But at hand, at hand,
Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,
To have him suddenly convey'd from hence:—
Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray,
That I may live to say, The dog is dead!

Q. Eliz. O, thou didst prophesy, the time would come,

That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottled spider, that foul bunch-back'd toad.

Q. Mar. I call'd thee then, vain flourish of my fortune;

I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen;
The presentation of but what I was,
The flattering index⁴ of a direful pageant,
One heav'd a high, to be hurl'd down below:
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast; a garish⁵ flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou joy?
Who sues, and kneels, and says—God save the queen?

Where be the bending peers that flatter'd thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?
Decline all this,⁶ and see what now thou art.
For happy wife, a most distressed widow;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For one being sued to, one that humbly sues;
For queen, a very caitiff crown'd with care;
For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;
For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one;
For one commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou wert,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art.
Thou didst usurp my place. And dost thou not Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?
Now thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;
From which even here I slip my wearied head,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.
Farewell, York's wife,—and queen of sad mischance,—

These English woes shall make me smile in France.

1 i. e. partaker of or participator in the grief of others. The word appears to have been used metaphorically for an equal, a companion, or old and intimate acquaintance.

2 i. e. thrown into the bargain.

3 Adulterate is stained with adultery. Adulterata, Lat.

4 See note on Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 4:—
"——— what act

That roars so loud and thunders in the index.
Mr. Nares suggests that the index of a pageant was probably a painted cloth hung up before a booth where a pageant was to be exhibited.

5 Alluding to the dangerous situation of those persons to whose care the standards of armies were entrusted.

6 i. e. run through all this from first to last.

7 Fast has no connection with the preceding word forbear; the meaning being sleep not at night, and fast during the day.

8 Bettering is amplifying, magnifying thy loss.

Q. Eliz. O thou well skill'd in curses, stay a while,
And teach me how to curse mine enemies.

Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast the day;

Compare dead happiness with living woe:
Think that thy babes were fairer than they were,
And he, that slew them, fouler than he is:
Bettering⁸ thy loss makes the bad causer worse;
Revolving this will teach thee how to curse.

Q. Eliz. My words are dull, O, quicken them with thine!

Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like mine. [Exit Q. MARGARET.]

Duch. Why should calamity be full of words?

Q. Rich. Windy attorneys⁹ to their client woes,
Airy succeeders of intestate joys,¹⁰
Poor breathing orators of miseries!

Let them have scope: though what they do impart
Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart.¹¹

Duch. If so, then be not tongue-ty'd: go with me,
And in the 'breach' of bitter words let's smother
My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smother'd.

[Drum within.]

I hear his drum,—be copious in exclams.

Enter KING RICHARD, and his Train, marching

K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition?

Duch. O, she, that might have intercepted thee,
By strangling thee in her accursed womb,
From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.

Q. Eliz. Hid'st thou that forehead with a golden crown,

Where should be branded, if that right were right,
The slaughter of the prince that ow'd that crown,
And the dire death of my poor sons, and brothers?
Tell me, thou villain slave, where are my children?

Duch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother Clarence?

And little Ned Plantagenet, his son?

Q. Eliz. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Grey?

Duch. Where is kind Hastings?

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets!—strike alarum, drums!

Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women
Rail on the Lord's anointed: Strike, I say.—

[Flourish. Alarums]

Either be patient and entreat me fair,
Or with the clamorous report of war
Thus will I drown your exclamations.

Duch. Art thou my son?

K. Rich. Ay; I thank God, my father, and yourself.

Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience.

K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition,¹²

That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

Duch. O, let me speak.

K. Rich. Do, then; but I'll not hear.

Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my words.

K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste.

Duch. Art thou so hasty? I have staid for thee,
God knows, in torment and in agony.

K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

Duch. No, by the holy rood, thou know'st it well,
Thou cam'st on earth to make the earth my hell.

Shakspeare employed the word for the sake of the antithesis between better and loss.

9 Thus in Venus and Adonis:—

'So of concealed sorrow may be said:
Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage;
But when the heart's attorney once is mute,
The client breaks as desperate of his suit.'

10 The meaning of this harsh metaphor is: The joys already possessed being all consumed and passed away, are supposed to have died intestate; that is, to have made no will, having nothing to bequeath; and more verbal complaints are their successors, but inherit nothing but misery.

11 Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.
Macbeth.

12 A spice or particle of your disposition.

A grievous burden was thy birth to me;
Tetchy¹ and wayward was thy infancy;
Thy school-days, frightful, desperate, wild, and furious;

Thy prime of manhood, daring, bold, and venturesome;
Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody;
More mild, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred:
What comfortable hour canst thou name,
That ever grac'd me in thy company?

K. Rich. Faith, none, but Humphrey Hour,² that call'd your grace
To breakfast once, forth of my company.
If I be so disgracious in your sight,
Let me march on, and not offend you, madam.—
Strike up the drum.

Duch. I pr'ythee, hear me speak.

K. Rich. You speak too bitterly.

Duch. Hear me a word;

For I shall never speak to thee again.

K. Rich. So.

Duch. Either thou wilt die, by God's just ordinance,

Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror;
Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish,
And never look upon thy face again.
Therefore take with thee my most heavy curse;
Which, in the day of battle, tire thee more,
Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!
My prayers on the adverse party fight;
And there the little souls of Edward's children
Whisper the spirits of thine enemies,
And promise them success and victory.
Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end;
Shame serves³ thy life, and doth thy death attend.

Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse

Abides in me; I say amen to her. [Going.]

K. Rich. Stay, madam, I must speak a word with you.

Q. Eliz. I have no more sons of the royal blood
For thee to murder: for my daughters, Richard,—
They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens;
And therefore level not to hit their lives.

K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd—Elizabeth,
Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious.

Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O, let her live,
And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty?
Slander myself, as false to Edward's bed;
Throw over her the veil of infamy;
So she may live unscar'd of bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter.

K. Rich. Wrong not her birth, she is of royal blood.

Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say she is not so.

K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth.

Q. Eliz. And only in that safety died her brothers.

K. Rich. Lo, at their births, good stars were opposite.

Q. Eliz. No, to their lives bad friends were contrary.

K. Rich. All unavoyd⁴ is the doom of destiny.

Q. Eliz. True, when avoyd grace makes destiny:

My babes were destin'd to a fairer death,
If grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life.

K. Rich. You speak, as if that I had slain my cousins.

Q. Eliz. Cousins, indeed; and by their uncle cozen'd

Of comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life.
Whose hands soever lanc'd their tender hearts,
Thy head, all indirectly, gave direction:

No doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt,
Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart,⁵
To revel in the entrails of my lambs.

But that still⁶ use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes:
And I, in such a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.

K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprise,
And dangerous success of bloody wars,
As I intend more good to you and yours,
Than ever you or yours by me were harm'd!

Q. Eliz. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,

To be discover'd, that can do me good?

K. Rich. The advancement of your children, gentle lady.

Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads?

K. Rich. No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory.⁷

Q. Eliz. Flatter my sorrows with report of it;
Tell me, what state, what dignity, what honour,
Canst thou demise⁸ to any child of mine?

K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and all,
Will I withal endow a child of thine;
So in the Lethe of thy angry soul

Thou drown the sad remembrance of those wrongs,
Which, thou supposest, I have done to thee.

Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy kindness

Last longer telling than thy kindness' date.

K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul, I love thy daughter.

Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with her soul.

K. Rich. What do you think?

Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter, from thy soul:

So, from thy soul's love, didst thou love her brothers:
And from my heart's love, I do thank thee for it.

K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning:
I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter,
And do intend to make her queen of England.

Q. Eliz. Well then, who dost thou mean shall be her king?

K. Rich. Even he, that makes her queen: Who else should be?

Q. Eliz. What, thou?

K. Rich. Even so: What think you of it, madam?

Q. Eliz. How canst thou woo her?

K. Rich. That I would learn of you
As one being best acquainted with her humour.

Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me?

K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart.

Q. Eliz. Send to her, by the man that slew her brothers,

A pair of bleeding hearts; thereon engrave,
Edward, and York; then, haply, will she weep:

Therefore present to her,—as sometime Margaret
Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,—

A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain
The purple sap from her sweet brothers' body,

And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withal.
If this inducement move her not to love,

Send her a letter of thy noble deeds;
Tell her, thou mad'st away her uncle Clarence,

Her uncle Rivers; ay, and, for her sake,
Mad'st quick conveyance with her good aunt Anne.

mirring his supposed monument in old St. Paul's Cathedral.

1 Touchy, fretful.

2 I know not what to make of this, unless we suppose with Steevens that it is an allusion to some affair of gallantry of which the duchess had been suspected. There is no mention of any thing of the kind in the Chronicles.

Malone conjectures that Humphrey Hour is merely used as a ludicrous periphrasis for hour, like Tom Troth, for truth, in Gabriel Harvey's Letter to Spenser.

There can hardly be any allusion to the phrase of 'dining with Duke Humphrey,' used to express those who dined upon air, or passed their dinner hour in admiring his supposed monument in old St. Paul's Cathedral.

3 i. e. accomplices.

4 Unavoidable.

5 This conceit seems to have been a favourite with Shakspeare.

6 i. e. constant use.

7 i. e. the crown, the emblem of royalty. See note on King Henry VI. Part III. Act I. Sc. 4.

8 To demise is to grant, from demittere, Lat. But as no example of the use of the word, except in legal instruments, offers itself, I cannot help thinking we should read devise, with the second folio.

K. Rich. You mock me, madam ; this is not the way

To win your daughter.

Q. Eliz. There is no other way ;
Unless thou could'st put on some other shape,
And not be Richard that hath done all this.

K. Rich. Say, that I did all this for love of her ?

Q. Eliz. Nay, then indeed, she cannot choose but hate thee,¹

Having bought love with such a bloody spoil.

K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now amended ;

Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after hours give leisure to repent.
If I did take the kingdom from your sons,
To make amends, I'll give it to your daughter.

If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,
To quicken your increase, I will beget
Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter.

A grandam's name is little less in love,
Than is the doting title of a mother ;
They are as children, but one step below,
Even of your mettle, of your very blood ;
Of all one pain,—save for a night of groans
Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.²

Your children were vexation to your youth,
But mine shall be a comfort to your age.
The loss, you have, is but—a son being king,
And, by that loss, your daughter is made queen.

I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore accept such kindness as I can.

Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul,
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions and great dignity :

The king, that calls your beauteous daughter,—wife,
Familiarly shall call thy Dorset—brother ;

Again shall you be mother to a king,
And all the ruins of distressful times
Repair'd with double riches of content.

What ! we have many goodly days to see :
The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again, transform'd to orient pearl :

Advantaging their loan, with interest
Of ten times double gain of happiness.

Go then, my mother, to thy daughter go ;
Make bold her bashful years with your experience,
Prepare her ears to hear a wooer's tale ;

Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame
Of golden sovereignty ; acquaint the princess
With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys ;

And when this arm of mine hath chastised
The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed ;

To whom I will retail³ my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Cæsar's Cæsar.

Q. Eliz. What were I best to say ? her father's brother

Would be her lord ? Or shall I say, her uncle ?
Or, he that slew her brothers, and her uncles ?
Under what title shall I woo for thee,

That God, the law, my honour, and her love,
Can make seem pleasing to her tender years ?

K. Rich. Infer fair England's peace by this alliance.

Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still lasting war.

K. Rich. Tell her, the king, that may command, entreats.

Q. Eliz. That at her hands, which the king's King forbids.⁴

K. Rich. Say, she shall be a high and mighty queen.

Q. Eliz. To wait the title, as her mother doth.

K. Rich. Say, I will love her everlastingly.

Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title, ever, last ?

K. Rich. Sweetly in force unto her fair life's end.

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last ?

K. Rich. As long as heaven, and nature, lengthens it.

Q. Eliz. As long as hell, and Richard, likes of it.

K. Rich. Say, I, her sovereign, am her subject low

Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, loathes such sov'reignty.

K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her.

Q. Eliz. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.

K. Rich. Then in plain terms tell her my loving tale.

Q. Eliz. Plain, and not honest, is too harsh a style.

K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick.

Q. Eliz. O, no, my reasons are too deep and
dead ;—

Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves.

K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam ; that is past.

Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I, till heartstrings break.

K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown,—

Q. Eliz. Profan'd, dishonour'd, and the third usurp'd

K. Rich. I swear.

Q. Eliz. By nothing ; for this is no oath.

Thy George, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour ;

Thy garter, blemish'd, paw'd his knightly virtue ;

Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory :

If something thou would'st swear to be believ'd,

Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd.

K. Rich. Now by the world,—

Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs.

K. Rich. My father's death,—

Q. Eliz. Thy life hath that dishonour'd.

K. Rich. Then, by myself,—

Q. Eliz. Thyself is self misus'd.

K. Rich. Why then, by God,—

Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.

If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,

The unity, the king thy brother made,

Had not been broken, nor my brother slain.

If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,

The imperial metal, circling now thy head,

Had grac'd the tender temples of my child ;

And both the princes had been breathing here,

Which now, two tender bedfellows for dust,

Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms.

What canst thou swear by now ?

K. Rich. By the time to come.

Q. Eliz. That thou hast wronged in the time o'er-past ;

For I myself have many tears to wash

Hereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.

The children live, whose parents thou hast slaugh-
ter'd,

Ungovern'd youth, to wait it in their age :

The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd !

Old barren plants, to wait it with their age.

Swear not by time to come ; for that thou hast

Misus'd ere us'd, by times ill us'd o'er past.

K. Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent !

So thrive I in my dangerous attempt

Of hostile arms ! myself myself confound !

Heaven, and fortune, bar me happy hours !

Day, yield me not thy light ; nor, night, thy rest !

Be opposite all planets of good luck

To my proceeding, if with pure heart's love,

1 Tyrwhitt suggested that the sense seemed to require we should read 'but love thee,' ironically. Mason proposed 'but have thee,' which Stevens admitted into the text. 'It is by no means evident that this is spoken ironically (says Mr. Boswell), and, if not, the old reading affords a perfectly clear meaning. A virtuous woman would hate the man who thought to purchase her love by the commission of crimes.'

2 'Endur'd of her for whom you bid like sorrow.' Q is used for by ; bid is the past tense from bide.
s. l. e. recount.'

3 She means that his crimes would render such a marriage offensive to heaven.

4 Young has borrowed this thought :—

'But say, my all, my mistress, and my friend,
What day next weev the' eternity shall end !

Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter!
In her consists my happiness, and thine:
Without her, follows to myself, and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay:
It cannot be avoided but by this;
It will not be avoided but by this;
Therefore, dear mother (I must call you so),
Be the attorney of my love to her.
Plead what I will be, not what I have been;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:
Urge the necessity and state of times,
And be not peevish¹ found in great designs.

Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?

K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good.

Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself, to be myself?

K. Rich. Ay, if yourself's remembrance wrong yourself.

Q. Eliz. But thou didst kill my children.

K. Rich. But in your daughter's womb I bury them:

Where, in the nest of spicery,² they shall breed
Selves of themselves, to your recomforture.

Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.

Q. Eliz. I go.—Write to me very shortly,
And you shall understand from me her mind.

K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss, and so farewell.

[Kissing her. Exit Q. ELIZABETH.]

Relenting fool, and shallow, changing—woman!³
How now? what news?

Enter RATCLIFF; CATESBY following.

Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy; to the shore

Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back;

'Tis thought, that Richmond is their admiral;

And there they hull, expecting but the aid

Of Buckingham, to welcome them ashore.

K. Rich. Some lightfoot friend post to the duke of Norfolk:⁴

Ratcliff, thyself,—or Catesby; where is he?

Cate. Here, my good lord.

K. Rich. Catesby, fly to the duke.

Cate. I will, my Lord, with all convenient haste.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither; Post to Salisbury;

When thou com'st thither,—Dull, unmindful villain,

[To CATESBY.]

Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the duke?

Cate. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness'
pleasure,

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

K. Rich. O, true, good Catesby;—Bid him levy straight

The greatest strength and power he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.

Cate. I go.

[Exit.]

Rat. What, may it please you, shall I do at Salisbury?

K. Rich. Why, what would'st thou do there, before I go?

Rat. Your highness told me, I should post before.

Enter STANLEY.

K. Rich. My mind is chang'd.—Stanley, what news with you?

Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the hearing;

Nor none so bad, but well may be reported.

K. Rich. Heyday, a riddle! neither good nor bad!
What need'st thou run so many miles about,
When thou may'st tell thy tale the nearest way?
Once more, what news?

Stan. Richmond is on the seas.

K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him!

White-liver'd runagate, what doth he there?

Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.

K. Rich. Well, as you guess?

Stan. Stir'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and Morton,

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.

K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword unsway'd?

Is the king dead, the empire unpossess'd?

What heir of York is there alive, but we?

And who is England's king, but great York's heir?
Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas?

Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.

K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege,

You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes.

Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear.

Stan. No, mighty liege; therefore mistrust me not.

K. Rich. Where is thy power then, to beat him back?

Where be thy tenants, and thy followers?

Are they not now upon the western shore,
Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?

Stan. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north.

K. Rich. Cold friends to me: what do they in the north,

When they should serve their sovereign in the west?

Stan. They have not been commanded, mighty king:

Pleaseth your majesty to give me leave,

I'll muster up my friends; and meet your grace,

Where, and at what time, your majesty shall please.

K. Rich. Ay, ay, thou wouldst be gone to join with Richmond:

I will not trust you, sir.

Stan.

Most mighty sovereign,

You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful;
I never was, nor never will be false.

K. Rich. Well, go, muster men. But, hear you, leave behind

Your son, George Stanley: look your heart be firm,
Or else his head's assurance is but frail.

Stan. So deal with him, as I prove true to you.
[Exit STANLEY.]

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire,
As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edward Courtenay, and the haughty prelate,
Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates, are in arms

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. In Kent, my liege, the Guildfords are in arms;

And every hour more competitors⁶

Flock to the rebels, and their power grows strong.

Enter another Messenger.

3 Mess. My lord, the army of great Buckingham—

K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but songs of death? [He strikes him.]

There, take thou that, till thou bring better news.

3 Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty, told him that there was a male heir of the house of York alive, who had a better claim to the throne than he Edward earl of Warwick, the only son of the usurper's eldest brother, George duke of Clarence; but Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Edward IV. and all her sisters, had a better title than either of them. He had however been careful to have the issue of King Edward pronounced illegitimate; and as the duke of Clarence had been attainted of high treason, he had some colour for his bravado.

6 Competitors here means confederates.

¹ Foolish.

² Alluding to the phoenix.

³ Such was the real character of this queen-dowager, who would have married her daughter to King Richard, and did all in her power to alienate the marquis of Dorset, her son, (from the earl) of Richmond.

⁴ Richard's precipitation and confusion is in this scene very happily represented by inconsistent orders and sudden variation of opinion.

⁵ Richard asks this question in the plenitude of power, and no one dares to answer him. But they whom he addresses, had they not been intimidated, might have

Is,—that, by sudden floods and fall of waters,
Buckingham's army is dispers'd and scatter'd ;
And he himself wander'd away alone,
No man knows whither.

K. Rich. O, I cry you mercy :
There is my purse to cure that blow of thine.
Hath any well-advised friend proclaim'd
Reward to him that brings the traitor in ?

3 Mess. Such proclamation hath been made, my liege.

Enter another Messenger.

4 Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel, and lord marquiss Dorset,

'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms.
But this good comfort bring I to your highness,—
The Bretagne navy is dispers'd by tempest :
Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,
If they were his assistants, yea, or no ;
Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham
Upon his party : he, mistrusting them,
Hois'd sail, and made his course again for Bretagne.

K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up in arms ;

If not to fight with foreign enemies,
Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. My liege, the duke of Buckingham is taken,
That is the best news ; That the earl of Richmond
Is with a mighty power¹ landed at Milford,
Is colder news, but yet they² must be told.

K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury ; while we reason here,

A royal battle might be won and lost :—
Some one take order, Buckingham be brought To Salisbury ;—the rest march on with me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Room in Lord Stanley's House.

*Enter STANLEY and SIR CHRISTOPHER URSWICK.*³

Stan. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me :—

That in the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frank'd⁴ up in hold ;
If I revolt, off goes young George's head ;
The fear of that withholds my present aid.
But, tell me, where is princely Richmond now ?

Chris. At Pembroke, or at Ha'rford-west, in Wales,

Stan. What men of name resort to him ?

Chris. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier ;
Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley ;
Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, Sir James Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant crew ;
And many other of great fame and worth :
And towards London do they bend their course,
If by the way they be not fought withal.

Stan. Well, hie thee to thy lord ; commend me to him ;

Tell him, the queen hath heartily consented

¹ The earl of Richmond embarked with about two thousand men at Harfleur, in Normandy, August 1, 1495, and landed at Milford Haven on the 7th. He directed his course to Wales, hoping the Welsh would receive him cordially as their countryman, he having been born at Pembroke, and his grandfather being Owen Tudor, who married Katharine of France, the widow of King Henry V.

² News was considered as plural by our ancient writers.

³ Sir Christopher Urswick, a priest, chaplain to the countess of Richmond, who was married to the Lord Stanley. This priest, the chronicles tell us, frequently went backwards and forwards, unsuspected, on messages between the countess of Richmond and her husband, and the young earl of Richmond, whilst he was preparing to make his descent on England. He was afterwards almoner to King Henry VII. and refused the bishopric of Norwich. He retired to Hackney, where he died in 1527, and his tomb is, I believe, still to be seen in the church there.

⁴ Vide note on p. 96, ante.

He shall espouse Elizabeth her daughter.

These letters will resolve him of my mind.

Farewell. [Gives papers to SIR CHRISTOPHER.]

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Salisbury.⁵ An open Place. Enter the Sheriff, and Guard, with BUCKINGHAM, led to execution.

Buck. Will not King Richard let me speak with him ?⁶

Sher. No, my good lord ; therefore be patient.

Buck. Hastings, and Edward's children, Rivers, Grey,

Holy King Henry, and thy fair son Edward,
Vaughan, and all that have miscarried
By underhand corrupted foul injustice ;
If that your moody discontented souls

Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction !

This is All-Souls' day, fellows, is it not ?

Sher. It is, my lord.

Buck. Why, then All-Souls' day is my body's doomsday.

This is the day, which, in King Edward's time,
I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found
False to his children, or his wife's allies :

This is the day, wherein I wish'd to fall
By the false faith of him whom most I trusted ;

This, this, All-Souls' day to my fearful soul,
Is the determin'd respite of my wrongs.⁷

That high All-seer which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest.

Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
To turn their own points on their masters' bosoms :

Thus Margaret's curse falls heavy on my neck,—
When he, quoth she, shall split thy heart with sorrow,

Remember Margaret was a prophetess.—

Come, sirs, convey me to the block of shame ;
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.⁸

[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM, &c.]

SCENE II. Plain near Tamworth. Enter, with drum and colours, RICHMOND, OXFORD,⁹ SIR JAMES BLUNT,¹⁰ SIR WALTER HERBERT, and others, with Forces, marching.

Richm. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,

Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny,
Thus far into the bowels of the land

Have we march'd on without impediment ;
And here receive we from our father Stanley

Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil'd your summer fields, and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough

In your embowell'd bosoms, this foul swine

Lies now even in the centre of this isle,

Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn :

From Tamworth thither, is but one day's march.

⁵ There is reason to think that Buckingham's execution took place at Shrewsbury, but this is not the place to discuss the question.

⁶ The reason why the duke of Buckingham solicited an interview with Richard is explained in King Henry VIII. Act i.

⁷ The time to which the punishment of his injurious practices or the wrongs done by him was respite.

⁸ Johnson thinks this scene should be added to the fourth act, which would give it a more full and striking conclusion. In the original quarto copy, 1597, this play is not divided into acts and scenes: Malone suggests that the short scene between Stanley and Sir Christopher may have been the opening of the fifth act.

⁹ John de Vere, earl of Oxford, a zealous Lancastrian, who, after a long confinement in Hammes Castle, in Picardy, escaped in 1494, and joined Richmond at Paris. He commanded the archers at the battle of Bosworth.

¹⁰ Sir James Blunt had been captain of the Castle of Hammes, and assisted Oxford in his escape.

In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

Oxf. Every man's conscience is a thousand swords,¹

To fight against that bloody homicide.

Herb. I doubt not, but his friends will turn to us.

Blunt. He hath no friends, but who are friends for fear;

Which, in his dearest need, will fly from him.

Richm. All for our vantage. Then, in God's name, march:

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings,
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Bosworth Field. *Enter KING
RICHARD, and Forces; the DUKE of NORFOLK,
EARL of SURREY, and others.*

K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here in Bosworth field.—

My lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?

Sur. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.

K. Rich. My lord of Norfolk,—

Nor. Here, most gracious liege.

K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knocks: Ha!
must we not?

Nor. We must both give and take, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Up with my tent: Here will I lie tonight;²

[Soldiers begin to set up the King's tent.]

But where, to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that—
Who hath deserved the number of the traitors?

Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.

K. Rich. Why, our battalia trebles that account;³

Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,
Which they upon the adverse faction want.

Up with the tent.—Come, noble gentlemen,

Let us survey the vantage of the ground;—

Call for some men of sound direction;⁴—

Let's want no discipline, make no delay;

For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day. [Exeunt.]

*Enter, on the other side of the Field, RICHMOND,
SIR WILLIAM BRANDON, OXFORD, and other
Lords. Some of the Soldiers pitch RICHMOND'S Tent.*

Richm. The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.—

Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard.—

Give me some ink and paper in my tent;—

I'll draw the form and model of our battle,

Limit⁵ each leader to his several charge,

And part in just proportion our small power.

My lord of Oxford, you, Sir William Brandon,—

And you, Sir Walter Herbert, stay with me:

The earl of Pembroke keeps⁶ his regiment;—

Good Captain Blunt, bear my good night to him,

And by the second hour in the morning

Desire the earl to see me in my tent:

Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me,

Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?

Blunt. Unless I have mista'en his colours much

(Which, well I am assur'd, I have not done,)

His regiment lies half a mile at least

South from the mighty power of the king.

Richm. If without peril it be possible,

Sweet Blunt, make some good means⁷ to speak

with him,

And give him from me this most needful note.

Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it;

And so, God give you quiet rest to-night!

Richm. Good night, good captain Blunt. Come,

gentlemen,

Let us consult upon to-morrow's business;

In to my tent, the air is raw and cold.

[They withdraw into the Tent.]

Enter, to his Tent, KING RICHARD, NORFOLK, RATCLIFF, and CATESBY.

K. Rich. What is't o'clock?

Cate.

It's supper time, my lord:

It's nine o'clock.

K. Rich. I will not sup to-night.—

Give me some ink and paper.—

What, is my beaver easier than it was?—

And all my armour laid into my tent?

Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.

K. Rich. Good Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge;

Use careful watch, choose trusty sentinels.

Nor. I go, my lord.

K. Rich. Stir with the lark to-morrow, gentle

Norfolk.

Nor. I warrant you, my lord. [Exit.]

K. Rich. Ratcliff,—

Rat. My lord.

K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms

To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power

Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall

Into the blind cave of eternal night.—

Fill me a bowl of wine.—Give me a watch?⁸—

[To CATESBY.]

Saddle white Surrey for the field to-morrow.—

Look that my staves⁹ be sound, and not too heavy.

Ratcliff,—

Rat. My lord?

K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy Lord Northumblerland?¹⁰

Rat. Thomas the earl of Surrey, and himself,

Much about cock-shut¹¹ time, from troop to troop,

Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers.

1 Alluding to the proverb, 'Conscientiæ mille testes.'

2 Richard is reported not to have slept in his tent on the night before the battle, but in the town of Leicester.

3 Richmond's forces are said to have been only five thousand; and Richard's army consisted of about twelve thousand. But Lord Stanley lay at a small distance with three thousand men, and Richard may be supposed to have reckoned on them as his friends, though the event proved otherwise.

4 i. e. tried judgment, military skill.

5 Appoint.

6 Remains with.

7 i. e. contrive, take some pains or earnest measures.

8 By a watch is most probably meant a watch-light. The nature of which will appear from the following note of Sir Frances Kinaston upon Chaucer's Troilus and Cressida, in the very curious rhiming Latin version of that poem which I possess in manuscript. 'This word [morter] doth plainly intimate Jeffery Chaucer to have been an esquire of the body in ordinary to the king, whose office it is, after he hath charged and set the watch of the guard, to carry in the morter and to set it by the king's bed-side, for he takes from the cupboard a silver bason, and therein poures a little water, and then sets a round cake of virgin wax in the midst of the bason, in the middle of which cake is a wicke of bumast, which being lighted buroes as a watch-light all night by the king's bed-side. It hath, as I conceive, the name of morter for the likeness it hath when it is here consumed unto a morter wherin you bray splices, for the flame first hollowing the middle of the waxe cake, which is next unto it, the waxe by degrees, like the sands in a houre glasse, runs evenly from all sides to the middle to supply the wicke. This royal ceremony Chaucer wittily faines to be in Cresseid's bed-chamber, calling this kind of watch-light by the name of morter, which very few courtiers besides esquires of the body (who only are admitted after all night is served to come into the king's bedchamber,) do understand what is meant by it.' Kinaston was himself esquire of the body to King Charles I. Baret mentions 'watching lamps, or candles; lucerne vigiles;' and watching candles are mentioned in many old plays. Steevens says that he has seen them represented in some of the pictures [qu. prints?] of Albrecht Durer.

9 i. e. the staves or poles of his lances. It was the custom to carry more than one into the field.

10 Richard calls him melancholy because he did not join heartily in his cause.

11 i. e. twilight. A cock-shut was a large net stretched across a glade, and so suspended upon poles as easily to be drawn together, and was employed to catch woodcocks. These nets were chiefly used in the twilight of the evening, when woodcocks 'take wing to go and get water, flying generally low; and when they find any thoroughfare through a wood or range of trees, they venture through.' The artificial glade made for

K. Rich. So, I am satisfied. Give me a bowl of wine:

I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.—
Set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?

Rat. It is, my lord.

K. Rich. Bid my guard watch; leave me.
About the mid of night, come to my tent,
And help to arm me.—Leave me, I say.

[KING RICHARD retires into his Tent.
Exit RATCLIFF and CATESBY.

RICHMOND'S Tent opens, and discovers him, and Officers, &c.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!

Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford,
Be to thy person, noble father-in-law!
Tell me, how fares our loving mother?

Stan. I, by attorney,¹ bless thee from thy mother,
Who prays continually for Richmond's good:
So much for that.—The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.
In brief, for so the season bids us be,
Prepare thy battle early in the morning;
And put thy fortune to the arbitrement
Of bloody strokes, and mortal-staring war,
I, as I may (that which I would, I cannot,) ²
With best advantage will deceive the time,
And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms:
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Lest, being seen, thy brother tender George²
Be executed in his father's sight:
Farewell! The leisure³ and the fearful time
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love,
And ample interchange of sweet discourse,
Which so long sunder'd friends should dwell upon;
God give us leisure for these rites of love:
Once more, adieu:—Be valiant, and speed well!

Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment:
I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap;
Lest leaden slumber peise⁴ me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory:
Once more, good night, kind lords and gentlemen.

[Exit Lords, &c. with STANLEY.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye;
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory!
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:⁵
Sleeping, and waking, O, defend me still. [Sleeps.

The Ghost⁶ of Prince Edward, Son to Henry the Sixth, rises between the two Tents.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!
[To KING RICHARD.

Think, how thou stab'dst me in my prime of youth
At Tewksbury; Despair therefore, and die!—
Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wrong'd souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.

them to pass through were called cock-roads. Hence cock-shut time and cock-shut light were used to express the evening twilight.

² This is from Hollinshed. The young nobleman, whom the poet calls George Stanley, was created Lord Strange in right of his wife by Edward IV. in 1492.

³ We have still a phrase equivalent to this, however harsh it may seem. 'I would do this if leisure would permit.' where leisure stands for want of leisure.

⁴ Weigh.

⁵ Thus in Romeo and Juliet:—

—thy eyes' windows fall
Like death.

⁶ The hint for this scene is furnished by Hollinshed, who copies from Polydore Virgil. 'It seemed to him being asleep, that he saw diverse ymagines like terrible devilles which pulied and haled him, not sufferyng him to take any quiet or reste. The which strange vision

The Ghost of King Henry the Sixth rises.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my anointed body

[To KING RICHARD.

By thee was punch'd⁷ full of deadly holes:
Think on the Tower, and me; Despair, and die;
Harry the Sixth bids thee despair and die.—
Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror!

[To RICHMOND.

Harry, that prophesy'd thou should'st be king,⁸
Doth comfort thee in thy sleep; Live, and flourish!

The Ghost of Clarence rises.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To KING RICHARD.

I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome⁹ wine,
Poor Clarence, by thy guile betray'd to death!
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall¹⁰ thy edgeless sword; Despair, and die!—
Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

[To RICHMOND.

The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee;
Good angels guard thy battle! Live, and flourish!

The Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan, rise.

Riv. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow,
[To KING RICHARD.

Rivers, that died at Pomfret! Despair, and die!

Grey. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!

[To KING RICHARD.

Vaugh. Think upon Vaughan; and, with guilty
fear,

Let fall thy lance! Despair, and die!—

[To KING RICHARD.

All. Awake! and think, our wrongs in Richard's bosom [To RICHMOND.

Will conquer him;—awake, and win the day!

The Ghost of Hastings rises.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake;

[To KING RICHARD.

And in a bloody battle end thy days!
Think on Lord Hastings; and despair, and die!—
Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!

[To RICHMOND.

Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!

The Ghosts of the two young Princes rise.

Ghosts. Dream on thy cousins smother'd in the Tower;

Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard,
And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and death!
Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and die.—

Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy!
Live, and beget a happy race of kings!
Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.

The Ghost of Queen Anne rises.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,

That never slept a quiet hour with thee,
Now fills thy sleep with perturbations:
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; Despair, and die!—

not so sodainly strake his heart with a sodayne feare, but it stuffed his head with many busy and dreadful imaginations. And least that it might be suspected that he was abashed for fear of his enemies, and for that cause looked so piteously, he recited and declared to his familiar friends of the morning his wonderful vysion and fearful dreame.⁷ The Legend of King Richard III. in the Mirror for Magistrates, and Drayton in the twenty-second Song of his Polyolion, have passages founded upon Shakspeare's description.

⁷ The verb to punch, according to its etymology, was formerly used to prick or pierce with a sharp point.

⁸ See the prophecy in King Henry VI. Part III. Act iv. Sc. 6.

⁹ I.e. teeming or superabundant wine. Shakspeare seems to have forgot that Clarence was killed before he was thrown into the Malmsey butt, and consequently could not be washed to death.

¹⁰ Fall is here a verb active, signifying to drop or let fall.

Thou, quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep ;
 [To RICHMOND.]
 Dream of success and happy victory ;
 Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

The Ghost of Buckingham rises.

Ghost. The first was I, that help'd thee to the crown ;
 [To KING RICHARD.]

The last was I that felt thy tyranny ;
 O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
 And die in terror of thy guiltiness !
 Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death ;
 Fainting, despair ; despairing, yield thy breath !—
 I died for hope, ere I could lend thee aid :

[To RICHMOND.]

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd :
 God, and good angels fight on Richmond's side ;
 And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

[The Ghosts vanish. KING RICHARD starts out of his dream.

K. Rich. Give me another horse,—bind up my wounds,—

Have mercy, Jesu !—Soft ; I did but dream.—
 O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me !—
 The lights burn blue.—It is now dead midnight.
 Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
 What do I fear ? myself ? there's none else by :
 Richard loves Richard ; that is, I am I.²
 Is there a murderer here ? No ;—Yes ; I am :
 Then fly,—What, from myself ? Great reason :

Why ?

Lest I revenge. What ? Myself on myself ?
 I love myself. Wherefore ? for any good,
 That I myself have done unto myself ?
 O, no : alas, I rather hate myself,
 For hateful deeds committed by myself.
 I am a villain : Yet I lie, I am not.
 Fool, of thyself speak well :—Fool, do not flatter.
 My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
 And every tongue brings in a several tale,
 And every tale condemns me for a villain.
 Perjury, perjury, in the high'st degree,
 Murder, stern murder, in the dir'st degree ;
 All several sins, all us'd in each degree,
 Throng to the bar, crying all—Guilty ! guilty !
 I shall despair.—There is no creature loves me ;
 And, if I die, no soul will pity me :—
 Nay, wherefore should they ? since that I myself
 Find in myself no pity to myself.
 Methought, the souls of all that I had murder'd
 Came to my tent : and every one did threat
 To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter RATCLIFF.

Rat. My lord,—

K. Rich. Who's there ?

Rat. Ratcliff, my lord ; 'tis I. The early village cock

Hath twice done salutation to the morn :
 Your friends are up, and buckle on their armour.

K. Rich. O, Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful dream !

What thinkest thou ? will our friends prove all true ?
Rat. No doubt, my lord.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, I fear, I fear,—
Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows.

K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night
 Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
 Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers,
 Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.
 It is not yet near day. Come, go with me ;
 Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
 To hear, if any mean to shrink from me.

[Exeunt KING RICHARD and RATCLIFF.

1 Buckingham's hope of aiding Richmond induced him to take up arms ; he lost his life in consequence, and therefore may be said to have died for hope ; hope being the cause which led to that event.

2 There is in this, as in many of the poet's speeches of passion, something very trifling, and something very striking. Richard's debate, whether he should quarrel with himself, is too long continued ; but the subsequent exaggeration of his crimes is truly tragical.—Johnson.

RICHMOND wakes. Enter OXFORD and others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond.

Richm. 'Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,

That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.

Lords. How have you slept, my lord ?

Richm. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding dreams,

That ever enter'd in a drowsy head,

Have I since your departure had, my lords.

Methought, their souls, whose bodies Richard murder'd,

Came to my tent, and cried—On ! victory !

I promise you, my heart is very jocund

In the remembrance of so fair a dream.

How far into the morning is it, lords ?

Lords. Upon the stroke of four.

Richm. Why, then 'tis time to arm, and give direction.— [He advances to the troops.

More than I have said, loving countrymen,

The leisure and enforcement of the time

Forbids to dwell on : Yet, remember this,—

God, and our good cause, fight upon our side :

The prayers of holy saints, and wronged souls,

Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before our faces ;

Richard except, those, whom we fight against,

Had rather have us win, than him they follow.

For what is he they follow ? truly, gentlemen,

A bloody tyrant, and a homicide ;

One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd ;

One that made means³ to come by what he hath,

And slaughter'd those that were the means to help him ;

A base foul stone, made precious by the foil

Of England's chair,⁴ where he is falsely set ;

One that hath ever been God's enemy :

Then, if you fight against God's enemy,

God will, in justice, ward you as his soldiers ;

If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,

You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain ;

If you do fight against your country's foes,

Your country's fat shall pay your pains the hire ;

If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,

Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors ;

If you do free your children from the sword,

Your children's children quit⁵ it in your age.

Then, in the name of God, and all these rights,

Advance your standards, draw your willing swords ;

For me, the ransom⁶ of my bold attempt

Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face ;

But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt

The least of you shall share his part thereof.

Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly and cheerfully ;

God, and Saint George !⁷ Richmond, and victory !

[Exeunt.

Re-enter KING RICHARD, RATCLIFF, Attendants, and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland, as touching Richmond ?

Rat. That he was never trained up in arms.

K. Rich. He said the truth : And what said Surrey then ?

Rat. He smil'd and said, the better for our purpose.

K. Rich. He was i'the right ; and so, indeed, it is.
 [Clock strikes.

Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar.—
 Who saw the sun to-day ?

Rat. Not I, my lord.

K. Rich. Then he disdains to shine ; for, by the book,

3 Made means here signifies made such interest, used such disingenuous measures.

4 England's chair is the throne. The allusion is to the practice of setting gems of little worth, with a bright coloured foil under them.

5 Requite.

6 i. e. the fine paid by me in atonement for my rashness.

7 Saint George was the common cry of the English soldiers when they charged the enemy.

He should have bray'd¹ the east an hour ago :

A black day will it be to somebody.—

Ratcliff,——

Rat. My lord?

K. Rich.

The sun will not be seen to-day ;
The sky doth frown and lour upon our army.
I would, these dewy tears were from the ground.
Not shine to-day ! Why, what is that to me,
More than to Richmond ? for the self-same heaven,
That frowns on me, looks sadly upon him.

Enter NORFOLK.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord ; the foe vaunts in the field.

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle ;—Caparison my horse ;—

Call up Lord Stanley, bid him bring his power :—
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered.
My forward shall be drawn out all in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot ;
Our archers shall be placed in the midst ;
John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.
They thus directed, we ourself will follow
In the main battle ; whose puissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
This, and Saint George to boot!²—What think'st thou, Norfolk ?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.—
This found I on my tent this morning.

[Giving a scroll.

K. Rich. Jocky of Norfolk, be not too bold, [Reads.
For Dickon³ thy master is bought and sold.

A thing devised by the enemy.—

Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge :
Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls ;
Conscience is but a word that cowards use,
Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe ;
Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.
March on, join bravely, let us to't pell-mell ;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.—
What shall I say more than I have infer'd ?
Remember whom you are to cope withal ;—
A sort⁴ of vagabonds, rascals, and runaways,
A scum of Breagnes, and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and assur'd destruction.
You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest ;
You having lands, and bless'd with beauteous wives,
They would restrain⁵ the one, disdain the other.
And who doth lead them, but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's⁶ cost ?

1 Steevens's notion is a strange one, that bray'd here means made it splendid or fine. The common signification of the old verb to bray was not what he states it to be—to challenge or set at defiance ; but 'to look aloft, and go gaily, desiring to have the preeminence.' This is old Baret's definition, which explains the text better than Mr. Steevens has done.

2 I. e. 'this, and superadd to this, Saint George on our side.' The phrase, like Saint George to borrow, which Holinshed puts into the mouth of Richard before the battle, is a kind of invocation to the saint to act as protector ; Saint George to borrow meaning Saint George be our pledge or security.

3 Dickon is the ancient familiarization of Richard.

4 Company.

5 To restrain is to abridge, to diminish, to withhold from.

6 Thus Holinshed :—'You see further, how a company of traitors, thieves, outlaws, and runagates, be aiders and partakers of this feat and enterprise. And to begin with the earl of Richmond, captain of this rebellion, he is a Welsh milksop, brought up by my mother's means and mine, like a captive in a close cage in the court of Francis duke of Britaine,' p. 756. Holinshed copied this verbatim from Hall, edit. 1548, fol. 54 ; but his printer has given us by accident the word snoother instead of brother ; as it is in the original, and ought to be in Shakspeare. In the first edition of Holinshed the word is rightly printed brother. So that this circumstance not only shows that the poet follows Holinshed, but points out the edition used by him.

These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives ;

Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,

For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd themselves :

If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,

And not these bastard Breagnes ; whom our fathers

Have in their own land beaten, bobbd, and thump'd,

And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.

Shall these enjoy our lands ? lie with our wives ?

Ravish our daughters ?—Hark, I hear their drum.

[Drum afar off.

Fight, gentlemen of England ! fight, bold yeomen !

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head !

Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood ;

Amaze the welkin with your broken staves !'

Enter a Messenger.

What says Lord Stanley ? will he bring his power ?

Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off instantly with his son George's head.

Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the marsh ;⁹

After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom :

Advance our standards, set upon our foes ;

Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,

Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons !

Upon them ! Victory sits on our helms. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Another part of the Field. Alarum.

Excursions. Enter NORFOLK, and Forces ; to him CATESBY.

Cate. Rescue, my lord of Norfolk, rescue, rescue !

The king enacts more wonders than a man,

Daring an opposite to every danger ;⁹

His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,

Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death :

Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost !

Alarum. Enter KING RICHARD.

K. Rich. A horse ! a horse ! my kingdom for a horse !

Cate. Withdraw, my lord, I'll help you to a horse.

K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die :

I think, there be six Richmonds in the field ;

Five have I slain to-day, instead of him :—¹⁰

A horse ! a horse ! my kingdom for a horse !¹¹ position of his forces that it served to protect his right wing. By this movement he gained also another point, that his men should engage with the sun behind them, and in the faces of his enemies ; a matter of great consequence when bows and arrows were in use.

9 I. e. daringly opposing himself, or offering himself as an opponent to every danger.

10 Shakspeare had employed this incident with historical propriety in the First Part of King Henry IV. He had here also good ground for his poetical exaggeration. Richard, according to Polydore Virgil, was deterred if possible to engage with Richmond in single combat. For this purpose he rode furiously to that quarter of the field where the earl was ; attacked his standard bearer, Sir William Brandon, and killed him ; then assailed Sir John Cheney, whom he overthrew. Having thus at length cleared his way to his antagonist, he engaged in single combat with him, and probably would have been victorious, but at that instant Sir William Stanley with three thousand men joined Richmond's army, and the royal forces fled with great precipitation. Richard was soon afterwards overpowered by numbers, and fell, fighting bravely to the last moment.

11 In the old interlude on the subject of Richard III. which Mr. Boswell printed at the end of this play, this line stands :—

'A horse ! a horse ! a fresh horse !'

Burbage, the alter Roscius of Camden, appears to have been the original Richard. C. shop Corbet, in his Her Boreale, introduces his host at Bosworth describing the battle, and

'—when he would have say'd King Richard died,
'And call'd a horse ! a horse !—he Burbage cried.'

Alarums. Enter KING RICHARD and RICHMOND ; and exeunt fighting. Retreat and flourish. Then enter RICHMOND, STANLEY, bearing the Crown, with divers other Lords, and Forces.

Richm. God, and your arms, be prais'd, victorious friends ;

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead.

Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquit thee !

Lo, here, this long usurped royalty,
From the dead temples of this bloody wretch
Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal ;
Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say, amen, to all !—
But, tell me first, is young George Stanley living ?

Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town ;
Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us.

Richm. What men of name are slain on either side ?

Stan. John duke of Norfolk, Walter Lord Ferrers,
Sir Robert Brakenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births.
Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled,

That in submission will return to us ;

And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,

We will unite the white rose with the red :—

Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,

That long hath frown'd upon their enmity !—

What traitor hears me, and says not,—amen ?

England hath long been mad, and scarr'd herself ;

The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,

The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,

The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire ;

All this divided York and Lancaster,

Divided, in their dire division.—

O, now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,

The true successors of each royal house,

By God's fair ordinance conjoin together !

And let their heirs (God, if they will be so,)—

Enrich the time to come with smooth-fac'd peace,

With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days !

Abate¹ the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce² these bloody days again !
And make poor England weep in streams of blood !
Let them not live to taste this land's increase,
That would with treason wound this fair land's peace !
Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again ;
That she may long live here, God say—Amen.

[Exeunt.]

THIS is one of the most celebrated of our author's performances ; yet I know not whether it has not happened to him as to others, to be praised most when praise is not most deserved. That this play has scenes noble in themselves, and very well contrived to strike in the exhibition, cannot be denied. But some parts are trifling, others shocking, and some improbable.—JOHNSON.

Malone says, he ' agrees with Dr. Johnson in thinking that this play, from its first exhibition to the present hour, has been estimated greatly beyond its merits.' He attributes (but I think erroneously) its popularity to the detestation in which Richard's character was held at the time that Shakespeare wrote, and to the patronage of Queen Elizabeth, ' who was pleased at seeing King Henry VII. placed in the only favourable light in which he could be placed on the scene.' Stevens, in the following note, has stated the true grounds of the perpetual popularity of the play, which can only be attributed to one cause—the wonderful dramatic effect produced by the character of Richard.—S. W. S.

I most cordially join with Dr. Johnson and Mr. Malone in their opinions ; and yet, perhaps, they have overlooked one cause of the success of this tragedy. The part of Richard is, perhaps beyond all others, variegated, and consequently favourable to a judicious performer. It comprehends, indeed, a trait of almost every species of character on the stage : the hero, the lover, the statesman, the buffoon, the hypocrite, the hardened and repenting sinner, &c. are to be found within its compass. No wonder, therefore, that the discriminating powers of a Burbage, a Garrick, and a Henderson, should at different periods have given it a popularity beyond other dramas of the same author.—STEEVENS.

2 To reduce is to bring back ; an obsolete sense of the word, derived from its Latin original, reduco.

KING HENRY THE EIGHTH.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

IT is the opinion of Johnson, Steevens, and Malone, that this play was written a short time before the death of Queen Elizabeth, which happened on the 24th of March, 1602-3. The eulogium on King James, which is blended with the panegyric of Elizabeth in the last scene, was evidently a subsequent insertion, after the succession of the Scottish monarch to the throne : for Shakespeare was too well acquainted with courts to compliment, in the lifetime of Queen Elizabeth, her presumptive successor ; of whom, history informs us, she was not a little jealous. That the prediction concerning King James was added after the death of the queen, is still more clearly evinced, as Dr. Johnson has remarked, by the awkward manner in which it is connected with the foregoing and subsequent lines.

After having lain by some years, unacted, probably on account of the costliness of its exhibition, it was revived in 1613, under the title of 'All is True,' with new decorations, and a new Prologue and Epilogue : and

* The circumstance is recorded by the continuator of Stowe ; and in a MS. Letter of Thomas Lorkin to Sir Thomas Puckering, dated London, this last of June, 1613, it is thus mentioned : ' No longer since than yesterday, while Bourbage his company were acting at the Globe the play of Henry VIII. and there, shooting of certayne chambers in the way of triumph, the fire caught, &c.'—MS. Harl. 7002.

So in a letter from John Chamberlaine to Sir Ralph Winwood, dated London, 5th July, 1613 :—' But the burning of the Globe, or Playhouse, on the Bankside, on St. Peter's day, cannot escape you ; which fell out by a peale of chambers (that I know not upon what occa-

this revival took place on the very day, being St. Peter's, on which the Globe Theatre was burnt down. The fire was occasioned, as it is said, by the discharge of some small pieces of ordnance called chambers in the scene where King Henry is represented as arriving at Cardinal Wolsey's gate at Whitehall, one of which, being injudiciously managed, set fire to the thatched roof of the theatre *. Dr. Johnson first suggested that Ben Jonson might have supplied the Prologue and Epilogue to the play upon the occasion of its revival. Dr. Farmer, Steevens, and Malone, support his opinion ; and even attribute to him some of the passages of the play.

Mr. Gifford has controverted this opinion of Jonson having been the author of the Prologue and Epilogue of this play, and thinks the play which was performed under the title of 'All is True' was a distinct performance, and not Shakespeare's Henry the Eighth. To this it has been answered, ' That the Prologue, which has always accompanied Shakespeare's drama from its sion were to be used in the play), the tampion or stopple of one of them lighting in the thatch that covered the house, burn'd it to the ground in less than two hours, with a dwelling-house adjoining ; and it was a great marvel and faire grace of God that the people had so little harm, having but two narrow doors to get out at.'—Winwood's Memorials, vol. iii. p. 469.

The event is also recorded by Sir Henry Wotton, in his letter of the 2d of July, 1613, where he says, it was at ' a new play, acted by the king's players at the Bank's Side, called All is True, representing some principal pieces of the reign of Henry the Eighth.'—Reliquia Wotton, p. 425. Ed. 2d.

first publication in 1623, manifestly and repeatedly alludes to the title of the play which was represented on the 29th of June, 1613, and which we know to have been founded on the history of King Henry the Eighth, affords a strong proof of their identity, as appears by the following passages:—

‘————— Such, as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too,’ &c.

‘————— Gentle readers know
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is,’ &c.

‘To make that only true we now intend.’

And though Sir Henry Wotton mentions it as a new play, we have Stowe and Lorkin who call it ‘The play of Henry the Eighth.’

‘That the Prologue and Epilogue were not written by Shakspeare is, I think, clear from internal evidence,’ says Mr. Boswell; to whose opinion I have no hesitation in subscribing: but it does not follow that they were the production of Ben Jonson’s pen. That gentleman has clearly shown that there was no intention of covertly sneering at Shakspeare’s other works in this prologue; but that this play is opposed to a rude kind of farcical representation on the same subject by Samuel Rowley (see the first note on the Prologue). This play, or interlude, which was printed in 1603, is probably referred to in the following entry on the books of the Stationers’ Company:—‘Nathaniel Butter, Feb. 12, 1604,

That he get good allowance for the Enterlude of King Henry VIII. before he begin to print it; and with the warden’s hand to yt, he is to have the same for his copy.’ Stowe has observed that ‘Robert Greene had written somewhat on the same story;’ but there is no evidence that it was in a dramatic form: it may have been something historical, and not by the dramatic poet of that name; as Stowe cites the authority of Robert Greene, with Robert Brun, Fabian, &c. in other places of his Chronicle.

This historical drama comprises a period of twelve years, commencing in the twelfth year of King Henry VIII. (1521), and ending with the christening of Elizabeth in 1533. The poet has deviated from history in placing the death of Queen Katharine before the birth of Elizabeth, for in fact Katharine did not die till 1536. In constructing his scenes he has availed himself largely of the eloquent narrative of Wolsey’s faithful servant and biographer, George Cavendish, as copied by the Chronicles; and indeed the pathos of the Cardinal’s dying scene is almost as effective in the simple narrative of Cavendish as in the play. The fine picture which the poet has drawn of the suffering and defenceless virtue of Queen Katharine, and the just and spirited, though softened, portrait he has exhibited of the impetuous and sensual character of Henry, are above all praise. It has been justly said that ‘this play contains little action or violence of passion, yet it has considerable interest of a more mild and thoughtful cast, and some of the most striking passages that are to be found in the poet’s works.’

PROLOGUE.

I COME no more to make you laugh; things now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it. Such, as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too. Those, that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree,
The play may pass; if they be still, and willing,
I’ll undertake, may see away their shilling Richly in two short hours. Only they,
That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets; or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,

I, i. e. faced or trimmed. This long motley coat was the usual dress of a fool.

The Prologue and Epilogue to this play are apparently not by the hand of Shakspeare. They have been attributed to Ben Jonson: but this opinion is controverted by Mr. Gifford. The intention of the writer (says Mr. Boswell) was to contrast the historical truth and taste displayed in the present play with the performance of a contemporary dramatist, ‘When you see me you know me, or the famous Chronicle of King Henry the Eighth, &c. by Samuel Rowley,’ in which Will Summers, the jester, is a principal character. There are other incidents in this ‘merry bawdy play,’

Will be deceiv’d: for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
Our own brains, and the opinion² that we bring,
(To make that only true we now intend,)
Will leave us never an understanding friend,
Therefore, for goodness’ sake, and as you are known
The first and happiest³ hearers of the town,
Be sad, as we would make ye: Think, ye see
The very persons of our noble story,
As they were living; think, you see them great,
And follow’d with the general throng, and sweat,
Of thousand friends; then in a moment, see
How soon this mightiness meets misery!
And, if you can be merry then, I’ll say,
A man may weep upon his wedding day.

besides the perversion of historical facts, which make it more than probable that it is here alluded to.

² Opinion seems here to mean character; as in King Henry IV. Part I. Act v. Sc. 4:—‘Thou hast redeemed thy lost opinion.’ To realize that opinion of character is our present object, not to forfeit it by introducing absurdities.

³ Happiest being here used in a Latin sense for propitious or favourable. ‘Sis bonus o fatique tuis!’ has been thought a reason for attributing this Prologue to Jonson; but we have shown that Shakspeare often uses words in a Latin sense.

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. *An Antechamber in the Palace. Enter the DUKE of NORFOLK, at one door; at the other, the DUKE of BUCKINGHAM, and the LORD ABERGAVENNY.*¹

Buckingham.

Good morrow, and well met. How have you done, Since last we saw in France?

Nor. I thank your grace: Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely ague Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when Those suns of glory,² those two lights of men, Met in the vale of Arde.

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde:³ I was then present, saw them salute on horseback; Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung In their embracement, as⁴ they grew together; Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weigh'd

Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost The view of earthly glory: Men might say, Till this time, pomp was single; but now married To one above itself. Each following day Became the next day's master, till the last Made former wonders it's:⁵ To-day, the French, All clinkant,⁶ all in gold, like heathen gods, Shone down the English: and, to-morrow, they Made Britain, India: every man, that stood, Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were As cherubins, all gilt: the madams too, Not us'd to toil, did almost sweat to bear The pride upon them, that their very labour Was to them as a painting: now this mask Was cry'd incomparable; and the ensuing night Made it a fool, and beggar. The two kings, Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst, As presence did present them; him in eye, Still him in praise: and, being present both, 'Twas said, they saw but one; and no discernor Durst wag his tongue in censure.⁷ When these suns (For so they phrase them) by their heralds chal- leng'd

The noble spirits to arms, they did perform Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous story,

Being now seen possible enough, got credit, That Bevis⁸ was believ'd.

Buck. O, you go far. Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect In honour honesty, the tract of every thing

Would by a good discourser lose some life, Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal; To the disposing of it nought rebell'd, Order gave each thing view; the office did Distinctly his full function.⁹

Buck. Who did guide, I mean, who set the body and the limbs Of this great sport together, as you guess Nor. One, certes,¹⁰ that promises no element¹¹ In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord? Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion Of the right reverend cardinal of York.

Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is freed

From his ambitious finger. What had he To do in these fierce¹² vanities? I wonder, That such a keech¹³ can with his very bulk Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun, And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir, There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends; For, being not propp'd by ancestry (whose grace Chalks successors their way,) nor call'd upon For high feats done to the crown; neither allied To eminent assistants, but, spider-like, Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note, The force of his own merit makes his way; A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys A place next to the king.

Aber. I cannot tell What heaven hath given him, let some graver eye Pierce into that; but I can see his pride Peep through each part of him: Whence has he that?

If not from hell, the devil is a niggard; Or has given all before, and he begins A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil, Upon this French going-out, took he upon him, Without the privacy o' the king, to appoint Who should attend on him? He makes up the file¹⁴ Of all the gentry; for the most part such Too, whom as great a charge as little honour He meant to lay upon; and his own letter, The honourable board of council out, Must fetch him in he papers.¹⁵

Aber. I do know Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have By this so sickn'd their estates, that never They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O, many Have broke their backs with laying manors on them For this great journey.¹⁶ What did this vanity, But minister communication of A most poor issue?

Nor. Grievingly I think, The peace between the French and us not values The cost that did conclude it.

1 George Nevill, who married Mary, daughter of Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham.

2 Pope has borrowed this phrase in his Imitation of Horace's Epistle to Augustus, ver. 22:—

'Those suns of glory please not till they set.'

3 Guynes then belonged to the English, and Arde (Jardres) to the French; they are towns of Picardy: the valley where Henry VIII. and Francis I. met lies between them.

4 As for as if.

5 Dies diem docet. Every day learned something from the preceding, till the concluding day collected all the splendour of all the former shows.

6 i. e. glittering, shining.

7 i. e. in judgment, which had the noblest appearance.

8 The old romantic legend of Bevis of Hampton. This Bevis (or Bevois) a Saxon, was for his prowess created earl of Southampton by William the Conqueror. See Camden's Britannia.

9 The course of these triumphs, however well related, must lose in the description part of that spirit and energy which were expressed in the real action. The commission for regulating them was well executed, and gave exactly to every particular person and action the proper place.

10 Certes, i. e. certainly, is here used as a monosyllable.

11 No initiation, no previous practice. Elements are the first principles of things, or rudiments of knowledge. The word is here applied, not without a catachresis, to a person.

12 Johnson remarks that fierce is here used, like the French fier, for proud.

13 A round lump of fat. The Prince calls Falstaff tallow-keech in the First Part of King Henry IV. Act ii. Sc. 4. It has been thought that there was some allusion here to the Cardinal, being reputed the son of a butcher. We have 'Goodwife Keesch, the butcher's wife,' mentioned by Dame Quickly, in King Henry IV. Part II. Act ii. Sc. 1.

14 List.

15 He papers, a verb; i. e. his own letter, by his own single authority, and without the concurrence of the council, must fetch him in whom he papers down Wolsey published a list of the several persons whom he had appointed to attend on the king at this interview, and addressed his letters to them.

16 In the ancient Interlude of Nature, blk. l. no date, apparently printed in the reign of King Henry VIII. a similar stroke is aimed at this expensive expedition.

Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd,¹ was
A thing inspir'd : and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy,—That this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on't.

Nor. Which is budded out ;
For France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants' goods at Bourdeaux.

Aber. Is it therefore
The ambassador is silenc'd ?²

Nor. Marry, is't.

Aber. A proper title of a peace,³ and purchas'd
At a superfluous rate !

Buck. Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.⁴

Nor. Like 't your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you
(And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plenteous safety,) that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potency
Together : to consider further, that
What his high hatred would effect, wants not
A minister in his power : You know his nature,
That he's revengeful ; and I know, his sword
Hath a sharp edge : it's long, and, it may be said,
It reaches far ; and where 'twill not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel, You'll find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that rock,

That I advise your shunning.

Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY (the purse borne before him,) certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with papers. The CARDINAL in his passage fixeth his eye on BUCKINGHAM, and BUCKINGHAM on him, both full of disdain.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham's surveyor ? ha ?
Where's his examination ?

I Secr. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready ?

I Secr. Ay, please your grace.

Wol. Well, we shall then know more ; and Buckingham

Shall lessen this big look.

[Exeunt WOLSEY and Train.]

Buck. This butcher's cur⁵ is venom-mouth'd, and I

Have not the power to muzzle him ; therefore, best
Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book
Out-worths a noble's blood.⁶

Nor. What are you chaf'd ?
Ask God for temperance ; that's the appliance only,
Which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in his looks
Matter against me : and his eye revild
Me, as his abject object : at this instant
He bores⁷ me with some trick : He's gone to the king ;

I'll follow, and outstare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord,
And let your reason with your cooler question
What 'tis you go about : To climb steep hills,
Requires slow pace at first : Anger is like
A full-hot horse ; who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him.⁸ Not a man in England
Can advise me like you : be to yourself
As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king ;

And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence ; or proclaim,
There's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be advis'd ;
Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it doth singe yourself : We may outrun
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by overrunning. Know you not,
The fire, that mounts the liquor till it run o'er,
In seeming to augment it, wastes it ? Be advis'd :
I say again, there is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself ;
If with the sap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion.⁹

Buck. Sir,
I am thankful to you ; and I'll go along
By your prescription :—but this top-proud fellow, (Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but From sincere motions,¹⁰) by intelligence,
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel, I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not, treasonous
Buck. To the king I'll say it ; and make my vouch as strong

As shore of rock. Attend. This holy fox,
Or wolf, or both (for he is equal¹¹ ravenous,
As he is subtle ; and as prone to mischief,
As able to perform it : his mind and place
Infecting one another, yea, reciprocally,
Only to show his pomp as well in France
As here at home, suggests¹² the king our master
To this last costly treaty, the interview,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break 't the rinsing.

Nor. Faith, and so it did.

Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning cardinal

The articles o' the combination drew,
As himself pleas'd ; and they were ratified,
As he cried, Thus let be : to as much end,
As give a crutch to the dead : But our count cardinal
Has done this, and 'tis well : for worthy Wolsey
Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows, (Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
To the old dam, treason.)—Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
(For, 'twas, indeed, his colour ; but he came To whisper Wolsey,) here makes visitation :
His fears were, that the interview, betwixt
England and France, might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice ; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him : As He privily
Deals with our cardinal ; and, as I trow,
Which I do well ; for, I am sure, the emperor
Paid ere he promis'd ; whereby his suit was granted,
Ere it was ask'd ;—but when the way was made,
And pay'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd :—
That he would please to alter the king's course,
And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know
(As soon he shall by me,) that thus the cardinal
Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,¹³
And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry
To hear this of him ; and could wish, he were Something mistaken in't.

Buck. No, not a syllable ;
I do pronounce him in that very shape,
He shall appear in proof.

beggar are more prized than the high descent of hereditary greatness.

7 I.e. he stabs or wounds me by some artifice or fiction.

9 Thus in Massinger's Unnatural Combat :—

'Let passion work, and, like a hot-rein'd horse,
'Twill quickly tire itself.'

9 So in Hamlet :—

'Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience.'

10 Honest indignation, warmth of integrity.

11 Equal for equality. 12 I.e. incites, or tempts.

13 To buy and sell was a proverbial expression for treacherously betraying.

1 'Monday the xviii of June was such an hideous storme of winde and weather, that many conjectured it did prognosticate trouble and hatred shortly after to follow between princes.'—Holinshed.

2 The French ambassador, being refused an audience, may be said to be silenc'd.

3 'A fine name of a peace : this is ironically said.

4 Conducted.

5 The common rumour ran that Wolsey was the son of a butcher ; but his faithful biographer Cavendish says nothing of his father being in trade : he tells us that he was 'an honest poor man's son.'

6 That is, the literary qualifications of a bookish

Enter BRANDON; a Sergeant at Arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Bran. Your office, sergeant; execute it.

Serg. Sir,
My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I Arrest thee of high treason, in the name Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo you, my lord,
The net has fall'n upon me; I shall perish Under device and practice.¹

Bran. I am sorry
To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on
The business present.² 'Tis his highness' pleasure,
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing,
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me,
Which makes my whitest part black. The will of heaven

Be done in this and all things!—I obey.—
O my lord Aberga'ny, fare you well.

Bran. Nay, he must bear you company:—The king [To ABERGAVENNY.
Is pleas'd, you shall to the Tower, till you know
How he determines further.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure
By me obey'd.

Bran. Here is a warrant from
The king, to attach Lord Montacute,³ and the bodies
Of the duke's confessor, John de la Car,⁴
One Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,—

Buck. So, so;
These are the limbs of the plot: no more, I hope.

Bran. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O, Nicholas Hopkins?⁵

Bran. He.

Buck. My surveyor is false, the o'ergreat cardinal
Hath show'd him gold; my life is spann'd⁶ already:
I am the shadow of poor Buckingham;
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts out,⁷
By dark'ning my clear sun.—My lord, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The Council Chamber. Cornels.

Enter KING HENRY, CARDINAL WOLSEY, the Lords of the Council, SIR THOMAS LOVELL, Officers, and Attendants. The King enters, leaning on the Cardinal's shoulder.

K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart of it,
Thanks you for this great care: I stood i'the level⁸
Of a full charg'd confederacy, and give thanks
To you that chok'd it.—Let be call'd before us
That gentleman of Buckingham's: in person
I'll hear him his confessions justify;
And point by point the treasons of his master
He shall again relate.

The King takes his state. The Lords of the Council take their several places. The Cardinal places himself under the King's feet, on his right side.

A noise within, crying, Room for the Queen. Enter the Queen, ushered by the Dukes of NORFOLK and SURREY: she kneels. The King riseth from his state, takes her up, kisses, and placeth her by him.

Q. Kath. Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a suiror.

K. Hen. Arise, and take place by us:—Half your suit

1 i. e. treachery or unfair stratagem. This word has already been amply illustrated.

2 I am sorry that I am obliged to be present, and an eye witness of your loss of liberty.

3 This was Henry Pole, grandson to George duke of Clarence, and eldest brother to Cardinal Pole. He had married Lord Abergavenny's daughter. Though restored to favour at this juncture, he was executed for another alleged treason in this reign.

4 The name of this monk of the Chartreux was John de la Car, alias de la Court. See Holinshed, p.
863.

5 Nicholas Hopkins, another monk of the same order, belonging to a religious house called Henton-beside-Bristow.

Never name to us; you have half our power:
The other moiety, ere you ask, is given;
Repeat your will, and take it.

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty.
That you would love yourself; and, in that love,
Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor
The dignity of your office, is the point
Of my petition.

K. Hen. Lady mine, proceed.

Q. Kath. I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance: there have been commissions
Sent down among them, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties:—wherein, alihough,
My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, as putter on⁹
Of these exactions, yet the king our master (Whose honour heaven shield from soil!) even he escapes not

Language unmannerly, yea, such which breaks
The sides of loyalty, and almost appears
In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,
It doth appear; for, upon these taxations,
The clothiers all, not able to maintain
The many to them 'longing, have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who,
Unfit for other life, compell'd by hunger
And lack of other means, in desperate manner
Daring the event to the teeth, are all in uproar,
And Danger serves among them.¹⁰

K. Hen. Taxation!
Wherein? and what taxation?—My lord cardinal,
You that are blam'd for it alike with us,
Know you of this taxation?

Wol. Please you, sir,
I know but of a single part, in aught
Pertains to the state; and front but in that file¹¹
Where others tell steps with me.

Q. Kath. No, my lord,
You know no more than others: but you frame Things, which are known alike; which are not wholesome

To those which would not know them, and yet must Perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions, Whereof my sovereign would have note, they are Most pestilent to the hearing; and, to bear them,
The back is sacrifice to the load. They say,
They are devis'd by you; or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hen. Still exaction!
The nature of it? In what kind, let's know,
Is this exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturesome
In tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd
Under your promis'd pardon. The subject's grief Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his substance, to be levied
Without delay: and the pretence for this Is nam'd, your wars in France: This makes hold mouths:

Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze
Allegiance in them; their curses now
Live where their prayers did; and it's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave

6 i. e. measured, the duration of it determined. Man's life is said in scripture to be but a span long.

7 The old copy reads 'this instant sun puts on.'

8 To stand in the level of a gun, is to stand in a line with its mouth, so as to be hit by the shot.

9 i. e. promoter or instigator.

10 Warburton is full of admiration at this sudden rising of the poet 'to a height truly sublime!' where by the noblest stretch of fancy Danger is personified as serving in the rebel army, and shaking the established government. Gower, Chaucer, Skelton, and Spenser have also personified Danger.

11 He means to say that he is but one among many counsellors, who proceed in the same course with him in the business of the state. To this the queen replies, that he frames things, or they originate with him, which are afterwards known to the council and promulgated by
them.

To each incensed will.¹ I would, your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no primer business.²

K. Hen. By my life,
This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me,
I have no farther gone in this, than by
A single voice; and that not pass'd me, but
By learned approbation of the judges. If I am Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither know
My faculties, nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing,—let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake³
That virtue must go through. We must not stint⁴
Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope⁵ malicious censurers; which ever,
As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow
That is new trimm'd; but benefit no further Than vainly longing. What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, once⁶ weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd;⁷ what worst, as oft,
Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at,
We should take root here where we sit, or sit
State statues only.

K. Hen. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from fear;
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?
A trembling contribution! Why, we take,
From every tree, lop, bark, and part o' the timber;
And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd,
The air will drink the sap. To every county,
Where this is question'd, send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied
The force of this commission; Pray, look to't;
I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you.

[To the Secretary.
Let there be letters writ to every shire,
Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons
Hardly conceive of me; let it be nois'd,
That, through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you Further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.

*Enter Surveyor.*⁸

Q. Kath. I am sorry, that the duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare speaker,⁹
To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for aid out of himself.¹⁰
Yet see

When these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd,¹¹ the mind growing once corrupt,
They turn to vicious foins, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with ravish'd list'ning, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady,
Hath into monstrous habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black
As if besmear'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear

¹ The meaning (says Malone) appears to be, things are now in such a situation that resentment and indignation predominate in every man's breast over duty and allegiance.

² The old copy reads 'There is no primer baseness.' Warburton made the alteration, which Steevens seems to think unnecessary, though he has retained it in his text.

³ Thicket of thorns.

⁴ To stint is to stop or retard.

⁵ i. e. to engage with, to encounter.

⁶ Once is not frequently used for sometime or at one time or other.

⁷ i. e. approved.

⁸ Holinshed says that this surveyor's name was Charles Knyvet.

(This was his gentleman in trust) of him
Things to strike honour sad.—Bid him recount
The fore-recited practices; whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much Wol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what
you,

Most like a careful subject, have collected
Out of the Duke of Buckingham.

K. Henry. Speak freely.

Surv. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would infect his speech, That if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry¹² it so
To make the sceptre his: These very words
I have heard him utter to his son-in-law,
Lord Abergarny; to whom by oath he menac'd
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note
This dangerous conception in this point.

Not friended by his wish, to your high person
His will is most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you, to your friends.

Q. Kath. My learn'd lord cardinal,
Deliver all with charity.

K. Hen. Speak on:
How ground'd he his title to the crown,
Upon our fail? to this point hast thou heard him
At any time speak aught?

Surv. He was brought to this
By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. Hen. What was that Hopkins?

Surv. Sir, a Chartreux friar,
His confessor; who fed him every minute
With words of sovereignty.

K. Hen. How know'st thou this?

Surv. Not long before your highness sped to France,

The duke being at the Rose,¹³ within the parish
Saint Lawrence Poultnery, did of me demand
What was the speech amongst the Londoners
Concerning the French journey: I replied,
Men fear'd the French would prove perfidious,
To the king's danger. Presently the duke
Said, 'Twas the fear indeed; and that he doubted,

'Twould prove the verity of certain words
Spoke by a holy monk: *That oft, says he,
Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour
To hear from him a matter of some moment:
Whom after under the confession's seal¹⁴
He solemnly had sworn, that, what he spoke,
My chaplain to no creature living, but
To me, should utter, with demure confidence
This pausingly ensued,—Neither the king, nor his heirs*

(*Tell you the duke, shall prosper: bid him strive
To gain the love of the commonalty; the duke Shall govern England.*

Q. Kath. If I know you well,
You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
On the complaint o' the tenants: Take good heed
You charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul! I say, take heed;
Yes, heartily beseech you.

K. Hen. Let him on:—
Go forward.

Surv. On my soul, I'll speak but truth.
I told my lord the duke, By the devil's illusions
The monk might be deceiv'd; and that 'twas dangerous for him

⁹ It appears from the prologue to the Romance of the Knight of the Swanee, that it was translated from the French at the request of this unfortunate nobleman. The duke was executed on Friday the 17th of May, 1521. The book has no date.

¹⁰ i. e. beyond the treasures of his own mind.

¹¹ Great gifts of nature and education not joined with good dispositions.

¹² Conduct, manage.

¹³ This house was purchased about the year 1561, by Richard Hill, sometime master of the merchant tailors' company, and is now the merchant tailors' school, in Suffolk Lane.

¹⁴ The old copy has 'commission's seal.'

To ruminate on this so far, until
It forg'd him some design, which, being believ'd,
It was much like to do: He answer'd, Tush!
It can do me no damage: adding further,
That, had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
The cardinal's and Sir Thomas Lovell's heads
Should have gone off.

K. Hen. Ha! what, so rank? Ah, ah!
There's mischief in this man:—Canst thou say further?

Surv. I can, my liege.

K. Hen. Proceed.

Surv. Being at Greenwich,
After your highness had reprov'd the duke
About Sir William Blomer,²—

K. Hen. I remember,
Of such a time:—Being my servant sworn,
The duke retain'd him his.—But on; What hence?
Surv. If, quoth he, I for this had been committed,
As, to the Tower, I thought,—I would have play'd
The part my father meant to act upon
The usurper Richard: who, being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come in his presence; which if granted,
As he made semblance of his duty, would
*Have put his knife into him.*³

K. Hen. A giant traitor!
Wol. Now, madam, may his highness live in freedom,

And this man out of prison?

K. Kath. God mend all!

K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee; What say'st?

Surv. After—the duke his father,—with the knife,—

He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
Another spread on his breast, mounting his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenour
Was,—Were he evil us'd, he would outgo
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose.

K. Hen. There's his period,
To sheath his knife in us. He is attach'd;
Call him to present trial: if he may Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not seek't of us: By day and night!⁴
He's traitor to the height. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Room in the Palace. Enter the *Lord Chamberlain, and LORD SANDS.*⁵

Cham. Is it possible, the spells of France should juggle
Men into such strange mysteries?⁶

Sands. New customs,
Though they be never so ridiculous,
Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd.

Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English

Have got by the late voyage, is but merely
A fit or two o' the face;⁷ but they are shrewd ones;
For when they hold them, you would swear directly,
Their very noses had been counsellors
To Pepin, or Clotharius, they keep state so.

Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones;
one would take it,

That never saw them pace before, the spavin,
A springhalt⁸ reign'd among them.

Cham.

Death! my lord,
Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too,
That, sure, they have worn out christendom. How now?

What news, Sir Thomas Lovell?

Enter SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

Lov. 'Faith, my lord,
I hear of none, but the new proclamation
That's clapp'd upon the court gate.

Cham.

What is't for?
Lov. The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.

Cham. I am glad, 'tis there: now I would pray our monseurs

To think an English courtier may be wise,
And never see the Louvre.

Lov.

They must either
(For so run the conditions) leave these remnants
Of fool and feather,⁹ that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance,
Pertaining thereunto (as fights, and fireworks;
Abusing better men than they can be,
Out of a foreign wisdom, renouncing clean
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short blister'd breeches,¹⁰ and those types of travel,
And understand again like honest men;
Or pack to their old playfellows: there, I take it,
They may, cum privilegio, wear away
The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.

Sands. 'Tis time to give them physic, their diseases

Are grown so catching.

Cham.

What a loss our ladies

Will have of these trim vanities!

Lov.

Ay, marry,
There will be woe indeed, lords; the sly whoresons
Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
A French song, and a fiddle, has no fellow.

Sands. The devil fiddle them! I am glad, they're going,

(For, sure, there's no converting of them:) now
An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song,
And have an hour of hearing; and, by'r lady,
Held¹¹ current music too.

Cham.

Well said, Lord Sands;
Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.

¹ Rank weeds are weeds grown up to great height and strength. 'What, (says the king,) was he advanced to this pitch?'

² Sir William Blomer (Holinshed calls him Bulmer) was reprimanded by the king in the Star Chamber, for that, being his sworn servant, he had left the king's service for the duke of Buckingham's.

⁴ Stevens takes unnecessary pains to explain this phrase. I wonder he could doubt that it was an adjuration.

⁵ Shakspeare has placed this scene in 1521. Charles earl of Worcester was then lord chamberlain, and continued in the office until his death, in 1526. But Cavendish, from whom this was originally taken, places this event at a later period, when Lord Sands himself was chamberlain. Sir William Sands, of the Vine, near Basingstoke, Hants, was created a peer in 1524. He succeeded the earl of Worcester as chamberlain.

⁶ Mysteries are arts, and here artificial fashions.

⁷ A fit of the face seems to be a grimace, an artificial cast of the countenance.

⁸ The springhalt or stringhalt is a disease incident to horses, which makes them limp in their paces. It is a humorous comparison of the mincing gait of the Frenchified courtiers to this convulsive motion. Ben Jonson, in his Bartholomew Fair, uses it:—

'Poor soul, she has had a stringhalt.'

⁹ The text may receive illustration from Nashe's Life of Jacke Wilton, 1594:—'At that time (viz. in the court of King Henry VIII.) I was no common squire, no underrodden torchbearer, I had my feather in my cap as big as a flag in the foretop, my French doublet gelte in the belly, as though, (lyke a pig ready to be spitted,) all my guts had bene plucked out, a paire of side panned hose that hung down like two scales filled with Holland cheeses, my long stock that sate close to my dock,—my rapier pendant, like a round stick, &c. my blacke cloake of cloth, overspreading my backe lyke a thorn backe or an elephant's eare; and in consumption of my curiositie, my handes without gloves, all a more French,' &c. Mr. Douce justly observes that Sir Thomas Lovell's is an allusion to the feathers which were formerly worn by fools in their caps, as may be seen in a print of Jordan's after Voert; and which is alluded to in the Ballad of News and No News:—

'And feathers wagging in a fool's cap.'

¹⁰ i. e. breeches puffed or swelled out like blisters.

¹¹ The late edition of Mr. Boswell reads hold, noticing that held is the reading of the first folio.

Sands. No, my lord;
Nor shall not, while I have a stump.

Cham. Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a going?

Lov. To the cardinal's;
Your lordship is a guest too.

Cham. O, 'tis true;
This night he makes a supper, and a great one,
To many lords and ladies; there will be
The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.

Lov. That churchman bears a bounteous mind indeed,

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dews fall every where.

Cham. No doubt, he's noble;
He had a black mouth, that said other of him.

Sands. He may, my lord, he has wherewithal;
in him,

Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine:
Men of his way should be most liberal,
They are set here for examples.

Cham. True, they are so:
But few now give so great ones. My barge stays;¹
Your lordship shall along:—Come, good Sir Thomas.

We shall be late else: which I would not be,
For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guildford,
This night to be comptrollers.

Sands. I am your lordship's.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The Presence Chamber in York Place. Hautboys. A small table under a state for the Cardinal, a longer table for the guests. Enter at one door ANNE BULLEN, and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlewomen, as guests; at another door, enter SIR HENRY GUILDFORD.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace
Salutes ye all: This night he dedicates
To fair content, and you: none here, he hopes,
In all this noble bevy,² has brought with her
One care abroad: he would have all as merry
As first-good company, good wine, good welcome,
Can make good people.—O, my lord, you are tardy;

Enter Lord Chamberlain, LORD SANDS, and SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

The very thought of this fair company
Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, Sir Harry Guildford.

Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal
But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested,
I think, would better please them: By my life,
They are a sweet society of fair ones.

Lov. O, that your lordship were but now confessor

To one or two of these!

Sands. I would, I were;
They should find easy penance.

Lov. 'Faith, how easy?
Sands. As easy as a down bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir Harry,

Place you that side, I'll take the charge of this:
His grace is ent'ring.—Nay, you must not freeze;
Two women plac'd together makes cold weather:—
My Lord Sands, you are one will keep them waking;
Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith,
And thank your lordship.—By your leave, sweet ladies:

[Sits himself between ANNE BULLEN and another Lady.]

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;
I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir?

Sands. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love too:
But he would bite none; just as I do now,
He would kiss you twenty with a breath.

[Kisses her.]
Cham. Well said, my lord.—

So, now you are fairly seated:—Gentlemen,
The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies
Pass away frowning.

Sands. For my little cure,
Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY, attended; and takes his state.

Wol. You are welcome, my fair guests; that noble lady,

Or gentleman, that is not freely merry,
Is not my friend: This, to confirm my welcome;
And to you all good health. [Drinks.]

Sands. Your grace is noble;—
Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,
And save me so much talking.

Wol. My Lord Sands,
I am beholden to you: cheer your neighbours.—
Ladies, you are not merry;—Gentlemen,
Whose fault is this?

Sands. The red wine first must rise
In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have
them

Talk us to silence.

Anne. You are a merry gamester, my Lord Sands.

Sands. Yes, if I make my play.—

Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam.
For 'tis to such a thing,—

Anne. You cannot show me.

Sands. I told your grace, they would talk anon.
[Drum and trumpets within: Chambers³ discharged.]

Wol. What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of you.

Wol. What warlike voice? [Exit a Servant.]

And to what end is this?—Nay, ladies, fear not;
By all the laws of war you are privileged.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now? what is't?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers;
For so they seem: they have left their barge, and landed:

And hither make, as great ambassadors
From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain,
Go, give them welcome, you can speak the French
tongue;

And, pray, receive them nobly, and conduct them
Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty
Shall shine at full upon them:—Some attend him.—

[Exit Chamberlain, attended. All arise, and Tables removed.]

You have now a broken banquet; but we'll mend it.
A good digestion to you all: and, once more,
I shower a welcome on you;—Welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the King, and twelve others, as Masks, habited like Shepherds, with sixteen
Torchbearers: ushered by the Lord Chamberlain.
They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures?

Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd

1 The speaker is now in the king's palace at Bridewell, from whence he is proceeding by water to York Place (Cardinal Wolsey's house), now Whitehall.

2 A bevy is a company.

3 i. e. if I may choose my game.

4 Chambers are short pieces of ordnance, standing almost erect upon their breechings, chiefly used upon festive occasions, being so contrived as to carry great charges, and make a loud report. They had their name from being little more than mere chambers to lodge powder; that being the technical name for that cavity in a gun which contains the powder or combustible matter. Carendish, describing this scene as it really occurred, says that against the king's coming 'were laid charged many chambers, and at his landing they were all shot off, which made such a rumble in the air that it was like thunder.'

To tell your grace ;—That, having heard by fame
Of this so noble and so fair assembly
This night to meet here, they could do no less,
Out of the great respect they bear to beauty,
But leave their flocks ; and under your fair conduct,
Crave leave to view these ladies, and entreat
An hour of revels with them.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain,
They have done my poor house grace ; for which I pay them

A thousand thanks, and pray them take their pleasures.

[Ladies chosen for the dance. The King chooses ANNE BULLEN.]

K. Hen. The fairest hand I ever touch'd ! O, beauty,
Till now I never knew thee. [Music. Dance.]

Wol. My lord,——

Cham. Your grace ?

Wol. Pray, tell them thus much from me :
There should be one amongst them, by his person,
More worthy this place than myself ; to whom,
If I but knew him, with my love and duty
I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.

[Cham. goes to the company, and returns.]

Wol. What say they ?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess,
There is, indeed ; which they would have your grace
Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see, then.—

[Comes from his state.]

By all your good leaves, gentlemen ;—Here I'll make

My royal choice.

K. Hen. You have found him, cardinal :¹

[Unmasking.]

You hold a fair assembly ; you do well, lord :

You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal,

I should judge now unhappily.²

Wol. I am glad,

Your grace is grown so pleasant.

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain,

Pr'ythee, come hither : What fair lady's that ?

Cham. An't please your grace, Sir Thomas Bullen's daughter,

The Viscount Rochford, one of her highness' women.

K. Hen. By heaven, she is a dainty one.—Sweetheart,

I were unmannerly, to take you out,

And not to kiss you.³—A health, gentlemen,

Let it go round.

Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready

I the privy chamber ?

Lov. Yes, my lord.

Wol. Your grace,

I fear, with dancing is a little heated.⁴

K. Hen. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's fresher air, my lord,

In the next chamber.

K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one.—Sweet partner,

I must not yet forsake you.—Let's be merry ;—

Good my lord cardinal, I have half a dozen healths

¹ Cavendish, from whom Stowe and Holinshed copied their account, says that the cardinal pitched upon 'Sir Edward Neville, a comely knight of a goodly personage, that much more resembled the king's person in that mask than any other,' upon which 'the king plucked down his visor and Master Neville's also, and dashed out with such a pleasant cheer and countenance, that all noble estates there assembled, seeing the king to be there amongst them, rejoiced very much.'

² I.e. vaggishly, mischievously.

³ A kiss was anciently the established fee of a lady's partner. The custom is still prevalent among country people in many parts of the kingdom.

⁴ According to Cavendish, the king, on discovering himself, being desired by Wolsey to take his place under the state or seat of honour, said 'that he would go first and shift his apparel, and so departed, and went straight into my lord's bedchamber, where a great fire

To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure
To lead them once again ; and then let's dream
Who's best in favour.—Let the music knock it.⁵

[Exeunt, with trumpets.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Street. Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast ?

2 Gent. O,—God save you !

Even to the hall to hear what shall become

Of the great duke of Buckingham.

1 Gent. I'll save you

That labour, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony

Of bringing back the prisoner.

2 Gent. Were you there ?

1 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.

2 Gent. Pray, speak, what has happen'd ?

1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.

2 Gent. Is he found guilty ?

1 Gent. Yes, truly he is, and condemn'd upon it.

2 Gent. I am sorry for't.

1 Gent. So are a number more.

2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it ?

1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke

Came to the bar ; where, to his accusations,

He pleaded still, not guilty, and alleg'd

Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,

Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions

Of divers witnesses ; which the duke desir'd

To have brought, viva voce, to his face :

At which appear'd against him, his surveyor ;

Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor ; and John Court,

Confessor to him ; with that devil-monk,

Hopkins, that made this mischief.

2 Gent. That was he,

That fed him with his prophecies ?

1 Gent. The same.

All these accus'd him strongly ; which he fain

Would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could not :

And so his peers, upon this evidence,

Have found him guilty of high treason. Much

He spoke, and learnedly, for life : but all

Was either pitied in him, or forgotten.⁶

2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself ?

1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar,— to hear

His knell rung out, his judgment,—he was stirr'd

With such an agony, he sweat extremely,

And something spoke in choler, ill, and hasty :

But he fell to himself again, and, sweetly,

In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.

2 Gent. I do not think, he fears death.

1 Gent. Sure, he does not,

He never was so womanish ; the cause

He may a little grieve at.

2 Gent. Certainly,

The cardinal is the end of this.

1 Gent. 'Tis likely,

By all conjectures : First, Kildare's attainer,

Then deputy of Ireland ; who remov'd, was made and prepared for him, and there new appa-relled him with rich and princely garments. And in the time of the king's absence the dishes of the banquet were cleane taken up, and the tables spread with new and sweet perfum'd cloths.—Then the king took his seat

under the cloth of estate, commanding no man to remove, but set still as they did before. Then in came a new banquet before the king's majesty, and to all the rest through the tables, wherein, I suppose, were served two hundred dishes or above. Thus passed they forth the whole night with banquetting, &c.

⁵ Thus in Antonio and Mellida :—

'Flo. Faith, the song will seem to come off hardly.

Catz. Troth, not a whit, if you seem to come off quickly.

Flo. Pert Catzo, knock it, then.'

⁶ Either produced no effect, or produced only ineffectual pity.

Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,
Lest he should help his father.

2 Gent. That trick of state
Was a deep envious one.

1 Gent. At his return,
No doubt, he will requite it. This is noted,
And generally : whoever the king favours,
The cardinal instantly will find employment,
And far enough from court too.

2 Gent. All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and, o' my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep : this duke as much
They love and dote on ; call him, bounteous Buckingham,

The mirror of all courtesy ;¹—

1 Gent. Stay there, sir,
And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

Enter BUCKINGHAM from his arraignment ; Tipstaves before him, the axe with the edge towards him ; halberds on each side : with him SIR THOMAS LOVELL, SIR NICHOLAS VAUX, SIR WIL-LIAM SANDS,² and common People.

2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.

Buck. All good people,
You that thus far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.
I have this day receiv'd a traitor's judgment,
And by that name must die ; Yet, heaven bear witness,

And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful !
The law I bear no malice for my death,
It has done, upon the premises, but justice :
But those, that sought it, I could wish more christians :

Be what they will, I heartily forgive them :
Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils³ on the graves of great men ;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them.
For further life in this world I ne'er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies
More than I dare make faults. You few that lov'd
me,

And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends, and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to him, only dying,
Go with me, like good angels, to my end ;
And, as the long divorce⁴ of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heaven.⁵—Lead on, o' God's name.

Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven : I forgive all ;
There cannot be those numberless offences
'Gainst me, I can't take peace with : no black envy
Shall make⁶ my grave.—Commend me to his grace :
And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him
You met him half in heaven : my vows and prayers
Yet are the king's ; and, till my soul forsake me,

Shall cry for blessings on him : May he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years !
Ever belov'd, and loving, may his rule be !
And, when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument !

Lov. To the water side I must conduct your
grace ;

Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there,
The duke is coming : see, the barge be ready ;
And fit it with such furniture, as suits
The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone ; my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham ; now, poor Edward Bo-hun :⁷

Yet I am richer than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant : I now seal it ;⁸
And with that blood will make them one day groan
for't.

My noble father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his servant Banister,
Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd,
And without trial fell ; God's peace be with him !
Henry the Seventh, succeeding, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd me to my honours, and, out of ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Now his son,
Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name, and all
That made me happy, at one stroke has taken
For ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one ; which makes me
A little happier than my wretched father :
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes.—Both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most ;
A most unnatural and faithless service !
Heaven has an end in all : Yet, you that hear me,
This from a dying man receive as certain :
Where you are liberal of your loves, and counsels,
Be sure, you be not loose ;⁹ for those you make friends,

And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from y^e, never found again
But where they mean to sink y^e. All good people,
Pray for me ! I must now forsake y^e ; the last hour
Of my long weary life is come upon me.
Farewell :

And when you would say something that is sad,¹⁰
Speak how I fell.—I have done ; and God forgive me ! [Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and Train.]

1 Gent. O, this is full of pity !—Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads,
That were the authors.

2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'Tis full of woe : yet I can give you inkling
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.

1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us !
Where may it be ? You do not doubt my faith, sir ?

close my life. Entry is elsewhere used by Shakespeare for malice or hatred. Unless with Warburton we read 'mark my grave ;' a very plausible emendation of an error easily made ; and which has indeed happened in an instance in King Henry V. Act ii. Sc. 2, where the old copy erroneously reads :—

'To make the full fraught man and beast endued
With some suspicion.'

7 The name of the duke of Buckingham most generally known was Stafford ; it is said that he affected the surname of Bohun, because he was lord high constable of England by inheritance of tenure from the Bohuns Shakespeare follows Holinshed.

8 I now seal my truth, my loyalty, with blood, which blood shall one day make them groan.

9 This expression occurs again in Othello :—
'There are a kind of men so loose of soul,
That in their sleep will mutter their affairs.'

10 Thus also in King Richard II. :—
'Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.'

1 The report in the Old Year Book, referred to above, thus describes him.—'Car il fut tres noble prince et prudent, et miror de tout courtoisie.'

2 The old copy reads 'Sir Walter.' The correction is justified by Holinshed. Sir William Sands was at this time (May, 1521) only a knight, not being created Lord Sands till April 27, 1527. Shakespeare probably did not know that he was the same person whom he has already introduced with that title. The error arose by placing the king's visit to Wolsey (at which time Sir William was Lord Sands) and Buckingham's condemnation in the same year ; whereas the visit was made some years afterwards.

3 Evils are forfeits.

4 Thus in Lord Sterling's Darius :—
'Scarce was the lasting last divorcement made Betwixt the bodie and the soule.'

5 Johnson observes, with great truth, that these lines are remarkably tender and pathetic.

6 Shakespeare, by this expression, probably meant to make the duke say, No action expressive of malice shall

2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 'twill require
A strong faith¹ to conceal it.

1 Gent. Let me have it ;
I do not talk much.

2 Gent. I am confident :
You shall, sir : Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing, of a separation
Between the king and Katharine ?

1 Gent. Yes, but it held² not :
For when the king once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the lord mayor, straight
To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.

2 Gent. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now ; for it grows again
Fresher than e'er it was ; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal,
Or some about him near, have, out of malice
To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple
That will undo her : To confirm this too,
Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately ;
As all think, for this business.

1 Gent. 'Tis the cardinal ;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

2 Gent. I think, you have hit the mark : But is't not cruel,
That she should feel the smart of this ? The cardinal
Will have his will, and she must fall.

1 Gent. 'Tis woful.
We are too open here to argue this ;
Let's think in private more. [Exit.

SCENE II. An Antechamber in the Palace. Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a Letter.

Cham. My lord,—The horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young, and handsome ; and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission, and main power, took 'em from me ; with this reason,—His master would be served before u subject, if not before the king : which stopp'd our mouths, sir.

I fear, he will, indeed : Well, let him have them :
He will have all, I think.

Enter the Dukes of NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.

Nor. Well met, my good lord chamberlain.

Cham. Good day to both your graces.

Suf. How is the king employ'd ?

Cham. I left him private,
Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What is the cause ?

Cham. It seems, the marriage with his brother's wife

Has crept too near his conscience.

Suf. No, his conscience
Has crept too near another lady.

Nor. 'Tis so ;
This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal :
That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune, Turns what he list. The king will know him one day.

Suf. Pray God, he do ! he'll never know himself else.

Nor. How holily he works in all his business !

1 Great fidelity.

2 Stevens erroneously explains this passage, saying to hold is to believe : 'it held not' here rather means 'it did not sustain itself,' the rumour did not prove true.
So in King Richard III. Act ii. Sc. 2 :—

'Doth the news hold of good King Edward's death ?'

3 See The Winter's Tale, Act i. Sc. 2. note 8.

4 It was the main end or object of Wolsey to bring about a marriage between Henry and the French king's sister, the duchess of Alençon.

5 The meaning is, that the cardinal can, as he pleases, make high or low.

6 The stage direction in the old copy is singular—
'Exit Lord Chamberlain, and the king draws the curtain, and sits reading pensively.'—This was calculated

And with what zeal ! For, now he has crack'd the league

Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew,

He dives into the king's soul ; and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience,
Fears, and despairs, and all these for his marriage :
And, out of all these to restore the king,
He counsels a divorce ; a loss of her,
That, like a jewel,³ has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre ;
Of her, that loves him with that excellence
That angels love good men with ; even of her
That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless the king : And is not this course pious ?

Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel ! 'Tis most true,

These news are every where ; every tongue speaks
them,

And every true heart weeps for't : All, that dare
Look into these affairs, see this main end,—
The French king's sister :⁴ Heaven will one day open

The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold bad man.

Suf. And free us from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance ;
Or this imperious man will work us all
From princes into pages : all men's honours
Lie in one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.⁵

Suf. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him ; there's my creed ;
As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please ; his curses and his blessings Touch me alike, they are breath I not believe in,
I knew him, and I know him ; so I leave him
To him, that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in ;
And, with some other business, put the king
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon
him :—

My lord, you'll bear us company ?

Cham. Excuse me ;
The king hath sent me other-where : besides,
You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him :
Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain.

NORFOLK opens a folding-door. The King is discovered sitting, and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks ! sure, he is much affected.

K. Hen. Who is there ? ha ?

Nor. 'Pray God, he be not angry.

K. Hen. Who's there, I say ? How dare you thrust yourselves

Into my private meditations ?

Who am I ? ha ?

Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences
Malice ne'er meant ; our breach of duty, this way,
Is business of estate ; in which, we come
To know your royal pleasure.

K. Hen. You are too bold :
Go to ; I'll make ye know your times of business :

Is this an hour for temporal affairs ? ha ?—

for the state of the theatre in Shakspeare's time. When a person was to be discovered in a different apartment from that in which the original speakers in the scene are exhibited, the artless mode of that time was, to place such person in the back part of the stage, behind the curtains which were occasionally suspended across it. These the person who was to be discovered (as Henry in the present case), drew back just at the proper time. Norfolk has just said 'Let's in ;' and therefore should himself do some act in order to visit the king.
This, indeed, in the simple state of the old stage, was not attended to ; the king very civilly discovering himself.
See Malone's account of the Old Theatres, in Mr.
Boswell's edition, vol. ii.

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal?—O, my Wolsey,

The quiet of my wounded conscience,

Thou art a cure fit for a king.—You're welcome,

[To CAMPEIUS.]

Most learned reverend air, into our kingdom;

Use us, and it:—My good lord, have great care

I be not found a talker.¹ [To WOLSEY.]

Wol. Sir, you cannot.

I would, your grace would give us but an hour

Of private conference.

K. Hen. We are busy: go.

[To NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.]

Nor. This priest has no pride in him?

Suf. Not to speak of;

I would not be so sick though,² for his place:

But this cannot continue.

Nor. If it do,

I'll venture one have at him.³

Suf.

I another.

[Exeunt NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.]

Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom

Above all princes, in committing freely

Your scruple to the voice of Christendom:

Who can be angry now? what envy reach you?

The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her,

Must now confess, if they have any goodness,

The trial just and noble. All the clerks,

I mean, the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms,

Have their free voices; Rome, the nurse of judgment,

Invited by your noble self, hath sent

One general tongue unto us, this good man,

This just and learned priest, Cardinal Campeius;

Whom, once more, I present unto your highness.

K. Hen. And, once more, in mine arms I bid him welcome,

And thank the holy conclave for their loves;

They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for.

Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers' loves,

You are so noble: To your highness' hand

I tender my commission; by whose virtue,

(The court of Rome commanding,)—you, my lord

Cardinal of York, are join'd with me, their servant,

In the impartial judging of this business.

K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted

Forthwith, for what you come:—Where's Garddiner?

Wol. I know, your majesty has always lov'd

her

So dear in heart, not to deny her that

A woman of less place might ask by law,

Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her.

K. Hen. Ay, and the best, she shall have; and my favour

To him that does best; God forbid else. Cardinal,

Pr'ythee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary;

I find him a fit fellow. [Exit WOLSEY.]

1 The meaning appears to be, 'Let care be taken that my promise be performed, that my professions of welcome be not found empty talk.'

2 I. e. so sick as he is proud.

3 Steevens reads 'one leave at him;' but surely without necessity. To have at any thing or person meant to attack it, in ancient phrasology. Surrey afterwards says:—

'have at you,

First that without the king,' &c.

The phrase is derived (like many other old popular phrases) from gaming: 'to have at all,' was to throw for all that was staked on the board, adventuring on the cast an equal stake.

4 I. e. kept him out of the king's presence, employed in foreign embassies.

5 About this time the king received into favour Doctor

Stephen Gardiner, whose service he used in matters of great secrecy and weight, admitting him in the room of Dr Pace, the which being continually abroad in am-

Re-enter WOLSEY, with GARDINER.

Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favour to you;

You are the king's now.

Gard.

But to be commanded

For ever by your grace, whose hand has rais'd me.

[Aside.]

K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.

[They converse apart.]

Cam. My lord of York, was not one Doctor

Pace

In this man's place before him?

Wol.

Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol.

Yes, surely.

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread

then

Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

Wol.

How! of me?

Cam. They will not stick to say, you envied him;

And, fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,

Kept him a foreign man⁴ still; which so griev'd him,

That he ran mad, and died.⁵

Wol.

Heaven's peace be with him!

That's Christian care enough: for living murmurers,

There's places of rebuke. He was a fool;

For he would needs be virtuous: That good fellow,

If I command him, follows my appointment;

I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,

We live not to be grip'd by meaner persons.

K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen.

[Exit GARDINER.]

The most convenient place that I can think of,

For such receipt of learning, is Black-Friars;

There ye shall meet about this weighty business:—

My Wolsey, see it furnish'd.—O, my lord,

Would it not grieve an able man, to leave

So sweet a bedfellow? But, conscience, conscience,—

O, 'tis a tender place, and I must leave her.

○

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. An Antechamber in the Queen's

Apartment. Enter ANNE BULLEN, and an old

Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither:—Here's the pang that pinches:

His highness having lived so long with her: and she

So good a lady, that no tongue could ever

Pronounce dishonour of her,—by my life,

She never knew harm-doing:—O now, after

So many courses of the sun enthron'd,

Still growing in a majesty and pomp,—the which

To leave is a thousand-fold more bitter, than

'Tis sweet at first to acquire,—after this process,

To give her the avault⁶ it is a pity

Would move a monster.

Old L.

Hearts of most hard temper

Melt and lament for her.

Anne.

O, God's will! much better

She ne'er had known pomp: though it be tempra-

Yet, if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce⁷

basades, and the same oftentimes not much necessary by the Cardinales appointment, at length he took such greefe therewith, that he fell out of his right wities.'—

Holinshead.

6 To send her away contemptuously; to pronounce against her a sentence of ejection.

7 I think with Steevens that we should read:—

'Yet if that quarrel, fortune to divorce

It from the bearer,' &c.

i. e. if any quarrel happen or chance to divorce it from the bearer. To fortune is a verb, used by Shakespeare in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

'I'll tell you as we pass along

That you will wonder what hath fortun'd.'

8 Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'The soul and body rive not more at parting

Than greatness going off.'

To pang is used as a verb active by Skelton, in his book of Philip Sparrow, 1568, sig. R. v.:—

'What heaviness did me pange.'

Old L. Alas, poor lady!
She's a stranger now again.¹

Anne. So much the more
Must pity drop upon her. Verily,
I swear, 'tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content
Is our best having.²

Anne. By my troth, and maidenhead,
I would not be a queen.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would,
And venture maidenhead for't; and so would you,
For all this spice of your hypocrisy:
You, that have so fair parts of woman on you,
Have too a woman's heart; which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty;
Which, to say sooth, are blessings: and which gifts
(Saying your mincing) the capacity
Of your soft cheveril³ conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth,— Old L. Yes, troth, and troth,—You would not be a queen?

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange; a threepence bowed would hire me,

Old as I am, to queen it? But, I pray you,
What think you of a duchess? have you limbs
To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made: Pluck off a little;⁴

I would not be a young count in your way,
For more than blushing comes to: if your back
Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak
Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How you do talk!

I swear again, I would not be a queen
For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England
You'd venture an emballing;⁵ I myself
Would for Carnarvonshire, although there 'long'd
No more to the crown but that. Lo, who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What wer't worth to know

The secret of your conference?

Anne. My good lord,
Not your demand; it values not your asking:
Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming
The action of good women: there is hope,
All will be well.

Anne. Now I pray God, amen!

Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings

Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, and high note's
Ta'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty

1 The revocation of her husband's love has reduced her to the condition of an unfriended stranger.

2 Our best possession.

3 Cheveril is kid leather, which, being of a soft yielding nature, is often alluded to in comparisons for any thing pliant or flexible.

4 Anne Bullen declining to be either a queen or a duchess, the old lady says, 'pluck off a little': let us descend a little lower, and so diminish the glare of pre-ference by bringing it nearer your own quality.

5 I e. you would venture to be distinguished by the hault, the ensign of royalty, used with the sceptre at coronations.—Johnson.

6 I cannot but be surprised that Malone should have made any difficulty about the reading of the text:—

the king's majesty

Commends his good opinion to you.
It is one of the most common forms of epistolary and colloquial compliment of our ancestors, whose letters frequently terminate with 'and so I commend me to you,' or begin with 'After my hartie commendacions to you,' &c. The instances cited by Stevens from Lear Commends his good opinion to you,⁶ and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing Than marchioness of Pembroke; to which title A thousand pound a year, annual support, Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know,
What kind of my obedience I should tender;
More than my all is nothing:⁷ nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers, and wishes,

Are all I can return. 'Beseech your lordship,
Vouchsafe to speak my thanks, and my obedience,
As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness;
Whose health, and royalty, I pray for.

Cham. Lady,
I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit,⁸
The king hath of you.—I have perus'd her well;
[Aside.

Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king: and who knows yet,
But from this lady may proceed a gem,
To lighten all this isle?⁹—I'll to the king,
And say, I spoke with you.

Anne. My honour'd lord.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain.

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see!
I have been begging sixteen years in court (Am yet a courtier beggarly,) nor could Come pat betwixt too early and too late,
For any suit of pounds: and you, (O fate!)
A very fresh-fish here, (fy, fy, fy upon
This compell'd fortune!) have your mouth fill'd up,
Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me.

Old L. How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence,¹⁰
no.

There was a lady once ('tis an old story,)
That would not be a queen, that would she not,
For all the mud in Egypt:¹¹—Have you heard it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant.

Old L. With your theme, I could O'er mount the lark. The marchioness of Pembroke
A thousand pounds a year! for pure respect;
No other obligation: By my life,
That promises more thousands: Honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time,
I know, your back will bear a duchess;—Say,
Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady,
Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on't. 'Would I had no being,
If this salute my blood a jot; it faints me,
To think what follows.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence: Pray, do not deliver
What here you have heard, to her.

Old L. What do you think me?
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. A Hall in Black-Friars. Trumpets sennet,¹² and cornets. Enter two Vergers, with and Antony and Cleopatra are not exactly in point; for the word commend, in both those instances, signifies commit.

7 Not only my all is nothing: but if my all were more than it is, it were still nothing.

8 To approve is not, as Johnson explains it, here, to strengthen by commendation, but to confirm (by the report he shall make) the good opinion the king has formed.

9 The carbuncle was supposed by our ancestors to have intrinsic light, and to shine in the dark: any other gem may reflect light, but cannot give it.

10 Forty pence was in those days the proverbial expression of a small wager. Money was then reckoned by pounds, marks, and nobles. Forty pence, or three and fourpence, is half a noble, and is still an established legal fee.

11 The fertility of Egypt is derived from the mud and slime of the Nile.

12 This word sennet, about which there has been so much discussion to little purpose, is nothing more than the senne of the old French, or the segno or segnata of the Italians, a signal given by sound of trumpet.—signum dare buccina.

short silver wands; next them, two Scribes, in the habits of doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury alone; after him the Bishops of Lincoln, Ely, Rochester, and Saint Asaph; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the purse, with the great seal, and a cardinal's hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver cross; then a Gentleman Usher bareheaded, accompanied with a Sergeant at Arms, bearing a silver mace; then two Gentlemen, bearing two great silver pillars; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals, WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS; two Noblemen with the sword and mace. Then enter the King and Queen, and their Trains. The King takes place under the cloth of state; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The Queen takes place at some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court in manner of a consistory; between them, the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The Crier and the rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read, Let silence be commanded.

K. Hen. What's the need?
It hath already publicly been read,
And on all sides the authority allow'd;
You may then spare that time.

Wol. Be't so:—Proceed.
Scribe. Say, Henry king of England, come into the court.

Crier. Henry king of England, &c.

K. Hen. Here.

Scribe. Say, Katharine queen of England, come into court.

Crier. Katharine queen of England, &c.

[The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.²]

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you, do me right and justice;³

And to bestow your pity on me: for I am a most poor woman, and a stranger, Born out of your dominions; having here No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir, In what have I offended you? what cause Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure, That thus you should proceed to put me off, And take your good grace from me? Heaven witness,

I have been to you a true and humble wife, At all times to your will conformable: Ever in fear to kindle your dislike, Yea, subject to your countenance; glad, or sorry, As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour, I ever contradicted your desire, Or made it not mine too? Or which of your friends Have I not strove to love, although I knew He were mine enemy? what friend of mine That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice He was from thence discharged? Sir, call to mind That I have been your wife, in this obedience, Upward of twenty years, and have been blest

1 Ensigns of dignity carried before cardinals.

2 'Because she could not come directly to the king for the distance which severed them, she took pain to go about unto the king, kneeling down at his feet,' &c.—Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, vol. i. p. 149, ed. 1825.

3 This speech is taken from Holinshed (who copies from Cavendish) with the most trifling variations. Hall has given a different report of the queen's speech, which, he says, was made in French, and translated by him from notes taken by Campeggio's secretary.

4 That is, 'If you can report and prove aught against mine honour, my love and duty, or aught against your sacred person,' &c.

5 The historical fact is, that the queen staid for no reply to this speech. Cavendish says, 'And with that she rose up, making a low courtesy to the king, and so de-

With many children by you: If, in the course And process of this time, you can report, And prove it too, against mine honour aught, My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty, Against your sacred person, in God's name, Turn me away; and let the foul'st contempt Shut door upon me, and so give me up To the sharpest kind of justice. Please you, sir, The king, your father, was reputed for A prince most prudent, of an excellent And unmatched wit and judgment: Ferdinand, My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many A year before: It is not to be question'd That they had gather'd a wise council to them Of every realm, that did debate this business, Who deem'd our marriage lawful: Wherefore I humbly

Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may Be by my friends in Spain advis'd; whose counsel I will implore: if not; if the name of God, Your pleasure be fulfill'd!⁵

Wol. You have here, lady, (And of your choice,) these reverend fathers; men Of singular integrity and learning, Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled To plead your cause: It shall be therefore bootless, That longer you desire the court;⁶ as well For your own quiet, as to rectify What is unsettled in the king.

Cam. His grace Hath spoken well, and justly: Therefore, madam, It's fit this royal session do proceed; And that, without delay, their arguments Be now produc'd, and heard.

Q. Kath. Lord cardinal,— To you I speak.

Wol. Your pleasure, madam?

Q. Kath. Sir, I am about to weep; but, thinking that We are a queen (or long have dream'd so,) certain, The daughter of a king, my drops of tears I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol. Be patient yet. Or God will punish me: I do believe, before,

Induc'd by potent circumstances, that You are mine enemy; and make my challenge,⁷ You shall not be my judge: for it is you Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me, Which God's dew quench!—Therefore, I say again, I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul, Refuse you for my judge;⁸ whom, yet once more, I hold my most malicious foe, and think not At all a friend to truth.

Wol. I do profess, You speak not like yourself; who ever yet Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom O'ertopping woman's power. Madam, you do me wrong:

I have no spleen against you; nor injustice For you, or any: how far I have proceeded, Or how far further shall, is warranted By a commission from the consistory, Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge me, parted from thence. Many supposed that she would have resorted again to her former place; but she took her way straight out of the house, leaning (as she was wont always to do) upon the arm of her general receiver Master Griffiths.—Life of Wolsey, p. 152.

6 That you desire to protract the business of the court. 'To pray for a longer day,' i. e. a more distant one, is yet the language of the bar in criminal trials.

7 Challenge here (says Johnson) is a law term. The criminal, when he refuses a juryman, says 'I challenge him.'

8 These are not the mere words of passion, but technical terms of the canon law: detestor and recuso. The former, in the language of canonists, signifies no more than I protest against.—Blackstone.

TRIAL OF QUEEN CATHERINE

That I have blown this coal : I do deny it :
The king is present : if it be known to him,
That I gainsay¹ my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood? yea, as much
As you have done my truth. But if he know
That I am free of your report, he knows,
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies, to cure me ; and the cure is, to Remove these thoughts from you : The which before
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking,
And to say so no more.

Q. Kath. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. You are meek, and humble mouth'd ;

You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,²
With meekness and humility ; but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune, and his highness' favours,
Gone slightly o'er low steps ; and now are mounted
Where powers are your retainers : and your wards,³

Domestics to you, serve your will, as't please
Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than
Your high profession spiritual : That again
I do refuse you for my judge ; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,
And to be judg'd by him.

[She curtsies to the King, and offers to depart.

Cam. The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by it ; 'tis not well.
She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again.

Crier. Katharine queen of England, come into the court.

Grif. Madam, you are call'd back.

Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray you, keep your way :

When you are call'd, return.—Now the Lord help,
They vex me past my patience!—pray you, pass on :
I will not tarry : no, nor ever more,
Upon this business, my appearance make
In any of their courts.

[Exeunt QUEEN, GRIFFITH, and other Attendants.

K. Hen. Go thy ways, Kate :
That man i' the world, who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that : Thou art, alone,
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government,—
Obeying in commanding,—and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out,)⁴
The queen of earthly queens :—She is noble born ;
And, like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.

Wol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears (for where I am robb'd and bound,
There must I be unloos'd ; although not there
At once and fully satisfied,⁵) whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness ; or Laid any scruple in your way, which might

Induce you to the question on't? or ever
Have to you,—but with thanks to God for such A royal lady,—spake one the least word, might
Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?

K. Hen. My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you ; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village curs,
Bark when their fellows do : by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You are excus'd :
But will you be more justified? you ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business ; never Desir'd it to be stirr'd ; but oft have hinder'd, oft,
The passages made toward it :—on my honour,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,⁶
And thus far clear him. Now, what mov'd me to't,—

I will be bold with time, and your attention :—
Then mark the inducement. Thus it came ;—give heed to't :—

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Scruple, and prick,⁷ on certain speeches utter'd
By the bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador ;

Who had been hither sent on the debating
A marriage, 'twixt the duke of Orleans and Our daughter Mary : I' the progress of this business,

Ere a determinate resolution, he
(I mean, the bishop) did require a respite ;
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometimes our brother's wife. This respite shook
The bosom of my conscience,⁸ enter'd me,
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast ; which forc'd such way,
That many maz'd considerations did throng,
And press'd in with this caution. First methought,
I stood not in the smile of heaven ; who had Commanded nature, that my lady's womb,
If it conceiv'd a male child by me, should Do no more offices of life to't, than

The grave does to the dead : for her male issue
Or died where they were made, or shortly after
This world had air'd them : Hence I took a thought,
This was a judgment on me ; that my kingdom,
Well worthy the best heir o' the world, should not Be gladdened in't by me : Then follows, that I weigh'd the danger which my realms stood in
By this my issue's fail ; and that gave to me
Many a groaning throe. Thus hulling⁹ in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together ; that's to say
I meant to rectify my conscience,—which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn'd.—First, I began in private
With you, my lord of Lincoln ; you remember
How under my oppression I did reek,¹⁰
When I first mov'd you.

Lin. Very well, my liege.

K. Hen. I have spoke long ; be pleas'd yourself to say

How far you satisfied me.

Lin. So please your highness,

6 The king, having first addressed Wolsey, breaks off ; and declares upon his honour to the whole court, that he speaks the cardinal's sentiments upon the point in question ; and clears him from any attempt or wish to stir that business.

7 The words of Cavendish are,—'The special cause that moved me hereunto was a scrupulosity that prick'd my conscience.'—See also Holinshed, p. 907.

8 Theobald thought we should read 'The bottom of his conscience.'

9 The phrase belongs to navigation. A ship is said to hull when she is dismasted, and only her hull or hulk is left at the direction and mercy of the waves.

10 Waste, or wear away.

1 Deny.
2 You show in appearance meekness and humility, as a token or outward sign of your place and calling ; but your heart is cramm'd with arrogance, &c.

3 The old copy reads :—
'Where powers are your retainers ; and your words, domestics to you,' &c.

4 If thy several qualities had tongues capable of speaking out thy merits, i. e. of doing them extensive justice.

5 The sense, which is encumbered with words, is no more than this :—I must be loosed, though when so loosed I shall not be satisfied fully and at once ; that is, I shall not be immediately satisfied.

The question did at first so stagger me,—
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't,
And consequence of dread,—that I committed
The daring'st counsel which I had, to doubt;
And did entreat your highness to this course,
Which you are running here.

K. Hen. I then mov'd you,
My lord of Canterbury; and got your leave
To make this present summons:—Unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded,
Under your hands and seals. Therefore, go on:
For no dislike i' the world against the person
Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points
Of my alleged reasons, drive this forward:
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life,
And kingly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come, with her,
Katharine our queen, before the primest creature
That's paragon'd¹ o' the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court till further day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness. [They rise to depart.]

K. Hen. I may perceive, [Aside.]
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.
My learn'd and well-beloved servant, Cranmer,
Pr'ythee return!² with thy approach, I know,
My comfort comes along. Break up the court:
I say, set on. [Exeunt, in manner as they entered.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Palace at Bridewell. A Room in the Queen's Apartment. The Queen, and some of her Women, at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles;
Sing, and disperse them, if thou canst: leave working.

SONG.

*Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves, when he did sing
To his music, plants, and flowers,
Ever sprung; as sun, and showers,
There had been a lasting spring.*

*Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art;
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.*

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now?

Gent. An't please your grace, the two great cardinals

Wait in the presence.⁴

1 Shakespeare uses the verb to paragon both in Antony and Cleopatra and Othello:—

'If thou with Cæsar paragon again
My man of men.'
'—a maid

That paragons description, and wild fame.'

2 This is only an apostrophe to the absent bishop of that name.

3 Cavendish, who appears to have been present at this interview of the cardinals with the queen, says—'She came out of her privy chamber with a skein of white thread about her neck into the chamber of presence.' A subsequent speech of the queen's is nearly conformable to what is related in Cavendish, and copied by Holinshed.

4 Presence chamber.

5 'Being churchmen they should be virtuous, and every business they undertake as righteous as their sacred office: but all hoods make not monks.' In allu-

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?

Gent. They will'd me say so, madam.

Q. Kath. Pray their graces
To come near. [Exit Gent.] What can be their business

With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?
I do not like their coming, now I think on't.
They should be good men; their affairs⁵ as rightteous:

But all hoods make not monks.

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Wol. Peace to your highness!

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife;

I would be all, against the worst may happen.

What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords?

Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw

Into your private chamber, we shall give you
The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here;
There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,
Deserves a corner: 'Would, all other women
Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!
My lords, I care not, (so much I am happy Above a number,) if my actions
Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw them,
Envy and base opinion set against them,⁶
I know my life so even: If your business
Seek me out, and that way I am wife in,
Out with it boldly: Truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina serenissima,—

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin;⁷
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv'd in:
A strange tongue makes my cause more strange,
suspicious;

Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank you,
If you speak truth, for their poor mistress' sake;
Believe me, she has had much wrong: Lord cardinal,

The willing'st sin I ever yet committed,
May be absolv'd in English.

Wol. Noble lady,
I am sorry, my integrity should breed
(And service to his majesty and you,)⁸
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.
We come not by the way of accusation,
To taint that honour every good tongue blesses;
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;
You have too much, good lady: but to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference Between the king and you; and to deliver,
Like free and honest men, our just opinions,
And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour'd madam,
My lord of York,—out of his noble nature,
Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace;
Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure
Both of his truth and him (which was too far,)— sion to the Latin proverb—Cuculus non facit monachum, to which Chaucer also alludes:—

'Habite ne maketh monke ne frere;
But a clement life and devotion,
Maketh gode men of religion.'

6 I would be glad that my conduct were in some public trial confronted with mine enemies, that malice and corrupt judgment might try their utmost power against me.

7 This is obscurely expressed, but seems to mean, 'If your business is with me, and relates to the question of my marriage, out with it boldly.'

8 'Then began my lord to speak to her in Latin.—"Nay, good my lord (quoth she,) speak to me in English, I beseech you, though I understand Latin."—Cavendish.

9 This line stands so awkwardly, and out of its place, that Mr. Edwards's proposition to transpose it, should be adopted, thus:—

'I am sorry my integrity should breed
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant,
And service to his majesty and you.'

Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace,
His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. To betray me. [Aside.]
My lords, I thank you both for your good wills,
Ye speak like honest men, (pray God, ye prove so!)
But how to make you suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
(More near my life, I fear,) with my weak wit,
And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth, I know not. I was set at work
Among my maids, full little, God knows, looking Either for such men, or such business.
For her sake that I have been! (for I feel
The last fit of my greatness,) good your graces,
Let me have time, and counsel, for my cause;
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these fears;

Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Q. Kath. In England,
But little for my profit: Can you think, lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness' pleasure
(Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,)
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They that must weigh out² my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

Cam. I would, your grace
Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir?
Cam. Put your main cause into the king's protection;

He's loving, and most gracious; 'twill be much
Both for your honour better, and your cause;
For, if the trial of the law o'ertake you,
You'll part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tells you rightly.
Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruin:

Is this your Christian counsel? out upon ye!
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a judge,
That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.

Q. Kath. The more shame for ye; ³ holy men I thought ye,
Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues:
But cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye:
Mend them for shame, my lords. Is this your comfort?

The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd?

I will not wish ye half my miseries,
I have more charity: But say, I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at once
The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing: Woe upon ye,
And all such false professors! Would ye have me
(If ye have any justice, any pity,
If ye be any thing but churchmen's habits,)
Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me?
Alas! he has banish'd me his bed already;
His love too long ago: I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him,
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me, above this wretchedness? all your studies
Make me a curse like this.

¹ For the sake of that royalty which I have heretofore possessed.

² Weigh out for out-weigh. In Macbeth we have overcome for come over.

³ If I mistake you, it is by your fault, not mine; for
I thought you good.

⁴ Served him with superstitious attention.

⁵ This is an allusion to the old jingle of Angli and Angeli. Thus Nashe in his Anatomy of Absurdity, 1589:—'For my part I meane to suspend my sentence, and let an author of late memorie be my speaker; who affirmeth that they carry angels in their faces, and devils in their devices.'

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I lived thus long—(let me speak myself,

Since virtue finds no friends,)—a wife, a true one?
A woman (I dare say, without vain-glory,)
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven? obey'd
him?

Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him?⁴

Almost forgot my prayers to content him?

And am I thus rewarded? 'tis not well, lords.

Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure;
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.

Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Wol. 'Pray, hear me.

Q. Kath. 'Would I had never trod this English
earth,

Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!

Ye have angels' faces,⁵ but heaven knows your hearts.

What will become of me now, wretched lady?

I am the most unhappy woman living.—

Alas! poor wenches, where are now your fortunes?
[To her Women.]

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me,
Almost, no grave allow'd me:—Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field,⁶ and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish.

Wol. If your grace

Could but be brought to know, our ends are honest,
You'd feel more comfort: why should we, good lady,
Upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places,
The way of our profession is against it;
We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow them.
For goodness' sake, consider what you do;
How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly
Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell, and grow as terrible as storms.⁷
I know, you have a gentle, noble temper,
A soul as even as a calm; Pray, think us
Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and servants.

Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues

With these weak women's fears. A noble spirit,
As yours was put into you, ever casts
Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves
you;

Beware, you lose it not: For us, if you please
To trust us in your business, we are ready
To use our utmost studies in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: And, pray, forgive me,

If I have us'd⁸ myself unmannerly;
You know, I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answe. To such persons.
Pray, do my service to his majesty:
He has my heart yet; and shall have my prayers,
While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers,
Bestow your counsels on me: she now begs,

⁶ 'The lily, lady of the flow'ring field.'

Spenser, F. Q. b. ii. c. vi. st. 16.

⁷ It was one of the charges brought against Lord Essex, in the year before this play was written, by his ungrateful kinsman Sir Francis Bacon, when that nobleman, to the disgrace of humanity, was obliged by a junctio of his enemies to kneel at the end of the council table for several hours, that in a letter written during his retirement in 1598 to the lord keeper, he had said, 'There is no tempest to the passionate indignation of a prince.'
⁸ Behaved.

That little thought, when she set footing here,
She should have bought her dignities so dear.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Antechamber to the King's Apartment. Enter the DUKE of NORFOLK, the DUKE of SUFFOLK, the EARL of SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force¹ them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them : If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful
To meet the least occasion, that may give me
Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke,
To be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the peers
Have uncondemn'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected?² when did he regard
The stamp of nobleness in any person,
Out of himself?

Cham. My lord, you speak your pleasures :
What he deserves of you and me, I know ;
What we can do to him (though now the time Gives way to us,) I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him ; for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in his tongue.

Nor. O, fear him not ;
His spell in that is out : the king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. No, he's settled,
Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur. Sir,
I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true.
In the divorce, his contrary proceedings³
Are all unfolded ; wherein he appears,
As I could wish mine enemy.

Sur. How came
His practices to light ?

Suf. Most strangely.

Sur. O, how, how ?

Suf. The cardinal's letter to the pope miscarried,
And came to the eye o' the king : wherein was read,
How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness
To stay the judgment o' the divorce : For if
It did take place, I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to

A creature of the queen's, Lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Has the king this ?

Suf. Believe it.

Sur. Will this work ?

Cham. The king in this perceives him, how he coasts,

And hedges, his own way.⁴ But in this point
All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic
After his patient's death ; the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Sur. 'Would he had !

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord !
For, I profess, you have it.

Sur. Now all my joy

Trace⁵ the conjunction !

Suf. My amen to't !

1 Force is enforce, urge.

2 'Which of the peers has not gone by him contemned or neglected ?' When did he regard the stamp of nobleness in any person, though attentive to his own dignity ?

3 I. e. his secret endeavours to counteract the divorce.

4 To coast is to hover about, to pursue a sidelong course about a thing. To hedge is to creep along by the hedge, not to take the direct and open path, but to steal covertly through circumvolutions.

5 To trace is to follow.

6 This same phrase occurs again in Romeo and Juliet, Act I. Sc. 1 :—

'Good morrow, cousin.

Is the day so young ?'

Nor. All men's.

Suf. There's order given for her coronation :
Marry, this is yet but young,⁶ and may be left
To some ears unrecounted.—But, my lords,
She is a gallant creature, and complete
In mind and feature : I persuade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall
In it be memoriz'd.⁷

Sur. But, will the king
Digest this letter of the cardinal's ?
The Lord forbid !

Nor. Marry, amen !

Suf.

No, no ;

There be more wasps that buz about his nose,
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius
Is stolen away to Rome ; hath ta'en no leave ;
Has left the cause o' the king unhanded ; and
Is posted, as the agent of our cardinal,
To second all this plot. I do assure you
The king cry'd, ha ! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him,
And let him cry ha, louder !

Nor. But, my lord,

When returns Cranmer ?

Suf. He is return'd, in his opinions ; which
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Together with all famous colleges
Almost in Christendom :⁸ shortly, I believe,
His second marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her coronation. Katharine no more
Shall be call'd queen ; but princess dowager,
And widow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain
In the king's business.

Suf. He has : and we shall see him
For it, an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear.

Suf. 'Tis so.

The cardinal—

Enter WOLSEY and CROMWELL.

Nor. Observe, observe, he's moody.

Wol. The packet, Cromwell, gave it you the king ?

Crom. To his own hand, in his bedchamber.

Wol. Look'd he o' the inside of the paper ?
Crom. Presently

He did unseal them ; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind ; a heed
Was in his countenance : You, he bade
Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready

To come abroad ?

Crom. I think, by this he is.

Wol. Leave me a while.— [Exit CROMWELL.]

It shall be to the duchess of Alençon,
The French king's sister : he shall marry her.
Anne Bullen ! No ; I'll no Anne Bullens for him :
There is more in it than fair visage.—Bullen !
No, we'll no Bullens.—Speedily I wish
To hear from Rome.—The marchioness of Pembroke !

Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be, he hears the king
Does what his anger to him.

Sur. Sharp enough,

Lord, for thy justice !

Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman ; a knight's daughter,

To be her mistress' mistress ! the queen's queen !—
This candle burns not clear : 'tis I must snuff it ;
Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous,
And well deserving ? yet I know her for 7 To memorize is to make memorable.

8 Suffolk means to say Cranmer is returned in his opinions, i. e. with the same sentiments which he entertained before he went abroad, which (sentiments) have satisfied the king, together with all the famous colleges referred to on the occasion. Or perhaps the passage (as Mr. Tyrwhitt observes) may mean, He is returned in effect, having sent his opinions, i. e. the opinions on divines, &c. collected by him.

A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of Our hard-ru'd king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Crammer; one
Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Suf. I would 'twere something that would fret
the string,
The master-cord of his heart!

Enter the King, reading a Schedule;¹ and Lovell.

Suf. The king, the king.

K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his own portion! and what expense by the hour
Seems to flow from him! How, i' the name of thrift,
Does he rake this together?—Now, my lords;
Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have Stood here observing him: Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight,
Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again,²
Strikes his breast hard; and anon, he casts
His eye against the moon: in most strange postures
We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be;
There is a mutiny in his mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I requir'd: And, wot' you what I found
There; on my conscience, put unwittingly?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,—
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which
I find at such proud rate, that it outspeaks
Possession of a subject.

Nor. It's heaven's will;
Some spirit put this paper in the packet,
To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings: but, I am afraid,
His thinkings are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

[He takes his seat, and whispers Lovell, who goes to Wolsey.

Wol. Heaven forgive me!
Ever God bless your highness!

K. Hen. Good my lord,
You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inventory
Of your best graces in your mind; the which
You were now running o'er; you have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit: Sure, in that
I deem you an ill husband; and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol. Sir,
For holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business, which I bear i' the state; and nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I, her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendance to.

1 That the cardinal gave the king an inventory of his own private wealth, by mistake, and thereby ruined himself, is a known variation from the truth of history. Shakspeare, however, has not injudiciously represented the fall of that great man as owing to an incident which he had once improved to the destruction of another. See the story related of Thomas Ruthall, bishop of Durham, in Holinshed, p. 796 and 797.

2 Sallust, describing the disturbed state of Catiline's mind, takes notice of the same circumstance:—"Citius modo, modo tardus incessus."

3 Know.

4 So in Macbeth:—

"To crown my thoughts with acts."

5 Your royal benefits, showered upon me daily, have been more than all my studied purpose could do to requite, for they went beyond all that man could effect in

K. Hen. You have said well.

Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,
As I will lend you cause, my doing well
With my well saying!

K. Hen. 'Tis well said again;
And 'tis a kind of good deed, to say well:
And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd you:
He said, he did; and with his deed did crown
His word upon you.⁴ Since I had my office,
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home,
But par'd my present havings, to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol. What should this mean?

Sur. The Lord increase this business! [Aside.
K. Hen. Have I not made you

The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you have found true:
And, if you may confess it, say withal,
If you are bound to us or no. What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess, your royal graces, Shower'd on me daily, have been more than could
My studied purposes requite; which went Beyond all man's endeavours;—my endeavours
Have ever come too short of my desires,
Yet, fil'd with my abilities: Mine own ends
Have been mine so, that evermore they pointed To the good of your most sacred person, and
The profit of the state. For your great graces Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks;
My prayers to heaven for you; my loyalty,
Which ever has, and ever shall be growing,
Till death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen. Fairly answer'd;
A loyal and obedient subject is

Therein illustrated: The honour of it
Does pay the act of it: as, i' the contrary,
The foulness is the punishment. I presume,
That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour,
more

On you,⁵ than any; so your hand and heart,
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in love's particular, be more
To me, your friend, than any.⁶

Wol. I do profess,
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own; that am, have, and will be.⁷
Though all the world should crack their duty to you,
And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound, as thick as thought could make them, and Appear in forms more horrid; yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.⁸

K. Hen. 'Tis nobly spoken:
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast,
For you have seen him open't.—Read o'er this;

[Giving him papers.

the way of gratitude. My endeavours have ever come too short of my desires, though they have fil'd, i. e. equalled or kept pace with my abilities.

6 Stevens says, as Jonson is supposed to have made some alterations in this play, it may not be amiss to compare the passage before us with another on the same subject in The New Inn:—

"He gave me my first breeding, I acknowledge;
Then shower'd his bounties on me like the hours
That open-handed sit upon the clouds,
And press the liberality of heaven
Down to the laps of thankful men."

7 Beside your bond of duty as a loyal and obedient servant, you owe a particular devotion to me as your especial benefactor.

8 This is expressed with great obscurity; but seems to mean, 'that or such a man I am, have been, and will ever be.'

9 "Ille velut pelagi rupes remota, resistit."

Jen. vii. 596.

The chiding flood is the resounding flood. To chide, to babble, and to brave, were synonymous.

And, after, this : and then to breakfast, with What appetite you have.

[Exit King, frowning upon CARDINAL WOLSEY: the Nobles throng after him, smiling, and whispering.]

Wol. What should this mean ?
What sudden anger's this ? how have I reap'd it ?
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes : So looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him ;
Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper ;
I fear, the story of his anger. 'Tis so ;
This paper has undone me ;—'Tis the account
Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together
For mine own ends ; indeed, to gain the popedom,
And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence,
Fit for a fool to fall by ! What cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king ? Is there no way to cure this ?
No new device to beat this from his brains ?
I know, 'twill stir him strongly : Yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune
Will bring me off again. What's this ? To the Pope ?
The letter, as I live, with all the business
I write to his holiness. Nay then, farewell !
I have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness ;
And, from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting : I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.

Re-enter the DUKES OF NORFOLK² and SUFFOLK,
the EARL OF SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal : who commands you
To render up the great seal presently
Into our hands ; and to confine yourself
To Asher-house,³ my lord of Winchester's,
Till you hear further from his highness.

Wol. Stay,
Where's your commission, lords ? words cannot carry Authority so weighty.

Suf. Who dare cross them ?
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly ?

Wol. Till I find more than will, or words to do it,⁴
(I mean your malice,) know, officious lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded,—envy.
How eagerly ye follow my disgraces,
As if it fed ye ! and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin !
Follow your envious courses, men of malice ;
You have Christian warrant for them, and no doubt,
In time will find their fit rewards. That seal
You ask with such a violence, the king
(Mine, and your master) with his own hand gave me:
Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours,
During my life ; and, to confirm his goodness,
Tied it by letters patents : Now, who'll take it ?

Sur. The king that gave it.

Wol. It must be himself then.

Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.

Wol. Proud lord, thou liest ;
Within these forty hours Surrey durst better
Have burnt that tongue, than said so.

Sur. Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law :
The heads of all thy brother cardinals
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy !
You sent me deputy for Ireland ;
Far from his succour, from the king, from all
That might have mercy on the fault thou gav'st him ;
Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe.

Wol. This, and all else

This talking lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The duke by law Found his deserts : how innocent I was
From any private malice in his end,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.
If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell you,
You have as little honesty as honour ;
That I, in the way of loyalty and truth
Toward the king, my ever royal master,
Dare mate⁵ a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my soul,
Your long coat, priest, protects you ; thou should'st⁶ feel

My sword 't the life-blood of thee, else.—My lords,
Can ye endure to hear this arrogance ?
And from this fellow ? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded⁶ by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility ; let his grace go forward,
And dare us with his cap, like larks.⁷

Wol. All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

Sur. Yes, that goodness
Of cleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion ;
The goodness of your intercepted packets,
You writ to the pope, against the king : your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.—
My lord of Norfolk, as you are truly noble,
As you respect the common good, the state
Of our despised nobility, our issues,
Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen,—
Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles
Collected from his life :—I'll startle you
Worse than the sacring bell,⁸ when the brown wench
Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal.⁹

Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise this man,

But that I am bound in charity against it !

Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand :

But, thus much, they are foul ones.

Wol. So much fairer,

Winchester, having succeeded Bishop Fox in 1528, holding the see in commendam. Escher was one of the episcopal palaces belonging to that see.

4 That is, 'Till I find more than (your malicious) will and words to do it, I dare and must deny it.'

5 i. e. equal.

6 i. e. overpowered, overmastered. The force of this term may be best understood from a proverb given by Coigrave, in v. Rosse, a jade. 'Il n'est si bon cheval qui n'en devien droit rosse : It would anger a saint, or crestfall the best man living, to be so used.'

7 A cardinal's hat is scarlet, and the method of daring larks is by small mirrors on scarlet cloth, which engages the attention of the birds while the fowler draws his nets over them.

8 The little bell which is rung to give notice of the elevation of the Host, and other offices of the Romish church, is called the sacring or consecration bell.

9 The amorous propensities of Cardinal Wolsey are much dwelt upon in Roy's Satire against him, printed in the Supplement to Mr. Park's edition of the Harleian Miscellany. But it was a common topic of invective against the clergy ; all came under the censure, and many no doubt richly deserved it.

1 Thus in Marlowe's King Edward II :—

'Base fortune, now I see that in thy wheel
There is a point to which when men aspire,
They tumble headlong down. That point I touch'd ;
And seeing there was no place to mount up higher,
Why should I grieve at my declining fall ?'

2 The time of this play is from 1521, just before the duke of Buckingham's commitment, to 1533, when Elizabeth was born and christened. The duke of Norfolk, therefore, who is introduced in the first scene of the first act, or in 1522, is not the same person who here, or in 1523, demands the great seal from Wolsey ; for the former died in 1525. Having thus made two persons into one, so the poet has on the contrary made one person into two. The earl of Surrey here is the same who married the duke of Buckingham's daughter, as he himself tells us : but Thomas Howard, earl of Surrey, who married the duke of Buckingham's daughter, was at this time the individual above mentioned, duke of Norfolk.
Cavendish, and the chroniclers who copied from him, mention only the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk being sent to demand the great seal. The reason for adding a third and fourth person is not very apparent.

3 Asher was the ancient name of Escher, in Surrey.
Shakespeare forgot that Wolsey was himself Bishop of

And spotless, shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.

Sur. This cannot save you;
I thank my memory, I yet remember
Some of these articles; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty, cardinal,
You'll show a little honesty.

Wol. Speak on, sir:
I dare your worst objection: if I blush,
It is, to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I'd rather want those, than my head. Have at you.

First, that without the king's assent, or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that, in all you writ to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, Ego ei Rex meus
Was still inscrib'd; in which you brought the king
To be your servant.

Suf. Then, that, without the knowledge
Either of king or council, when you went
Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,
Without the king's will, or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Suf. That, out of mere ambition, you have caus'd
Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin,¹

Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance

(By what means got, I leave to your own conscience,)

To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities; to the mere² undoing
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are;
Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord,
Press not a falling man too far; 'tis virtue:
His faults lie open to the laws; let them,
Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him
So little of his great self.

Sur. I forgive him.

Suf. Lord cardinal, the king's further pleasure is,—

Because all those things, you have done of late
By your power legatine³ within this kingdom,
Fall into the compass of a præmunire,⁴—
That therefore such a writ be sued against you;
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection:—This is my charge.

Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations
How to live better. For your stubborn answer,
About the giving back the great seal to us,
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank
you.

So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.

[Exeunt all but WOLSEY.
Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear me.
Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man; To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,

And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day, comes a frost, a killing frost;
And,—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening,—nips his root,
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth; my high-blown pride
At length broke under me; and now has left me,
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.
Vain pomp, and glory of this world, I hate ye;
I feel my heart new open'd: O, how wretched
Is that poor man, that hangs on princes' favours!
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin,⁶
More pangs and fears than wars or women have;
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.⁷—

Enter CROMWELL, amazedly.

Why, how now, Cromwell?
Crom. I have no power to speak, sir.

Wol. What, amaz'd
At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder,
A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep,
I am fallen indeed.

Crom. How does your grace?

Wol. Why, well;
Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.

I know myself now; and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd me,
I humbly thank his grace; and from these shoulders,
These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken
A load would sink a navy, too much honour:
O, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden,
Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven.

Crom. I am glad, your grace has made that right use of it.

Wol. I hope, I have: I am able now, methinks, (Out of a fortitude of soul I feel,)
To endure more miseries, and greater far,
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.⁸
What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest, and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!

Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas More is chosen

Lord chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden:
But he's a learned man. May he continue
Long in his highness' favour, and do justice
For truth's sake, and his conscience; that his bones,
When he has run his course, and sleeps in blessings,
May have a tomb of orphans' tears⁹ wept on 'em!
What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news, indeed.

Crom. Last, that the Lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open,¹⁰ as his queen,

⁶ Their ruin is 'their displeasure,' producing the downfall and ruin of him on whom it lights.

⁷ Thomas Storer, in his Metrical Life of Wolsey, 1599, has a similar image:—

'If once we fall, we fall Colossus-like,
We fall at once, like pillars of the sunne'

⁸ So in King Henry VI. Part 2:—

'More can I bear, than you dare execute.'

⁹ The chancellor is the general guardian of orphans
'A tomb of tears (says Johnson) is very harsh.' Steevens has adduced an Epigram of Martial, in which the Heliades are said to 'weep a tomb of tears,' over a viper.
V. Lib. iv. Epig. 59. Drummond, in his Tears for the Death of Moeliades, has the same conceit:—
'The Muses, Phœbus, Love, have raised of their teares
A crystal tomb to him, through which his worth appears.'

There is a similar conceit in King Richard II. Act iii. Sc. 3.

¹⁰ In open is a Latinism. 'Et castris in aperto positis,' Liv. l. 33; i. e. in a place exposed on all sides to view.

¹ 'This was one of the articles exhibited against Wolsey, but rather with a view to swell the catalogue than from any serious cause of accusation; inasmuch as the Archbishops Cranmer, Bainbridge, and Warham were indulged with the same privileges. See Snelling's View of the Silver Coin of England.'—Douce.

² Absolute.

³ As the pope's legate.
⁴ The judgment in a writ of præmunire (a barbarous word used instead of prænonere) is, that the defendant shall be out of the king's protection; and his lands and tenements, goods and chattels forfeited to the king; and that his body shall remain in prison at the king's pleasure. The old copy reads, erroneously, castles, instead of cattels, the old word for chattels, as it is found in Holinshed, p. 909.

⁵ Thus in Shakspeare's twenty-fifth Sonnet:—
'Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread,
But as the marigold in the sun's eye;
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown they in their glory die.'

Going to chapel; and the voice is now
Only about her coronation.

Vol. There was the weight that pull'd me down.

O Cromwell,

The king has gone beyond me, all my glories
In that one woman I have lost for ever:
No sun shall ever usher forth mine honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited
Upon my smiles.¹ Go, get thee from me, Cromwell:
I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now
To be thy lord and master: Seek the king;
That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told him
What, and how true thou art: he will advance thee;
Some little memory of me will stir him
(I know his noble nature) not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too: Good Cromwell, Neglect him not; make use² now, and provide
For thine own future safety.

Crom.

O, my lord,

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master?
Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.—
The king shall have my service; but my prayers
For ever, and for ever, shall be yours.

Vol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me
Out of thy honest truth to play the woman.
Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me, Crom-
well;

And,—when I am forgotten, as I shall be;
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me more must be heard of,—say, I taught thee;
Say, Wolsey,—that once trod the ways of glory,
And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour,— Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;³
By that sin fell the angels; how can man, then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by't?
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate
thee;

Corruption wins not more than honesty;⁴
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:
Let all the ends thou aim'st at, be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's; then if thou fail'st, O

Cromwell,

Thou fall'st at a blessed martyr. Serve the king:
And,—Pr'ythee, lead me in:
There take an inventory of all I have,⁵
To the last penny: 'tis the king's: my robe,
And my integrity to heaven, is all
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Crom-
well,

Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal

¹ The number of persons who composed Cardinal Wolsey's household, according to the authentic copy of Cavendish, was five hundred. Cavendish's work, though written soon after the death of Wolsey, was not printed till 1641, and then in a most unfaithful and garbled manner, the object of the publication having been to render Laud odious, by showing how far church power had been extended by Wolsey, and how dangerous that prelate was, who, in the opinion of many, followed his example. In that spurious copy we read that the number of the household was eight hundred persons. In other MSS. and in Dr. Wordsworth's edition, we find it stated at one hundred and eighty persons.

² i. e. interest.

⁴ Wolsey speaks here not as a statesman but as a Christian. Nothing makes the hour of disgrace more irksome than the reflection that we have been deaf to offers of reconciliation, and perpetuated that enmity which we might have converted into friendship.

⁵ This inventory is still to be seen among the Harleian MSS. No. 599. Some of the particulars may be seen in Stowe's Chronicle, p. 546, ed. 1631. See also Mr. Ellis's Historical Letters, vol. ii. p. 15.

I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.⁶

Crom. Good sir, have patience.

Vol.

So I have. Farewell

The hopes of court! my hopes in heaven do dwell.
[Exeunt.]

O

ACT IV.

SCENE I. A Street in Westminster. Enter Two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You are well met once again.

2 Gent. And so are you.

1 Gent. You come to take your stand here, and behold

The Lady Anne pass from her coronation?

2 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter,

The duke of Buckingham came from his trial.

1 Gent. 'Tis very true: but that time offer'd sorrow;

This, general joy.

2 Gent. 'Tis well: The citizens, I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds,⁷ (As, let them have their rights, they are ever forward)

In celebration of this day with shows,

Pageants and sights of honour.

1 Gent. Never greater,

Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains, That paper in your hand?

1 Gent. Yes; 'tis the list

Of those, that claim their offices this day.

By custom of the coronation.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims

To be high steward; next, the duke of Norfolk,

He to be earl marshal: you may read the rest.

2 Gent. I thank you, sir; had I not known those customs,

I should have been beholden to your paper.

But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine,

The princess dowager? how goes her business?

1 Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other Learned and reverend fathers of his order, Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off From Amptill, where the princess lay; to which She oft was cited by them, but appear'd not: And, to be short, for not appearance, and The king's late scruple, by the main assent Of all these learned men she was divorc'd; And the late marriage⁸ made of none effect:

⁶ This was actually said by the cardinal when on his death-bed, in a conversation with Sir William Kingston; the whole of which is very interesting:—'Well, well, Master Kingston,' quoth he, 'I see the matter against me how it is framed, but if I had serv'd my God as diligently as I have serv'd my king, he would not have given me over in my grey hairs. Howbeit this is the just reward that I must receive for my worldly diligence and pains that I have had to do him service; only to satisfy his vain pleasure, not regarding my godly duty.'

When Samrah, deputy governor of Bassorah, was deposed by Moawryah, the sixth caliph, he is reported to have expressed himself in the same manner:—'If I had serv'd God so well as I serv'd him, he would never have condemn'd me to all eternity.' A similar sentiment also occurs in The Earle of Murton's Tragedie, by Churchyard, 1593. Antonio Perez, the disgraced favourite, made the same complaint. Mr. Douce has also pointed out a remarkable passage in Pittscottie's History of Scotland, p. 261, edit. 1783, in which there is a great resemblance to these pathetic words of the cardinal. James V. imagined that Sir James Hamilton addressed him thus in a dream:—'Though I was a sinner against God, I failed not to thee. Had I been as good a servant to the Lord my God as I was to thee, I had not died that death.'

⁷ Malone's explanation of this passage is entirely erroneous; royal minds are high minds, or as we still say, princely dispositions. 'To avault himself royally' Magnificence se efferre.—Baret.

⁸ i. e. the marriage lately considered as valid

Since which, she was removed to Kimbolton,
Where she remains now, sick.

2 Gent. Alas, good lady! [Trumpets.
The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

THE ORDER OF THE PROCESSION.

A lively flourish of Trumpets: then enter

1. Two Judges.

2. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before him.

3. Choristers singing.

[Music.

4. Mayor of London, bearing the mace. Then Garter, in his coat-of-arms,¹ and on his head a gilt copper crown.

5. Marquis Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-coronal of gold. With him the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.

6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.

7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports; under it, the Queen in her robe; her hair richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side of her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.

2 Gent. A royal train, believe me.—These I know;—

Who's that, that bears the sceptre?

1 Gent. Marquis Dorset:
And that the earl of Surrey with the rod.

2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman: and that should be

The duke of Suffolk.

1 Gent. 'Tis the same; high steward.

2 Gent. And that my lord of Norfolk?

1 Gent. Yes.
2 Gent. Heaven bless thee!

[Looking on the Queen.

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.—

Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel;
Our king has all the Indies in his arms,
And more and richer, when he strains² that lady;
I cannot blame his conscience.

1 Gent. They, that bear
The cloth of honour over her, are four barons
Of the Cinque-ports.

2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all are near her.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, duchess of Norfolk.

1 Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.

2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars, indeed;

And, sometimes, falling ones.

1 Gent. No more of that.
[Exit Procession, with a great flourish of Trumpets.

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! Where have you been broiling?

2 Gent. Among the crowd i' the abbey; where a finger

Could not be wedg'd in more; I am stifled

With the mere rankness of their joy.

2 Gent. You saw

The ceremony?

3 Gent. That I did.

1 Gent. How was it?

3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.

2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

3 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream³

Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen

To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off

A distance from her; while her grace sat down

To rest awhile, some half an hour, or so,

In a rich chair of state, opposing freely

The beauty of her person to the people.

Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman

That ever lay by man: which when the people

Had the full view of, such a noise arose

As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,

As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks,

(Doublets, I think,) flew up; and had their faces

Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy

I never saw before. Great bellied women,

That had not half a week to go, like rams⁴

In the old time of war, would shake the press,

And make them reel before them. No man

Could say, This is my wife, there; all were woven

So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But what follow'd?

3 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest paces

Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and, saintlike,

Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly

Then rose again, and bow'd her to the people:

When by the archbishop of Canterbury

She had all the royal makings of a queen;

As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,

The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems,

Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,

With all the choicest music of the kingdom,

Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,

And with the same full state pac'd back again

To York Place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. Sir, you

Must no more call it York Place, that is past:

For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost;

'Tis now the king's, and call'd—Whitehall.

3 Gent. I know it;

But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name

Is fresh about me.

2 Gent. What two reverend bishops

Were those that went on each side of the queen?

3 Gent. Stokesley and Gardiner; the one, of Winchester,

(Newly prefer'd from the king's secretary,)

The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester

Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,

The virtuous Cranmer.

3 Gent. All the land knows that:

Howev'r, yet there's no great breach; when it comes,

Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell;

A man in much esteem with the king; and truly

A worthy friend.—The king

Has made him master o' the jewel-house,

And one, already, of the privy council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.

3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt

Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which

Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests;

Something I can command. As I walk thither,

I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Exit.

SCENE II.⁵ Kimbolton. Enter KATHARINE,
Dowager, sick; led between GRIFFITH and PA-TIENCE.

Grif. How does your grace?

Kath. O, Griffith, sick to death.

3 '—— ingentem foribus domus alta superbis
Mane salutantum totis vomit adibus undam.'

Virg. Georg. ii. 461.

4 i. e. battering rams.

5 This scene is above any other part of Shakspeare's

1 i. e. in his coat of office, emblazoned with the royal arms.

2 Strain is here used in the sense of the Latin comprimere; 'Virgo ex eo compressu gravida facta est.' So Chapman in his version of the Twenty-first Iliad:—
'Bright Peribæa, whom the flood, &c.
Compress'd.'

My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the earth,
Willing to leave their burden: Reach a chair;—
So,—now, methinks, I feel a little ease.
Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,
That the great child of honour, cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?

Grif. Yes, madam; but, I think, your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to't.

Kath. Prythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:

If well, he stepp'd before me, happily,¹
For my example.

Grif. Well, the voice goes, madam:
For after the stout Earl Northumberland
Arrested him at York, and brought him forward
(As a man sorely tainted) to his answer,
He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill,
He could not sit his mule.²

Kath. Alas! poor man!

Grif. At last, with easy roads,³ he came to Leicester,

Lodg'd in the abbey; where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him;
To whom he gave these words,—*O, father abbot,
An old man, broken with the storms of state,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye;
Give him a little earth for charity!*

So went to bed: where eagerly his sickness
Pursu'd him still; and, three nights after this,
About the hour of eight, (which he himself Foretold, should be his last,) full of repentance,
Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows,
He gave his honours to the world again,
His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest; his faults lie gently on him!
Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him,
And yet with charity,—He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach,⁴ ever ranking
Himself with princes; one, that by suggestion
Ty'd all the kingdom:⁵ simony was fair play;
His own opinion was his law: 'I' the presence
He would say untruths; and be ever double,
Both in his words and meaning: He was never,
But where he meant to ruin, pitiful:
His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he is now, nothing.
Of his own body he was ill,⁶ and gave
The clergy ill example.

Grif. Noble madam,
Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues tragedies, and perhaps above any scene of any other poet, tender and pathetic, without gods, or furies, or poisons, or precipices, without the help of romantic circumstances, without improbable sallies of poetical lamentation, and without any throes of tumultuous misery.—Johnson.

1 Happily is sometimes used by Shakspeare for happily, peradventure; but it here more probably means opportunity.

2 Cardinals generally rode on mules, as a mark perhaps of humility. Cavendish says that Wolsey 'rode like a cardinal sumptuously upon his mule, trapped altogether in crimson velvet and gilt stirrups.'

3 Roads, or rodes, here, is the same as courses, stages, or journeyes. From whence also was formed out-rodes, in-rodes, &c.

4 I. e. of unbounded pride or haughtiness. Thus Hol-inshed:—'This cardinal was of a great stomach, for he computed himself equal with princes, and by crafty suggestions got into his hands innumerable treasure:
he forced little on simony, and was not pitifull, and stood affectionate in his own opinion: in open presence he would lie and seie untruth, and was double both in speech and meaning: he would promise much and perform little: he was vicious of his bodie, and gave the clergie evil example.' Ed. 1587, p. 922.

5 Suggestion here, I think, means wicked prompting.
It is used in this sense in The Tempest. I have no doubt that we should read tyth'd instead of ty'd, as Dr. Farmer proposed, and as the passage quoted from Holinshed warrants. The word tythes was not exclusively used to signify the emoluments of the clergy.

6 To be ill, evil, or naught of body, was to be addicted to women: to be lewd in life and manners.

7 This passage has been absurdly pointed in all the modern editions:—

We write in water. May it please your highness
To hear me speak his good now?

Kath. Yes, good Griffith;
I were malicious else.

Grif. This cardinal,
Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly,
Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle.
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one;
Exceeding wise, fair spoken, and perswading:
Lofty, and sour, to them that lov'd him not;
But, to those men that sought him, sweet as summer.

And though he were unsatisfied in getting,
(Which was a sin,) yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely: Ever witness for him
Those twins of learning, that he rais'd in you,
Ipswich, and Oxford! one of which fell with him,
Unwilling to outlive the good that did it;⁸
The other, though unfinished, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue. —
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little:
And, to add greater honours to his age
Than man could give him, he died, fearing God.⁹

Kath. After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,—
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me,
With thy religious truth and modesty,
Now in his ashes honour: Peace be with him! —
Patience, be near me still; and set me lower;
I have not long to trouble thee.—Good Griffith,
Cause the musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to.

Sad and solemn Music.

Grif. She is asleep: Good wench, let's sit down quiet,
For fear we wake her;—Softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages, clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of bays, and golden vizards on their faces; branches of bays, or palm, in their hands. They first congee unto her, then dance; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head; at which, the two other four make reverend court'sies; then the two

'—This cardinal, &c.

Was fashion'd to much honour. From his cradle
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one.'

8 'Unwilling to outlive the good that did it.'

Good appears here to be put for goodness, as in the passage just above:—

'May it please your highness

To hear me speak his good now?

9 This speech is formed on the following passage in Holinshed:—'This cardinal (as Edmund Campion in his Historie of Ireland described him,) was a man undoubtedly born to honour; I think (saith he) some prince's bastard, no butcher's sonne; exceeding wise, faire-spoken, high-minded, full of revenge, vicious of his bodie, loffie to his enemies, were they never so bigge, to those that accepted and sought his friendship wonderful courteous; a ripe schooleman, thrall to affections, brought a bed with flatterie; insaciable to get, and more princelie in bestowing, as appeareth by his two colleges at Ipswich and Oxenford, the one overthrow with his fall, the other unfinished, and yet as it lyeth, for an house of studentes (considering all the appurtenances) incomparable throughout Christendom.—He held and injoied at once the bishopricks of Yorke, Duresme, and Winchester, the dignities of lord cardinal, legat, and chancellor, the abbey of St. Albans, diverse priories, sundrie fat benefices in commendam; a great preferrer of his servants, an advancer of learning, stoute in every quarrel, never happy till this his overthrow; wherein he shewed such moderation, and ended so perfectlie, that the houre of his death did him more honour than all the pomp of his life passed.' We have a similar thought in Macbeth:—

'—nothing in his life

Became him like the leaving it.'

that held the garland, deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head : which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order ; at which (as it were by inspiration) she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven : and so in their dancing they vanish, carrying the garland with them. The music continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye ? Are ye all gone ?

And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye ?¹

Grif. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for : Saw ye none enter, since I slept ?

Grif. None, madam.

Kath. No ? Saw you not, even now, a blessed troop

Invite me to a banquet ; whose bright faces

Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun ?

They promis'd me eternal happiness ;

And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel

I am not worthy yet to wear : I shall,

Assuredly.

Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good dreams Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave, They are harsh and heavy to me. [Music ceases.]

Pat. Do you note,

How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden ?

How long her face is drawn ? How pale she looks,

And of an earthly cold ? Mark you her eyes ?

Grif. She is going, wench ; pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her !

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. An't like your grace,—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow : Deserve we no more reverence ?

Grif. You are to blame, Knowing, she will not lose her wonted greatness, To use so rude behaviour : go to, kneel.²

Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon ;

My haste made me unmannerly : There is staying A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith : But this fellow

Let me ne'er see again.

[Exeunt GRIFFITH and Messenger.]

Re-enter GRIFFITH, with CAPUCIUS.

If my sight fail not, You should be lord ambassador from the emperor, My royal nephew, and your name Capucius.

Cap. Madam, the same, your servant.

Kath. O my lord, The times, and titles, now are alter'd strangely With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray you, What is your pleasure with me ?

Cap. Noble lady, First, mine own service to your grace ; the next, The king's request that I would visit you ; Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me Sends you his princely commendations, And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O my good lord, that comfort comes too late ;

'Tis like a pardon after execution :

That gentle physic given in time, had cur'd me ;

But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.

How does his highness ?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do ! and ever flourish,

When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name

Banish'd the kingdom !—Patience, is that letter,

I caus'd you write, yet sent away ?

Pat. No, madam. [Giving it to KATHARINE.]

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver

This to my lord the king.³

Cap. Most willing, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness The model⁴ of our chaste loves, his young daughter :⁵—

The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on her !—

Beseeching him, to give her virtuous breeding,

(She is young, and of a noble modest nature ;

I hope, she will deserve well ;) and a little

To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him,

Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition

Is, that his noble grace would have some pity

Upon my wretched women, that so long

Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully :

Of which there is not one, I dare avow,

(And now I should not lie,) but will deserve,

For virtue and true beauty of the soul,

For honesty, and decent carriage,

A right good husband, let him be⁶ a noble ;

And, sure, those men are happy that shall have

them.

The last is, for my men : they are the poorest,

But poverty could never draw them from me ;—

That they may have their wages duly paid then

And something over to remember me by ;

If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life,

And able means, we had not parted thus.

These are the whole contents :—And, good my

lord,

By that you love the dearest in this world,

As you wish christian peace to souls departed,

Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king

To do me this last right.

Cap. By heaven, I will ;

Or let me lose the fashion of a man !

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me

In all humility unto his highness ;

Say, his long trouble now is passing

Out of this world : tell him, in death I bless'd him,

For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell,

My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience,

You must not leave me yet. I must to bed ;

Call in more women.—When I am dead, good wench,

Let me be us'd with honour ; strew me over

With maiden flowers, that all the world may know

I was a chaste wife to my grave : embalm me,

Then lay me forth : although unqueen'd, yet like

A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.

I can no more.—

[Exeunt, leading KATHARINE.]

¹ Gray had probably this passage in his mind when he made his Bard exclaim on a similar occasion :—

'Stay, O stay ! nor thus forlorn

Leave me unbles'd, unpitied, here to mourn.'

² Queen Katharine's servants, after the divorce at Dunstable, and the Pope's curse stuck up at Dunkirk, were directed to be sworn to serve her not as queen but as princess dowager. Some refused to take the oath, and so were forced to leave her service ; and as for those who took it and stayed, she would not be served by them, by which means she was almost destitute of attendants. See Hall's Chronicle, fol. 219. Bishop Burnet says that all the women about her still called her queen. Hist. of the Reformation, p. 162.

commending to him hir daughter and his, beseeching him to stand good father unto hir ; and further desired him to have consideration of hir gentlewomen that had served hir, and to see them bestowed in marriage. Further, that it would please him to appoint that hir servants might have their due wages, and a yeares wages beside.' Holinshed, p. 939. This letter probably fell into the hands of Polydore Virgil, who was then in England, and has preserved it in the twenty-seventh book of his history. Lord Herbert has given a translation of it in his History of King Henry VIII.

⁴ Model, it has been already observed, signified, in the language of our ancestors, a representation or image. Thus in The London Prodigal, 1609 :—

'Dear copy of my husband ! O let me kiss thee !'

ACT V.

SCENE I. A Gallery in the Palace. Enter GARDINER, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a Torch before him, met by SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy, is't not?

Boy. It hath struck.

Gar. These should be hours for necessities, Not for delights: 't times to repair our nature With comforting repose, and not for us To waste these times.—Good hour of night, Sir Thomas!

Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord?

Gar. I did, Sir Thomas; and left him at primero² With the duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too, Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gar. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovell. What's the matter?

It seems, you are in haste: an if there be No great offence belongs to't, give your friend Some touch³ of your late business: Affairs, that walk

(As they say, spirits do) at midnight, have In them a wilder nature, than the business That seeks despatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you; And durst commed a secret to your ear Much weightier than this work. The queen's in labour,

They say, in great extremity; and fear'd She'll with the labour end.

Gar. The fruit, she goes with, I pray for heartily; that it may find Good time, and live; but for the stock, Sir Thomas,

I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks, I could Cry the amen; and yet my conscience says She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does Deserve our better wishes.

Gar. But, sir, sir,— Hear me, Sir Thomas: You are a gentleman Of mine own way; 'I know you wise, religious; And, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well,— 'Twill not, Sir Thomas Lovell, take't of me, Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she, Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two The most remark'd i' the kingdom. As for Cromwell,—

Beside that of the jewel-house, he's made master O' the rolls, and the king's secretary: further, sir, Stands in the gap and trade⁴ of more preferments, With which the time will load him: The archbishop

Is the king's hand and tongue; And who dare speak

One syllable against him?

Gar. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas, There are that dare; and I myself have ventur'd To speak my mind of him: and, indeed, this day, Sir, (I may tell it you), I think, I have Incens'd⁵ the lords o' the council, that he is (For so I know he is, they know he is)

¹ Gardiner himself is not much delighted. The delights at which he hints seem to be the king's diversions, which keep him in attendance.

² Primero, prime, or primavista. A game at cards, said by some writers to be one of the oldest known in England. It is described by Duchat in his notes on Rabelais, Mr. Daines Barrington in the Archæologia, vol. viii. p. 133, and more fully by Mr. Nares in his Glossary, and in an Essay on the Origin of Playing Cards, 1816, to which our limits oblige us to refer the reader desirous of further information.

³ I. e. some hint of the business that keeps you awake so late.

⁴ Of mine own opinion in religion.

⁵ I. e. course or way. 'Iter pro incepto et instituto, a way, trade or course.'—Cooper.

⁶ Incens'd or insens'd in this instance, and in some

A most arch heretic, a pestilence That does infect the land: with which they moved, Have broken' with the king; who hath so far Given ear to our complaint (of his great grace And princely care; foreseeing those fell mischiefs Our reasons laid before him,) he hath commanded To-morrow morning to the council board He be convented.⁶ He's a rank weed, Sir Thomas, And we must root him out. From your affairs, I hinder you too long: good night, Sir Thomas.

Lov. Many good nights, my lord: I rest your servant. [Exeunt GARDINER and Page.]

As LOVELL is going out, enter the King, and the DUKE of SUFFOLK.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-night; My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.

Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before.

K. Hen. But little, Charles;

Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play.

Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her What you commanded me, but by her woman I sent your message: who return'd her thanks In the greatest humbleness, and desir'd your highness

Most heartily to pray for her.

K. Hen. What say'st thou? ha! To pray for her? what, is she crying out?

Lov. So said her woman; and that her sufferance made Almost each pang a death.⁷

K. Hen. Alas, good lady!

Suf. God safely quit her of her burden, and With gentle travail, to the gladding of Your highness with an heir!

K. Hen. 'Tis midnight, Charles, Pr'ythee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember The estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone; For I must think of that, which company Would not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your highness A quiet night, and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

K. Hen. Charles, good night.— [Exit SUFFOLK.]

Enter SIR ANTONY DENNY.¹⁰

Well, sir, what follows?

Den. I have brought my lord the archbishop,

As you commanded me.

K. Hen. Ha! Canterbury?

Den. Ay, my good lord.

K. Hen. 'Tis true: Where is he, Denny?

Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Bring him to us. [Exit DENNY.]

Lov. This is about that which the bishop spake: I am happily¹¹ come hither. [Aside.]

Re-enter DENNY, with CRANMER.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery. [LOVELL seems to stay.]

Ha!—I have said.—Be gone.

What!— [Exeunt LOVELL and DENNY.]

Cran. I am fearful:—Wherefore frowns he thus? 'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well.

others, only means instructed, informed: still in use in Staffordshire. It properly signifies to infuse into the mind, to prompt or instigate. 'Invidiæ stimulo mentes Patrum fodit Saturnia: Jano incenseth the senators' minds with secret envy against,' &c.—Cooper.

⁷ That is, have broken silence; told their minds to the king.

⁸ I. e. summoned, convened.

⁹ We have almost the same sentiment before in Act ii. Sc. 3:—

'—It is a sufferance panging As soul and body's severing.'

¹⁰ The substance of this and the two following scenes is taken from Fox's Acts and Monuments of the Christian Martyrs, &c. 1533

¹¹ I. e. luckily, opportunely. Vide note 1, p. 146.

K. Hen. How now, my lord? You do desire to know

Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. It is my duty

To attend your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious lord of Canterbury.
Come, you and I must walk a turn together;
I have news to tell you: Come, come, give me your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And am right sorry to repeat what follows:
I have, and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord, Grievous complaints of you: which, being con-
sider'd,

Have mov'd us and our council, that you shall
This morning come before us; where, I know,
You cannot with such freedom purge yourself,
But that, till further trial, in those charges
Which will require your answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your house our Tower: You a brother of us!

It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness;
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder: for, I know,
There's none stands under more calumnious tongues,
Than I myself, poor man.

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury;
Thy truth, and thy integrity, is rooted
In us, thy friend: Give me thy hand, stand up;
Prythee, let's walk. Now, by my holy dame,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd
You would have given me your petition, that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you Without indurance,² further.

Cran. Most dread liege,
The good I stand on is my truth, and honesty;
If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies,
Will triumph o'er my person; which I weigh³ not,
Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing
What can be said against me.

K. Hen. Know you not how
Your state stands i' the world, with the whole world?
Your enemies are many, and not small: their practices

Must bear the same proportion: and not ever⁴
The justice and the truth o' the question carries
The due o' the verdict with it: At what ease
Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? such things have been done.
You are potently opposed; and with a malice
Of as great size. Ween⁵ you of better luck,
I mean, in perjur'd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, whiles here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to;
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction.

Cran. God, and your majesty,
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me!

K. Hen. Be of good cheer;
They shall no more prevail, than we give way to.
Keep comfort to you; and this morning see
You do appear before them; if they shall chance,
In charging you with matters, to commit you,
The best persuasions to the contrary
Fail not to use, and with what vehemency

1 You being one of the council, it necessary to imprison you, that the witnesses against you may not be deceived.

2 Indurance, which Shakspeare found in Fox's narrative, means here imprisonment: 'one or two of the chiefest of the council, making their excuse, declared, that in requesting his indurance, it was rather meant for his trial and his purgation—than for any malice conceived against him.'

3 i. e. have no value for.

The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties
Will render you no remedy, this ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us
There make before them.—Look, the good man weeps!

He's honest, on mine honour. God's blest mother!
I swear, he is true hearted; and a soul
None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you.—[Exit CRANMER.]
He has strangled

His language in his tears.

*Enter an old Lady.*⁶

Gent. [Within.] Come back; What mean you?
Lady. I'll not come back: the tidings that I bring
Will make my boldness manners.—Now, good angels
Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person
Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen. Now, by thy looks
I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd?
Say, ay; and of a boy.

Lady. Ay, ay, my liege;
And of a lovely boy: The God of heaven
Both now and ever bless her!—'tis a girl,
Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you,
As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen. Lovell,—

Enter LOVELL.

Lov. Sir.

K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks. I'll to the queen. [Exit King.]

Lady. An hundred marks! By this light I'll have more.

An ordinary groom is for such payment,
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the girl is like to him?
I will have more, or else unsay't: and now
While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue. [Exeunt]

SCENE II. Lobby before the Council Chamber.
Enter CRANMER; Servants, Door-keeper, &c. attending.

Cran. I hope, I am not too late; and yet the gentleman,
That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me
To make great haste. All fast? what means this?— Hoa!

Who waits there?—Sure you know me?

D. Keep. — Yes, my lord;
But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?

D. Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd for.

Enter DOCTOR BUTTS.

Cran. So.
Butts. This is a piece of malice. I am glad,
I came this way so happily. The king
Shall understand it presently. [Exit BUTTS]

Cran. [Aside.] 'Tis Butts,
The king's physician: As he past along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me!
Pray heaven, he sound not my disgrace! For certain,
This is of purpose lay'd by some that hate me,
(God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice,)
To quench mine honour: they would shame to make me

Wait else at door; a fellow counsellor,
Among boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures
Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

4 Not ever is an uncommon expression, and here means not always.

5 To ween is to think or imagine. Though now obsolete, the word was common to all our ancient writers.
Overweening, its derivative, is still retained in the modern vocabulary.

6 This, says Steevens, is I suppose the same old cat that appears with Anne Boleyn in a former scene.

7 The humour of this passage consists in the talkative old lady, who in her hurry said it was a boy, adding bless her, before she corrects her mistake.

Enter, at a Window above, the King and BUTTS.

Butts. I'll show your grace the strangest sight,—

K. Hen. What's that, Butts?

Butts. I think your highness saw this many a day.

K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it?

Butts. There, my lord:

The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants,
Pages, and footboys.

K. Hen. Ha! 'Tis he, indeed:

Is this the honour they do one another?
'Tis well, there's one above them yet. I had thought
They had parted² so much honesty among them
(At least, good manners) as not thus to suffer
A man of his place, and so near our favour,
To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures,
And at the door too, like a post with packets.
By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery:
Let them alone, and draw the curtain close.³
We shall hear more anon.—

[Exeunt.]

THE COUNCIL CHAMBER.

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the DUKE OF SUFFOLK, EARL OF SURREY, Lord Chamberlain, GARDINER, and CROMWELL. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left void above him, as for the Archbishop of Canterbury. The rest seat themselves in order on each side. CROMWELL at the lower end, as Secretary.

Chan. Speak to the business, master secretary: Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours,

The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there?

D. Keep. Without, my noble lords?

Gar. Yes.

D. Keep. My lord archbishop;

And has done half an hour, to know your pleasure.

Chan. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now.⁴

[CROMWELL approaches the Council-table.]

Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry
To sit here at this present, and behold

'That chair stand empty: But we all are men,

In our own natures frail, and capable⁵

Of our flesh, few are angels: out of which frailty,

And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,

Have misdeem'd yourself, and not a little,

Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling

The whole realm, by your teaching, and your chaplains

(For so we are inform'd,) with new opinions,

Divers, and dangerous; which are heresies,

And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gar. Which reformation must be sudden too,

My noble lords: for those that tame wild horses,

Face them not in their hands to make them gentle;

But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur

them,

Till they obey the manage. If we suffer

(Out of our easiness, and childish pity

To one man's honour) this contagious sickness,
Farewell, all physic: And what follows then?
Commutations, upstarts, with a general taint
Of the whole state: as of late days, our neighbours,
The upper Germany,⁶ can dearly witness,
Yet freshly pitied in our memories.

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress
Both of my life and office, I have labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching,
And the strong course of my authority,
Might go one way, and safely; and the end
Was ever, to do well: nor is there living
(I speak it with a single heart,) my lords,
A man, that more detests, more stirs against,
Both in his private conscience, and his place,
Defacers of a public peace, than I do.

'Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart
With less allegiance in it! Men, that make Envy and crooked malice, nourishment,
Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships,
That, in this case of justice, my accusers,
Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,
And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord,

That cannot be; you are a counsellor,
And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment,

We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness'
pleasure,

And our consent, for better trial of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower;
Where, being but a private man again,
You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,
More than, I fear, you are provided for.

Cran. Ah, my good lord of Winchester, I thank
you,

You are always my good friend; if your will pass,
I shall both find your lordship judge and juror,

You are so merciful: I see your end,

'Tis my undoing: Love, and meekness, lord,

Become a churchman better than ambition;

Win straying souls with modesty again,

Cast none away. That I shall clear myself,

Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,

I make as little doubt, as you do conscience,

In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,

But reverence to your callin' makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary,

That's the plain truth; your painted gloss discovers,

To men that understand you, words and weakness.⁷

Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little,

By your good favour, too sharp; men so noble,

However faulty, yet should find respect

For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty,

To load a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary,

I cry your honour mercy; you may, worst

Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?

Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer

Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound?

Gar. Not sound, I say.

1 The suspicious vigilance of our ancestors contrived windows which overlooked the insides of chapels, halls, kitchens, passages, &c. Some of these convenient peepholes may still be seen in colleges, and such ancient houses as have not suffered from the reformations of modern architecture. In a letter from Matthew Parker, archbishop of Canterbury, 1573, printed in Seward's Anecdotes, vol. iv. p. 270, ed. 1796:—"And if it please her majesty, she may come in through my gallerie, and see the disposition of the hall in dynner time, at a window opening therinto." Without a previous knowledge of this custom Shakespeare's scenery in the present instance would be obscure.

2 I. e. shared, possessed.

3 That is, the curtain of the balcony or upper stage, where the king now is. See Malone's Account of the early English Stage, vol. iii. of the late edition by Mr. Boswell.

4 The old stage direction at the commencement of this scene is 'A councill table brought in with chayres and stools and placed under the state.' Our ancestors were contented to be told that the same spot, without any change of its appearance (except perhaps the drawing back of a curtain) was at once the outside and the inside of the council chamber. The modern reader will easily conceive how this scene might now be represented on the stage, who has witnessed some of the ingenious and prompt scenes of metamorphoses by that admirable comedian Matthews.

5 'Capable of our flesh,' probably means 'susceptible of the failings inherent in humanity.'

6 Alluding to the heresy of Thomas Muntzer, which sprung up in Saxony in the years 1521 and 1522.

7 I. e. without duplicity or guile. Thus in Acts, ii. 46, 'In singleness of heart.' I have before had occasion to observe that single and simple were synonymous.

8 Those that understand you, under this painted gloss, this fair outside, discover your empty talk and your false reasoning.

Crom. 'Would you were half so honest;
Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.
Gar. I shall remember this bold language.

Crom. Do.
Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;
Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. And I.
Chan. Then thus for you, my lord,—It stands agreed,

I take it, by all voices, that forthwith
You be convey'd to the Tower a prisoner;
There to remain, till the king's further pleasure
Be known unto us: Are you all agreed, lords?
All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other
Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome!
Let some of the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard. For me?

Must I go like a traitor thither?

Gar. Receive him,
And see him safe i' the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords,
I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords;
By virtue of that ring, I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Chan. This is the king's ring.

Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.
Suf. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven: I told ye all,
When we first put this dangerous stone a rolling,
'Twould fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords,
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Chan. 'Tis now too certain:
How much more is his life in value with him?
'Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales, and informations,
Against this man (whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at.)
Ye blew the fire that burns ye: Now have at ye.

Enter the King, frowning on them; takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince;
Not only good and wise, but most religious:
One that, in all obedience, makes the church
The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen
That holy duty, out of dear respect,

1 It seems to have been a custom, began probably in the dark ages, before literature was generally diffused, and before the regal power experienced the restraints of law, for every monarch to have a ring, the temporary possession of which invested the holder with the same authority as the owner himself could exercise. The production of it was sufficient to suspend the execution of the law; it procured indemnity for offences committed, and imposed acquiescence and submission to whatever was done under its authority. See Procopius de Bell. Vandal. l. i. p. 15. The traditional story of the earl of Essex, Queen Elizabeth, and the countess of Nottingham, long considered as an incident of a romance, is generally known, and now as generally credited. See Birch's Negotiations, p. 206.

2 i. e. the commendations above mentioned are too thin and bare, the intention of them is too palpably seen through. The old copy reads, 'thin and base'; the emendation was suggested by Malone.

3 Who dares to suppose that the place or situation in which he is, is not suitable to these also? Who supposes that thou art not as fit for the office of a privy counsellor as he is?

4 i. e. 'You must be godfather [to] and answer for her.' Our prelates formerly were often employed on like occasions. Cranmer was godfather to Edward VI. See Hall, fo. 232. Archbishop Warham to Henry's eldest son by Queen Katharine; and the bishop of Winchester to Henry himself. See Sandford, 479, 495.

His royal self in judgment comes to hear
The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations,

Bishop of Winchester. But know, I come not
To hear such flattery now, and in my presence;
They are too thin and bare to hide offences.²
To me you cannot reach, you play the spaniel,
And think with wagging of your tongue to win me;
But, whatsoever thou tak'st me for, I am sure,
Thou hast a cruel nature, and a bloody.—
Good man, [To CRANMER,] sit down. Now let me see the proudest

He, that dares most, but wag his finger at thee:
By all that's holy, he had better starve,
Than but once think his place becomes thee not.³

Sur. May it please your grace,—

K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me.
I had thought, I had had men of some understanding
And wisdom of my council; but I find none.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This good man (few of you deserve that title,)
This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy
At chamber door? and one as great as you are?
Why, what a shame was this? Did my commission Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye Power as he was a counsellor to try him,
Not as a groom; There's some of ye, I see,
More out of malice than integrity,
Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean;
Which ye shall never have, while I live.

Chan. Thus far,
My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace
To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpos'd Concerning his imprisonment, was rather (If there be faith in men) meant for his trial,
And fair purgation to the world, than malice;
I am sure, in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him;
Take him, and use him well, he's worthy of it.
I will say thus much for him,—If a prince
May be beholden to a subject, I
Am, for his love and service, so to him.
Make me no more ado, but all embrace him:
Be friends, for shame, my lords.—My lord of Canterbury,

I have a suit which you must not deny me;
That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism,
You must be godfather, and answer for her.⁴

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory
In such an honour; how may I deserve it,
That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spoons;⁵ you shall have

5 It was an ancient custom (which is not yet quite out of use) for the sponsors at christenings to offer silver or silver gilt spoons as a present to the child. The ancient offerings upon such occasions were called Apostle-spoons, because the extremity of the handle was formed into the figure of one or other of the apostles. Such as were opulent and generous gave the whole twelve; those who were more moderately rich or liberal, escaped at the expense of the four evangelists; or even some times contented themselves with presenting one spoon only, which exhibited the figure of any saint, in honour of whom the child received its name. Thus, in Middleton's Chaste Maid of Cheapside :—

'2 Goss. What has he given her?—what is it, gossip?

'3 Goss. A fair high standing cup, and two great 'postle spoons, one of them gilt.'

The following story is related of Shakspeare and Ben Jonson in a collection of anecdotes, entitled Merry Passages and Jeasts. MSS. Harl. 6395 :—

'Shakspeare was godfather to one of Ben Jonson's children; and after the christening, being in deep study, Jonson came to cheer him up, and ask'd him why he was so melancholy? No faith, Ben, says he, not I; but I have been considering a great while what should be the fittest gift for me to bestow upon my godchild, and I have resolved at last. I prythee what? says he. 'Faith, Ben, I'll give him a dozen good latten [Latin] spoons, and thou shalt translate them.' The collector of these anecdotes appears to have been a nephew of Sir Roger L'Estrange. He names Donne as the relater of this story.

Two noble partners with you; the old duchess of

Norfolk,

And lady marquis Dorset; Will these please you?
Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you,
Embrace, and love this man.

Gar.

With a true heart,

And brother-love, I do it.

Cran.

And let heaven

Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation.

K. Hen. Good man, those joyful tears show thy true heart.

The common voice, I see, is verified

Of thee, which says thus, Do my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turn, and he is your friend forever.—

Come lords, we trifle time away; I long

To have this young one made a Christian.

As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;

So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The Palace Yard. Noise and Tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals:
Do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.²

[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you rogue: Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches to them.—I'll scratch your heads:
You must be seeing christenings? Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Man. Pray, sir, be patient; 'tis as much impossible

(Unless we sweep them from the door with cannons,)

To scatter them, as 'tis to make them sleep
On May-day morning; which will never be:³
We may as well push against Paul's, as stir them.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man. Alas, I know not; how gets the tide in?

As much as one sound cudgel of four foot
(You see the poor remainder) could distribute,
I made no spare, sir.

Port.

You did nothing, sir.

Man. I am not Samson, nor Sir Guy, nor Col-

1 This celebrated bear garden, on the Bankside, was so called from Robert de Paris, who had a house and garden there in the time of King Richard II. The Globe Theatre, in which Shakspeare was a performer, stood on the southern side of the river Thames, and was contiguous to this noted place of tumult and disorder. St. Mary Overy's church is not far from London Bridge, and almost opposite to Fishmongers' Hall; Winchester House was over against Cole Harbour; Paris Garden was in a line with Bridewell; and the Globe playhouse faced Blackfriars, Fleet Ditch, or St. Paul's. It was an hexagonal building of stone or brick. Its roof was of rushes, with a flag on the top. In the preliminary remarks is a representation of it, from an old View of London, as it appeared in 1599.

2 i. e. shouting or roaring; a sense the word has now lost. Littleton, in his Dictionary, has 'To gape or bawl: vociferor.' So in Roscommon's Essay on Translation:—

'That noisy, nauseous gaping fool was he.'

3 Our ancestors, young and old, rich and poor, all concurred, as Shakspeare in another place says:—

'To do observance to a morn of May.'

Stowe says that 'In the month of May, namely on May-day in the morning, every man would walk into the sweet meadows and green woods; there to rejoice their spirits with the beauty and savour of sweet flowers, and with the noise [i. e. music] of birds, praising God in their kind.' It is upon record that King Henry VIII. and Queen Katharine partook of this diversion. See Brand's Popular Antiquities, by Ellis.

4 Guy of Warwick, nor Colbrand the Danish giant, whom Guy subdued at Winchester.

5 The trained bands of the city were exercised in Moorfields.

6 A brazier signifies a man that manufactures brass, and a reservoir for charcoal occasionally heated to convey warmth. Both these senses are understood.

brand,⁴ to mow them down before me: but, if I spared any, that had a head to it, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, let me never hope to see a chine again; and that I would not for a cow, God save her.

[Within.] Do you hear, master Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy.—Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock them down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a fry of fornication is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will begget a thousand; here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier⁶ by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in's nose: all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: That fire-drake⁷ did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me: he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pink'd porringer⁸ fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I miss'd the meteor⁹ once, and hit that woman, who cried out, *clubs*¹⁰ when I might see from far some forty truncheoneers draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on; I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff with me, I defied them still; when suddenly a file of boys behind them, loose shot,¹¹ delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let them win the work.¹² The devil was amongst them, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and fight for bitten apples; that no audience, but the tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Limehouse,¹³ their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of them in Limbo Patrum,¹⁴ and there they are like to dance these three days;

7 'Fire-drake; a fire sometimes seen flying in the night like a dragon. Common people think it a spirit that keepeth some treasure hid; but philosophers affirm it to be a great unequal exhalation inflamed between two clouds, the one hot, the other cold, which is the reason that it also smoketh; the middle part where of, according to the proportion of the hot cloud, being greater than the rest, maketh it seeme like a bellie, and both ends like unto a head and taile.'—Bullock's Expositor, 1616. A fire-drake appears to have been also an artificial firework. Thus in Your Five Gallants, by Middleton:—

'—but like fire-drakes

Mounted a little, gave a crack, and fell.'

8 Her pink'd cap, which looked as if it had been moulded on a porringer. So in The Taming of the Shrew:—

'Hab. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.

Pet. Why, this was moulded on a porringer.'

9 The brazier.

11 i. e. loose or random shooters. See King Henry IV. Part II. Act III. Sc. 2.

12 i. e. the fortress: it is a term in fortification.

13 By the tribulation of Tower-hill and the limbs of Limehouse it is evident that Shakspeare meant noisy rabble frequenting the theatres, supposed to come from those places. It appears from Stowe that the inhabitants of Tower-hill were remarkably turbulent. The word limb, in the sense of a turbulent person, is not uncommon in London even at this day. A mischievous unruly boy is called 'a limb of the devil.' That the puritans were aimed at under these appellations seems to me doubtful.

14 i. e. in confinement. In limbo continues to be a cant phrase in the same sense to this day. The Limbus Patrum is, properly, the place where the old fathers and patriarchs are supposed to be waiting for the resurrection. See Titus Andronicus, Act III. Sc. 1.

besides the running banquet of two beadles,¹ that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still too, from all parts they are coming, As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters, These lazy knaves?—Ye have made a fine hand, fellows.

There's a trim rabble let in: Are all these Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour, We are but men; and what so many may do, Not being torn a pieces, we have done: An army cannot rule them.

Cham. As I live, If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round fines, for neglect: You are lazy knaves; And here ye lie baiting of bumbards,² when Ye should do service. Hark, the trumpets sound; They are come already from the christening: Go, break among the press, and find a way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marsbalsea, shall hold you play these two months.

Port. Make way there for the princess.

Man. You great fellow, stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.

Port. You i' the camblet, get up o' the rail; I'll pick³ you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The Palace.⁴ Enter Trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, CRANMER, DUKE OF NORFOLK, with his Marshal's staff, DUKE OF SUFFOLK, two Noblemen bearing great standing-bowls⁵ for the christening gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the DUCHESS OF NORFOLK, godmother, bearing the Child richly habited in a mantle, &c. Train borne by a Lady; then follows the MARCHIONESS OF DORSET, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth.

Flourish. Enter King and Train.

Cran. [Kneeling.] And to your royal grace, and the good queen,

My noble partners, and myself, thus pray;— All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady, Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy, May hourly fall upon ye!

K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop; What is her name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

K. Hen. Stand up, lord.— [The King kisses the Child.]

With this kiss take my blessing: God protect thee! Into whose hands I give thy life.

Cran. Amen.

K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal:

I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady, When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir,

For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter Let none think flattery, for they'll find them truth This royal infant (heaven still move about her!)

Though in her cradle, yet now promises Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings, Which time shall bring to ripeness: She shall be (But few now living can behold that goodness,) A pattern to all princes living with her, And all that shall succeed: Sheba was never More covetous of wisdom, and fair virtue, Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces, That mould up such a mighty piece as this is, With all the virtues that attend the good, Shall still be doxbed on her: truth shall nurse her, Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her: She shall be lov'd, and fear'd; Her own shall bless her:

Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn, And hang their heads with sorrow: Good grows with her:

In her days, every man shall eat in safety Under his own vine,⁶ what he plants; and sing The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours: God shall be truly known; and those about her From her shall read the perfect ways of honour, And by those claim their greatness, not by blood, [Nor] shall this peace sleep with her: But as when The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix, Her ashes new create another heir, As great in admiration as herself: So shall she leave her blessedness to one, (When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness,)

Who, from the sacred ashes of her honour, Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was, And so stand fix'd: Peace, plenty, love, truth, terror,

That were the servants to this chosen infant, Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him; Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine, His honour and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations:⁸ He shall flourish, And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches To all the plains about him;—Our children's children

Shall see this, and bless heaven.

K. Hen. Thou speakest wonders.]

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England, An aged princess; many days shall see her, And yet no day without a deed to crown it. 'Would I had known no more! but she must die, She must, the saints must have her; yet a virgin, A most unspotted lily shall she pass To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her.

K. Hen. O lord archbishop, Thou hast made me now a man; never, before This happy child, did I get any thing: This oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me, That, when I am in heaven, I shall desire To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.— I thank ye all.—To you, my good lord mayor, And your good brethren, I am much beholden; I have received much honour by your presence, And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way, lords;

Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye,

¹ A public whipping. A banquet here is used figuratively, for a dessert. To the confinement of these rioters a whipping was to be the dessert.

² It has already been observed that a bumbard was a large black jack of leather (Tempest, Act ii. Sc. 2,) need to carry beer to soldiers upon duty, or upon any occasion where a quantity was required. See note on King Henry IV. Part i. Act ii. Sc. 4.

³ To pick is to pitch, cast, or throw.

⁴ At Greenwich, where this procession was made from the church of the Friars.—Hall, fo. 217.

⁵ Standing-bowls were bowls elevated on feet or pedestals.

⁶ The thought is borrowed from Scripture. See Micah, iv. 4. 1 Kings, c. iv. The first part of the prophecy is apparently burlesqued in the Beggar's Bush of Beaumont and Fletcher; where Orator Higgin is making his congratulatory speech to the new king of the beggars;

⁷ Each man shall eat his stolen eggs and butter In his own shade, or sunshine, &c.

⁸ Some of the commentators think that this and the following seventeen lines were probably written by Ben Jonson, after the accession of King James. We have before observed Mr. Gifford is of opinion that Ben Jonson had no hand in the additions to this play.

⁹ On a picture of King James, which formerly belonged to the great Bacon, and is now in the possession of Lord Grimston, he is styled imperiæ Atlanticæ conditor. The year before the revival of this play there was a lottery for the plantation of Virginia. The lines probably allude to the settlement of that colony.

She will be sick else. This day, no man think
He has business at his house; for all shall stay,
This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.]

EPILOGUE.

'Tis ten to one, this play can never please
All that are here: Some come to take their ease,
And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,
We have frighted with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear,
They'll say, 'tis naught: others, to hear the city
Abus'd extremely, and to cry,—that's witty!
Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,
All the expected good we are like to hear
For this play at this time, is only in
The merciful construction of good women;*
For such a one we show'd them; If they smile,
And say, 'twill do, I know, within a while
All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap,
If they hold, when their ladies bid them clap.

THE play of Henry VIII. is one of those which still keeps possession of the stage by the splendour of its pageantry. The coronation, about forty years ago, drew the people together in multitudes for a great part

1 A verse with as unmusical a close may be found in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Part III. sect. ii.:—
'Rose the pleasure of fine women.'

In Ben Jonson's Alchemist there is also a line in which the word woman is accented on the last syllable:—
'And then your red man, and your white woman.'

of the winter. Yet pomp is not the only merit of this play. The meek sorrows and virtuous distress of Katharine have furnished some scenes which may be justly numbered among the greatest efforts of tragedy. But the genius of Shakspeare comes in and goes out with Katharine. Every other part may be easily conceived and easily written.

The historical dramas are now concluded, of which the two parts of Henry IV. and Henry V. are among the happiest of our author's compositions; and King John, Richard III. and Henry VIII. deservedly stand in the second class. Those whose curiosity would refer the historical scenes to their original, may consult Holinshed, and sometimes Hall. From Holinshed, Shakspeare has often inserted whole speeches with no more alteration than was necessary to the numbers of his verse. To transcribe them into the margin was unnecessary, because the original is easily examined, and they are seldom less perspicuous in the poet than in the historian.

To play histories, or to exhibit a succession of events by action and dialogue, was a common entertainment among our rude ancestors upon great festivities.* The parish clerks once performed at Clerkenwell a play which lasted three days, containing the History of the World. JOHNSON.

* It appears that the tradesmen of Chester were three days employed in the representation of twenty-four Whitsun plays or mysteries. See Mr. Markland's Disquisition, prefixed to his very elegant and interesting selection from the Chester Mysteries, printed for private distribution; which may be consulted in the third volume of the late edition of Malone's Shakspeare, by Mr. Boswell. The Coventry Mysteries must have taken up a longer time, as they were no less than forty in number.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

MR. Steevens informs us that Shakspeare received the greater part of the materials that were used in the construction of this play from the Troy Book of Lydgate. It is presumed that the learned commentator would have been nearer the fact had he substituted the Troy Book, or Recueil, translated by Carton from Raoul Le Fevre; which together with a translation of Homer, supplied the incidents of the Trojan war. Lydgate's work was becoming obsolete, whilst the other was at this time in the prime of its vigour. From its first publication, to the year 1619, it had passed through six editions, and continued to be popular even in the eighteenth century. Mr. Steevens is still less accurate in stating Le Fevre's work to be a translation from Guido of Colonna; for it is only in the latter part that he has made any use of him. Yet Guido actually had a French translation before the time of Raoul; which translation, though never printed, is remaining in MS. under the whimsical title of "La Vie de la pitieuse Destruction de la noble et superlative Cite de Troye le grant. Translatee en Francois l'an MCCCCLXXX." Such part of the present play as relates to the loves of Troilus and Cressida was most probably taken from Chaucer, as no other work, accessible to Shakspeare, could have supplied him with what was necessary.† This account is by Mr. Douce, from whom also what follows on this subject is abstracted.

Chaucer, in his Troilus and Cressida, asserts that he followed Lollius, and that he translated from the Latin; but who Lollius was, and when he lived, we have no certain indication, though Dryden boldly asserts that he was an historiographer of Urbino, in Italy, and wrote in Latin verse. Nothing can be more apparent than that the Filostrato of Boccaccio afforded Chaucer the fable and characters of his poem, and even numerous passages appear to be mere literal translations; but there are large additions in Chaucer's work, so that it is possible he may have followed a free Latin version, which may have had for its author Lollius.

Boccaccio does not give his poem as a translation, and we must therefore suppose him to have been the inventor of the fable, until we have more certain indications respecting Lollius. So much of it as relates to the departure of Cressida from Troy, and her subsequent amour with Diomedes, is to be found in the Troy Book of Guido of Colonna, composed in 1297, and, as he states, from Dares Phrygius, and Dicty's Cretensis, neither of whom mention the name of Cressida. Mr. Tyrwhitt conjectured, and Mr. Douce confirmed the conjecture, that Guido's Dares was in reality an old Norman poet, named Benoit de Saint More, who wrote in the reign of our Henry the Second, and who himself made use of Dares. Guido is said to have come into England, where he found the Metrical Romance of Benoit, and translated it into Latin prose; and, following a practice too prevalent in the middle ages, he dishonestly suppressed the mention of his real original. Benoit's work exists also in a prose French version. And there is a compilation also in French prose, by Pierre de Beauvan, from the Filostrato.

Lydgate professedly followed Guido of Colonna, occasionally making use of and citing other authorities. In a short time after Raoul le Fevre compiled from various materials his Recueil des Histoires de Troye, which was translated into English and published by Caxton; but neither of these authors have given any more of the story of Troilus and Cressida than any of the other romances on the war of Troy; Lydgate contenting himself with referring to Chaucer.

Chaucer having made the loves of Troilus and Cressida famous, Shakspeare was induced to try their fortunes on the stage. Lydgate's Troy Book was printed by Pyneon in 1519. In the books of the Stationers' Company, anno 1581, is entered, 'A proper Ballad dialoguewise between Troilus and Cressida.' Again, by J. Roberts, Feb. 7, 1603: 'The Booke of Troilus and Cressida, as it is acted by my Lord Chamberlain's men.' And in Jan. 28, 1608, entered by Richard Bonian and Hen. Whalley: 'A Booke called the History of Troilus and Cressida.' This last entry is made by the booksellers, who published this play in 4to. in 1609. To this edition is prefixed a preface, showing that the play was printed before it had been acted; and that it was published, without the author's knowledge, from a copy that had fallen into the booksellers' hands. This preface, as bestowing just praise on Shakspeare, and showing that the original proprietors of his plays thought it their interest to keep them unprinted, is prefixed to the play in the present edition. It appears from some entries in the accounts of Henslowe the player, that a drama on this subject, by Decker and Chettle, at first called Trojelles and Cressida, but, before its producdon, altered in its title to The Tragedy of Agamemnon, was in existence anterior to Shakspeare's play, and that it was licensed by the Master of the Revels on the 3d of June, 1599. Malone places the date of the composition of Shakspeare's play in 1602; Mr. Chalmers in 1600; and Dr. Drake in 1601. They have been led to this conclusion by the supposed ridicule of the circumstance of Cressid receiving the sleeve of Troilus and giving him her glove in the comedy of Histriomastix, 1610. I think that the satire was pointed at the older drama of Decker and Chettle; and should certainly give a later date to the play of Shakspeare than that which has been assigned to it. If we may credit the preface to the 4to. of 1609, this play had not then appeared on the stage, and could not therefore have been ridiculed in a piece written previous to the death of Queen Elizabeth (see note on Act iv. Sc. 4.) Malone says, 'Were it not for the entry in the Stationers' books; of which there is no proof that it relates to this play; I should have been led, both by the colour of the style, and from this preface, to class it in the year 1608.'

There is no reason for concluding with Schlegel that Shakspeare intended his drama as 'one continued irony of the crown of all heroic tales—the tale of Troy.' The poet abandoned the classic and followed the gothic or romantic authorities; and this influenced the colour of his performance. The fact probably is, that he pursued the manner in which parts of the story had been before dramatised. There is an interlude on the subject of Thersites,* resembling the Old Mysteries in its structure, but full of the lowest buffoonery. If the drama of Decker and Chettle were now to be found, I doubt not we should see that the present play was at least founded on it, if not a mere refaccimento.†

The whole catalogue of the Dramatis Personæ in the play of Troilus and Cressida (says Mr. Godwin,) so far as they depend upon a rich and original vein of humour in the author, are drawn with a felicity which never was surpassed. The genius of Homer has been a topic of admiration to almost every generation of men since the period in which he wrote. But his characters will not bear the slightest comparison with the delineation of the same characters as they stand in Shakspeare. This is a species of honour which ought by no means to be forgotten when we are making the eulogium of our immortal bard, a sort of illustration of his greatness which cannot fail to place it in a very conspicuous light. The dispositions of men, perhaps, had not been sufficiently unfolded in the very early period of intellectual refinement when Homer wrote; the rays of humour had not been dissected by the glass, or rendered perdurable by the rays of the poet. Homer's characters are drawn with a laudable portion of variety and consistency; but his Achilles, his Ajax, and his Nestor are, each of them, rather a species than an individual, and can boast more of the propriety of abstraction than of the vivacity of the moving scene of absolute life. The Achilles, Ajax, and the various Grecian heroes of Shakspeare, on the other hand, are absolutely men deficient in nothing which can tend to individualise them, and already touched with the Promethean fire that might infuse a soul into what, without it, were lifeless form. From the rest, perhaps, the character of Thersites form. deserves to be selected (how cold and schoolboy a sketch in Homer,) as exhibiting an appropriate vein of sarcastic humour amidst his cowardice, and a profoundness and truth in his mode of laying open the foibles of those about him, impossible to be excelled.‡

* This interlude, together with another not less curious, called Jack Juggler, was reprinted from a unique copy by Mr. Haslewood for the Roxburgh club. I owe to the friendly kindness of that gentleman the marked distinction of possessing one of four additional copies printed for friends not members of that society. These rude dramas are not mere literary curiosities, they form a prominent feature in the history of the progress of the stage, and are otherwise valuable as illustrating the state of manners and language in the reign of Henry

'Shakspeare possessed, no man in a higher perfection, the true dignity and loftiness of the poetical afflatus, which he had displayed in many of the finest passages of his works with miraculous success. But he knew that no man ever was, or ever can be always dignified. He knew that those subtler traits of character which identify a man are familiar and relaxed, pervaded with passion, and not played off with an eye to external decorum. In this respect the peculiarities of Shakspeare's genius are no where more forcibly illustrated than in the play we are here considering.'

† The champions of Greece and Troy, from the hour in which their names were first recorded, had always worn a certain formality of attire, and marched with a slow and measured step. No poet, till this time, had ever ventured to force them out of the manner which their epic creator had given them. Shakspeare first supplied their limbs, took from them the classic stiffness of their gait, and enriched them with an entire set of those attributes which might render them completely beings of the same species with ourselves.‡

PREFACE

TO THE QUARTO EDITION OF THIS PLAY, 1609.

A never writer, to an ever reader. Newes.

ETERNALL reader, you have heere a new play, never stal'd with the stage, never clapper-claw'd with the palmes of the vulgar, and yet passing full of the palme comical; for it is a birth of your braine, that never under-tooke any thing comically, vainely: and were but the vaine names of commedies change for the titles of commodities, or of playes for pleas; you should see all those grand censors, that now stile them such vanities, flock to them for the maine grace of their gravities; especially this authors commedies, that are so fram'd to the life, that they serve for the most common commentaries of all the actions of our lives, shewing such a dexteritie and power of witte, that the most displeased with playes, are pleased with his commedies. And all such dull and heavy witted worldlings, as were never capable of the witte of a commedie, comming by report of them to his representations, have found that witte there, that they never found in them-selves, and have parted better-witted than they came: feeling an edge of witte set upon them, more than ever they dream'd they had braine to grind it on. So much and such savored salt of witte is in his commedies, that they seem (for their height of pleasure) to be borne in that sea that brought forth Venus. Amongst all there is none more witty than this: and had I time I would comment upon it, though I know it needs not (for so much as will make you think your testern well bestowd,) but for so much worth, as even poore I know to be stuf in it. It deserves such a labour, as well as the best commedie in Terence or Plautus. And beleve this, that when hee is gone, and his commedies out of sale, you will scramble for them, and set up a new English inquisition. Take this for a warning, and at the perill of your pleasures losse, and judgements, refuse not, nor like this the lesse, for not being sullied with the smoaky breath of the multitude; but thank fortune for the escape it hath made amongst you. Since by the grand possessors wills I believe you should have prayd for them rather then beene prayd. And so I leave all such to hee prayd for (for the states of their wits healths) that will not praise it.—Vale.

the Eighth. I have found colloquial phrases and words explained by them, of which it would be vain to seek illustrations elsewhere.

† Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed that there are more hard bombastical phrases in this play than can be picked out of any other six plays of Shakspeare. Would not this be an additional argument in favour of what I have here advanced, that it may be a mere alteration of the older play above mentioned?

PROLOGUE.¹

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
 The princes orgulous,² their high blood chaf'd,
 Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
 Fraught with the ministers and instruments
 Of cruel war: Sixty and nine, that wore
 Their crowns regal, from the Athenian bay
 Put forth toward Phrygia: and their vow is made,
 To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
 The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
 With wanton Paris sleeps; And that's the quarrel.
 To Tenedos they come;
 And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
 Their warlike freightage:³ Now on Dardan plains
 The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
 Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
 Dardan, and Tymbria, Ilios, Chetas, Trojan,
 And Antenorides, with massy staples,
 And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
 Sperr⁴ up the sons of Troy.
 Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
 On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
 Sets all on hazard: And hither am I come,
 A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
 Of author's pen, or actor's voice; but suited
 In like conditions as our argument,—
 To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
 Leaps o'er the vaunt⁵ and firstlings of those broils,
 'Ginning in the middle; starting thence away
 To what may be digested in a play.
 Like or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
 Now, good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Troy. Before Priam's Palace. Enter
 TROILUS armed, and PANDARUS.

Troilus.

CALL here my varlet,⁶ I'll unarm again:
 Why should I war without the walls of Troy,

That find such cruel battle here within?
 Each Trojan, that is master of his heart,
 Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength.

Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant;
 But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
 Tamer than sleep, fonder⁷ than ignorance;
 Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
 And skill-less as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part I'll not meddle nor make no further. He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening: but here's yet in the word—hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,
 Doth lesser blench⁸ at sufferance than I do.

At Priam's royal table do I sit;
 And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,— So, traitor!—when she comes!—When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—When my heart,
 As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain,
 Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,
 I have (as when the sun doth light a storm,)
 Bury'd this sigh in wrinkle of a smile:

⁶ This word which we have from the old French varlet or vadlet, anciently signified a groom, a servant of the meaner sort. Holinshed, speaking of the battle of Agincourt, says, 'Diverse were releevied by their varlets and conveyed out of the field.' Colgrave says, 'In old time it was a more honourable title; for all young gentlemen until they came to be eighteen yeres of age were so termed.' He says, the term came into disesteem in the reign of Francis I. till when the gentle men of the king's chamber were called valets de chambre. In one of our old statutes, 1 Henry IV. c. 7, anno 1399, are these words:—'Et que nulle vadlet appelle yoman preigne ne use nulle liveres du roi ne de null autre seigneur sur peine de imprisonment.'

⁷ I. e. in addition to. This kind of phraseology occurs in Macbeth, Act I. Sc. ii.; see note there.

⁸ I. e. more weak or foolish. Dryden has taken this speech as it stands in his alteration of this play, except that he has changed skill-less, in the last line, to artless, which, as Johnson observes, is no improvement.

⁹ To blench is to shrink, start, or fly off. See Hamlet, Act ii. Sc. 2.

¹ This prologue is wanting in the quarto editions. Steevens thinks that it is not by Shakspeare; and that perhaps the drama itself is not entirely of his construction. It appears to have escaped Heminge and Condell, the editors of the first folio, until the volume was almost printed off; and is thrust in between the tragedies and histories without any enumeration of pages, except on one leaf. There seems to have been a previous play on the same subject by Henry Chettle and Thomas Decker. Entries appear in the accounts of Henslowe of money advanced to them in earnest of Troylles and Cressida, in April and May, 1599.

² Orgulous, proud, disdainful; orgueilleux, Fr.

³ Freight.

⁴ Sperr or spar, to close, fasten, or bar up.

⁵ I. e. the avant, what went before. Thus in Lear:—
 'Vaunt couriers to oak-cleaving thunderbolts.'

What is now called the ran of an army was formerly called the vaunt-guard.

But sorrow, that is couch'd in seeming gladness,
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's (well, go to,) there were no more comparison between the women.—But, for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her.—But I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit; but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tell thee, There my hopes lie drown'd,
Reply not in how many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressid's love: Thou answer'st, She is fair;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice,
Handlest in thy discourse;—O, that her hand!¹
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach; To whose soft seizure
The cygnet down is harsh, and spirit of sense²
Hard as the palm of ploughman! This thou tell'st me,
As true thou tell'st me, when I say—I love her;
But, saying, thus, instead of oil and balm,
Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given me
The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. 'Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is; if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.³

Tro. Good Pandarus! How now, Pandarus?

Pan. I have had my labour for my travel; ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you; gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with me?

Pan. Because she is kin to me, therefore, she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not, an she were a black-a-moor; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I, she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father;⁴ let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me; I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit PANDARUS. An Alarum.]

¹ Handlest is here used metaphorically, with an allusion, at the same time, to its literal meaning. The same play on the words is in Titus Andronicus:—

'O handle not the theme, to talk of hands,
Lest we remember still that we have none!'

Steevens remarks that the beauty of a female hand seems to have had a strong impression on the poet's mind. Antony cannot endure that the hand of Cleopatra should be touched.

² Warburton rashly altered this to '—spite of sense.'—Hammer reads: '—to th' spirit of sense.' Which is considered right and necessary by Mason. Johnson does not rightly understand the passage, and therefore erroneously explains it. It appears to me to mean 'The spirit of sense (i.e. sensation,) in touching the cygnet's down, is harsh and hard as the palm of a ploughman, compared to the sensation of softness in pressing Cressid's hand.'

³ 'She has the mends in her own hands' is a proverbial phrase common in our old writers, which probably signifies 'It is her own fault; or the remedy lies with herself.'

⁴ Calchas, according to the Old Troy Book, was 'a great learned bishop of Troy,' who was sent by Priam to consult the oracle of Delphi concerning the event of the war which threatened Agamemnon. As soon as he had made 'his oblations and demands for them of Troy, Apollo answered unto him saying, Calchas, Calchas, beware thou returne not back againe to Troy, but goe thou with Achylles unto the Greekes, and depart never

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,

When with your blood you daily paint her thus.

I cannot fight upon this argument;

It is too starv'd a subject for my sword.

But, Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague me!

I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar;

And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo,

As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit.

Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,

What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?

Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl;

Between our Ilium,⁵ and where she resides,

Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood;

Ourselves, the merchant; and their sailing Pandar,⁶

Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

Alarum. Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. How now, Prince Troilus? wherefore not afield?

Tro. Because not there; This woman's answer sorts,⁸

For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Æneas, from the field to-day?

Æne. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Æneas?

Æne.

Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to scorn;
Paris is go'd with Menelaus' horn. [Alarum.]

Æne. Hark! what good sport is out of town to-day!

Tro. Better at home, if would I might, were may.—

But, to the sport abroad;—Are you bound thither?

Æne. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we then together [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The Same. A Street. Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba, and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

Alex.

Up to the eastern tower,

Whose height commands as subject all the vale,

To see the battle. Hector, whose patience

Is, as a virtue, fix'd, to-day was mov'd:

He chid Andromache, and struck his armourer;

And, like as there were husbandry⁹ in war,

Before the sun rose, he was harness'd light,¹⁰

And to the field goes he; where every flower

Did, as a prophet, weep¹¹ what it foresaw

In Hector's wrath.

from them, for the Greekes shall have victorie of the Trojans, by the agreement of the gods.'—Hist. of the Destruction of Troy, translated by Caxton, ed. 1617. The prudent bishop immediately joined the Greeks.

⁵ Ilium, properly speaking, is the name of the city; Troy that of the country. But Shakspeare, following the Troy Book, gives that name to Priam's palace, said to have been built upon a high rock.

⁶ 'This punk is one of Cupid's carriers;
Clap on more sails,' &c.

Merry Wives of Windsor

⁷ Troilus was pronounced by Shakspeare and his contemporaries as a dissyllable. Pope has once or twice fallen into the same error.

⁸ i.e. fits, suits, is congruous. So in King Henry V.:
'It sorte well with thy fierceness.'

⁹ Husbandry is thrift. Thus in King Henry V.:—

'—our bad neighbours make us early stirrers,

Which is both healthful and good husbandry.'

¹⁰ The commentators have all taken light here as referring to armour. Poor Theobald, who seems to have had a suspicion that it did not, falls under the lash of Warburton for his temerity. Light, however, here has no reference to the mode in which Hector was armed, but to the legidity or alacrity with which he armed himself before sunrise. Light and lightly are often used for nimbly, quickly, readily, by our old writers. No expression is more common than 'light of foot.' And Shakspeare has even used 'light of ear.'

¹¹ 'And when she weeps, weeps every little flower, Lamenting,' &c. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, this: There is among the Greeks

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;
They call him, Ajax.

Cres. Good; And what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se,¹
And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions;² he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant;
a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours that his valour is crushed³ into folly, his folly sauced with discretion; there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of; nor any man an attain, but he carries some stain of it; he is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair;⁴ He hath the joints of every thing; but every thing so out of joint, that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say, he yesterday coped Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid: What do you talk of?—Good morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of, when I came?
Was Hector armed, and gone, ere ye came to Ilium? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so; Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too:
he'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that;
and there is Troilus will not come far behind him;
let them take heed of Troilus; I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O, Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector?
Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Ay, if ever I saw him before, and knew
him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

¹ i. e. an extraordinary or incomparable person, like the letter A by itself. The usual mode of this old expression is A per se. Thus in Henrysoun's Testament of Cresseid, wrongly attributed by Steevens to Chaucer:—

'Of faire Cresseide, the floure and a per se of Troy and Grece.'

² Their titles, marks of distinction or denominations. The term in this sense is originally forsenic.

'Whereby he doth receive

Particular additions from the bill

That writes them all alike.' Macbeth.

³ i. e. confused and mingled with folly. So in Cymbeline:—

'Crush him together, rather than unfold
His incasure duly.'

Pan. Himself? Alas, poor Troilus! I would, he were,—

Cres. So he is.

Pan. — Condition, I had gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself.—'Would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; Time must friend, or end: Well, Troilus, well,—I would, my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. The other's not come to't; you shall tell me another tale when the other's come to't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities;—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him, his own's better Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore the other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour (for so 'tis, I must confess,)—Not brown neither.

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. 'Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief, Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think, Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek,⁵ indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into a compassed⁶ window,— and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young: and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?⁷

Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him;—she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin,—

Cres. Juno have mercy!—How came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think, his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to, then:—But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus? why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens if the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh to think how

⁴ Equivalent to a phrase still in use—Against the grain. The French say a contre poil.

⁵ See Twelfth Night, Act iv. Sc. 1.

⁶ A compassed window is a circular bow window.
The same epithet is applied to the cape of a woman's gown in the Taming of the Shrew:—'A small compassed cape.' A coved ceiling is yet in some places called a compassed ceiling.

⁷ Lifter, a term for a thief; from the Gothic hliftus
Thus in Holland's Leaguer, 1638:—'Broker, or pander, cheater, or lifter.' Dryden uses the verb to lift, for to rob. Shop-lifter is still used for one who robs a shop.

she tickled his chin;—Indeed, she has a marvellous white head, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing;—Queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones.¹

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was a more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes;—Did her eyes run o'er too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that. One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white: That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons.

Jupiter! quoth she, which of these hairs is Paris my husband? The forked one, quoth he; pluck it out, and give it him. But, there was such laughing!

And Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.²

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn, 'tis true; he will weep you, an'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an'twere a nettle against May. [A Retreat sounded.]

Pan. Hark, they are coming from the field: Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass toward Ilium? good niece, do; sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

ÆNEAS passes over the stage.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

Pan. That's Æneas; Is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

ANTENOR passes over.

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit,³ I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person:—When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon; if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.⁴

HECTOR passes over.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that;

1 So in King Richard III. :—

'Your eyes drop mill stones, when fools' eyes drop tears.'

2 i. e. passed all expression. Cressida plays on the word as used by Pandarus, by employing it herself in its common acceptance.

3 According to Lydgate,—

'Antenor was—

Copious in words, and one that much time spent

To jest, when as he was in companie,

So drolly, that no man could it espie;

And therewith held his countenance so well,

That every man received great content

There's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector;—There's a brave man, niece. O brave Hector!—Look, how he looks! there's a countenance: Is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pan. Is 'a not? It does a man's heart good—Look you what hacks are on his helmet? look you yonder, do you see? look you there! There's no jesting: there's laying on; take't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

PARIS passes over.

Pan. Swords? any thing, he cares not: an the devil come to him, it's all one: By God's lid, it does one's heart good:—Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: look ye yonder, niece; Is't not a gallant man too, is't not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who said, he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now. Ha! would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

HELENUS passes over.

Pan. That's Helenus,—I marvel where Troilus is:—That's Helenus; I think he went not forth to day:—That's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus? no:—yes, he'll fight indifferently well:—I marvel, where Troilus is!—Hark; do you not hear the people cry, Troilus?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes over.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus: 'Tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him;—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece; look you, how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hack'd than Hector's: And how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Forces pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die i' the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles; a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well?—why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

To hear him speake, and pretty jests to tell,

When he was pleasant and in merriment:

For tho' that he most commonly was sad,

Yet in his speech some jest he always had.

Such, in the hands of a rude English poet, is the grave Antenor; to whose wisdom it was thought necessary that the art of Ulysses should be opposed:—

'Et moveo Priamum, Priamoque Antenora junctum.'

1 To give the nod was a term in the game at cards called Noddy. The word also signifies a silly fellow. Cressid means to call Pandarus a noddy, and says he shall by more nods be made more significantly a fool.

Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be baked with no date¹ in the pie,—for then the man's date is out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward² you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too; if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding, and then it is past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROIILUS' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come: [Exit Boy. I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle,—

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token—you are a bawd.—

[Exit PANDARUS.

Words, vows, griefs, tears, and love's full sacrifice, He offers in another's enterprise:

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see

Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be;

Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing:

Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing: That she³ beloved knows nought that knows not this,—

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is;

That she was never yet, that ever knew

Love got so sweet, as when desire did sue:

Therefore this maxim out of love I teach,—

Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech:⁴

Then though my heart's content firm love doth bear, Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.

[Exit.

SCENE III. The Grecian Camp. Before Agamemnon's Tent. Trumpets. Enter AGAMEMNON, NESTOR, ULYSSES, MENELAUS, and others.

Agam. Princes,

What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?

The ample proposition, that hope makes

In all designs begun on earth below,

Fails in the promis'd largeness; checks and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd:

As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain

Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Nor, princes, is it matter new to us,

That we come short of our suppose so far,

¹ Dates were an ingredient in ancient pastry of almost every kind. The same quibble occurs in Alf's Well that Ends Well, Act i. Sc. 1.

² A metaphor from the art of defence. Falstaff, King Henry IV. Part I. says, 'Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay,' &c.

³ That she, means that woman.

⁴ 'Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech.' The meaning of this obscure line seems to be, 'Men after possession become our commanders; before it they are our suppliants.'

'My heart's content,' in the next line, probably signifies my will, my desire.

⁵ Joined by affinity. The same adjective occurs in Othello:—

'If partially affin'd, or leagu'd in office.'

⁶ The throne in which thou sittest like a descended god.

⁷ To apply here is used for to bend the mind, or attend particularly to Agamemnon's words. As in the following passage from Barot: 'To attende or applied

That, after seven years' siege, yet Troy walls stand;

Sith every action that hath gone before, Whereof we have record, trial did draw Bias and thwart, not answering the aim, And that unbodied figure of the thought That gave't surmised shape. Why, then, you princes,

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works; And think them shames, which are, indeed, nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove, To find persistent constancy in men? The fineness of which metal is not found In fortune's love: for then, the bold and coward, The wise and fool, the artist and unread, The hard and soft, seem all *affin'd*⁸ and kin. But, in the wind and tempest of her frown, Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan, Puffing at all, winnows the light away; And what hath mass, or matter, by itself Lies rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat,⁹ Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply⁷

Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men: The sea being smooth, How many shallow bawble boats dare sail Upon her patient breast, making their way With those of nobler bulk;

But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage The gentle Thetis, and anon, behold The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut,

Bounding between the two moist elements, Like Perseus' horse:¹⁰ Where's then the saucy boat,

Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now Co-rival'd greatness? either to harbour flood, Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so Doth valour's show, and valour's worth, divide In storms of fortune: For, in her ray and brightness,

The herd hath more annoyance by the brize,¹¹ Than by the tiger: but when the splitting wind Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, And flies fled under shade, Why, then, the thing of courage,

As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,¹² And, with an accent tun'd in self-same key, Returns to chiding fortune.¹¹

Ulyss.

Agamemnon,—

Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece, Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit, In whom the tempers and the minds of all Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks.

Besides the applause and approbation The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,—

[To AGAMEMNON.

And thou, most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,—

[To NESTOR.

I give to both your speeches,—which were such, As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece

Should hold up high in brass; and such again,

his witte to something, and to give his minde unto it.' The example cited by Malone, from The Nice Wanton, is not to the purpose, the word there is used as we now use to ply. As in another example from Barot, 'With diligent endeavour to applied their studies.'

⁸ Pegasus was, strictly speaking, Bellerophon's horse, but Shakespeare followed the old Troy Book. 'Of the blood that issued out [from Medusa's head] there engendered Pegasus or the flying horse. By the flying horse that was engendered of the blood issued from her head, is understood that of her riches issuing of that realm he [Perseus] founded, and made a ship named Pegasus, and this ship was likened unto an horse flying,' &c. In another place we are told that this ship, which the writer always calls Perseus' flying horse, 'flew on the sea like unto a bird.' Destruction of Troy, &c. 1617, p. 155-164.

⁹ The gadfly that stings cattle.

¹⁰ It is said of the tiger, that in stormy and high winds he rages and roars most furiously.

¹¹ i. e. replies to noisy or clamorous fortune.

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air (strong as the axletree
On which heaven rides) knit all the Greekish ears
To his experienced tongue,¹—yet let it please both,—

Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Agam. Speak, prince of Ithaca; and be't of less expect²

That matter needless, of importless burden,
Divide thy lips; than we are confident,
When rank Thersites opes his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,
And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
But for these instances.

The specialty of rule³ hath been neglected:
And, look, how many Grecian tents do stand
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected? Degree being vizarded,
The unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.
The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,⁴

Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order:
And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the other; whose medicinal eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check, to good and bad: But when the planets,
In evil mixture, to disorder wander,⁵
What plagues, and what portents? what mutiny?
What raging of the sea? shaking of earth?
Commotion in the winds? frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married⁶ calm of states
Quite from their fixture? O, when degree is shak'd,
Which is the ladder of all high designs,
The enterprise is sick! How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods⁷ in cities,
Peaceful commerce from dividable⁸ shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentic place?
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets
In mere⁹ oppugnancy: The bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe!¹⁰

1 How much the commentators have perplexed themselves and their readers about the following passage!
'—speeches,—which were such,

As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again,
As venerable Nestor hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air —

— knit all the Greekish ears
To his experienced tongue.'

Ulysses evidently means to say that Agamemnon's speech should be writ in brass; and that venerable Nestor, with his silver hairs, by his speech should draw the attention of all Greece. The phrase hatch'd in silver, which has been the stumbling-block, is a simile borrowed from the art of design; to hatch being to fill a design with a number of consecutive fine lines; and to hatch in silver was a design inlaid with lines of silver, a process often used for the hilts of swords, handles of daggers, and stocks of pistols. The lines of the graver on a plate of metal are still called hatchings. Hence hatch'd in silver, for silver-haired or gray-haired. Thus in Love in a Maze, 1632:—

'Thy hair is fine as gold, thy chin is hatch'd
With silver.'

2 Expect for expectation.

3 The particular rights of supreme authority

4 i. e. this globe. According to the system of Ptolemy, the earth is the centre round which the planets move.

5 The apparent irregular motions of the planets were supposed to portend some disasters to mankind: indeed the planets themselves were not thought formerly to be confined in any fixed orbits of their own, but to wander about ad libitum, as the etymology of their name demonstrates

Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike his father dead:
Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong,
(Between whose endless jar justice resides,)
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.

Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perform an universal prey,
And, last, eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
This chaos, when degree is suffocate,
Follows the choking.

And this neglect¹¹ of degree it is,
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb.¹² The general's disdain'd
By him one step below; he, by the next;
That next, by him beneath: so every step,
Exempl'd by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emulation:
And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd
The fever whereof all our power¹³ is sick.

Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
What is the remedy?

Ulyss. The great Achilles,—whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehead of our host,—

Having his ear full of his airy fame,¹⁴
Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
Lies mocking our designs: With him, Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed the livelong day
Breaks scurril jests;

And with ridiculous and awkward action
(Which, slauderer, he imitation calls,)
He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon,
Thy topless¹⁵ deputation he puts on;

And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit
Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound

'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,¹⁶
Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming¹⁷
He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks

'Tis like a chime a-mending; with terms unsquar'd,¹⁸
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd,
Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff,
The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;

Cries—Excellent!—'tis Agamemnon just.—

6 The epithet married, to denote an intimate union, is employed also by Milton:—

— Lydian airs

Married to immortal verse.'

7 Confraternities, corporations, companies.

8 Dividable for divided, as corrigible for corrected, in Antony and Cleopatra. The termination ble is often thus used by Shakespeare for ed.

9 i. e. absolute.

10 So in Lear:—'I'll make a sop of the moonshine of you.' In a former speech a boat is said to be made a loaf for Neptune.

11 This uncommon word occurs again in Pericles, 1609:—

'If neglection,
Should therein make me vile.'

12 'That goes backward step by step, with a design in each man to aggrandize himself by slighting his immediate superior.'

13 Army, force.

14 Verbal eulogium. In Macbeth called mouth honour.

15 Supreme, sovereign.

16 And topless honours he bestow'd on thee.'

Blind Beggar of Alexandria, 1598.

16 Malone's sagacious note informs us that 'the galleries of the theatre were sometimes called the scaffoldage.' This may be very true, but what has it to do with the present passage? The scaffoldage here is the floor of the stage, the wooden dialogue is between the player's foot and the boards. A scaffold more frequently meant the stage itself than the gallery: Thus Baret, 'A scaffold or stage where to behold plays. Spectaculum, theatrum.'

17 i. e. overstrained, wrested beyond true semblance

18 i. e. unsuited, unfitted.

Now play me Nestor;—hem, and stroke thy beard,
As he, being drest to some oration.
That's done;—as near as the extremest ends
Of parallels;¹ as like as Vulcan and his wife:

Yet good Achilles still cries, Excellent!
'Tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night alarm.
And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth; to cough, and spit,
And, with a palsy-fumbling² on his gorget,
Shake in and out the rivet:—and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries, O!—enough, Patroclus;—
Or give me ribs of steel; I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleen. And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Severals and generals of grace exact,³
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Success, or loss, what is, or is not, serves
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain, (Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice,) many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-will'd; and bears his head
In such a rein,⁴ in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles: keeps his tent like him;
Makes factious feasts: rails on our state of war,
Bold as an oracle: and sets Theristes
(A slave, whose gall coins slanders like a mint,)
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How rank soever rounded in with danger.⁵

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;
Count wisdom as no member of the war;
Forestall prescience, and esteem no act
But that of hand: the still and mental parts,—
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness calls them on: and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity:
They call this—bed-work, mappery, closet-war;
So that the ram, that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine;
Or those, that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse Makes many Thetis' sons. [Trumpet sounds.

Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Men. From Troy.

Agam. What would you 'fore our tent?

Æne. Is this

Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray?

Agam.

Even this.

Æne. May one, that is a herald, and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm
'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
Call Agamemnon head and general.

Æne. Fair leave, and large security. How may

¹ Johnson says 'the allusion seems to be made to the parallels on a map. As like as east to west.'

² Paralytic fumbling.

³ Grace exact seems to mean decorous habits.

⁴ I. e. carries himself haughtily; bridles up. See Cotgrave in 'Scenogorger.'

⁵ How rank soever rounded in with danger. How strongly soever encompassed by danger. So in King Henry V. —

'How dread an army hath enrounded him.'

⁶ And yet this was the seventh year of the war. Shakspeare, who so wonderfully preserves character, usually confounds the customs of all nations, and probably supposed that the ancients (like the heroes of chivalry) fought with beavers to their helmets. In the fourth act of this play, Nestor says to Hector:—

'But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now.'

Those who are acquainted with the embellishments of ancient manuscripts and books, well know that the artists gave the costume of their own time to all ages. But in this anachronism they have been countenanced by other ancient poets as well as Shakspeare.

A stranger to those most imperial looks,
Know them from eyes of other mortals?'

Agam.

How?

Æne. Ay;

I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phœbus:

Which is that god in office, guiding men?

Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan scorns us: or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonair, unarm'd,
As bending angels; that's their fame in peace:
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords: and, Jove's accord:—

Nothing so full of heart.' But peace, Æneas,
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!

The worthiness of praise distains his worth,

If that the praise'd himself bring the praise forth:

But what the repining enemy commends,

That breath fame follows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Æneas?

Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?

Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Agam. He hears nought privately that comes from Troy.

Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him:

I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;

To set his sense on the attentive bent,

And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly⁷ as the wind;

It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:

That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,

He tells thee so himself.

Æne.

Trumpet, blow loud,

Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;—

And every Greek of mettle, let him know,

What Troy means fairly, shall be spoke aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy,

A prince call'd Hector, (Priam is his father,)

Who in this dull and long-continued truce⁸

Is rusty grown; he bade me take a trumpet,

And to this purpose speak. Kings, princes, lords!

If there be one among the fairest of Greece,

That holds his honour higher than his ease;

That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;

That knows his valour, and knows not his fear;

That loves his mistress more than in confession,⁹

(With truant vows to her own lips he loves),

And dare avow her beauty and her worth,

In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge,

Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,

Shall make it good, or do his best to do it,

He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,

Than ever Greek did compass in his arms;

And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,

Mid-way between your tents and walls of Troy,

To rouse a Grecian that is true in love;

⁷ Malone and Steevens see difficulties in this passage; the former proposed to read 'Jove's a god,' the latter, 'Love's a lord.' There is no point after the word accord in the quarto copy, which reads 'great Jove's accord.' Theobald's interpretation of the passage is, I think, nearly correct:—'They have galls, good arms, &c. and Jove's consent:—Nothing is so full of heart as they.' I have placed a colon at accord, by which the sense is rendered clearer.

⁸ So Jacques, in As You Like It:—

'I must have liberty

Withal, as large a charter as the wind,

To blow on whom I please.'

⁹ Of this long truce there has been no notice taken; in this very act it is said, that 'Ajax coped Hector yesterday in the battle.' Shakspeare found in the seventh chapter of the third book of The Destruction of Troy, that a truce was agreed on, at the desire of the Trojans, for six months.

¹⁰ Confession for profession, 'made with idle vows to the lips of her whom he loves.'

If any come, Hector shall honour him ;
If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sun-burn'd, and not worth
The splinter of a lance.¹ Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, lord Æneas :
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home : But we are soldiers :
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love !
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector ; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd : he is old now ;
But, if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man, that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his love, tell him from me,—
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantage² put this wither'd brawn ;
And, meeting him, will tell him, That my lady
Was fairer than his grandame, and as chaste
As may be in the world : His youth in flood,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Æne. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth !
Ulyss. Amen.

Agam. Fair lord Æneas, let me touch your hand ;
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir.
Achilles shall have word of this intent ;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent :
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but ULYSSES and NESTOR.]

Ulyss. Nestor,—

Nest. What says Ulysses ?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain,
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is't ?

Ulyss. This 'tis :

Blunt wedges rive hard knots : The seeded pride
That hath to this maturity blown up⁴
In rank Achilles, must or now be crop'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of ill evil,
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how ?

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,

However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,

Whose grossness little characters sum up :⁵

And in the publication make no strain,⁶

But that Achilles, were his brain as barren

As banks of Libya,—though Apollo knows,

'Tis dry enough,—will with great speed of judgment,

Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose

Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you ?

Nest. Yes.

¹ Stevens remarks that this is the language of romance. Such a challenge would have better suited Palmerin or Amadis, than Hector or Æneas.

² An armour for the arm. Avant bras. Milton uses the word in Samson Agonistes, and Heywood in his Iron Age, 1632 :—

'—peruse his armour,

The dint's still in the vantage.'

³ Be you to my present purpose what time is in respect of all other schemes, viz. a ripener and bringer of them to maturity.

⁴ Thus in the Rape of Lucrece :—

'How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,

When thus thy vices bud before thy spring !'

⁵ 'The intent is as plain and palpable as substance, and it is to be collected from small circumstances, as a gross body is made up of many small parts.' This is the scope of Warburton's explanation, to which I incline.
Stevens says that 'substance is estate, the value of which is ascertained by the use of small characters, i. e.
numerals : grossness is the gross sum.'

⁶ Make no difficulty, no doubt, when this duel comes to be proclaimed, but that Achilles, dull as he is, will discover the drift of it. Thus in a subsequent scene Ulysses says :—

'I do not strain at the position,
It is familiar !'

It is most meet ; Whom may you else oppose,
That can from Hector bring those honours off,
If not Achilles ? Thought't be a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion dwells ;
For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute
With their fin'st palate : And trust to me, Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action : for the success,
Although particular, shall give a scantling⁷
Of good or bad unto the general ;
And in such indexes, although small pricks⁸
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
He that meets Hector, issues from our choice :
And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election ; and doth boil,
As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues ; Who miscarrying,
What heart receives from hence a conquering part,
To steal a strong opinion to themselves ?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,
In no less working, than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech ;—

Therefore 'tis meet, Achilles meet not Hector.

Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,

And think, perchance, they'll sell ; if not,

The lustre of the better shall exceed,

By showing the worse first.⁹ Do not consent,

That ever Hector and Achilles meet ;

For both our honour and our shame, in this,

Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes ; what are they ?

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector

Were he not proud we all should share with him ?

But he already is too insolent ;

And we were better parch in Afric sun,

Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,

Should he 'scape Hector fair : if he were foil'd,

Why, then we did our main opinion¹⁰ crush

In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery ;

And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw

The sort¹¹ to fight with Hector : Among ourselves,

Give him allowance for the better man,

For that will physic the great Myrmidon,

Who broils in loud applause ; and make him fall

His crest, that prouder than blue Iris bends.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,¹²

We'll dress him up in voices ; If he fail,

Yet go we under our opinion¹³ still

That we have better men. But, hit or miss,

Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,—

Ajax, employ'd, plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Ulysses,

Now I begin to relish thy advice :

And I will give a taste of it forthwith

⁷ A scantling is a measure, a proportion. 'When the lion's skin will not suffice, we must add a scantling of the fox's.' Montaigne's Essays, by Florio, 1603.

⁸ i. e. small points compared with the volumes. Indexes were formerly often prefixed to books.

⁹ The folio reads :—

'The lustre of the better, yet to show

Shall show the better.'

But as the quarto copy of the play is generally more correct than the folio, it has been followed. Malona thinks that some arbitrary alterations have been made in the text of this play by the editors of the folio.

¹⁰ Opinion for estimation or reputation. See King Henry IV. Part I. Act v. Sc. iv. The word occurs before in this scene, in the same sense :—

'Yet in the trial much opinion dwells.'

¹¹ Lot. Sort, Fr. sors, Lat. Thus Lydgate :—

'Of sorte also and divynation.'

¹² Shakespeare, misled by The Destruction of Troy, appears to have confounded Ajax Telamonius with Ajax Oileus, for in that book the latter is called simply Ajax, as the more eminent of the two. 'Ajax was of a huge stature, great and large in the shoulders, great armed, and always was well clothed, and very richly, and was of no great enterprise, and spake very quicke,'

¹³ See note 10.

To Agamemnon : go we to him straight.
Two curs shall tame each other : Pride alone
Must tarre¹ the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.²SCENE I. Another part of the Grecian Camp.
Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. Agamemnon—how if he had boils ? full, all over, generally ?

Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. And those boils did run ?—Say so,—did not the general run then ? were not that a botchy core ?

Ajax. Dog,—
Ther. Then would come some matter from him ;
I see none now.

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear ?
Feel, then. [Strikes him.]

Ther. The plague of Greece³ upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord !⁴

Ajax. Speak, then, thou unsalted leaven,⁵ speak !
I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness : but, I think, thy horse will sooner can an oration, than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou ? a red murrain⁶ o' thy jade's tricks !

Ajax. Toads-stool, learn me the proclamation.
Ther. Dost thou think, I have no sense, thou strikest me thus ?

Ajax. The proclamation,—
Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not ; my fingers itch.
Ther. I would, thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee ; I would make thee the loathsome scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou striketh as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation,— Ther. Thou grumblest and railest every hour on Achilles ; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness, as Cerberus at of Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou barkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites !
Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobloaf !
Ther. He would pun⁷ thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. You whoreson cur ! [Beating him.]

Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch !
Ther. Ay, do, do ; thou sodden-witted lord ! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows : an assinico⁸ may tutor thee : Thou scurvy-valiant ass ! thou art here put to thrash Trojans ; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slave. If thou use⁹ to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou !

1 I. e. urge, stimulate, or set the mastiffs on. See King John, Act iv. Sc. 1.

2 This play is not divided into acts in any of the original editions.

3 Alluding to the plague sent by Apollo on the Grecian army.

4 He calls Ajax mongrel, on account of his father being a Grecian and his mother a Trojan. Sir Andrew Aguecheek says, in Twelfth Night, 'I am a great eater of beef, and I believe that does harm to my wit.'

5 The folio has 'thou whinidst leaven,' a corruption undoubtedly of vineyard or vinniedst, i. e. mouldy leaven. Thou unsalted leaven, is as much as to say,
'thou foolish lump.'

6 In The Tempest, Caliban says, 'The red plague rid you.'

7 Cobloaf is perhaps equivalent to ill shapen lump.
Minsheu says, a cob-loaf is a little loaf made with a round head, such as cob loons which support the fire.

8 I. e. pound ; still in use provincially. It is related of a Staffordshire servant of Miss Seward, that hearing

Ajax. You dog !

Ther. You scurvy lord !

Ajax. You cur !

[Beating him.]
Ther. Mars his idiot ! do, rudeness ; do, camel ;
do, do.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax ? wherefore do you
thus ?

How now, Thersites ? what's the matter, man ?

Ther. You see him there, do you ?

Achil. Ay ; what's the matter ?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do ; What's the matter ?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why, I do so.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him : for whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters ! his evasions have ears thus long. I have bobb'd his brain, more than he has beat my bones ;
I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pro-
*mater*¹¹ is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow.
This, lord Achilles, Ajax,—who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What ?

Ther. I say, this Ajax—

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

[AJAX offers to strike him, ACHILLES interposes.]

Ther. Has not so much wit—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool !

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not : he there ; that he ; look you there

Ajax. O thou damned cur ! I shall—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's ?

Ther. No, I warrant you : for a fool's will shame it.

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel ?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl, go learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.¹²

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary ; no man is beaten voluntary ; Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. Even so ?—a great deal of your wit tor-lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either o' your brains ;¹³ 'a were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites ?

Ther. There's Ulysses, and old Nestor,—whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on his mistress knock with her foot to call up her attendant he said, 'Hark ! madam I punning.'

9 The commentators changed this word to asinico and then erroneously affirm it to be Portuguese. It is evidently from the Spanish asinico, a young or little ass, a word indeed entirely similar in sound, and seems to have been adopted into our language to signify a silly ass, a stupid fellow. The Italians and French have several kindred terms with the same meaning. Shakspeare may have used the word for an ass driver, confounding it with asinaccio or asinato ; like the French gros-asnier, used to denote the most gross stupidity or folly.

10 I. e. 'if you accustom yourself, or make it a practice to beat me.'

11 See vol. i. p. 104.

12 Voluntarily. Another instance of an adjective used adverbially.

13 The same thought occurs in Cymbeline—

'Not Hercules
Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had none.'

their toes,—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth; To, Achilles! to, Ajax! to! Achil. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou, afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach¹ bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents; I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools.

[Exit.]

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this sir, is proclaimed through all our host:

That Hector, by the first hour of the sun, Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy, To-morrow morning call some knight to arms, That hath a stomach; and such a one, that dare Maintain—I know not what; 'tis trash: Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not, it is put to lottery: otherwise, He knew his man.

Ajax. O, meaning you:—I'll go learn more of it.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter PRIAM, HECTOR, TROILUS, PARIS, and HELENUS.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent, Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks;

Deliver Helen, and all damage else—

As honour, loss of time, travel, expense,

Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consum'd

In hot digestion of this cormorant war,

Shall be struck off:—Hector, what say you to't?

Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,

As far as toucheth my particular, yet,

Dread Priam,

There is no lady of more softer bowels,

More spungy to suck in the sense of fear,

More ready to cry out—Who knows what follows?

Than Hector is: The wound of peace is surety,

Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd

The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches

To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Every tithes soul, 'mongst many thousand dimes,³

Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours:

If we have lost so many tenths of ours,

To guard a thing not ours; not worth to us,

Had it our name, the value of one ten

What merit's in that reason, which denies

The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fye, fye, my brother!

Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,

So great as our dread father, in a scale

Of common ounces? will you with counters sum

The past-proportion of his infinite?⁴

And buckle in a waist most fathomless,

With spans and inches so diminutive

¹ Both the old copies read brooch, which may be right; for we find monile and bullia in the dictionaries interpreted 'a bosse, an hart; a brooch, or jewel of a round compass to hang about one's neck.' It has been observed that Thersites afterwards call's Patroclus Achilles's male harlot, and his maesculine whore. The term brach was suggested by Rowe, and which later editors have continued in the text, has been already explained, it is 'a mannerly name for all hound-bitches.'

² Who knows what ill consequences may follow from pursuing this or that course?

³ Dime is properly tenths or tythes, but dismes is here used for tens.

⁴ i. e. that greatness to which no measure bears any proportion.

⁵ i. e. consideration, regard to consequences.

⁶ 'The will dotes that attributes or gives the qualities which it affects: that first causes excellence, and then admires it. The folio reads inclinable, the quarto attributive.

As fears and reasons? fye, for godly shame!

Hec. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,

You are so empty of them. Should not our father Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,

Because your speech hath none that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest,

You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your reasons:

You know, an enemy intends you harm;

You know, a sword employ'd is perilous,

And reason flies the object of all harm;

Who marvels, then, when Helenus beholds

A Grecian and his sword, if he do set

The very wings of reason to his heels;

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,

Or like a star disorb'd?—Nay, if we talk of reason,

Let's shut our gates and sleep: Manhood and honour

Should have hare hearts, would they but fat their thoughts

With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect⁵

Make livers pale, and lustihood deject.

Hect. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost

The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 'tis valued?

Hect. But value dwells not in particular will;

It holds his estimate and dignity

As well wherein 'tis precious of itself

As in the prizer: 'tis mad idolatry,

To make the service greater than the god;

And the will dotes, that is attributive

To what infectiously itself affects,⁶

Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election

Is led on in the conduct of my will;

My will, enkindled by mine eyes and ears,

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores

Of will and judgment: How may I avoid,

Although my will distaste what it elected,

The wife I choose? There can be no evasion

To blench⁷ from this, and to stand firm by honour:

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,

When we have soil'd them; nor the remainder viands

We do not throw in unrespective sieve,⁸

Because we now are full. It was thought meet,

Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:

Your breath with full consent bellied his sails;

The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,

And did him service! he touch'd the ports desir'd;

And, for an old aunt,⁹ whom the Greeks held captive,

He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and fresh-

ness

Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning.

Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:

Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,

Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,

And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.

If you'll avouch, 'twas wisdom Paris went,

(As you must needs, for you all cry'd—Go, go,)

If you'll confess, he brought home noble prize,

(As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,

And cry'd—Inestimable!) why do you now

The issue of your proper wisdoms rate;

And do a deed that fortune never did,¹¹

Beggar the estimation which you priz'd

Richer than sea and land? O theft most base;

⁷ i. e. under the guidance of my will.

⁸ See p. 156, note 9.

⁹ That is, into a common voider. It is well known that sieves and half sieves are baskets, to be met with in every quarter of Covent Garden: and baskets lined with tin are still employed as voiders. In the former of these senses sieve is used in The Wits, by Sir W. Davenant—

'—apple-wives

That wrangle for a sieve.'

¹⁰ Dr. Farmer says, that in some counties the baskets used for carrying out dirt, &c. are called sieves. The folio copy reads by mistake 'unrespective sume.'

¹¹ Priam's sister, Hesione.

¹² Fortune was never so unjust and mutable as to rate a thing on one day above all price, and on the next to set no estimation whatsoever upon it. You are doing what Fortune, inconstant as she is, never did

That we have stolen what we do fear to keep!
But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!
Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?

Tro. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voice.

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!

Hec. It is Cassandra.

Enter CASSANDRA, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hec. Peace, sister, peace.

Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled elders,¹

Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of moan to come.
Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears!
Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand;²
Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all.³
Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a woe:
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.

Hec. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains

Of divination in our sister, work
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it;
Nor once deject the courage of our minds
Because Cassandra's mad: her brainsick raptures
Cannot distaste⁴ the goodness of a quarrel,
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make it gracious.⁵ For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst us
Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince⁶ of levity
As well my undertakings, as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent?
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project.
For what, alas! can these my single arms?
What propagation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet I protest,
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak

Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant, is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself

The pleasures such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soul of her fair rape⁸
Wip'd off, in honourable keeping her.

What treason were it to the ransack'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up,
On terms of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a strain as this
Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?
There's not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unfam'd,
Where Helen is the subject: then, I say,
Well may we fight for her, whom we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hec. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said well:
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glaz'd,⁹—but superficially; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle¹⁰ thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy:
The reasons you allege, do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; For pleasure, and revenge,
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves,
All dues be render'd to their owners; Now
What nearer debt in all humanity,
Than wife is to the husband? if this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection;
And that great minds, of¹¹ partial indulgence
To their benumbed wills, resist the same;
There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen, then, be wife to Sparta's king,—
As it is known she is,—these moral laws
Of nature, and of nations, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: Thus to persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion
Is this, in way of truth: yet, nevertheless,
My spritely brethren, I propend¹² to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependance
Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:

Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds:
Whose present courage may beat down our foes;
And fame, in time to come, canonize us:¹³
For I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

Hec.

I am yours,

1 The quarto thus. The folio reads 'wrinkled old,' which Ritson thinks should be 'wrinkled old.' Shakspeare has 'idle-headed old,' and 'palsied old,' in other places.

2 See p. 157, note 5. This line brings to mind one in the second book of the Æneid :—

'Trojaque nunc staret, Priamique arx alta maneres.'

3 Hecuba, when pregnant with Paris, dreamed she should be delivered of a burning torch.—Æneid, x. 705.

4 Corrupt, change to a worse state.

5 I. e. to make it graceful, to grace it, to set it off.

6 To convince and to convict were synonymous with our ancestors. The word was also used for to overcome, and will generally be found in Shakspeare with that signification. See Baret's Alvearie, C. 1244.

7 Consent is agreement, accord, approbation.

8 Rape and ravishment anciently signified only seizing or carrying away. Indeed the Rape of Helen is merely Raptus Helenæ, without any idea of personal violence.

9 Glaz'd here means commented. See King Henry V. Act i. Sc. 2.

10 We may be amused at Hector's mention of Aristotle, but 'Let it be remembered (says Steevens) as often as Shakspeare's anachronisms occur, that errors in computing time were very frequent in those ancient romances which seem to have formed the greater part of his library.' These old writers perhaps did not think an attention to chronology any part of the duty of a writer of works of fiction. Indeed one of the most fertile and distinguished writers of the present age, in his admirable historical novels, blends circumstances of various periods, and exhibits persons on the stage of action together who were not contemporaries; yet his language, manners, and costume are in admirable keeping through.

11 Incline to, as a question of honour.

13 'The hope of being registered as a saint is rather out of its place at so early a period as this of the Trojan war,' says Steevens. It is not so meant, the expression must not be taken literally; it merely means be 'inscribed among the heroes or demigods.' 'Ascribi numinibus' is rendered by old translators, 'to be canonized, or made a saint.'

You valiant offspring of great Priamus.—
I have a roisting¹ challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Who strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advertis'd, their great general slept,
Whilst emulation² in the army crept;
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent. Enter THERSITES.

Ther. How now, Thersites? what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! 'twould, it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me: 'Sfoot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles, —a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caduceus;³ if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they have! which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons, and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather, the bone-ache!⁴ for that, methinks, is the curse dependant on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers; and devil, envy, say Amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites? Good Thersites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit,⁵ thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contemplation; but it is no matter; Thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood⁶ be thy direction till thy death! then if she, that lays thee out, says—thou art a fair corse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen.—Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay; The heavens hear me!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come; what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles:—Then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites; Then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus; Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayest tell, that knowest.

1 Blustering.

2 Emulation is here put for envious rivalry, factious contention. It is generally used by Shakspeare in this sense: the reason will appear from the following definition:—'To have envie to some man, to be angry with another man which hath that which we covet to have, to envy at that which another man hath, to studie, indevour, and travaile to do as well as another: emulation is such kinde of envy.'

3 The wand of Mercury is wreathed with serpents. So Martial, lib. vii. epig. lxxiv.—

'Cyllenes colique decus! facunde minister Aurea cul torto virga draconis viret.'

4 In the quarto 'the Neapolitan bone-ache!'

5 To understand this joke it should be known that counterfeit and stip were synonymous:—'And therefore he went out and got him certain stips, which are counterfeit pieces of money, being brasse, and covered over with silver, which the common people call stips.'

Achil. O, tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord: I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.⁷

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool; I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileged man.—Proceed, Thersites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool: Thersites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this; come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.⁸

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover.—It sut fices me, thou art. Look you, who comes here!

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIO-MEDES, and AJAX.

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody:—Come in with me, Thersites. [Exit.]

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is, a cuckold and a whore; a good quarrel, to draw emulous⁹ factions, and bleed to death upon! Now the dry *serpigo*¹⁰ on the subject! and war, and lechery, confound all! [Exit.]

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent: but ill dispos'd, my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him, that we are here. He shent¹¹ our messengers; and we lay by Our appertainments, visiting of him:

Let him be told so; lest, perchance, he think, We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit.]

Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent; He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: But why, why? let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord.

[Takes AGAMEMNON aside.]

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

Nest. Who? Thersites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see he is his argument, that has his argument; Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish, than their faction: But it was a strong composition,¹² a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie. Here comes Patroclus.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.¹³

Greene's Thieves falling out, true Men come by their Goods.

6 Thy blood means thy passions, thy natural propensities.

7 The four next speeches are not in the quarto.

8 The grammatical allusion is still pursued, the first degree of comparison is here alluded to.

9 See Act ii. Sc. 2.

10 The serpigo is a kind of tetter.

11 Rebuked, reprimanded. See Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. ii. note the last. Instead of shent the folio reads sent: the quarto, sate.

12 The folio reads counsel.

13 It was one of the errors of our old Natural History, to assert that an elephant, 'being unapt to lie down, sate leaning against a tree, which the hunters observing, do saw it almost asunder; whereon the beast relying, by the fall of the tree, falls also down itself and is able to rise no more.'

Patr. Achilles bids me say—he is much sorry, If any thing more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness, and this noble state! To call upon him; he hopes, it is no other, But, for your health and your digestion sake, An after-dinner's breath.¹

Agam. Hear you, Patroclus;— We are too well acquainted with these answers: But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions. Much attribute he hath; and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues,— Not virtuously on his own part beheld,— Do, in our eyes, begin to lose their gloss; Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him, We come to speak with him: And you shall not sin, If you do say—we think him over-proud, And under-honest; in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself

Here tend the savage strangeness³ he puts on; Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite⁴ in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch His pettish luns,⁵ his ebbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this; and add, That, if he overhold his price so much, We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report— Bring action hither, this cannot go to war: A stirring dwarf we do allowance⁶ give Before a sleeping giant:—Tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied, We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter.

[Exit ULYSSES.]

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think, he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say —he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind's the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud, eats up himself: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle: and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.⁷

1 This stately train of attending nobles.

2 Breath for breathing; i. e. exercise, relaxation.

'It is the breathing time of the day with me.'

3 i. e. attend upon the brutish distant arrogance or rude haughtiness he assumes. Thus in Proverbs, xxi. 8:—'The way of man is froward and strang.'

4 To underwrite is synonymous with to subscribe, which is used by Shakespeare in several places for to yield, to submit.

5 Fitful lunacies. The quarto reads:—

'His course and time, his ebbs and flows, and if The passage and whole stream of his commencement Rode on his tide.'

6 Allowance is approbation.

7 We have this sentiment before in Act I. Sc. 3:—

'The worthiness of praise disdains his worth, If that the praise'd himself the praise bring forth.'

Malone has cited a passage from Coriolanus in both instances, which has nothing in it of similar sentiment, and which he could neither comprehend nor explain. See Coriolanus, Act iv. Sc. 7.

8 See Goldsmith's History of the Earth and Animated Nature.

9 'The genius and the mortal instruments Are then in council; and the state of man, Like to a little kingdom, suffers then The nature of an insurrection.'—Julius Caesar.

10 Alluding to the decisive spots appearing on those

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.⁹

Nest. And yet he loves himself: Is it not strange? [Aside.]

Re-enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none;

But carries on the stream of his dispose, Without observance or respect of any, In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request, Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only,

He makes important: Possess'd he is with greatness;

And speaks not to himself, but with a pride That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse, That, 'twixt his mental and his active parts, Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,⁹ And batters down himself: What should I say? He is so plaguily proud, that the death tokens¹⁰ on his Cry—No recovery.

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent:

'Tis said, he holds you well: and will be lent,

At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!

We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes

When they go from Achilles; Shall the proud lord,

That bastes his arrogance with his own seam;¹¹

And never suffers matter of the world

Enter his thoughts,—save such as do revolve

And ruminate himself,—shall he be worshipp'd

Of that we hold an idol more than he?

No, this thrice worthy and right valiant lord

Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;

Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit,

As amply titled as Achilles is,

By going to Achilles:

That were to enlarge his fat-already pride;

And add more coals to Cancer,¹² when he burns

With entertaining great Hyperion.

This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid,

And say in thunder—Achilles, go to him.

Nest. O, this is well; he rubs the vein of him.

[Aside.]

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause!

[Aside.]

Ajax. If I go to him, with my arm'd fist I'll pash¹³ him

Over the face.

Agam. O, no, you shall not go.

Ajax. An he be proud with me, I'll pheeze¹⁴ his pride:

Let me go to him.

Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.¹⁵

infected with the plague. 'Spots of a dark complexion, usually called tokens, and looked on as the pledges or forewarnings of death.'—Hodges on the Plague.

'Now like the fearful tokens of the plague, Are mere forerunners of their ends.'

Beaumont and Fletcher's Valentinian.

11 Seam is fat. The grease, fat, or tallow of any animal; but chiefly applied to that of a hog.

12 The sign in the zodiac, into which the sun enters June 21.

'And Cancer reddens with the solar blaze.'

Thomson.

13 Scyphus ei impactus est.

He was pashed over the pate with a pot.

The word is used twice by Massinger in his Virgin Martyr; and Mr. Gifford has adduced an instance from Dryden; he justly observes, it is to be regretted that the word is now obsolete, as we have none that can adequately supply its place. To dash signifying to throw one thing with violence against another; to pash is to strike a thing with such force as to crush it to pieces.

14 See note on the Induction to the Taming of the Shrew.

15 Not for the value of that for which we are fighting

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow! — Nest. How he describes Himself! [Aside.]
Ajax. Can he not be sociable?
Ulyss. The raven
Chides blackness. [Aside.
Ajax. I will let his humours blood.¹ Agam. He'll be the physician, that should be the patient. [Aside.
Ajax. An all men
Were o' my mind, —
Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion. [Aside.
Ajax. He should not bear it so,
He should eat swords first; Shall pride carry it?
Nest. An 'twould, you'd carry half. [Aside.
Ulyss. He'd have ten shares. [Aside.
Ajax. I'll knead him, I will make him supple: — Nest. He's not yet thorough warm: force² him with praises:
Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry. [Aside.
Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.
[To AGAMEMNON.
Nest. O noble general, do not do so.
Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.
Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.
Here is a man — But 'tis before his face;
I will be silent.
Nest. Wherefore should you so?
He is not emulous,³ as Achilles is.
Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.
Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter⁴ thus with us!
I would, he were a Trojan!
Nest. What a vice
Were it in Ajax now —
Ulyss. If he were proud?
Dio. Or covetous of praise?
Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne?
Dio. Or strange, or self-affected?
Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure;
Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee suck:
Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice-fam'd, beyond all erudition:⁵
But he that disciplin'd thy arms to fight,
Let Mars divide eternity in twain,
And give him half: and, for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition⁶ yield
To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,
Which, like a bourn,⁷ a pale, a shore, confines
Thy spacious and dilated parts: Here's Nestor, —
Instructed by the antiquary times,
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise; —
But pardon, father Nestor, were your days
As green as Ajax', and your brain so temper'd,
You should not have the eminence of him,
But be as Ajax.
Ajax. Shall I call you father?⁸
Nest. Ay, my good son.
Dio. Be rul'd by him, lord Ajax.
Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the hart Achilles Keeps thicket. Please it our great general
To call together all his state of war;
Fresh kings are come to Troy: To-morrow,
We must with all our main of power stand fast:

And here's a lord, — come knights from east to west,
And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.
Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep:
Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I. Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.
Enter PANDARUS and a Servant.

Pan. Friend! you! pray you, a word: Do not you follow the young lord Paris?
Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.
Pan. You do depend upon him, I mean?
Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.
Pan. You do depend upon a noble gentleman;
I must needs praise him.
Serv. The lord be praised!
Pan. You know me, do you not?
Serv. 'Faith, sir, superficially.
Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the Lord
Pandarus.
Serv. I hope, I shall know your honour better.⁹
Pan. I do desire it.
Serv. You are in the state of grace.

[Music within.
Pan. Grace! not so, friend! honour and lordship are my titles: — What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir; it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?
Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?
Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?
Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.

Pan. Command, I mean, friend.
Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another; I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning: At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir: Marry, sir, at the request of Paris, my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul, —

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen: Could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a com-plimental assault upon him, for my business seeths.

Serv. Sudden business! there's a stewed phrase,
indeed!

Enter PARIS and HELEN, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them! especially to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen. —
Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Par. You have broke it, cousin: and, by my life, you shall make it whole again; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance: — Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

dividing one place from another. As in the line of the old ballad Edgar sings in Lear, Act iii. Sc. 6: —

'Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me.'

⁸ Shakespeare probably had a custom prevalent about his own time in his thoughts. Ben Jonson had many who called themselves his sons. Cotton dedicates his book on Angling to his father Walton; and Ashmole, in his Diary observes, 'April 3, Mr. William Backhouse of Swallowfield, in com. Berks, caused me to call him father thenceforward.'

⁹ The servant means to quibble. He hopes Pandarus will become a better man than he is at present. In his next speech he chooses to understand Pandarus as if he had said he wished to grow better; and hence the servant affirms that he is in the state of grace.

¹ There is a curious collection of Epigrams, Satires, &c. printed in 1600, with this quaint title: — 'The Letting of Humours Blood in the Head Vaine.' A small reimpression was made at Edinburgh in 1815, with a preface and notes by Sir Walter Scott.

² Force him, that is stuff him: furcir, Fr. In another place of this play we have, 'malice forced with wit.'

³ See the preceding scene.

⁴ To palter is to shuffle, equivocate.

⁵ The quarto reads: —

'Thrice fam'd beyond all thy erudition.'

⁶ i. e. yield his titles, his celebrity for strength. See Act i. Sc. 2.

⁷ A bound is a boundary, and sometimes a rivulet,

Helen. O, sir,—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in fits.¹

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen:—My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.—But (marry) thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus—

Helen. My Lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody; If you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, i'faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad, is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; no, no.—²And, my lord, he desires you, nat, if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My Lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups he to-night?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.³

Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposer⁴ Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter, you are wide; come, your disposer is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say—Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick.

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy?—Come, give me an instrument!—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pan. He! no, she'll none of him: they two are twain.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, prythee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love; this love will undo us all. O, Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, i' faith.

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, oh, love's bow

Shoots buck and doe:

The shaft confounds,

Not that it wounds,

But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! ho! they die!

Yet that which seems the wound to kill,

Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!

So dying love lives still:

Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!

Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Hey ho!

Helen. In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are vipers: Is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-night, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something;—you know all, Lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen.

[Exit.]

[A Retreat sounded.]

Par. They are come from field; let us to Priam's hall,

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles, With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd, Shall more obey, than to the edge of steel, Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings, disarm great Hector.

Helen. 'Twill make us proud to be his servant,

Paris:

Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty,

Gives us more palm in beauty than we have;

Yea, overshines ourself.

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Ezunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Pandarus' Orchard. Enter PANDARUS and a Servant, meeting.

Pan. How now? where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Serv. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter TROIUS.

Pan. O, here he comes.—How now, how now?

Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Servant.]

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,

Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks,

Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon,

And give me swift transporance to those fields,

Where I may wallow in the lily beds

Propos'd for the deserter! O gentle Pandarus,

From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,

And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here i' the orchard, I'll bring her straight. [Exit PANDARUS.]

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirls me round.

The imaginary relish is so sweet

That it enchants my sense; What will it be,

When that the watry palate tastes indeed

Love's thrice-reputed nectar; death, I fear me;

Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine,

Too subtle potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness.

For the capacity of my ruder powers:

I fear it much; and I do fear besides,

That I shall lose distinction in my joys;⁵

¹ A quibble is intended. A fit was a part or division of a song or tune. The equivocal lies between fits, starts, or sudden impulses, and fits in its musical acceptance.

² And, my lord, &c. I think with Johnson, that the speech of Pandarus should begin here; and that the former part should be added to that of Helen.

³ You must not know where he sups.³ These words in the old copies are erroneously given to Helen.

⁴ Steevens would give this speech to Helen, and read deposer instead of disposer. Helen, he thinks, may address herself to Pandarus; and by her deposer, mean that Cressida had deposed her in the affections of Troilus.

Disposer appears to have been an equivalent term anciently for steward, or manager. If the speech is to be attributed to Helen, she may mean to call Cressid her hand-maid.

⁵ — ubi jam amborum fuerat confusa voluptas.⁵
Sappho's Epistle to Phaon

As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight:
you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were fray'd with a sprite; I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath as short as a newta'en sparrow.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encount'ring
The eye of majesty.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Here she is now; swear the oaths now to her, that you have sworn to me.—What, are you gone again? you must be watch'd ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.²—Why do you not speak to her?—
Come, draw the curtain, and let's see your picture,
Alas the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress.³ How now, a kiss in fee-farm!⁴ build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out, ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel,⁵ for all the ducks i' the river; go to, go to.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's —*In witness whereof the parties interchangeably*⁶—
Come in, come in; I'll go get a fire.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O, Cressida, how often have I wished me
thus?

Cres. Wished, my lord?—The gods grant!—O
my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abrupture? What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: To fear the worst, oft cures the worst.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all
Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.⁷

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrosity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.

1 Hawks were tamed by keeping them from sleep;
and thus Pandarus meant that Cressida should be tamed.
See Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. Sc. 1.

2 I. e. the shafts. Pills or fills is the term in the midland counties for the shafts of a cart or wagon.

3 The allusion is to bowling; what is now called the jack was formerly termed the mistress. A bowl that kisses the jack or mistress is in the most advantageous situation. Rub on is a term in the game. See Cymbeline, Act ii. Sc. 1.

4 A kiss in fee-farm is a kiss of duration, that has bounds, a fee-farm being a grant of lands in fee; that is, for ever reserving a certain rent. The same idea is expressed much more poetically in Coriolanus, when the jargon of law was absent from the poet's thoughts:—
"O, a kiss

Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!"

5 The tercel is the male and the falcon the female

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are there such? such are not we: Praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare, till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert, before his birth; and, being born, his addition⁸ shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressida, as what envy can say worst, shall be a mock for his truth;⁹ and what truth can speak truest, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that; if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me: Be true to my lord:
if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word, and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too; our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant, being won: they are burs, I can tell you: they'll stick were they are thrown.¹⁰

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me
heart:—

Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day
For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord,
With the first glance that ever—Pardon me;—
If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much.
But I might master it: in faith, I lie;
My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown
Too headstrong for their mother: See, we fools!

Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?
But, though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man;
Or that we women had men's privilege
Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue;
For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence,
Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel: Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Pan. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you pardon me;
'Twas not my purpose, thus to beg a kiss:
I am ashamed;—O heavens! what have I done?—
For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning,—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

hawk. Pandarus appears to mean that he will back the falcon against the tercel, or match his niece against her lover for any bet.

6 Shakspeare had here an idea in his thoughts that he has elsewhere often expressed. Thus in a future page:—"Go to, a bargain made; seal it."

7 From this passage a Fear appears to have been a personage in other pageants, or perhaps in our ancient moralities. To this circumstance Aspatia alludes in The Maid's Tragedy:—

"—and then a Fear
Do that Fear bravely, wench."

8 I. e. we will give him no high or pompous titles.
9 Even malice (i. e. envy) shall not be able to impeach his truth, or attach him in any other way, except by ridiculing him for his constancy.

10 We have this allusion in Measure for Measure:—
'Nay, friar, I am a kind of bur, I shall stick.'

Tro. You cannot shun Yourself

Cres. Let me go and try:
I have a kind of self resides with you;
But an unkind self, that itself will leave,
To be another's fool. I would be gone:
Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more craft than love;

And fell so roundly to a large confession,
To angle for your thoughts: But you are wise;
Or else you love not; For to be wise, and love,
Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.¹

Tro. O, that I thought it could be in a woman,
(As, if it can, I will presume in you),
To feed for aye² her lamp and flames of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth,
Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays!
Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me,—
That my integrity and truth to you
Might be affronted³ with the match and weight
Of such a winnow'd purity in love;
How were I then uplifted! but, alas,
I am as true as truth's simplicity,
And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars who shall be most right!
True swains in love shall, in the world to come,
Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,⁴
Want similes of truth, tir'd with iteration,⁵—
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,⁶
As sun to-day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,—
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
As true as Troilus shall crown up⁷ the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing; yet let memory,
From false to false, among false maids in love, Upbraid my falsehood! when they have said—as false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,

1 Cressida's meaning appears to be, 'Perchance I fell too roundly to confession, in order to angle for your thoughts; but you are not so easily taken in; you are too wise, or too indifferent; for to be wise, and love, exceeds man's might.' The thought originally belongs to Publius Syrus:—'Amare et asperare vix Deo conceditur.'

2 Troilus alludes to the perpetual lamps, which were supposed to illuminate sepulchres.

— lasting flames, that burn

To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn.

See Pericles, Act II. Sc. I.

2 Met with and equalled. See Hamlet, Act III. Sc. 1:

— That he, as 'twere by accident, may here affront Ophelia.

4 Comparisons.

5 In the old copy this line stands:—

'Wants similes truth tird with iteration.'

The emendation was proposed by Mr. Tyrwhitt.

6 Plantage is here put for any thing planted, which was thought to depend for its success upon the influence of the moon. 'The poore husbandman perceiveth that the increase of the moone maketh plants fruitfull; so as in the full moone they are in their best strength; decaying in the wane; and in the conjunction do utterly wither and vade.'—Scott's Discoverie of Witchcraft.

7 i. e. conclude it. Finis coronat opus.

8 Hammer altered this to 'inconstant men;' but the poet seems to have been less attentive to make Pandarus talk consequentially, than to account for the ideas actually annexed to the three names in his own time.

9 The old copies all concur in reading—

'That through the sight I bear in things to love.'

As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son;
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
As false as Cressid.

Pan. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it:
I'll be the witness.—Here I hold your hand; here, my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all—Pandars; let all constant⁸ men be Troiluses, all false women Cressidas, and all brokers-between Pandars! say, amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber and a bed, which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press it to death: away.

And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here,
Bed, chamber, Pandar, to provide this gear.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The Grecian Camp. Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES, NESTOR, AJAX, MENELAUS, and CALCHAS.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind,
That, through the sight I bear in things, to Jove⁹
I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession,
Incur'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself,
From certain and possess'd conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes; sequester'd from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition,
Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become
As new into¹⁰ the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which you say, live to come in my behalf.

Agam. What would'st thou of us, Trojan? make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor,
Yesterday took; Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you (often have you thanks therefore,) Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied: But this Antenor,
I know, is such a wrest¹¹ in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,

Which Steevens thinks may be explained:—'No longer assisting Troy with my advice, I have left it to the dominion of love, to the consequences of the amour of Paris and Helen.' The present reading of the text is supported by Johnson and Malone; to which Mason makes this objection:—'That it was Juno and not Jove that persecuted the Trojans. Jove wished them well, and though we may abandon a man to his enemies, we cannot, with propriety, say that we abandon him to his friends.' Some modern editions have the line thus:—

'That through the sight I bear in things to come.'
Which is an emendation to which I must confess I incline: for, as Mason observes, 'the speech of Calchas would have been incomplete, if he had said he abandon'd Troy, from the eight he bore of things, without explaining it by adding the words to come.'

The merit of Calchas did not merely consist in having come over to the Greeks; he also revealed to them the fate of Troy, which depended on their conveying away the palladium, and the horses of Rhesus, before they should drink of the river Xanthus.

10 Into for unto; a common form of expression in old writers. Thus in the Pastou Letters, vol. II. p. 5:—
'And they that have justed with him into this day, have been as richly beseen,' &c.

11 A wrest is an instrument for tuning harps, &c. by drawing up the strings. Its form may be seen in some of the illuminated service-books, where David is represented; in the Second Part of Mercurius's Harmonics; and in the Syntagma of Praetorius, vol. II. fig. xix. So in King James's Edict against Combats, &c. p. 43:—

'This small instrument the tongue, being Kept in tune by the wrest of awa.'

In change of him : let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter ; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
In most accepted pain.¹

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither ; Calchas shall have
What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange :
Withal, bring word—if Hector will to-morrow
Be answer'd in his challenge : Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake ; and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt DIOMEDES and CALCHAS.]

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, before their Tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands i' the entrance of his tent :—

Please it you general to pass strangely by him,
As if he were forgot ; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him ;
I will come last : 'Tis like, he'll question me,
Why such unplausible eyes are bent, why turn'd on
him :

If so, I have derision med'cinable,
To use between our strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink ;
It may do good : pride hath no other glass
To show itself, but pride ; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on
A form of strangeness as we pass along ;
So do each lord ; and either greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me ?
You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agam. What says Achilles ? would he aught
with us ?

Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general ?

Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agam. The better.

[Exeunt AGAMEMNON and NESTOR.]

Achil. Good day, good day.
Men. How do you ? how do you ?

[Exit MENELAUS.]

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me ?
Ajax. How now, Patroclus ?

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha ?

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too.

[Exit AJAX.]

Achil. What mean these fellows ? Know they not Achilles ?

Patr. They pass by strangely : they were us'd to bend,

To send their smiles before them to Achilles ;

To come as humbly, as they us'd to creep

To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late ?

'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too : What the declin'd is,
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others,
As feel in his own fall : for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mealy wings, but to the summer ;
And not a man, for being simply man,

Hath any honour ; but honour for those honours
That are without him, as place, riches, favour,
Prizes of accident as oft as merit :
Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me :
Fortune and I are friends ; I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,
Save these men's looks : who do, methinks, find out

Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses ;

I'll interrupt his reading.—

How now, Ulysses ?

Ulyss.

Now, great Thetis' son ?

Achil. What are you reading.

Ulyss.

A strange fellow here

Writes me, That man—how dearly ever parted,²
How much in having, or without, or in,—
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection ;
As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they retort that heat again
To the first giver.

Achil.

This is not strange, Ulysses.

The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
To others' eyes : nor doth the eye itself
(That most pure spirit of sense,) behold itself,³
Not going from itself ; but eye to eye oppos'd
Salutes each other with each other's form.
For speculation⁴ turns not to itself,
Till it hath travell'd, and is married there
Where it may see itself : this is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position,

It is familiar ; but at the author's drift :

Who, in his circumstance,⁵ expressly proves—

That no man is the lord of any thing, (Though in and of him there be much consisting,)
Till he communicate his parts to others :

Nor doth he of himself know them for aught

Till he behold them form'd in the applause

Where they are extended ; which,⁶ like an arch, reverberates

The voice again ; or like a gate of steel

Fronting the sun, receives and renders back

His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this ;

And apprehended here immediately

The unknown Ajax.⁷

Heavens, what a man is there ! a very horse ;

That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,

Most abject in regard, and dear in use !

What things again most dear in the esteem,

And poor in worth ! Now shall we see to-morrow,

An act that very chance doth throw upon him,—

Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,

While some men leave to do !

How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,

Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes !

How one man eats into another's pride,

While pride is fasting in his wantonness !

To see these Grecian lords !—why, even already

They clasp the lubber Ajax on the shoulder ;

As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,

And great Troy shrieking.⁸

Achil. I do believe it : for they passed by me,

As misers do by beggars : neither gave to me

Good word, nor look : What, are my deeds forgot ?

¹ Hammer and Warburton read, 'In most accepted pay.' But the construction of the passage, as it stands, appears to be, 'Her presence shall strike off, or recompense the service I have done, even in those labours which were most accepted.'

² However excellently endowed, with however dear or precious parts enriched.

³ Thus in Julius Cæsar :—

'No, Cassius ; for the eye sees not itself

But by reflection ; by some other things.'

⁴ Speculation has here the same meaning as in Macbeth :—

'Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with.'

⁵ Detail of argument.

⁶ The old copies read who, like an arch, reverberate ; which may mean, They who applaud reverberate. The elliptic mode of expression is in the poet's manner. Rowe made the alteration.

⁷ I. e. Ajax, who has abilities which were never brought into view or use.

⁸ The folio reads shrinking. The following passage in the subsequent scene seems to favour the reading of the quarto :—

'Hark, how Troy roars ; how Hecuba cries out ;
How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth ;
And all cry—Hector, Hector's dead.'

Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alow for oblivion;¹
A great-sized monster of ingratitudes:
Those scraps are good deeds past: which are devour'd

As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: Perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright: To have done, is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
For honour travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast: keep then the path;
For emulation hath a thousand sons,
That one by one pursue: If you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost:—
Or, like a gallant horse fallen in first rank,²
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear, O'er-run and trampled on: Then what they do in present,

Though less than yours in past, must o'er-top yours:
For time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand;
And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: Welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue seek

Remuneration for the thing it was;
For beauty, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time.
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,—
That all, with one consent, praise new-born gawds,³
Though they are made and moulded of things past;
And give to dust, that is a little gilt,
More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.⁴

The present eye praises the present object:
Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax;
Since things in motion sooner catch the eye,
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,
And still it might; and yet it may again,
If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in thy tent;
Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,

And drove great Mars to faction.

Achil. Of this my privacy
I have strong reasons.

Ulyss. But 'gainst your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroic:
'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.⁵

Achil. Ha! known?

Ulyss. Is that a wonder?

The providence that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold;
Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps;
Keeps place with thought,⁶ and almost, like the gods,
Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles.
There is a mystery (with whom relation Durst never meddle) in the soul of state;
Which hath an operation more divine,

1 This image is literally from Spenser:—
'And cke this wallet at your backe areare—'

* * * * *
And in this bag, which I behinde me don,
I put repentance for things past and gone.'

F. Q. b. vi. c. viii. st. 24.

2 The quarto wholly omits the simile of the horse, and reads thus:—

4 And leave you hindmost, then what they do at present.
3 New-fashioned toys.

4 Gilt, in this second line, is a substantive. See Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. 3. Dust a little gilt means ordinary performances, which have the gloss of novelty.
Gilt o'er-dusted means splendid actions of preceding ages, the remembrance of which is weakened by time.

5 i. e. the descent of deities to combat on either side.
Shakespeare probably followed Chapman's Homer: in the fifth book of the Iliad Diomed wounds Mars, who on

Than breath, or pen, can give expressure to:
All the commerce that you have had with Troy,
As perfectly is ours, as yours, or I ord;
And better would it fit Achilles' hand,
To throw down Hector, than Polyxena:
But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home,
When fame shall in our islands sound her trumpet;
And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing,—
Great Hector's sister did Achilles win;
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.
Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak;
The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.

[Exit.]

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd you:
A woman impudent and mannish grown,
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man
In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this;
They think, my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus:
Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air.⁷

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

Patr. Ay; and, perhaps, receive much honour by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake;
My fame is shrewdly go'd.⁸

Patr. O, then beware;
Those wounds heal ill, that men do give themselves:
Omission to do what is necessary,
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
And danger, like an ague, subtly taints
Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus;
I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
To invite the Trojan lords, after the combat,
To see us here unarm'd: I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;
To talk with him, and to behold his visage,
Even to my full view. A labour sav'd!

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself.

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector; and is so prophetically proud of an heroic cudgelling, that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock, a stride, and a stand: ruminates, like an hostess, that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard,⁹ as who should say—there were wit in this head, an 'twould out; and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking.¹⁰ The man's undone for ever: for if Hector break not his neck in the combat, he'll break it himself in vain-glory. He knows not me; I said, Good-morrow, Ajax; and he replies, Thanks, Agamemnon. What think you of this his return to heaven is rated by Jupiter for having interfered in the battle. This disobedience is the faction alluded to.

6 Polyxena, in the act of marrying whom, he was afterwards killed by Paris.

7 There is in the providence of a state, as in the providence of the universe, a kind of ubiquity. It is possible that there may be some allusion to the sublime description of the divine omnipresence in the 139th Psalm.

8 There is a secret administration of affairs, which no history was ever able to discover.

9 The folio has 'ayric air.'

10 So in Hamlet:—

'To keep thy name ungod'd.'

11 i. e. a sly look.

12 Thus in Julius Cæsar:—

'That carries anger, as the flint bears fire,
Who much enforced shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.'

man, that takes me for the general? He is grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, Thersites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in his arms.¹ I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make demands on me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: Tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe-conduct for his person, of the magnanimous, and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Ther. Humph!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent!—

Ther. Humph!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go on one way or other; howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not: But I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings² on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable³ creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd: And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.]

Ther. 'Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Troy. A Street. Enter, at one side, ÆNEAS, and Servant with a Torch; at the other, PARIS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTENOR, DIOMEDES, and others, with Torches.

Par. See, ho! who's that there?

Dei. 'Tis the lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lie long, As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dio. That's my mind too.—Good morrow, Lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas; take his hand: Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told—how Diomed, a whole week by days, Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir,

During all question⁴ of the gentle truce:

But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance, As heart can think, or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces. Our bloods are now in calm; and so long, health: But when contention and occasion meet, By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life, With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly With his face backward.—In humane gentleness, Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises' life, Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear,⁵ No man alive can love, in such a sort, The thing he means to kill more excellently.

Dio. We sympathize:—Jove, let Æneas live, If to my sword his fate be not the glory, A thousand complete courses of the sun! But, in mine emulous honour, let him die, With every joint a wound; and that to-morrow!

Æne. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despicable gentle greeting, The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—What business, lord, so early?

Æne. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you:⁶ 'Twas to bring this Greek

To Calchas' house; and there to render him, For the enfreed Antenor, the fair Cressid; Let's have your company; or if you please, Haste there before us: I constantly do think (Or, rather, call my thoughts a certain knowledge,) My brother Troilus lodges there to-night; Rouse him, and give him note of our approach, With the whole quality wherefore: I fear, We shall be much unwelcome.

Æne. That I assure you; Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece, Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help; The bitter disposition of the time Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Æne. Good morrow, all. [Exit.]

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed; 'faith, tell me true,

Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,— Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best, Myself, or Menelaus?

Dio. Both alike: He merits well to have her, that doth seek ner, (Not making any scruple of her soileure,) With such a hell of pain, and world of charge; And you as well to keep her, that defend her, (Not palating the taste of her dishonour,) With such a costly loss of wealth and friends: He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece; You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors: Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor more; But he as he, the heavier for a whore.⁷

Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

Dio. She's bitter to her country: Hear me, Paris,—

For every false drop in her bawdy veins A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple Of her contaminated carrion weight, A Trojan hath been slain: since she could speak, She hath not given so many good words breath. As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do, Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy: But we in silence hold this virtue well,— We'll not commend what we intend to sell.⁸ Here lies our way. [Exeunt.]

⁷ The merits of each being weighed are exactly equal; in each of the scales a harlot must be placed, since each of them has been equally attached to one.

⁸ Warburton would read:—

'We'll not commend what we intend not sell.' Not sell sounds harsh; but such elliptical expressions are not unfrequent in these plays.

¹ So in Macbeth:—'My voice is in my sword.'

² Lute-strings made of catgut. One of the musicians in Romeo and Juliet is named Simon Catling.

³ I. e. intelligent.

⁴ I. e. conversation while the truce lasts.

⁵ He swears first by the life of his father, and then by the hand of his mother.

⁶ I. e. I bring you his meaning and his orders.

SCENE II. The same. Court before the House of Pandarus. Enter TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself; the morn is cold.

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down;

He shall unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;

To bed, to bed: Sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses,
As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good morrow, then.

Tro. 'Pr'ythee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you aweary of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer,
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights²

she stays,

As tediously as hell; but flies the grasps of love,
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. 'Pr'ythee, tarry;—

You men will never tarry.——
O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off,
And then you would have tarried. Hark! there's one up.

Pan. [Within.] What, are all the doors open here?

Tro. It is your uncle.

*Enter PANDARUS.*³

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking:

I shall have such a life,——

Pan. How now, how now? how go maiden-heads?

—Here, you maid! where's my cousin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!

You bring me to do, and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what: what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come; beshrew your heart! you'll ne'er be good,

Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchia⁴—hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him!

Cres. Did I not tell you?—would he were knock'd o' the head!—

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—

My lord, come you again into my chamber:

You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no such thing.—

How earnestly they knock!—pray you, come in;

I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exit TROILUS and CRESSIDA.]

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now? what's the matter?

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Æneas? By my troth, I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Æne. Is not Prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

1 i. e. 'the roguish or thievish crows.' Ribaldry signified roguery, naughtiness, or loose conduct of any kind, among our ancestors. It may, however, be used in the sense of obscene.

2 i. e. venefic, those who use nocturnal sorcery.

3 The hint for the following scene appears to have been suggested by Chaucer. Troilus and Cresseide, b. iii. v. 1561.

4 Capocchia, an Italian word for fool.

Æne. Come, he is here, my lord, do not deny him; It doth import him much, to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know, I'll be sworn!—For my own part, I came in late: What should he do here?

Æne. Who!—nay, then.—Come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are 'ware: you'll be so true to him, to be false to him: Do not you know of him? yet go fetch him hither; go.

As PANDARUS is going out, enter TROILUS.

Tro. How now? what's the matter?

Æne. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,

My matter is so rash: There is at hand Paris your brother, and Deiphobus, The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith, Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour, We must give up to Diomedes' hand The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Æne. By Priam, and the general state of Troy: They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!

I will go meet them: and, my lord Æneas, We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Æne. Good, good, my lord; the secrets of nature

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exit TROILUS and ÆNEAS.]

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got, but lost? The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad. A plague upon Antenor, I would they had broke's neck!

Enter CRESSIDA.

Cres. How now? What is the matter? Who was here?

Pan. Ah, ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord gone?

Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. 'Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?

Pan. 'Pr'ythee, get thee in; 'Would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew, thou would'st be his death:—O poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you on my knees, I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone: thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus; 'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane: he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father; I know no touch⁵ of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me, As the sweet Troilus.—O you gods divine!

Make Cressid's name the very crown⁶ of falsehood, If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,

Do to this body what extremes you can; But the strong base and building of my love

Is as the very centre of the earth, Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep;—

Pan. Do, do.

Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks,

Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exit.]

5 i. e. hasty or abrupt. So in Romeo and Juliet:—
'It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden Too like the lightning.'

6 So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'And mock our eyes with air.'
7 Sense or feeling of relationship. So in Macbeth:—
'He wants the natural touch.'

8 i. e. the very height. So in Cymbeline:—
'My supreme crown of grief.'

SCENE III. The same. Before Pandarus' House.
Enter PARIS, TROILUS, ÆNEAS, DEIPHOBUS,
ANTENOR, and DIOMEDES.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour prefix'd
 Of her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon;—Good my brother Troilus,
 Tell you the lady what she is to do,
 And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk in to her house;
 I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:
 And to his hand when I deliver her,
 Think it an altar; and thy brother Troilus
 A priest, there offering to it his own heart. [Exit.]

Par. I know what 'tis to love;
 And 'would, as I shall pity, I could help!—
 Please you, walk in, my lords. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Room in Pandarus' House.
Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.
Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?
 The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste!
 And violenteth¹ in a sense as strong
 As that which causeth it: How can I moderate it?
 If I could temporize with my affection,
 Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
 The like allayment could I give my grief:
 My love admits no qualifying dross:
 No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.—Ah sweet ducks!

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus! [Embracing him.] Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too: O heart,—as the goodly saying
 is,—

— O heart, O heavy heart,
 Why sigh'st thou without breaking?
 where he answers again,

*Because thou canst not ease thy smart,
 By friendship, nor by speaking.*

There never was a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse; we see it, we see it.—How now, lambs?

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity,
 That the blest gods—as angry with my fancy,
 More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods envy?

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy, and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
 All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
 Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents
 Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows
 Even in the birth of our own labouring breath:
 We two, that with so many thousand sighs
 Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
 With the rude brevity and discharge of one.

¹ i. e. broad day. It is a familiar French idiom,— C'est grand matin.

² This verb is used by Ben Jonson in The Devil is an Ass :—

'Nor nature violenceth in both these.'

³ Consigned means sealed, from consigno, Lat.
 Thus in King Henry V. 'It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.' See Act iii. Sc. 2.

⁴ An obscure poet (Flatman) has borrowed this thought :—

'My soul just now about to take her flight,
 Into the regions of eternal night,
 Methinks I hear some gentle spirit say,
 Be not fearful, come away!'

⁵ So in Macbeth.—

'That tears will drown this wind.'

⁶ The expression has before occurred in Act i. Sc. 2, of this play.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
 Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how:
 As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
 With distinct breath and consign'd³ kisses to them,
 He fumbles up into a loose adieu;
 And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,
 Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Æne. [Within.] My lord! is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: Some say, the Gonius so

Cries, Come! to him that instantly must die.⁴—

Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind,⁵ or my heart will be blown up by the root!
 [Exit PANDARUS.]

Cres. I must then to the Greeks?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!⁶

When shall we see again?

Tro. Hear me, my love: Be thou but true of
 heart,—

Cres. I true! how now? what wicked deem⁷ is this?

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
 For it is parting from us:

I speak not, be thou true, as fearing thee;

For I will throw my glove to death himself,⁸

That there's no maculation in thy heart:

But be thou true, say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation; be thou true,

And I will see thee.

Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers
 As infinite as imminent! but, I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.⁹

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,

To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true again?

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love;

The Grecian youths are full of quality;¹⁰

They're loving, well compos'd, with gifts of nature flowing,

And swelling o'er with arts and exercise;

How novelty may move, and parts with person,

Alas, a kind of godly jealousy

(Which I beseech you, call a virtuous sin)

Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain then!

In this I do not call your faith in question,

So mainly as my merit; I cannot sing,

Nor heel the high lavolt,¹¹ nor sweeten talk,

Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:

But I can tell, that in each grace of these

There lurks a still and dumb-discoursive devil,

That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.

But something may be done, that we will not

And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,

When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,

Presuming on their changeful potency.

⁷ Deem (a word now obsolete) signifies opinion, sar mise.

⁸ That is, I will challenge death himself in defence of thy fidelity.

⁹ In Histrionastix, or the Player Whipt, a Comedy, 1610, a circumstance of a similar kind is ridiculed, in a mock interlude wherein Troilus and Cressida are the speakers. I cannot but think that it is the elder drama by Decker and Chettle, that is the object of this satirical allusion, and not Shakspeare's play, which was probably not written when Histrionastix appeared, for Queen Elizabeth is complimented under the character of Astrea in the last Act of that piece, and is spoken of as then living.

¹⁰ i. e. highly accomplished: quality, like condition, is applied to manners as well as dispositions.

¹¹ The lavolta was a dance.

Æne. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
And bring Æneas, and the Grecian, with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:

While others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit!
Is—plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

Enter ÆNEAS, PARIS, ANTENOR, DEIPHOBUS, and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady,
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port,² lord, I'll give her to thy hand;
And by the way, possess³ thee what she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou stand at mercy of my word,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Ilium.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:
The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the zeal of my petition to thee,
In praising her;⁴ I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises,
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O, he not mov'd, Prince Troilus;
Let me be privileg'd by my place, and message,
To be a speaker free: when I am hence,
I'll answer to my lust:⁵ And know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge: To her own worth
She shall be priz'd; but that you say—be't so,
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour,—no.

Tro. Come, to the port.—I tell thee, Diomed,
This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head.—
Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

[Exit TROIUS, CRESSIDA, and DIOMEDES.
[Trumpet heard.

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning!
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault; Come, come, to field
with him.

Dei. Let us make ready straight.

Æne. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity,
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie,
On his fair worth and single chivalry. [Exit.

SCENE V. The Grecian Camp. Lists set out.
*Enter AJAX, armed; AGAMEMNON, ACHILLES, PATROCLUS, MENELAUS, ULYSSES, NESTOR,
and others.*

Agam. Here art thou in appointment⁶ fresh and fair,

1 'The moral of my wit' is the meaning of it. Thus in the Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. Sc. 4.—'He has left me behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.'

2 i. e. the gate.

3 i. e. inform.

4 Troilus apparently means to say, that Diomed does not use him courteously by addressing himself to Cressida, and assuring her that she shall be well treated for her own sake, and on account of her singular beauty, instead of making a direct answer to that warm request which Troilus had just made to him to 'entreat her fair.'

The subsequent words justify this interpretation:—

'I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge.'

Anticipating time with starting courage.

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant,
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse.
Now crack thy lungs and split thy brazen pipe:
Blow, villain, till thy spher'd bias-cheek⁷

Outswell the colic of puff'd Aquilon:
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood;
Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.

Ulys. No trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early days.

Agam. Is not yon Diomed, with Calchas' daughter?

Ulys. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the toe: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter DIOMEDES, with CRESSIDA.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulys. Yet is the kindness but particular;

'Twere better she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.—
So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady:

Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now:

For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment;

And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulys. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns!
For which we lose our heads, to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—this, mine;
Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!

Patr. Paris, and I, kiss ever more him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir:—Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing do you render or receive?

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live.⁹

The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an odd man; give even, or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady? every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true,
That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You flip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulys. It were no match, your nail against his horn.—

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulys. I do desire it.

Cres. Why, beg, then.

Ulys. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis due.

Ulys. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

Dio. Lady, a word;—I'll bring you to your father. [DIOMEDES leads out CRESSIDA.

5 i. e. I'll answer to my will or pleasure, according to my inclination.

6 i. e. preparation.

7 i. e. swelling out like the bias of a bowl. So in Vi-toria Corombona, 1612:—

'Faith, his cheek

Has a most excellent bias.'

The idea is taken from the puffy cheeks of the winds as represented in the old prints and maps.

8 Thus Bassanio, in The Merchant of Venice, when he kisses Portia:—

'Fair lady, by your leave,

I come by note to give and to receive.'

9 I will make such bargains as I may live by, such as may bring me profit, therefore will not take a worse kiss than I give

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulyss.

Fye, fye upon her!

There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive¹ of her body.²
O, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give a coasting welcome³ ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader! set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity,⁴
And daughters of the game. [Trumpet within.]

All. The Trojan's trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter HECTOR, armed; ÆNEAS, TROILUS, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Æne. Hail, all the state of Greece! what shall be done

To him that victory commands? Or do you purpose
A victor shall be known? will you, the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other: or shall they be divided
By any voice or order of the field?
Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Æne. He cares not, he'll obey conditions.

Achil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely⁵ done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprising
The knight oppos'd.

Æne. If not Achilles, sir,
What is your name?

Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.

Æne. Therefore Achilles: But, whate'er, know
this:—

In the extremity of great and little,
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all,
The other blank as nothing.⁶ Weigh him well,
And that, which looks like pride, is courtesy.
This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:⁷
In love whereof, half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek.
This blended knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.⁸
Achil. A maiden battle, then?—O, I perceive you.

Re-enter DIOMED.

Agam. Here is Sir Diomed:—Go, gentle knight,
Stand by our Ajax: as you and Lord Æneas
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the uttermost,
Or else a breath:⁹ the combatants being kin,
Half stints¹⁰ their strife before their strokes begin.

[ÆNEAS AND HECTOR enter the lists.]

Ulyss. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy?

¹ Motive for part that contributes to motion. This word is employed with some singularity in All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. Sc. 2:—

'As it has fated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband.'

² One would almost think that Shakespeare had, on this occasion, been reading St. Chrysostom, who says:—
'Non loquuta es lingua, sed loquuta es gressu; non loquuta es voce, sed oculis loquuta es clarius quam voce.'
i. e. 'They say nothing with their mouths, they speak in their gait, they speak with their eyes, they speak in the carriage of their bodies.' This invective against a wanton, as well as the translation of it, is from Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Part III. Sect. ii. Memb. 2, Subs. 3.

³ A coasting welcome is a conciliatory welcome: that makes silent advances before the tongue has uttered a word. So in Venus and Adonis:—

'Anon she hears them chaunt it lustily,

And all in haste she coasteth to the cry.'

⁴ i. e. corrupt wenches, of whose chastity every opportunity makes an easy prey.

⁵ 'Securely done,' in the sense of the Latin securus, a negligent security arising from a contempt of the object opposed. So in the last act of the Spanish Tragedy:—

'O damned devil, how secure he is.'

⁶ Valour (says Æneas) is in Hector greater than valour in other men, and pride in Hector is less than pride

Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight:
Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word;
Speaking in deeds, and deedless¹¹ in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon
calm'd:

His heart and hand both open, and both free;
For what he has, he gives, what thinks, he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impair¹² thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindictive than jealous love;
They call him Troilus; and on him erect
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.
Thus says Æneas; one that knows the yout
Even to his inches, and, with private soul,
Did in great Ilium thus translate¹⁴ him to me.

[Alarm. HECTOR and AJAX fight.]

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;
Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there,
Ajax!

Dio. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.]

Æne. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then, will I no more:—
Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain:
Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so,
That thou could'st say—This hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood
Runs on the dexter¹⁵ cheek, and this sinister¹⁶
Bounds in my father's; By Jove multipotent, Thou should'st not bear from me a Greekish member

Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our rank feud: But the just gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
My sacred aunt,¹⁷ should by my mortal sword
Be drain'd! Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:

Thou art too gentle and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition¹⁸ earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus¹⁹ so mirable
(On whose bright crest fame with her loud'st O yes in other men. So that Hector is distinguished by the excellence of having pride less than other pride, and valour more than other valour.

⁷ Ajax and Hector were cousins-german.

⁸ Hence Thersites, in a former scene, called Ajax a mongrel.

⁹ i. e. a breathing, an exercise. See Act ii. Sc. 3, note 2, p. 163.

¹¹ No booster of his own deeds.

¹² 'An impair thought' is an unworthy or injurious thought. Thus in Chapman's preface to his Shield of Homer, 1598:—'Nor is it more impair to an honest and absolute man,' &c.

¹³ i. e. submits, yields.

¹⁴ Thus explain his character. So in Hamlet:—

'There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves
You must translate.'

¹⁶ Left.

¹⁷ It is remarkable that the Greeks give to the unt, the father's sister, the title of sacred. Steevens says, this may lead us to conclude that this play was not the entire composition of Shakespeare, to whom the Grecism was probably unknown.

¹⁸ See Act i. Sc. 2.

¹⁹ By Neoptolemus Shakespeare seems to have meant Achilles: finding that the son was Pyrrhus Neoptolemus, he considered Neoptolemus as the nomen gentili-

Cries, This is he!) could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Æne. There is expectance here from both the sides,

What further you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it;¹
The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,
(As sold I have the chance,) I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish: and great Achilles
Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to me:
And signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part;
Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.²

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.
Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by
name;

But for Achilles, my own searching eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy;
But that's no welcome: Understand more clear,
What's past, and what's to come, is strew'd with husks

And formless ruin of oblivion;
But in this extant moment, faith and truth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,³
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious⁴ Agamemnon.
Agam. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less to
you. [To TROILUS.]

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting:—

You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hect. Whom must we answer?

Men. The noble Menelaus.⁵

Hect. O you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!

Mock not, that I affect the untraded⁶ oath;
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove:
She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.

Hect. O, pardon; I offend.

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee off,
Labouring for destiny,⁷ make cruel way Through ranks of Greekish youths: and I have seen thee,

As hot as Perseus,⁸ spur thy Phrygian steed,
Despising many forfeits and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' the air,
Not letting it decline on the declin'd;⁹
That I have said to some my standers-by,
Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!

And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,

Like an Olympian wrestling: This have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire,¹⁰
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee: let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Æne. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time:—
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.

Nest. I would, my arms could match thee in contention,

As they contend with thee in courtesy.

Hect. I would they could.

Nest. Ha!

By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-morrow
Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time—

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I know your favour, Lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.

Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that perfly front your town,
Yon towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,¹¹
Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you.
There they stand yet; and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: The end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome:
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou!¹²

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted¹³ joint by joint.

Hect. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee.
Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.
Achil. Thou art too brief; I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. O, like a book of sport thou'lt read me o'er;
But there's more in me than thou understand'st.
Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body

Shall I destroy him? whether there, there, or there?
That I may give the local wound a name;
And make distinct the very breach whereout
Hector's great spirit flew: Answer me, heavens!

him, and thought the father was likewise Achilles Neoptolemus. Or he was probably led into the error by some book of the time. By a passage in Act iii. Sc. 3, it is evident that he knew Pyrrhus had not yet engaged in the siege of Troy:—

'But it must grieve young Pyrrhus, now at home,' &c.

1 I. e. answer the expectance.
2 These knights, to the amount of about two hundred thousand, (for there were no less in both armies,) Shakespeare found with all the appendages of chivalry in The Old Troy Book. Equus and armiger, rendered knight and squire, excite ideas of chivalry. Pope, in his Homer, has been liberal in his use of the latter.

3 I. e. integrity like that of heaven.

4 It has been asserted that imperious and imperial had formerly the same signification, but so far is this from being the fact, that Bullokar carefully distinguishes them:—Imperial, royal or chief, emperor-like: imperious, that commandeth with authority, lord-like, stately.

5 Ritson thought that this speech belonged to Æneas, and indeed it seems hardly probable that Menelaus would be made to call himself 'the noble Menelaus.'

6 Untraded is uncommon, unusual. So in King Richard II:—'Some way of common trade,' for some usual course, or trodden way.

7 Destiny is the vicerger of fate.

8 As the equestrian fame of Perseus is here again alluded to, it should appear that in a former simile his horse was meant for a real one, and not allegorically for a ship. See Act i. Sc. 3.

9 I. e. the fullen.

10 Laomedon.

11 Thus in Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece:—

'Threatening cloud-kissing Ilion with annoy.'

Ilion, according to Shakespeare's authority, was the name of Priam's palace, 'that was one of the richest and strongest that ever was in all the world. And it was of height five hundred paces, besides the height of the towers, whereof there was great plenty, and so high that it seemed to them that saw them from farre, they raught up unto the heavens.'—Destruction of Troy.

12 Mr. Tyrwhitt thought we should read:—

'I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, though!'

13 Quoted is noted, observed. The hint for this scene of altercation between Achilles and Hector is furnished by Lydgate.

Hect. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud man,

To answer such a question : Stand again :
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,
As to prenominate in nice conjecture,
Where thou wilt hit me dead ?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well ;
For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there ;
But, by the forge that stithied¹ Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er.—
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag,
His insolence draws folly from my lips ;
But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I never—

Ajar. Do not chafe thee, cousin ;—
And you Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till accident, or purpose, bring you to't :
You may have every day enough of Hector,
If you have stomach ;² the general state, I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field ;
We have had pelting³ wars, since you refus'd
The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector ?
To-morrow, do I meet thee, fell as death ;
To-night, all friends.

Hect. Thy hand upon that match.
Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent ;

There in the full convive⁴ we : afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat him.—
Beat loud the tabourines,⁵ let the trumpets blow,
That this great soldier may his welcome know.

[Exeunt all but TROILUS and ULYSSES.]

Tro. My Lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,
In what place of the field doth Calchas keep ?

Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus :
There Diomed doth feast with him to-night ;
Who neither looks upon the heaven, nor earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the fair Cressida.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,

After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither ?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir.
As gentle tell me, of what honour was
This Cressida in Troy ? Had she no lover there
That waits her absence ?

Tro. O, sir, to such as boasting show their scars,
A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord ?
She was belov'd, she lov'd ; she is, and doth :
But, still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.]

1 A stith is an anvil, a stithy a smith's shop, and hence the verb stithied is formed. See Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 2.

2 Ajax treats Achilles with contempt, and means to insinuate that he was afraid of fighting with Hector. 'You may every day (says he) have enough of Hector, if you have the inclination ; but I believe the whole state of Greece will scarcely prevail on you to be at odds with him, to contend with him.'

3 i. e. petty or paltry wars.

4 A convive is a feast. 'The sitting of friends together at a table, our ancestors have well called convivium, a banquet, because it is a living of men together.'—Hutton. The word is several times used in Helyas the Knight of the Swanee, bk. l.

5 Small drums.

6 Grammar requires us to read :—

With Greekish wine to-night I'll heat his blood,
Which, &c.

Otherwise Achilles threatens to cool the wine, instead of Hector's blood.

7 A batch is all that is baked at one time, without heating the oven afresh. So Ben Jonson in His Catin:—

'Except he were of the same meal and batch.'

Thersites has already been called a cob-loaf.

8 In his answer, Thersites quibbles upon the word tent.

ACT V.

SCENE I. The Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent. Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,

Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.⁶—
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter Thersites.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy ?
Thou crusty batch⁷ of nature, what's the news ?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol of idiot-worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, fragment ?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now ?⁸

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, Adversity⁹ and what need these tricks ?

Ther. Pr'ythee be silent, boy ; I profit not by thy talk : thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet,¹⁰ you rogue ! what's that ?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now, the rotten diseases of the south, the guts-griping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads o' gravel i' the back, lethargies, cold palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume, sciaticas, lime kilns i' the palm, incurable bone-ach, and the rivelled fee-simple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries !

Patr. Why thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus ?

Ther. Do I curse thee ?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt ; you whoreson indistinguishable cur,¹¹ no.

Ther. No ? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleeve¹² silk, thou green saracen flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou ? Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such water-flies :¹³ diminutives of nature !

Patr. Out, gall !

Ther. Finch egg !

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite
From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.

Here is a letter from queen Hecuba ;

A token from her daughter, my fair love ;¹⁴

Both taxing me, and gaging me to keep

An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it :

Fall, Greeks ; fail, fame ; honour, or go, or stay,

My major vow lies here, this I'll obey.—

Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent ;

This night in banqueting must all be spent.

Away, Patroclus.

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus.]

Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad ; but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon,—an honest fel-

9 Adversity is here used for contrariety. The reply of Thersites having been studiously adverse to the drift of the question urged by Patroclus. So in Love's Labour's Lost, the Princess addressing Boyet, (who had been capriciously employing himself to perplex the dialogue,) says, 'Avant, Perplexity !'

10 This expression is met with in Decker's Honest Whore :—'Tis a male varlet, sure, my lord !' The person spoken of is Bellafonte, a harlot, who is introduced in boy's clothes. Man-mistress is a term of reproach thrown out by Dorax, in Dryden's Don Sebastian. See Professor Heyne's Seventeenth Excursus on the first book of the Æneid.

11 Patroclus reproaches Thersites with deformity, with having one part crowded into another. The same idea occurs in the Second Part of King Henry IV. :—

'Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous form.'

12 See Macbeth, Act ii. Sc. 2.

13 So Hamlet, speaking of Osrick :—

'Dost know this water-fly ?'

14 This is a circumstance taken from the old story book of The Destruction of Troy.

low enough, and one that loves quails;¹ but he has not so much brain as ear-wax. And the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckolds;² a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wit larded with malice, and malice forced³ with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing: he is both ass and ox: to an ox were nothing: he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew,⁴ a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe, I would not care: but to be Menelaus,—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites; for I care not to be the louse of a lazarus, so I were not Menelaus.—Hey-day! spirits and fires!⁵

Enter HECTOR, TROILUS, AJAX, AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, MENELAUS, and DIOMED, with Lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No, yonder 'tis;

There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulyss. Here comes himself to guide you.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good night.

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and good night, to the Greeks' general.

Men. Good night, my lord.

Hect. Good night, sweet lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught:⁶ Sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night.

And welcome, both to those that go, or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

[Ereunt AGAMEMNON and MENELAUS.

Achil. Old Nestor tarries; and you too, Diomed, Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business, The tide whereof is now.—Good night, great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

Ulyss. Follow his torch, he goes To Calchas' tent; I'll keep you company.

[Aside to TROILUS.

Tro. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hect. And so good night.

[Exit DIOMED; ULYSSES and TROILUS following.

Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Ereunt ACHILLES, HECTOR, AJAX, and NESTOR.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers, than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brabblers the hound;⁷ but when he performs, astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious,⁸ there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon, when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to dog him; they say, he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets!

[Exit.

SCENE II. The same. Before Calchas' Tent. Enter DIOMEDS.

Dio. What are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think,—Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within.] She comes to you.

Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at a distance; after them THERSITES.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter CRESSIDA.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him!

Dio. How now, my charge?

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian!—Hark! a word with you. [Whispers.

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff!⁹ she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember? yes.

Dio. Nay, but do, then, And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List!

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cres. I'll tell you what:

Dio. Pho! pho! come, tell a pin: You are for sworn.—

Cres. In faith, I cannot: What would you have me do?

Ther. A juggling trick, to be—secretly open.

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I pry'thee, do not hold me to mine oath; Bid me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulyss. How now, Trojan?

Cres. Diomed,—

Dio. No, no, good night; I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness!

Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince; let us depart, I pray you,

Least your displeasure should enlarge itself To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulyss. Now, good my lord, go off;

You flow to great destruction;¹⁰ come, my lord.

Tro. I pry'thee, stay.

Ulyss. You have not patience; come.

Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell, and all hell's torments,

I will not speak a word.

Dio. And so, good night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Ulyss. Why, how now, my lord?

Tro. By Jove,

I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!

1 By quails are meant women, and probably those of a looser description. 'Caille coiffée' is a sobriquet for a harlot. Chaud comme un caille is a French proverb. The quail being remarkably salacious.

2 He calls Menelaus the transformation of Jupiter, that is, the bull, on account of his horns, which are the oblique memorial of cuckolds.

3 i. e. forced or stuffed.

4 A polecat. So in Othello:—'Tis such another fitchew, marry a perfumed one.'

5 This Thersites speaks upon the first sight of the distant lights.

6 Draught is the old word for forica. It is used in the translation of the Bible, in Holinshed, and by all old writers.

7 If a hound gives mouth, and is not upon the scent of the game, he is called a babblers or brabblers. The proverb says, 'Brabbling curs never want sore ears.'

8 Portentious, ominous.

9 That is, her key. Clef, Fr. A mark in music at the beginning of the lines of a song, &c. which indicates the pitch, and whether it is suited for a bass, treble, or tenor voice.

10 i. e. your impetuosity exposes you to imminent peril. The folio reads distraction.

Dio. Pho, pho! adieu; you palter.¹
Cres. In faith, I do not; come hither once again.
Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something; will you go?
 You will break out.
Tro. She strokes his cheek!
Ulyss. Come, come.
Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word:
 There is between my will and all offences
 A guard of patience:—stay a little while.
Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump, and potatoe finger,² tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!
Dio. But will you then?
Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.
Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.
Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.]
Ulyss. You have sworn patience.
Tro. Fear me not, my lord;
 I will not be myself, nor have cognition
 Of what I feel; I am all patience.

Re-enter CRESSIDA.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now!
Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.³
Tro. O beauty! Where's thy faith?
Ulyss. My lord!—
Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.
Cres. You look upon that sleeve; Behold it
 well.—
 He loved me—O false wench!—Give't me again.
Dio. Who was't?
Cres. No matter, now I have't again.
 I will not meet with you to-morrow night:
 I pry'thee, Diomed, visit me no more.
Ther. Now she sharpens:—Well said, whetstone.
Dio. I shall have it.
Cres. What, this?
Dio. Ay, that.
Cres. O, all you gods!—O pretty pretty pledge!
 Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
 Of thee, and me; and sighs, and takes my glove,
 And gives memorial dainty kisses to it,
 As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me;
 He, that takes that, must take my heart withal.
Dio. I had your heart before, this follows it.
Tro. I did swear patience.
Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; 'faith you shall not;
 I'll give you something else.
Dio. I will have this; Whose was it?
Cres. 'Tis no matter.
Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.
Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you will.
 But, now you have it, take it.
Dio. Whose was it?
Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women yonder,⁴
 And by herself, I will not tell you whose.
Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm;
 And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.
Tro. Wert thou the devil, and worst it on thy horn,
 It should be challeng'd.

1 To palter is to equivocate, to shuffle. Thus in Macbeth—

'That palter with us in a double sense.'

2 Luxuria was the appropriate term of the old school divines for the sin of incontinence, which is accordingly called luxury by all our old English writers. The degrees of this sin and its partitions are enumerated by Richard Rolle, the Hermit of Hampole, in his Speculum Vitæ, MS. penes me. And Chaucer, in his Parson's Tale, makes it one of the seven deadly sins. Luxury, or lasciviousness, is said to have a potatoe-finger, because that root was thought 'to strengthen the bodie, and procure bodily lust.'

3 This sleeve was given by Troilus to Cressida at their parting, and she gave him a glove in return. It was probably such a sleeve as was formerly worn at tournaments; one of which Spenser describes in his View of the State of Ireland, p. 43, ed. 1663.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past,—And ye it is not;
 I will not keep my word.
Dio. Why then, farewell;
 Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.
Cres. You shall not go:—One cannot speak a word,
 But it straight starts you.
Dio. I do not like this fooling.
Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you, pleases me best.
Dio. What, shall I come? the hour?
Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!—
 Do come:—I shall be plagu'd.
Dio. Farewell till then.
Cres. Good night. I pry'thee, come.—
 [Exit DIOMEDES.]
 Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;
 But with my heart the other eye doth see.⁵
 Ah! poor our sex! this fault in us I find,
 The error of our eye directs our mind:
 What error leads, must err; O then conclude,
 Minds, sway'd by eyes, are full of turpitude.
 [Exit CRESSIDA.]

Ther. A proof of strength, she could not publish more.⁶
 Unless she said, My mind is now turn'd whore.
Ulyss. All's done, my lord.
Tro. It is.
Ulyss. Why stay we, then?
Tro. To make a recordation to my soul
 Of every syllable that here was spoke,
 But, if I tell how these two did co-act,
 Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?
 Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,
 An esperance so obstinately strong,
 That doth invert the attest of eyes and ears;⁷
 As if those organs had deceptive functions,
 Created only to calumniate.
 Was Cressid here?
Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.
Tro. She was not, sure.
Ulyss. Most sure she was.
Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of madness.
Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but now.
Tro. Let it not be believ'd for womanhood!⁸
 Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage
 To stubborn critics⁹—apt, without a theme,
 For depravation,—to square the general sex
 By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.
Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?
Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.
Ther. Will he swagger himself out on's own eyes?
Tro. This she? no, this is Diomed's Cressida;
 If beauty have a soul, this is not she;
 If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimonies,
 If sanctimony be the gods' delight,
 If there be rule in unity itself,¹⁰
 This was not she. O madness of discourse,
 That cause sets up with and against itself!
 Bi-fold authority!¹¹ where reason can revolt

4 i. e. the stars which she points to.

5 The silver-shining queen he would disdain;
 Her twinkling hand-mak'ds too, by him defil'd,
 Through Night's black bosom should not peep again.'

6 The characters of Cressida and Pandarus are more immediately formed from Chaucer than from Lydgate;
 for though the latter mentions them both characteristically, he does not sufficiently dwell on either to have furnished Shakspeare with many circumstances to be found in this tragedy.

7 She could not publish a stronger proof.

8 i. e. turns the very testimony of seeing and hearing against themselves.

9 For the sake of womanhood.

10 Critic has here probably the signification of cynic.

So Iago says in Othello:—

'I am nothing if not critical.'

10 If it be true that one individual cannot be two distinct persons.

11 The folio reads 'By foul authority,' &c. There is Without perdition, and loss assume all reason

 Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid!
 Within my soul there doth commence a fight!
 Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparable²
 Divides more wider than the sky and earth;
 And yet the spacious breadth of this division
 Admits no orifice for a point, as subtle
 As Ariachne's³ broken woof, to enter.
 Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates;
 Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:
 Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;
 The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd;

And with another knot, five-finger-tied,⁴
 The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
 The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
 Of her o'er-eaten faith,⁵ are bound to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd
 With that which here his passion doth express?⁶

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged well
 In characters as red as Mars his heart
 Inflam'd with Venus: never did young man fancy⁷
 With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.
 Hark, Greek;—As much as I do Cressid love,
 So much by weight hate I her Diomed;
 That sleeve is mine, that he'll bear on his helm;
 Were it a casque compos'd by Vulcan's skill,
 My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout,
 Which shipmen do the hurricano call,⁸
 Constring'd in mass by the almighty sun,
 Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
 In his descent, than shall my prompted sword
 Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his concupy.⁹

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!
 Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,
 And they'll seem glorious.

Ulyss. O, contain yourself;
 Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord:
 Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;
 Ajax, your guard stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince:—My courteous lord, adieu:

Farewell, revolted fair!—and, Diomed,
 Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!¹⁰

Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exeunt TROILUS, ÆNEAS, and ULYSSES.]

Ther. 'Would, I could meet that rogue Diomed!
 I would croak like a raven; I would bode, I would bode. Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond, than he for a commodious drab.
 Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion: A hurning devil take them! [Exit.]

a madness in that disquisition, in which a man reasons at once for and against himself upon authority which he knows not to be valid. The words loss and perdi- tion, in the subsequent lines, are used in their common sense; but they mean the loss or perdition of reason.

1 'Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting.'
Hamlet.

2 I. e. the plighted faith of lovers. Troilus considers it inseparable, or at least that it ought never to be broken, though he has unfortunately found that it sometimes is.

3 One quarto copy reads Ariachne's; the other Ariachna's; the folio Ariachne's. It is evident Shakspeare intended to make Ariachne a word of four syllables. Our ancestors were not very exact either in writing or pronouncing proper names, even of classical origin. Steevens thinks it not improbable that the poet may have written 'Ariadne's broken woof,' confounding the two stories in his imagination, or alluding to the clue of thread, by the assistance of which Theseus escaped from the Cretan labyrinth.

4 A knot tied by giving her hand to Diomed.

5 The image is not of the most delicate kind. 'Her o'er-eaten faith' means her troth plighted to Troilus, of which she was surfeited, and, like one who has o'er-eaten himself, had thrown off. So in Twelfth Night—

'Their over-greedy love hath surfeited,' &c.

SCENE III. Troy. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

And. When was my lord so much ungently tem-per'd,

To stop his ears against admonishment?

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in:

By all the everlasting gods, I'll go.

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.¹¹

Hect. No more, I say.

Enter CASSANDRA.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister; arm'd and bloody in intent;
 Consort with me in loud and dear petition,¹²
 Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd
 Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night

Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O, it is true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound!

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me swear.

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish¹³ vows;
 They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
 Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O! be persuaded: Do not count it holy

To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,

For we would give much, to use violent thefts,¹⁴

And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow;
 But vows to every purpose must not hold;

Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;

Mine honour keeps the weather¹⁵ of my fate:
 Life every man holds dear; but the dear man¹⁶
 Holds honour far more precious—dear than life.—

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man? mean'st thou to fight today?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit CASSANDRA.]

Hect. No, 'faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth;

I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry:

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,

And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.

Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,

I'll stand to-day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
 Which better fits a lion, than a man.¹⁷

5 'Can Troilus really feel, on this occasion, half of what he utters?' A question suitable to the calm Ulysses.

7 Love.

8 'And down the shower impetuously doth fall,

Like that which men the hurricano call.' Drayton.

9 A cant word, formed from concupiscence.

10 I. e. defend thy head with armour of more than common security. So in The History of Prince Arthur, 1634, c. civill. — 'Do thou thy best, said Sir Gawaine;
 therefore hee thee fast that thou wert gone, and wit thou well we shall soon come after, and breake the strongest castle that thou hast upon thy head.' It appears that a kind of close helmet was called a castle. See Titus Andronicus, Act iii. Sc. 1.

11 The hint for this dream of Andromache might be taken from Lydgate, or Chaucer's Nonne's Prestes Tale,
 v. 16147. 'My dreams of last night will prove ominous to the day: forebode ill to it, and show that it will be a fatal day to Troy. So in the seventh scene of this act:—

— the quarrel's most ominous to us.'

12 I. e. earnest, anxious petition.

13 Foolish.

14 I. e. to use violent thefts, because we would give much. In the first line of Andromache's speech she alludes to a doctrine which Shakespeare has often enforced:— 'Do not you think you are acting virtuously by adhering to an oath, if you have sworn to do amies?'

15 To keep the weather is to keep the wind or advantage. Être au dessus du vent is the French proverbial phrase.

16 The dear man is the man of worth.

17 The traditions and stories of the darker ages

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians fall, Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword, You bid them rise, and live.¹

Hect. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now? how now?

Tro. For the love of all the gods, Let's leave the hermit Pity with our mother; And when we have our armours buckled on, The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords; Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.²

Hect. Fye, savage, fye!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars Beckoning with fiery truncheon³ my retire; Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees, Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears;⁴ Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn, Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way, But by my ruin.

Re-enter CASSANDRA, with PRIAM.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast: He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay, Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee, Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back: Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions;

Cassandra doth foresees; and I myself Am like a prophet suddenly enwrapt, To tell thee—that this day is ominous: Therefore, come back.

Hect. Æneas is afield; And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks, Even in the faith of valour, to appear This morning to them.

Pri. Aye, but thou shalt not go.

Hect. I must not break my faith.

You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir, Let me not shame respect;⁵ but give me leave To take that course by your consent and voice, Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O, Priam, yield not to him.

And. Do not, dear father.

Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you: Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit ANDROMACHE.]

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl, Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell, dear Hector.⁶ Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!

Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents! Hark how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out! How poor Andromache shrills⁷ her dolours forth! Behold! destruction,⁸ frenzy, and amazement, Like witless antics, one another meet, And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector: Tro. Away!—Away!

Cas. Farewell.—Yet, soft:—Hector, I take my leave:

Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. [Exit.]

Hect. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim: Go in, and cheer the town: we'll forth, and fight; Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night.

Pri. Farewell; the Gods with safety stand about thee!

[Exeunt severally PRIAM and HECTOR.]

Alarums.

Tro. They are at it; hark! Proud Diomed, believe, I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter from yon' poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whoreson ptisic, a whoreson rascally ptisic so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o' these days: And I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were curs'd,⁹ I cannot tell what to think on't.—What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart; [Tearing the Letter.]

The effect doth operate another way.—Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together. My love with words and errors still she feeds; But edifies another with her deeds.

[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE IV. Between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter THERSITES.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another. I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there, in his helm; I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, on a sleeveless errand. O' the other side, The policy of those crafty swearing rascals,¹⁰—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor; and that same dog-fox, Ulysses,—is not proved worth a blackberry:—They set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles: and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day: whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism,¹¹ and policy grows into an ill opinion. Soft! here comes sleeve, and t'other.

Enter DIOMEDES, TROILUS following.

Tro. Fly not; for, shouldst thou take the river Styx,

I would swim after.

Dio.

Thou dost miscall retire:

I do not fly; but advantageous care

Withdrew me from the odds of multitude:

Have at thee!

4 i. e. tears that continue to course each other down the face. So in As You Like It:—

'The big round tears

Course'd one another down his innocent nose.'

5 i. e. disgrace the respect I owe you, by acting in opposition to your commands.

6 The interposition and clamorous sorrow of Cassandra, are copied from Lydgate.

7 So in Spenser's Epithalamium:—

'Hark how the minstrels gin to shrill aloud
Their merry music,' &c.

8 The folio reads distraction.

9 That is, under the influence of a malediction, such as mischievous beings have been supposed to pronounce upon those who offended them.

10 Theobald proposes to read 'sneering rascals,' which Mason thinks more suitable to the characters of Ulysses and Nestor than sneering.

11 To set up the authority of ignorance, and to declare that they will be governed by policy no longer, abounded with examples of the lion's generosity. Upon the supposition that these acts of clemency were true, Troilus reasons not improperly, that to spare against reason, by mere instinct and pity, became rather a generous beast than a wise man. We find it recorded in Pliny's Natural History, c. 16, that 'the lion alone of all wild beasts is gentle to those that humble themselves before him, and will not touch any such upon their submission, but spareth what creature soever lieth prostrate before him.' Hence Spenser's Una, attended by a lion; and Parceval's lion, in Mort de Arthur, b. xiv. c. 6.

1 Shakespeare seems not to have studied the Homeric character of Hector; whose disposition was by no means inclined to clemency, as we learn from Andromache's speech in the 24th Iliad.

2 Ruthful is rueful, woful; and ruth is mercy. The words are opposed to each other.

3 Antiquity acknowledges no such sign of command as a truncheon. The spirit of the passage, however, is such as might atone for a greater impropriety.

Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian!—now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve!
[Exeunt TROILUS and DIOMEDES, fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hector's match?
Art thou of blood, and honour?

Ther. No, no:—I am a rascal; a scurvy railing knave; a very filthy rogue.

Hect. I do believe thee:—Live. [Exit.]

Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me; But a plague break thy neck, for fighting me! What's become of the wenching rogues? I think, they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle. Yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them. [Exit.]

SCENE V. The same. Enter DIOMEDES and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse;²

Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;
Tell her, I have chastis'd the amorous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.

Serv. I go, my lord.
[Exit Servant.]

Enter AGAMEMNON.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamas
Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner:
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,³
Upon the pashed⁴ corpses of the kings
Epistrophus and Cediis: Polixenes is slain;
Amphimachus, and Thoas, deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta'en, or slain; and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary⁵
Appeals our numbers; haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles;
And bid the snail-pac'd Ajax arm for shame.—
There is a thousand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathea his horse,
And there lacks work; anon, he's there afoot,
And there they fly, or die, like scaled sculls⁶
Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath:
Here, there, and every where, he leaves and takes;
Dexterity so obeying appetite,
That what he will, he does; and does so much,
That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles

Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance:
Patroclus' wounds have rous'd his drowsy blood,
Together with his mangled myrmidons,
That noseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd, come
to him,

Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it,
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastic execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himself,
With such a careless force, and forceless care.
As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
Bade him win all.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! [Exit.]
Dio. Ay, there, there.

Nest. So, so, we draw together.⁷

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector?
Come, come, thou boy-queller,⁸ show thy face;
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry.
Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Another part of the Field. Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?

Ajax. What would'st thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Ajax. Were I the general, thou should'st have my office
Ere that correction:—Troilus, I say! what, Troilus!

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. O, traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face,
thou traitor,
And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse!

Dio. Ha! art thou there?

Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize, I will not look upon.⁹

Tro. Come both, you cogging¹⁰ Greeks; have at you both. [Exeunt, fighting.]

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Yea, Troilus! O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee; Ha!—Have at thee, Hector.

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.

Be happy, that my arms are out of use:

My rest and negligence befriend thee now, man: this beste was heery like an horse, and shoute well with a bowe: this beste made the Grekes sore aferde, and slewe many of them with his bowe.—Destruction of Troy, by Caxton.

A more circumstantial account of this Sagittary is to be found in Lydgate.

6 I. e. dispersed shoals. 'A scull of fishes: examen vel agmen piscium' (Baret,) was also in more ancient times written 'a scoole.'

7 This remark seems to be made by Nestor, in consequence of the return of Ajax to the field, he having lately refused to cooperate or draw together with the Greeks, though at present he is roused from his sullen fit by the loss of a friend.

8 I. e. murderer of boys. So in King Henry IV. Part ii. Act ii. Scene i:—

'A man-queller and a woman-queller.'

9 That is, as we should now say, I will not be a looker-on.

10 The poet had heard of Græcia mendax. Diomedes had defrauded him of his mistress, and he bestows the epithet on both, unius ob culpam. Cicero bears witness to this character of the ancient Greeks:—'Testimoniorum religionem et fidem nunquam ista ratio coluit.' And again—'Græcorum ingenia ad fallendum parata sunt.'

1 This is an idea taken from the ancient books of romantic chivalry, and even from the usage of the poet's age; as is the following one in the speech of Diomedes:—

'And am her knight by proof.'

It appears from Segar's Honour, Military and Civil, folio, 1602, that a person of superior birth might not be challenged by an inferior, or if challenged might refuse combat. We learn from Melvil's Memoirs, p. 165, ed. 1735, 'the laird of Grange offered to fight Bothwell, who answered that he was neither earl nor lord, but a baron; and so was not his equal. The like answer made he to Tullibardine. Then my Lord Lindsay offered to fight him, which he could not well refuse; but his heart failed him, and he grew cold on the business.' These punctilios are well ridiculed in Albumazur, Act iv. Sc. 7.

2 This circumstance is taken from Lydgate, as is the introduction of a bastard son of Priam under the name of Margarelon. The latter is also in the Old History of the Destruction of Troy.

3 I. s. his lance, like a weaver's beam; as Goliath's spear is described.

4 Bruised, crushed

5 'A mervaylous beste that was called Sagittayre, that behynde the myddes was an horse, and to fore a

But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till then, go seek thy fortune. [Exit.
Hect. Fare thee well:—
I would have been much more a fresher man,
Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother?

Re-enter TROILUS.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas; Shall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him; I'll be taken, too,
Or bring him off:—Fate, hear me what I say!
I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.

Enter One in sumptuous Armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark:—
No? wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;²
I'll crush³ it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it:—Wilt thou not, beast, abide?

Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.

[Exit.

SCENE VII. The same. Enter ACHILLES, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my myrmidons;
Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel:
Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath;
And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about;
In fellest manner execute your arms.
Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye!
It is decreed—Hector the great must die. [Exit.

SCENE VIII. The same. Enter MENELAUS, and PARIS, fighting; then THERSITES.

Ther. The cuckold, and the cuckold-maker are at it: Now, bull! now, dog! 'Loo, Paris, 'loo! now my double-henned sparrow! 'loo, Paris, loo! The bull has the game:—'ware horns, ho!

[Exit PARIS and MENELAUS.

Enter MARGARELON.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.

Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards:⁵ I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in every thing illegitimate.
One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment: Farewell, bastard.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exit.

SCENE IX. Another part of the Field. Enter
HECTOR.

Hect. Most putrified core, so fair without,
Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.
Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath;
Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!

[Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.

Enter ACHILLES and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;

I i. e. prevail over him. So in All's Well that Ends
Well:—

'The count he woos your daughter,
Resolves to carry her.'

2 This circumstance is also taken from Lydgate's poem; who furnished Shakspeare with the hint for the following line:—

'I am unarm'd; forego this vantage, Greek.'

3 To crush is to break or bruise. So in the Destruction of Troy:—'Saying these words, Hercules caught by the head poor Lychas—and threw him against a rocke so fiercely that he to-frushed and all to-burst his bones, and so slew him.'

4 To execute their arms is to employ them, to put them to use. So in Love's Labour's Lost, Rosaline says to Biron:—

'Full of comparisons and wounding flouts,
Which you on all estates will execute.'

5 Bastard, in ancient times, was not a disreputable appellation,

How ugly night comes breathing at his heels:
Even with the vail⁶ and dark'ning of the sun,
To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd: forego this vantage, Greek.

Achil. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek.⁷ [Hector falls.

So, Ilion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down!
Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
On, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

[A Retreat sounded.

Hark! a retreat upon our Grecian part.
Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my
lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler⁸ like, the armies separates.
My half-suppl'd sword, that frankly would have fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty bit, thus goes to bed.—

[Sheathes his sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail,
Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exit.

SCENE X. The same. Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that?

Nest. Peace, drums.

[Within.] Achilles!

Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!

Dio. The bruit is—Hector's slain, and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be;

Great Hector was as good a man as he.

Agam. March patiently along:—Let one be sent To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—

If in his death the gods have us befriended,
Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.
[Exit, marching.

SCENE XI. Another part of the Field. Enter
ÆNEAS and Trojans.

Æne. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field.
Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector?—The gods forbid!

Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail,
In beastly sort, dragg'd through the shameful field.—
Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!
Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile⁹ at Troy!

I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,
And linger not our sure destructions on!

Æne. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.

Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so;

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;

But dare all imminence, that gods and men,

Address their dangers in. Hector is gone!

Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?

Let him, that will a screech-owl aye be call'd,

Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead:

There is a word will Priam turn to stone;

Make wells and Nibes of the maids and wives,

Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word,

6 'The vail of the sun,' is the sinking, setting, or veiling of the sun.

7 Heywood, in his Rape of Lucrece, 1629, gives the same account of Achilles overpowering Hector by numbers. In Lydgate and the old story book the same account is given of the death of Troilus. Lydgate, following Guido of Colonna, who in the grossest manner has violated all the characters drawn by Homer, reprehends
the Grecian poet as the original offender.

8 Sticklers were persons who attended upon combatants in trials of skill, to part them when they had fought enough, and, doubtless, to see fair play. They were probably so called from the stick or wand which they carried in their hands. The name is still given to the arbitrators at wrestling matches in the west country.

9 Hamner and Warburton read:—

'—smite at Troy;'

which, it must be confessed, is more in correspondence with the rest of Troilus's wish.

Scare Troy out of itself. But, march, away :
Hector is dead ; there is no more to say.
Stay yet ;—You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pight¹ upon our Phrygian plains,
Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
I'll through and through you !—And thou, greatsiz'd coward !

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates ;
I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,
That mouldeth goblins swift as frenzy thoughts.—
Strike a free march to Troy !—with comfort go :
Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

[Exeunt ÆNEAS and Trojans.]

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. But hear you, hear you !

Tro. Hence, broker² lackey ! ignomy³ and shame
Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name !

[Exit TROILUS.]

Pan. A goodly med'cine for my aching bones !—
O, world ! world ! world ! thus is the poor agent despised ! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a' work, and how ill requited ! Why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed ? what verse for it ? what instance for it ?—
Let me see :—

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing,
Till he hath lost his honey, and his stung :
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail.—

1 Pitched, fixed.

2 Broker anciently signified a bawd of either sex.
So in King John :—

This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,³ &c.

3 Ignominy.

4 Canvass hangings for rooms, painted with emblems and mottoes.

5 See King Henry VI. Part I. Act. i. Sc. 3.

6 See Measure for Measure, Act. i. Sc. 2.

* It should, however, be remembered that Thersites had been long in possession of the stage in an Interlude bearing his name.

¹ The first seven books of Chapman's Homer were published in 1596, and again in 1598, twelve books not long afterward, and the whole 24 books at latest in 1611.

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.*

As many as be here of pander's hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall :
Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans,
Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
Brethren, and sisters, of the hold-door trade,
Some two months hence my will shall here be made :
It should be now, but that my fear is this,—
Some galled goose of Winchester⁵ would hiss :
Till then I'll sweat,⁶ and seek about for eases
And, at that time, bequeath you my diseases.

[Exit.]

THIS play is more correctly written than most of Shakspeare's compositions, but it is not one of those in which either the extent of his views or elevation of his fancy is fully displayed. As the story abounded with materials, he has exerted little invention ; but he has diversified his characters with great variety, and preserved them with great exactness. His vicious characters disgust, but cannot corrupt, for both Cressida and Pandarus are detested and condemned. The comic characters seem to have been the favourites of the writer :
they are of the superficial kind, and exhibit more of manners than nature ; but they are copiously filled and powerfully impressed. Shakspeare has in his story followed, for the greater part, the old book of Caxton, which was then very popular ; but the character of Thersites, of which it makes no mention, is a proof that this play was written after Chapman had published his version of Homer.* JOHNSTON.

The classical reader may be surprised that Shakspeare, having had the means of being acquainted with the great father of poetry through the medium of Chapman's translation, should not have availed himself of such an original instead of the Troy Booke ; but it should be recollected that it was his object as a writer for the stage to coincide with the feelings and prejudices of his audience, who, believing themselves to have drawn their descent from Troy, would by no means have been pleased to be told that Achilles was a braver man than Hector. They were ready to think well of the Trojans as their ancestors, but not very anxious about knowing their history with much correctness ; and Shakspeare might have applied to worse sources of information than even Lydgate.—Boswell.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE story of the Misanthrope is told in almost every collection of the time, and particularly in two books, with which Shakspeare was intimately acquainted—
The Palace of Pleasure, and the Translation of Plu-tarch, by Sir Thomas North. The latter furnished the poet with the following hint to work upon :—'Antonius forsook the city and companie of his friends, saying that he would lead Timon's life, because he had the like wrong offered him that was offered unto Timon ; and for the unthankfulness of those he had done good unto, and whom he tooke to be his friends, he was angry with all men, and would trust no man.'

Mr. Strutt, the engraver, was in possession of a MS.
play on this subject, apparently written, or transcribed, about the year 1600. There is a scene in it resembling Shakspeare's banquet, given by Timon to his flatterers.
Instead of warm water he sets before them stones painted like artichokes, and afterwards beats them out of the room. He then retires to the woods, attended by his faithful steward, who (like Kent in King Lear) has disguised himself to continue his services to his master.
Timon, in the last act, is followed by his fickle mistress,
&c. after he was reported to have discovered a hidden treasure by digging. The piece itself (though it appears to be the work of an academic) is a wretched one.
The personæ dramatis are as follows :—'Timon ; Luches, his faithful servant. Eutrapelus, a dissolute young man. Gelasimus, a cittie heyre. Pseudochus, a lying traveller Demas, an orator. Philargurus, a covetous churlish old man. Hermogenes, a fiddler Abyssus, a usurer. Lollio, a country clowne, Philar-gurus' sonne. Stilpo, and Speusippus, two lying philosophers. Grunio, a lean servant of Philargurus.

Obba, Timon's butler. Padia, Gelasimus' page. Two sergeants. A sailor. Callimela, Philargurus' daughter.
Blutte, her prattling nurse.—Scene, Athens.'

To this manuscript play Shakspeare was probably indebted for some parts of his plot. Here he found the faithful steward, the banquet scene, and the story of Timon's being possessed of great sums of gold, which he had dug up in the wood ; a circumstance which it is not likely he had from Lucian, there being then no translation of the dialogue that relates to that subject.

Malone imagines that Shakspeare wrote his Timon of Athens in the year 1610.

'Of all the works of Shakspeare, Timon of Athens possesses most the character of a satire :—a laughing satire in the picture of the parasites and flatterers, and a Juvenalian in the bitterness and the imprecations of Timon against the ingratitude of a false world. The story is treated in a very simple manner, and is definitely divided into large masses :—In the first act, the joyous life of Timon, his noble and hospitable extravagance, and the throng of every description of suitors to him ; in the second and third acts, his embarrassment, and the trial which he is thereby reduced to make of his supposed friends, who all desert him in the hour of need ;—in the fourth and fifth acts, Timon's flight to the woods, his misanthropical melancholy, and his death. The only thing which may be called an episode, is the banishment of Alcibiades, and his return by force of arms. However, they are both examples of ingratitude,—the one of a state towards its defender, and the other of private friends to their benefactor.* As the merits of the general towards his fellow-citizens suppose more strength of character than those of the generous prodigal, their respective behaviours are no less different: Timon frets himself to death; Alcibiades regains his lost dignity by violence. If the poet very properly sides with Timon against the common practice of the world, he is, on the other hand, by no means disposed to spare Timon. Timon was a fool in his generosity; he is a madman in his discontent; he is every where wanting in the wisdom which enables man in all things to observe the due measure. Although the truth of his extravagant feelings is proved by his death, and though when he digs up a treasure, he spurns at the wealth which seems to solicit him, we yet see distinctly enough that the vanity of wishing to be singular, in both parts of the plays, had some share in his liberal self-forgetfulness.

* It appears to me that Schlegel and Professor Richardson have taken a more unfavourable view of the character of Timon, than our great poet intended to convey. Timon had not only been a benefactor to his private unworthy friends, but he had rendered the state service, which ought not to have been forgotten. He himself expresses his consciousness of this when he sends one of his servants to request a thousand talents at the hands of the senators:—

‘Of whom, even to the state’s best health, I have Deserv’d this hearing.’

And Alcibiades afterwards confirms this:—

‘———— I have heard, and griev’d
How curs’d Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.’

Surely then he suffered as much mentally from the ingratitude of the state, as from that of his faithless ness, as well as his anchoretical seclusion. This is particularly evident in the incomparable scene where the cynic Apemantus visits Timon in the wilderness. They have a sort of competition with each other in their trade of misanthropy: the cynic reproaches the impoverished Timon with having been merely driven by necessity to take to the way of living which he had been long following of his free choice, and Timon cannot bear the thought of being merely an imitator of the cynic. As in this subject the effect could only be produced by an accumulation of similar features, in the variety of the shades an amazing degree of understanding has been displayed by Shakspeare. What a powerfully diversified concert of flatteries and empty testimonies of devotedness! It is highly amusing to see the suitors, whom the ruined circumstances of their patron had dispersed, immediately flock to him again when they learn that he had been revisited by fortune. In the speeches of Timon, after he is undeceived, all the hostile figures of language are exhausted,—it is a dictionary of eloquent imprecations.† friends. Shakspeare seems to have entered entirely into the feelings of bitterness, which such conduct was likely to awaken in a good and susceptible nature, and has expressed it with vehemence and force. The virtues of Timon too may be inferred from the absence of any thing which could imply dissoluteness or intemperance in his conduct: as Richardson observes, ‘He is convivial, but his enjoyment of the banquet is in the pleasure of his guests; Phrynia and Timandra are not in the train of Timon, but of Alcibiades. He is not so desirous of being distinguished for magnificence, as of being eminent for courteous and beneficent actions: he solicits distinction, but it is by doing good.’ Johnson has remarked that the attachment of his servants in his declining fortunes, could be produced by nothing but real virtue and disinterested kindness. I cannot, therefore, think that Shakspeare meant to stigmatize the generosity of Timon as that of a fool, or that he meant his misanthropy to convey to us any notion of ‘the vanity of wishing to be singular.’

ACT I.

SCENE I. Athens. A Hall in Timon’s House.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several Doors.

Poet.

Good day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you are well.¹

Poet. I have not seen you long; how goes the world?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that’s well known:

But what particular rarity? what strange,
Which manifold record not matches?² See,

1 It would be less abrupt and more metrical to begin the play thus:—

‘Poet. Good day, sir.

‘Pain. Good Sir, I’m glad you’re well.’

2 The Poet merely means to ask if any thing extraordinary or out of the common course of things has lately happened; and is prevented from waiting for an answer by observing so many conjured by Timon’s bounty to attend.

Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power

Hath conjur’d to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both; t’other’s a jeweller.

Mer. O, ’tis a worthy lord!

Jew. Nay, that’s most fix’d.

Mer. A most incomparable man; breath’d, as it were,

To an untirable and continue goodness:
He passes.³

Jew. I have a jewel here.

Mer. O, pray, let’s see’t: for the Lord Timon, sir?

Jew. If he will touch the estimate:⁴ But for that—

Poet.⁵ When we for recompense have prais’d the vile,

3 Breath’d is exercised, inured by constant practice, so trained as not to be wearied. To breathe a horse is to exercise him for the course: continue for continued course. He passes, i. e. exceeds or goes beyond common bounds.

4 Touch the estimate, that is, come up to the price.

5 We must here suppose the Poet busy in reciting part of his own work; and that these three lines are the introduction of the poem addressed to Timon.

*It stains the glory in that happy verse
Which aptly sings the good.*
Mer.

'Tis a good form.

[Looking at the Jewel.]

Jew. And rich : here is a water, look you.

Pain. You are rap, sir, in some work, some dedication

To the great lord.

Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me.
Our poesy is a gum, which oozes!¹
From whence 'tis nourished : The fire i' the flint
Shows not, till it be struck ; our gentle flame
Provokes itself, and like the current, flies
Each bound it chafes.² What have you there ?

Pain. A picture, sir.—And when comes your book forth ?

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment,³ sir,
Let's see your piece.

Pain. 'Tis a good piece.

Poet. So 'tis : this comes off well⁴ and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable : How this grace
Speaks his own standing !⁵ what a mental power
This eye shoots forth ! how big imagination
Moves in this lip ! to the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.⁶

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life.

Here is a touch ; Is't good ?

Poet. I'll say of it,
It tutors nature : artificial strife⁷
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

[Enter certain Senators, and pass over.]

Pain. How this lord's follow'd !

Poet. The Senators of Athens :—Happy men !

Pain. Look, more !

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.⁸

I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man,
Whom this beneath world⁹ doth embrace and hug
With amplest entertainment : My free drift
Hails not particularly¹⁰, but moves itself
In a wide sea of wax :¹¹ no levell'd malice
Infects one comma in the course I hold ;
But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leaving no tract behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you ?

Poet. I'll unbolt¹² to you.
You see how all conditions, how all minds,
(As well of glib and slippery creatures, as Of grave and austere quality,) tender down
Their services to Lord Timon : his large fortune,
Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,

1 The old copies read :—

'Our poesie is a goune which usea.'

2 It is not certain whether this word is chafes or chases in the folio. I think the former is the true reading. The poetaster means that the vein of a poet flows spontaneously, like the current of a river, and flies from each bound that chafes it in its course, as scorning all impediment, and requiring no excitement. In Julius Cæsar we have :—

'The troubled Tiber chafing with her shores.'

3 i. e. as soon as my book has been presented to Timon.

4 This comes off well, apparently means this is cleverly done, or this piece is well executed. The phrase is used in Measure for Measure ironically.

5 How the graceful attitude of this figure proclaims that it stands firm on its centre, or gives evidence in favour of its own fixture. Grace is introduced as bearing witness to propriety.

6 One might venture to supply words to such intelligible action. Such significant gesture ascertains the sentiments that should accompany it. So in Cymbeline, Act ii. Sc. 4 :—

'— never saw I pictures

So likely to report themselves.'

7 i. e. the contest of art with nature. This was a very common mode of expressing the excellence of a painter. Shakspeare has it again more clearly expressed in his Venus and Adonia :—

'His art with nature's workmanship at strife.'

8 'Mane salutantum totis vomit edibus undam.'

9 So in Measure for Measure we have, 'This under generation ;' and in King Richard III. the lower world.

Subdues and properties¹³ to his love and tendance
All sorts of hearts ; yea, from the glass-fac'd flatterer¹⁴

To Apemantus, that few things loves better
Than to abhor himself : even he drops down
The knee before him, and returns in peace,
Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain.

I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill,
Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd : The base o' the mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere

To propagate their states :¹⁵ amongst them all,

Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,

One do I personate of Lord Timon's frame,

Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wails to her :

Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain.

'Tis conceiv'd to scope.¹⁶

This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,

With one man beckon'd from the rest below,

Bowing his head against the steepy mount

To climb his happiness, would be well express'd

In our condition.¹⁷

Poet.

Nay, sir, but hear me on :

All those which were his fellows but of lato,

(Some better than his value,) on the moment

Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance,

Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,¹⁸

Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him

Drink the free air.¹⁹

Pain.

Ay, marry, what of these ?

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of mood,

Spurns down her late below'd, all his dependants,

Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top,

Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,

Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain.

'Tis common :

A thousand moral paintings I can show,

That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune

More pregnantly than words. Yet you do well,

To show Lord Timon, that mean eyes²⁰ have seen

The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter TIMON, attended ; the Servant of VENTIDIUS talking with him.

Tim.

Imprison'd is he, say you ?

Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord : five talents is his debt ;

His means most short, his creditors most strait :

Your honourable letter he desires

To those have shut him up ; which failing to him,

Periods²¹ his comfort.

10 My design does not stop at any particular character.

11 An allusion to the Roman practice of writing with a style on tablets, covered with wax : a custom which also prevailed in England until about the close of the fourteenth century.

12 i. e. open, explain.

13 i. e. subjects and appropriates.

14 One who shows by reflection the looks of his patron. The poet was mistaken in the character of Apemantus ; but seeing that he paid frequent visits to Timon, he naturally concluded that he was equally courteous with his other guests.

15 i. e. to improve or promote their conditions.

16 i. e. extensively imagined, largely conceived.

17 i. e. in our art, in painting. Condition was used for profession, quality ; façon de faire.

18 Whisperings of officious servility, the incense of the worshipping parasite to the patron as a god. Gray has excellently expressed in his Elegy these sacrificial offerings to the great from the poetic tribe :—

'To heap the shrine of luxury and pride

With incense kindled at the Muses' flame.'

19 'To drink the air,' like the hæmost atherios of Virgil is merely a poetic phrase for draw the air, or breathe. 'To drink the free air,' therefore, 'through another,' is to breathe freely at his will only, so as to depend on him for the privilege of life : not even to breathe freely without his permission.

20 i. e. inferior spectators.

21 To period is perhaps a verb of Shakspeare's coinage

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well,
I am not of that feather, to shake off
My friend when he must need me.¹ I do know him
A gentleman that well deserves a help,
Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free him.
Ven. Serv. Your lordship ever binds him.
Tim. Commend me to him; I will send his ransom;
And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me:—
²'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,
But to support him after.³—Fare you well.
Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour!³ [Exit.]

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: What of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he here, or no?—Lucilius!

Enter LUCILIUS.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, Lord Timon, this thy creature,

By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift;
And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:

The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost,
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I pry'thee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.
Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:⁴

His honesty rewards him in itself,
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt:

Our own precedent passions do instruct us

What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To LUCILIUS.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,
I call the gods to witness, I will choose
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,
If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents, on the present; in future, all.

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long;
To build his fortune, I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter:

¹ Should we not read 'When he most needs me?'

² Johnson says this thought is better expressed by Dr. Madden in his Elegy on Archbishop Boulter:—

'More than they ask'd he gave; and deem'd it mean
Only to help the poor—to beg again.'

It is said that Dr. Madden gave Johnson ten guineas for correcting this poem.

³ See note on King Richard III. Act iii. Sc. 2.

⁴ It appears to me that a word is omitted in this line.
Perhaps we should read:—

Therefore he will be [rewarded,] Timon;

His honesty rewards him in itself,

It must not bear my daughter.

It is true that Shakspeare often uses elliptical phrases, and this has been thought to mean:—'You say the man is honest; therefore he will continue to be so, and is sure of being sufficiently rewarded by the consciousness of virtue; he does not need the additional blessing of a beautiful and accomplished wife.' But 'it must not bear my daughter,' means, 'His honesty is its own reward, it must not carry my daughter.' A similar expression occurs in Othello:—

'What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe
If he can carry her thus.'

What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,

Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.

Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship: Never may
That state or fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not ow'd to you!⁵

[Exeunt LUCILIUS and old Athenian.]

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon;

Go not away.—What have you there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.

The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: These pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out.⁶ I like your work
And you shall find, I like it: wait attendance
Till you hear further from me.

Pain. The gods preserve you!

Tim. Well fare you, gentlemen: Give me your hand;

We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord? dispraise?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.

If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd,

It would unclew⁷ me quite.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated
As those, which sell, would give: But you we
know,

Things of like value, differing in the owners,
Are prized by their masters.⁸ believe't, dear lord,
You mend the jewel by wear'ng it.

Tim. Well mock'd.

Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common
tongue,

Which all men speak with him.

Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be chid?

Enter APEMANTUS.⁹

Jew. We will bear, with your lordship.

Mer. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow;

When thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves honest.¹⁰

Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves? thou know'st them not.

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus.

Apem. Thou knowest, I do: I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.

Apem. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.

⁵ 'Let me never henceforth consider any thing that I possess but as owed or due to you; held for your service, and at your disposal.' So Lady Macbeth says to Duncan:—

'Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs in compt,
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.'

⁶ Pictures have no hypocrisy; they are what they profess to be.

⁷ To unclew a man is to draw out the whole mass of his fortunes. To unclew being to unwind a ball of thread.

⁸ Are rated according to the esteem in which their possessor is held.

⁹ See this character of a cynic finely drawn by Lucian, in his Auction of the Philosophers; and how well
Shakspeare has copied it.

¹⁰ 'Stay for thy good morrow till I be gentle, which will happen at the same time when thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves honest,'—i. e. never.

Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.

Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus?

Apem. The best for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well, that painted it?

Apem. He wrought better, that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. You are a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation; What's she, if I be a dog?

Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

Tim. An thou should'st, thou'dst anger ladies.

Apem. O, they eat lords: so they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Apem. So thou apprehend'st it: Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?

Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing,¹ which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth?

Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet?

Poet. How now, philosopher?

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd he is so.

Apem. Yes, he is wortn of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: He that loves to be flattered, is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What would'st do then, Apemantus?

Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.²—Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apem. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!

Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffic's thy god, and thy god confound thee.

Trumpets sound. Enter a Servant.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Serv. 'Tis Alcibiades, and Some twenty horse, all of companionship.³

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us.—[Exit some Attendants.]

You must needs dine with me:—Go not you hence, Till I have thank'd you;—and, when dinner's done, Show me this piece.—I am joyful of your sights.—

Enter ALCIBIADES, with his Company.

Most welcome, sir!⁴ [They salute.]

Apem. So, so; there!—

Aches contract and starve your supple joints!—That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knaves,

¹ Alluding to the proverb: Plain-dealing is a jewel, but they who use it die beggars.

² This line is corrupt undoubtedly, and none of the emendations or substitutions that have been proposed are satisfactory. Perhaps we should read, 'That I had (now angry) wish'd to be a lord;' or, 'That I had (so angry) will to be a lord.' Malone proposed to point the passage thus, 'That I had no angry wit. To be a lord;' and explains it, 'That I had no wit [or discretion] in my anger, but was absurd enough to wish myself one of that set of men, whom I despise.' These are the best helps I can afford the reader towards a solution of this enigmatical passage, and it must be confessed they are feeble.

³ i. e. Alcibiades's companions, or such as he consorts with and sets on a level with himself.

And all this court'sy! The strain of man's bred out Into baboon and monkey.⁴

Alcib. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I feed Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir: Ere we depart,⁵ we'll share a bounteous time In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Exit all but APEMANTUS]

Enter two Lords.

1 Lord. What time a day is't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The most accursed thou,⁶ that still omit'st it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast.

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool, to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Should have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding; make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass.

[Exit.]

1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in,

And taste Lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes

The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of gold, Is but his steward: no meed,⁷ but he repays

Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him,

But breeds the giver a return exceeding

All use of quittance.⁸

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries, That ever govern'd man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room of State in Timon's House. Hautboys playing loud music. A great banquet served in; FLAVIUS and others attending; then enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, LUCIUS, LUCULLUS, SEMPRONIUS, and other Athenian Senators, with VENTIDIUS, and Attendants.—Then comes dropping after all, APEMANTUS, discontentedly.

Ven. Most honour'd Timon, 't hath pleas'd the gods to remember

My father's age, and call him to long peace.

He is gone happy, and has left me rich:

Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound

To your free heart, I do return those talents,

Doubled, with thanks, and service, from whose help I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. O, by no means, Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love;

I gave it freely ever; and there's none

Can truly say, he gives, if he receives:

If our betters play at that game, we must not dare To imitate them; Faults that are rich, are fair.⁹

Ven. A noble spirit.

[They all stand ceremoniously looking on TIMON.]

⁴ Man is degenerated; his strain or lineage is worn down into a monkey.

⁵ It has been before observed that to depart and to part were anciently synonymous. So in King John, Act ii Sc. 2:—'Hath willingly departed with a part.'

⁶ Ritson says we should read:—

'The more accursed thou.'

So in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

'The more degenerate and base art thou.'

⁷ Meed here means desert.

⁸ i. e. all the customary returns made in discharge of obligations.

⁹ 'The faults of rich persons, and which contribute to the increase of riches, wear a plausible appearance, and as the world goes are thought fair; but they are faults notwithstanding.'

Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony
Was but devis'd at first, to set a gloss
On faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodness, sorry ere 'tis shown;
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.]

1 Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.
Apem. Ho, ho, confess'd it? hang'd it, have you
not?

Tim. O, Apemantus! you are welcome.
Apem. No,

You shall not make me welcome:
I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fye, thou art a churl: you have got a humour
there

Does not become a man, 'tis much to blame:—
They say, my lords, ira furor brevis est,

But yond' man's ever angry.²
Go, let him have a table by himself;

For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for it, indeed.

Apem. Let me stay at thine apperil,³ Timon;
I come to observe; I give thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian; therefore welcome: I myself would have no power: prythee, let my meat make thee silent.⁴

Apem. I scorn thy meat; 'twould choke me, for⁵
I should

Ne'er flatter thee.—O you gods! what a number
Of men eat Timon, and he sees them not!

It grieves me, to see so many dip their meat
In one man's blood; and all the madness is,
He cheers them up too.⁶

I wonder, men dare trust themselves with men:
Methinks they should invite them without knives;
Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.

There's much example for't; the fellow, that Sits next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges
The breath of him in a divided draught,
Is the readiest man to kill him: it has been prov'd.
If I

Were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals;
Lest they should spy my windpipe's dangerous notes:⁷

Great men should drink with harness⁸ on their throats.

Tim. My lord, in heart;¹⁰ and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apem. Flow this way!

A brave fellow!—he keeps his tides well. Timon,¹¹
Those healths will make thee, and thy state, look ill.
Here's that, which is too weak to be a sinner,
Honest water, which ne'er left man i' the mire:
This, and my food, are equals; there's no odds.
Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

¹ There seems to be some allusion to a common proverbial saying of Shakespeare's time, 'Confess and be hanged.' See Othello, Act iv. Sc. 1.

² The old copy reads 'Yond' man's very angry.'

³ Stevens and Malone dismissed apperil from the text, and inserted own peril: but Mr. Gifford has shown that the word occurs several times in Ben Jonson:—

'Sir, I will bail you at mine own apperil.'

Devil is an Ass.

⁴ 'I myself would have no power to make thee silent, but I wish thou wouldst let my meat stop your mouth.'

⁵ For in the sense of cause or because.

⁶ 'It grieves me to see so many feed luxuriously, or saute their meat at the expense of one man, whose very blood (means of living) must at length be exhausted by them; and yet he preposterously encourages them to proceed in his destruction.'

⁷ It was the custom in old times for every guest to bring his own knife, which he occasionally whetted on a stone that hung behind the door. One of these whetstones was formerly to be seen in Parkinson's Museum.
It is scarcely necessary to observe that they were strangers to the use of forks.

⁸ 'The windpipe's notes' were the indications in the throat of its situation when in the act of drinking; it should be remembered that our ancestors' throats were uncovered. Perhaps, as Stevens observes, a quibble is intended on windpipe and notes.

Z

APEMANTUS'S GRACE.

*Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man, but myself:
Grant I may never prove so fond,¹²
To trust man on his oath or bond;
Or a harlot, for her weeping;
Or a dog, that seems a sleeping:
Or a keeper, with my freedom;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em.
Amen. So fall to't:
Rich men sin, and I eat root.*

[Eats and drinks.]

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus!

Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field
now.

Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.
Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies, than a dinner of friends.

Alcib. So they were bleeding new, my lord, there's no meat like them; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apem. 'Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then; that then thou might'st kill 'em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeals, we should think ourselves for ever perfect.¹³

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: How had you been my friends else?
why have you that charitable¹⁴ title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O, you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for them: and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits: and what better or proper can we call our own, than the riches of our friends? O, what a precious comfort 'tis to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes! O joy, e'en made away ere it can be born!¹⁵ Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks: to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apem. Thou weepst to make them drink, Timon.

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes,
And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up.

Apem. Ho, ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.

Apem. Much!¹⁶ [Tucket sounded]
Tim. What means that trumpet?—How now?

⁹ i. e. armour.

¹⁰ 'My lord's health in sincerity.' So in Chaucer's
Knights Tale:—

'And was all his in chere, as his in herte.'

¹¹ This speech, except the concluding couplet, is printed as prose in the old copy, nor could it be exhibited as verse without transposing the word Timon, which follows look ill, to its present place. I think with Malone that many of the speeches in this play, which are now exhibited in a loose and imperfect kind of metre, were intended by Shakespeare for prose, in which form they are exhibited in the old copy.

¹² Foolish.

¹³ i. e. arrived at the perfection of happiness.

¹⁴ 'Why are you distinguished from thousands by that title of endearment, was there not a particular connection and intercourse of tenderness between you and me?'
Thus Milton:—

'Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother.'

¹⁵ 'O joy! e'en made away [i. e. destroyed, turned to tears] ere it can be born.' So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumphs die.'

¹⁶ Much! was a common ironical expression of doubt or suspicion.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? what are their wills?

Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter CUPID.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all That of his bounties taste!—The five best senses Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely To gratulate thy plenteous bosom: The ear, Taste, touch, smell, all pleas'd from thy table rise; They only now come hut to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They are welcome all; let them have kind admittance:

Music, make their welcome. [Exit CUPID.]

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you are belov'd.

Music. Re-enter CUPID, with a Masque of Ladies as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Apem. Hey day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way.

They dance! they are mad women.¹ Like madness is the glory of this life, As this pomp shows to a little oil and root.² We make ourselves fools, to disport ourselves; And spend our flatteries, to drink those men, Upon whose age we void it up again, With poisonous spite, and envy. Who lives, that's not Depraved, or depraves? who dies, that bears Not one spurn to their graves of their friends' gift? I should fear, those, that dance before me now, Would one day stamp upon me: It has been done; Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table with much adoring of TIMON; and, to show their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment, Which was not half so beautiful and kind; You have added worth unto't, and lively lustre, And entertain'd me with mine own device; I am to thank you for it.

1 Lady. My lord, you take us even at the best.³

Apem. 'Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet⁴

Attends you to: Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Lad. Most thankfully, my lord.

[Exeunt CUPID and Ladies.]

Tim. Flavius,—

Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet!

There is no crossing him in his humour; [Aside. Else I should tell him,—Well,—i'faith, I should,

¹ Shakspeare probably borrowed this idea from the puritanical writers of his time. Thus Stubbes, in his Anatomic of Abuses, 8vo. 1583, 'Dauncers thought to be madmen.' And as in all feasts and pastimes dauncing is the last, so it is the extrem of all other vice.' And again, 'There were (saith Ludovicus Vives) from far countries certain men brought into our parts of the world, who when they saw men daunce, ran away marvellously afraid, crying out and thinking them mad,' &c. Perhaps the thought originated from the following passage in Cicero, Pro Murena 6, 'Nemo enim fere salutat sobrius, nisi forte insanit.'

² 'The glory of this life is like [or just such] madness, in the eye of reason, as this pomp appears when opposed to the frugal repast of a philosopher feeding on oil and roots.'

³ I. e. 'you have conceived the fairest of us,' or 'you think favourably of our performance, and make the best of it.'

When all's spent, he'd be cross'd⁵ then, an he could.

'Tis pity bounty had not eyes behind; That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.⁶

[Exit, and returns with the Casket]

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O, my friends,

I have one word to say to you: Look, my good lord, I must entreat you honour me so much, As to advance⁷ this jewel; accept and wear it, Kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—

All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate

Newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour, Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear thee; I prythee, let us be provided⁸

To show them entertainment.

Flav. I scarce know how. [Aside]

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please your honour, the Lord Lucius,

Out of his free love, hath presented to you Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Enter a third Servant.

Be worthily entertain'd.—How now, what news?

3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; And let them be received,

Not without fair reward.

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to?

He commands us to provide, and give Great gifts, and all out of an empty coffer. Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this, To show him what a beggar his heart is, Being of no power to make his wishes good; His promises fly so beyond his state, That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes For every word; he is so kind, that he now Pays interest for't; his land's put to their books. Well, 'would I were gently put out of office, Before I were forc'd out!

Happier is he that has no friend to feed, Than such as do even enemies exceed. I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit.]

Tim. You do yourselves

Much wrong, you bate too much of your own merits:—

Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty!

Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave

⁴ So in Romeo and Juliet:

'We have a foolish trifling supper towards.'

⁵ An equivoke la here intended, in which cross'd means have his hand crossed with money, or have money in his possession, and to be cross'd or thwarted. So in As You Like It, 'Yet I should bear no cross if I did bear you.' Many coins being marked with a cross on the reverse.

⁶ 'Tis pity bounty [i. e. profusion] has not eyes behind [to see the miseries that follow it]; that man might not become wretched for his nobleness of soul.'

⁷ I. e. prefer it, raise it to honour by wearing it. The Jeweller says to Timon in the preceding scene, 'You mend the jewel by wearing it.'

⁸ Steevens, to complete the measure, proposed to read:— 'I prythee, let us be provided straight.'

Good words the other day of a bay courser

I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it.

2 Lord. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know, no man

Can justly praise but what he does affect:

I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;

I'll tell you true. I'll call on you.

All Lords. None so welcome.

Tim. I take all and your several visitations

So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give;

Methinks I could deal' kingdoms to my friends,

And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,

Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich,

It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living

Is 'mongst the dead: and all the lands thou hast

Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, defiled land, my lord.

1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—

Tim. And so

Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endeared—

Tim. All to you.²—Lights, more lights.

1 Lord. The best of happiness,

Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, Lord Timon!

Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exeunt ALCEBIADES, Lords, &c.]

Apem. What a coil's here!

Serving of becks,³ and jutting out of bums!

I doubt whether their legs⁴ be worth the sums

That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of dregs:

Methinks, false hearts should never have sound legs:

Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court'sies.

Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not sullen,

I'd be good to thee.

Apem. No, I'll nothing: for, if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to rail upon thee; and then thou would'st sin the faster. Thou givest so long, Timon, I fear me, thou wilt give away thyself in paper⁵ shortly: What need these feasts, pomps, and vain glories?

Tim. Nay, an you begin to rail on society once,

I am sworn, not to give regard to you. Farewell;

and come with better music. [Exit.]

Apem. So;—thou'lt not hear me now,—thou shalt not then, I'll lock thy heaven⁶ from thee.

O, that men's ears should be

To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! [Exit.]

1 i. e. could dispense them on every side with an ungrudging distribution.

2 That is, 'all good wishes to you,' or 'all happiness attend you.'

3 A beck is a nod or salutation with the head. Steevens says that 'beck has four distinct significations,' but they will resolve themselves into two. Beck, a rivulet, or little river; and beck, a motion or sign with the head; signa capitis voluntatem ostendens. This last may be either a nod of salutation, of assent or dissent, or finally of command.

4 He plays upon the word leg, as it signifies a limb, and a bow or act of obedience.

5 Warburton explained this, 'be ruined by his securities entered into.' Dr. Farmer would read proper, i. e. I suppose, in propria persona. Steevens supports this reading by a quotation from Roy's Satire on Cardinal Wolsey:—

'—their order

Is to have nothing in proper,

But to use all thyngs in commune.'

6 By his heaven he means good advice; the only thing by which he could be saved.

7 The commentators have made difficulties about this passage, which appears to me quite plain and intelligible without a comment. 'If I give my horse to Timon, it immediately foals, i. e. produces me several able horses.'

8 Sternness was the characteristic of a porter. There appeared at Kenilworth Castle, [1575] 'a porter tall of parson, big of lim, and stearn of countinauns.' The word one, in the second line, does not refer to porter, but means a person. 'He has no stern forbidding porter at his gate to keep people out, but a person who smiles and invites them in.'

ACT II.

SCENE I. Athens. A Room in a Senator's House. Enter a Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand to Varro; and to Isidore

He owes nine thousand; besides my former sum,

Which makes it five and twenty.—Still in motion

Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not.

If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,

And give it Timon, why the dog coins gold:

If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more

Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,

Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me⁹ straight,

And able horses: No porter at his gate;¹⁰

But rather one that smiles, and still invites

All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason

Can sound his state in safety.¹¹ Caphis, ho!

Caphis, I say!

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. Here, sir; what is your pleasure?

Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to Lord Timon;

Importune him for my moneys; be not ceas'd¹⁰

With slight denial; nor then silenc'd, when—

Command me to your master—and the cap

Plays in the right hand, thus:—but tell him, sirrah

My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn

Out of mine own; his days and times are past,

And my reliances on his fracted dates

Have smit my credit: I love and honour him;

But must not break my back, to heal his finger:

Immediate are my needs; and my relief

Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words,

But find supply immediate. Get you gone:

Put on a most importunate aspect,

A visage of demand; for, I do fear,

When every feather sticks in his own wing,

Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,¹¹

Which¹² flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.

Sen. I go, sir?—take the bonds along with you,

And have the dates in compt.

Caph. I will, sir.

Sen. Go.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with many Bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of expense,

That he will neither know how to maintain it,

Nor cease his flow of riot: Takes no account

How things go from him; nor resumes no care

Of what is to continue; Never mind

Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.¹³

What shall be done? He will not hear, till feel:

I must be round with him now he comes from hunting.

Fye, fye, fye, fye!

9 Johnson altered this to 'found his state in safety.' But the reading of the folio is evidently sound, which I think will bear explanation thus:—'No reason can proclaim his state in safety, or not dangerous.' So in King Henry VIII. Act v. Sc. 2:—

'Pray heaven he sound not my disgrace!'

10 Be not stayed or stopped:—

'Why should Tiberius' liberty be ceased?'

Claudius Tiberius Nero, 1607.

11 This passage has been thus explained by Roger Wilbraham, Esq. in his Glossary of words used in Cheshire:—'Gull, a. a naked gull; so are called all nestling birds in quite an unfledged state.'

12 Which for who. The pronoun relative applied to things is frequently used for the pronoun relative applied to persons, by old writers, and does not seem to have been thought a grammatical error. It is still preserved in the Lord's prayer.

13 This is elliptically expressed:—

'—Never mind

Was [made] to be so unwise [in order] to be so kind.'

Conversation, as Johnson observes, affords many examples of similar lax expression

Enter CAPHIS, and the Servants of ISIDORE and VARRO.

Caph. Good even,¹ Varro: What, you come for money?

Var. Serv. Is't not your business too?

Caph. It is;—And yours too, Isidore?

Isid. Serv. It is so.

Caph. 'Would we were all discharg'd!

Var. Serv. I fear it.

Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,²

My Alcibiades.—With me? What's your will?

Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.

Tim. Dues? Whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens, here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.

Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off

To the succession of new days this month:

My master is awak'd by great occasion,

To call upon his own; and humbly prays you,

That with your other noble parts you'll suit,³

In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend, I pry'thee, but repair to me next morning.

Caph. Nay, good my lord,——

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.

Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my good lord,——

Isid. Serv. From Isidore;

He humbly prays your speedy payment,——

Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants,——

Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeiture, my lord, six weeks,

And past,——

Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord;

And I am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath,——

I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;

[Exit ALCIBIADES and Lords.]

I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither, pray

you; [To FLAVIUS.]

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd

With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds,⁴

And the detention of long-since-due debts,

Against my honour?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen,

The time is unagreeable to this business:

Your importunity cease, till after dinner;

That I may make his lordship understand

Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends:

See them well entertain'd. [Exit TIMON.]

Flav. I pray, draw near.

[Exit FLAVIUS.]

Enter APEMANTUS and a Fool.⁵

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus; let's have some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!

Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apem. No; 'tis to thyself.—Come away.

[To the Fool.]

Isid. Serv. [To VAR. SERV.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet.

Caph. Where's the fool now?

Apem. He last ask'd the question.—Poor rogues, and usurers' men! bawds between gold and want!

All SERV. What are we, Apemantus?

Apem. Asses.

All SERV. Why?

Apem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All SERV. Gramercies, good fool: How does your mistress?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. 'Would, we could see you at Corinth.⁶

Apem. Good! gramercy.

Enter Page.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain?
what do you in this wise company?—How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apem. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Pry'thee, Apemantus, read me the super-scription of these letters; I know not which is which.

Apem. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apem. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hanged. This is to Lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go: thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog; and thou shalt famish, a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone.

[Exit Page.]

Apem. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to Lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers?

All SERV. Ay; 'would they served us!

Apem. So would I, as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All SERV. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant: My mistress is one, and I am her fool.
When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly:
The reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apem. Do it, then, that we may account thee a whoremaster and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime, it appears like a lord; sometime, like a lawyer; sometime, like a philosopher, with two stones more than his artificial one: ' He is very often like a knight; and, gene-here lost, in which the audience were informed that the fool and the page that follows him belonged to Phrynia, Timandra, or some other courtesan; upon the knowledge of which depends the greater part of the ensuing jocularity.

6 The reputation of the ladies of Corinth for gallantry caused the term to be anciently used for a house of ill repute. The scalding, to which the fool alludes, is the curative process for a certain disease, by means of a tub, which persons affected (according to Randle Hoime, Storehouse of Armory, b. lii. p. 441) 'were put into, not to boyl up to an height, but to parboyl.' In the frontispiece to the Old Latin Comedy of Cornelianum Doliun this sweating tub is represented. It was anciently the practice to scald the feathers off poultry instead of plucking them.

7 Meaning the celebrated object of all alchemical research, the philosopher's stone, at that time much talked of. Sir Thomas Smith was one of those who lost

1 Good even, or good den, was the usual salutation from noon, the moment that good morrow became improper. See Romeo and Juliet, Act ii. Sc. 4.

2 I. e. to hunting; in our author's time it was the custom to hunt as well after dinner as before. Thus in Tancred and Gismunda, 1592, 'He means this evening in the park to hunt.' Queen Elizabeth, during her stay at Kenilworth Castle, always hunted in the afternoon.

3 I. e. that you will behave on this occasion in a manner consistent with your other noble qualities.

4 The old copy reads:—
'—of debt, broken bonds.'

The emendation, which was made by Malone, is well supported by corresponding passages in the poet. Thus at p. 195, ante:—

'And my reliances on his fracted dates.'

5 Johnson thought that a scene or passage had been rally in all shapes, that man goes up and down in, from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All Serv. Aside, aside; here comes Lord Timon.

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

[Exeunt APEMANTUS and Fool.]

Flav. 'Pray you, walk near; I'll speak with you anon.

[Exeunt Serv.]

Tim. You make me marvel: Wherefore, ere this time,

Had you not fully laid my state before me;

That I might so have rated my expense,

As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me, At many leasures I propos'd.

Tim. Go to:

Perchance, some single vantages you took,

When my indisposition put you back;

And that unaptness made your minister,¹

Thus to excuse yourself.

Flav. O my good lord!

At many times I brought in my accounts,

Laid them before you; you would throw them off,

And say, you found them in mine honesty.

When, for some trifling present, you have bid me

Return so much,² I have shook my head, and wept;

Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd you

To hold your hand more close; I did endure

Not seldom, nor no slight checks; when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate,

And your great flow of debts. My dear-lov'd lord,

Though you hear now (too late!) yet now's a time,³

The greatest of your having lacks a half

To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone;

And what remains will hardly stop the mouth

Of present dues: the future comes apace:

What shall defend the interim? and at length

How goes our reckoning?⁴

Tim. To Lacedæmon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but a word;⁵

Were it all yours to give it in a breath,

How quickly were it gone?

Tim. You tell me true.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood,

Call me before the exactest auditors,

And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me.

considerable sums in seeking of it. Sir Richard Steele was one of the last eminent men who entertained hopes of being successful in this pursuit. His laboratory was at Poplar.

¹ The construction is, 'And made that unaptness your minister.'

² He does not mean so great a sum, but a certain sum.

³ 'Though you now at last listen to my remonstrances, yet now your affairs are in such a state, that the whole of your remaining fortune will scarce pay half your debts: you are therefore wise too late.'

⁴ 'How will you be able to subsist in the time intervening between the payment of the present demands (which your whole substance will hardly satisfy) and the claim of future dues, for which you have no fund whatsoever; and, finally, on the settlement of all accounts, in what a wretched plight will you be.'

⁵ I. e. as the world itself may be comprised in a word, you might give it away in a breath.

⁶ Stevens asserted that offices here meant apartments allotted to culinary purposes, the reception of domestics, &c.; and that feeders meant servants. Malone contended that by offices was intended 'all rooms or places at which refreshments were prepared or served out;' as Stevens had explained it in Othello; and that feeders did not here mean servants. It must be confessed that the passage in Othello, 'All offices are open, and there is full liberty of feasting from this

When all our offices⁶ have been oppress'd With riotous feeders; when our vaults have wept With drunken spilt of wine; when every room Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy; I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,⁷ And set mine eyes at a flow.

Tim.

Pr'ythee, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord! How many prodigal bits have slaves, and peasants, This night englutted! Who is not Timon's?

What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is Lord Timon's?

Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon! Ah! when the means are gone that buy this praise, The breath is gone whereof this praise is made: Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers, These flies are cough'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no further:

No villanous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart;

Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given.⁸

Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack,

To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart;

If I would broach the vessels of my love,

And try the argument⁹ of hearts by borrowing,

Men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use,

As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd.¹⁰

That I account them blessings; for by these

Shall I try friends: You shall perceive, how you

Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends.

Within there, ho!—Flaminius, Servilius!

Enter FLAMINIUS, SERVILIUS, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord,—

Tim. I will despatch you severally.—You, to Lord Lucius,—

To Lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his

Honour to-day;—You to Sempronius;

Commend me to their loves; and, I am proud, say,

That my occasions have found time to use them

Toward a supply of money: let the request

Be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. Lord Lucius, and Lord Lucullus? humph!

[Aside.]

Tim. Go you, sir, [To another Serv.] to the senators,

(Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing,) bid 'em send o' the instant

A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold

(For that I knew it the most general way,)¹¹

To them to use your signet, and your name;

present hour of five until the bell has told eleven, countenances Stevens's explanation; as does another passage, from Shirley's Opportunite, cited by Mr. Bos

well:—

'Let all the offices of entertainment

Be free and open.'

The cellar and the buttery are probably meant.

⁷ A wasteful cock is possibly what we now call a waste pipe, a pipe which is continually running, and thereby prevents the overflow of cisterns, &c. by carrying off their superfluous water. This circumstance served to keep the idea of Timon's unceasing prodigality in the mind of the steward, while its remoteness was favourable to meditation.

⁸ Every reader must rejoice in this circumstance of comfort which presents itself to Timon, who, although beggared through want of prudence, consoles himself with reflection that his ruin was not brought on by the pursuit of guilty pleasures.—Stevens.

⁹ I. e. the contents of them. The argument of a book was 'a brief sum of the whole matter contained in it.' So in Hamlet, the king asks concerning the play:—'Have you heard the argument? is there no offence in it?'

¹⁰ I. e. dignified, adorned, made gracious.

'And yet no day without a deed to crown it.'

King Henry VIII.

¹¹ 'The most general way,' is the most compendious to try many at a time

But they do shake their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can it be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall,¹ want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry—you are honourable,—

But yet they could have wish'd—they know not—but

Something hath been amiss—a noble nature
May catch a wrench—would all were well—'tis pity—

And so, intending² other serious matters,
After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions,
With certain half-caps,³ and cold-moving nods,
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them!—
I prythee, man, look cheerly: These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd,⁴ 'tis cold, it seldom flows;
'Tis lack of kindly warmth, they are not kind;
And nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull, and heavy.—
Go to Ventidius, [To a Serv.]—'Prythee, [To FLAVIUS.] be not sad,

Thou art true and honest; ingeniously I speak,
No blame belongs to thee;—[To Serv.] Ventidius lately

Buried his father; by whose death, he's stepp'd
Into a great estate: when he was poor,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends,
I clear'd him with five talents; Greet him from me;
Bid him suppose, some good necessity
Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd
With those five talents:—that had, [To FLAV.] give it these fellows

To whom 'tis instant due. Ne'er speak, or think,
That Timon's fortunes 'mong his friends can sink.

Flav. I would, I could not think it; That thought is bounty's foe;

Being free⁴ itself, it thinks all others so. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Athens. A Room in Lucullus's House.

FLAMINIUS waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you, he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter LUCULLUS.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. [Aside.] One of Lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver bason and ewer to-night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectively welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—[Exit Servant.]—And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well,

sir: And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir; which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him; nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I have dined with him, and told him on't; and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have him spend less: and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty⁶ is his; I have told him on't, but I could never get him from it.

Re-enter Servant, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise.
Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucul. I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason: and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah.—[To the Servant, who goes out.]—Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman; but thou art wise;
and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidaires⁷ for thee; good boy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible, the world should so much differ;
And we alive that liv'd?⁸ Fly, damned baseness;
To him that worships thee.

[Throwing the money away.]

Lucul. Ha! Now I see, thou art a fool, and fit for thy master.

[Exit LUCULLUS.]

Flam. May these add to the number that may scald thee!

Let molten coin be thy damnation.⁹

Thou disease of a friend, and not himself!¹⁰

Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,

It turns in less than two nights? O you gods,

I feel my master's passion!¹¹ This slave

Unto his honour,¹² has my lord's meat in him:

Why should it thrive, and turn to nutriment,

When he is turn'd to poison?

O, may diseases only work upon't!

And, when he is sick to death, let not that part of nature

Which my lord paid for, be of any power

To expel sickness, but prolong his hour!¹³ [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. A public Place. Enter

LUCIUS, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who, the Lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

1 Stran. We know¹⁴ him for no less, though we poured down their throats. In the old Shepherd's Calendar, Lazarus declares himself to have seen covetous men and women in hell dipped in caldrons of molten metal. And in the old black letter ballad of The Dead

Man's Song:—

'—Ladies full of melted gold

Were poured down their throats.'

Crassus was so punished by the Parthians.

10 So in King Lear:—

'—my daughter,

Or rather a disease,' &c.

11 i. e. suffering, grief. Othello, when Desdemona weeps, says:—

'—O well-dissembled passion.'

12 Some modern editions have changed his honour into this hour. I think the old reading which Stevens explains, 'This slave (to the honour of his character) has,' &c. not what is meant to be expressed, and should profer the correction.

13 i. e. prolong his hour of suffering. Thus Timon, in a future passage, says, 'Live loath'd, and long'

14 Acknowledge.

1 i. e. at an ebb.

2 Johnson, Stevens, and Malone have explained intending here regarding, turning their notice, or attending to, &c.; but it certainly means pretending. See King Richard III. Sc. 5. Shakespeare uses pretend in many places for intend: and I have shown that he also uses pretend for intend in several instances.

3 Fractions are broken hints, abrupt remarks. A half-cap is a cap slightly moved, not put off.

4 Liberal, not parsimonious.

5 i. e. considerably, regardfully.

6 Honesty here means liberality. 'That nobleness of spirit or honesty that free-born men have.'—Baret.

7 Stevens says, 'I believe this coin is from the mint of the poet.' We are not to look for the name of a Greek coin here; but he probably formed it from solidari, or solidi, a small coin, which Florio makes equal to shillings in value.

8 And we alive now who lived then. As much as to say, in so short a time.

9 One of the punishments invented for the covetous and avaricious in hell of old, was to have melted gold are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours; now Lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fye, no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2 Stran. But believe you this, my lord, that, not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents;¹ nay, urged extremely for't, and showed what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

2 Stran. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that? now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honourable man? there was very little honour showed in't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindnesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet had he mistook him,² and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied him occasion so many talents.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured lord,—

[To LUCIUS.]

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well:—Commend me to thy honourable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent—

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord; he's ever sending: How shall I thank him, thinkest thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.³

Luc. I know, his lordship is but merry with me; He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord. If his occasion were not virtuous,⁴ I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to disfigure myself against such a good time, when I might have shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour!⁵—Servilius, now before the gods, I am not able to do't: the more beast, I say:—I was sending to use Lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done it now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship: and I hope, his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind: And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will

¹ 'So many talents,' a common colloquial phrase for an indefinite number: the stranger apparently did not know the exact sum; and yet some editors have arbitrarily substituted 'fifty talents.'

² Lucius means to insinuate that it would have been a kind of mistake in Timon to apply to him, who had received but few favours from him in comparison to those bestowed on Lucullus.

³ Such is again the reading the old copy supplies; some modern editors have here again substituted 'fifty talents.' But this was the phraseology of the poet's age. In Julius Cæsar, Lucilius says to his adversary:—'There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight.'

⁴ 'If he did not want it for a good use.'

⁵ i. e. 'by purchasing what brought me but little honour, I have lost the more honourable opportunity of supplying the wants of my friend.'

⁶ The old copy reads:—

'Is every flatterer's sport.'

The emendation 's Theobald's. I think with Malone that this speech was never intended for verse, though printed as such in the folio

⁷ i. e. 'in respect of his fortune.' What Lucius de-you befriend me so far, as to use mine own words to him?

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I will look you out a good turn, Servilius.—

[Exit SERVILIUS]

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk, indeed; And he, that's once denied, will hardly speed.

[Exit LUCIUS.]

1 Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2 Stran. Ay, too well.

1 Stran. Why this

Is the world's soul; and just of the same piece Is every flatterer's spirit.⁶ Who can call him His friend, that dips in the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been this lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse; Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money Has paid his men their wages: He ne'er drinks, But Timon's silver treads upon his lip; And yet (O, see the monstrosity of man, When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!) He does deny him, in respect of his,⁷ What charitable men afford to beggars.

2 Stran. Religion groans at it.

1 Stran.

For mine own part, I never tasted Timon in my life, Nor came any of his bounties over me, To mark me for his friend; yet, I protest, For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue, And honourable carriage, Had his necessity made use of me, I would have put my wealth into donation,⁸ And the best half should have return'd to him, So much I love his heart: But, I perceive, Men must learn now with pity to dispense: For policy sits above conscience. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in Sempronius's House. Enter SEMPRONIUS, and a Servant of Timon's.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in't? Humph! Bove all others?

He might have tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus; And now Ventidius is wealthy too, Whom he redeem'd from prison: All these Owe their estates unto him.

Serv.

O my lord, They have all been touch'd,⁹ and found base metal; for

They have all denied him.

Sem.

How! have they denied him? Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him? And does he send to me? Three? humph!¹⁰ It shows but little love or judgment in him. Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians, Thrive,¹¹ give him over; Must I take the cure upon me?—

He has much disgrac'd me in't; I am angry at him, nies to Timon is in proportion to his fortune less than the usual alms given by good men to beggars.

⁸ The commentators have made difficulties about this passage, of which the meaning appears to be—'Had he applied to me, I would have put my wealth into the form of a gift, and have sent him the best half of it.' The Stranger could not mean that he 'would have treated his wealth as a present originally received from Timon,' because he expressly declares that he never tasted his bounties

⁹ Alluding to the trial of metals by the touchstone. Thus in King Richard III.:

'O Buckingham, now do I play the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed.'

¹⁰ This speech appears to be mutilated, and therefore unmetrical; the first part of it may perhaps bear modifying thus:—

'Ventidius, and Lucius, and Lucullus,

Have denied him, and does he send to me?

Three? humph!—

It shows, &c.

'I can only point out metrical dilapidations, which I profess myself unable to repair,' says Steevens.

¹¹ Johnson proposes to read:—

'Thrice, give him over;

but says, 'perhaps the old reading is the true; which

That might have known my place: I see no sense
for't,

But his occasions might have woo'd me first;
For, in my conscience, I was the first man
That e'er received gift from him:
And does he think so backwardly of me now,
That I'll requite it last? No: So it may prove
An argument of laughter to the rest,
And I amongst the lords be thought a fool.
I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum,
He had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake;
I had such a courage to do him good. But now return,

And with their faint reply this answer join;
Who bates mine honour, shall not know my coin.

[Exit.]

Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did, when he made man politic; he cross'd himself by't: and I cannot think, but, in the end, the villanies of man will set him clear.¹ How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! takes virtuous copies to be wicked: like those that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire.²

Of such a nature is his politic love.

This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled,
Save the gods only: Now his friends are dead,
Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their wards
Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their master.

And this is all a liberal course allows;
Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house.³

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Hall in Timon's House. Enter two Servants of VARRO, and the Servant of LUCIUS, meeting TITUS, HORTENSIVS, and other Servants to TIMON's Creditors, waiting his coming out.

Var. Serv. Well met; good-morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. Lucius?

What, do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and, I think,
One business does command us all; for mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter PHILOTUS.

Luc. Serv. And sir

Philotus, too!

Phi. Good day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother.

What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phi. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Serv. Not yet.

Phi. I wonder on't; he was wont to shine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter
with him:

You must consider that a prodigal course

Steevens illustrates by the following passage in Webster's Dutchess of Malfy—

Physicians thus,

*With their hands full of money, use to give o'er
Their patients.*

The passage will then mean, 'His friends, like physicians, thrive by his bounty and fees, and either relinquish and forsake him, or give up his case as desperate.' It is remarked by Malone that Webster has frequently imitated Shakspeare, and that this passage may be an imitation of that in the text.

I take the sense of this passage to be, 'The devil knew not what he did when he made man politic, (i. e. crafty, or full of cunning shifts;) he thwarted himself by so doing, overreached himself: and I cannot think but in the end the villanies of man will (make the devil appear in comparison innocent) set him clear, and that they will change places; man becoming the tempter, not the tempted.'

2 Warburton thinks that this is levelled at the Puritans. 'Scmpronius, like them, takes a virtuous semblance to be wicked, pretending that warm affection and is like the sun's;⁴ but not, like his, recoverable.

I fear,

'Tis deepest winter in Lord Timon's purse;

That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet
Find little.⁵

Phi. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange event.
Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift,
For which you⁶ wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shows,

Timon in this should pay more than he owes:
And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels,
And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I am weary of this charge,⁷ the gods can witness:

I know, my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth,
And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.

1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand crowns:

What's yours?

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

1 Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep: and it should seem by the sum,

Your master's confidence was above mine;
Else, surely, his had equal'd.⁸

Enter FLAMINIUS.

Tit. One of Lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! sir, a word: Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship; 'pray, signify so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that; he knows, you are too diligent. [Exit FLAMINIUS.]

Enter FLAVIUS in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward muffled so?

He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, sir?

1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.

Flav.

Ay,

If money were as certain as your waiting,
'Twere sure enough. Why then prefer'd you not
Your sums and bills, when your false masters eat

Of my lord's meat? Then they could smile, and fawn

Upon his debts, and take down th' interest
Into their gluttonous maws. You do yourselves but wrong,

To stir me up; let me pass quietly:

Believe't, my lord and I have made an end;
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flav. If 'twill not serve,
'Tis not so base as you; for you serve knaves.

[Exit.]

1 Var. Serv. How! what does his cashier'd worship mutter?

generous jealousy of friendship, that is affronted if any other be applied to before it.'

3 i. e. keep within doors for fear of duns. Thus in Measure for Measure, Act iii. Sc. 2:—'You will turn good husband now, Pompey, you will keep the house.'

4 i. e. like him in blaze and splendor.

'Soles occidere et redire possunt.—Catull.

5 Still perhaps alluding to the effects of winter, during which some animals are obliged to seek their scanty provision through a depth of snow.

6 The old copy reads, 'For which I wait for money.'

7 i. e. this office or employment.

8 The commentators thought this simple passage required a comment; and the reader will be surprised to hear that it bears several constructions. It is obvious that the meaning is, 'it should seem by the sum your master lent, his confidence in Timon was greater than that of my master, else surely my master's loan had equalled his.' If there be any obscurity, it is because the relative pronoun his does not quite clearly refer to its immediate antecedent mine. I should not have thought the passage needed explanation, had it not been the subject of contention.

2 Var. Serv. No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Tit. O, here's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.

Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair some other hour, I should derive much from it: for, take it on my soul, my lord leans wondrously to discontent. His comfortable temper has forsook him; he is much out of health, and keeps his chamber.

Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not sick:

And, if it be so far beyond his health,
Methinks, he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a clear way to the gods.

Ser. Good gods!

Tit. We cannot take this for an answer, sir.

Flam. [Within.] Servilius, help!—my lord! my lord!—

Enter TIMON, in a rage; FLAMINIUS following.

Tim. What, are my doors oppos'd against my passage?

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol?
The place which I have feasted, does it now,
Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus.

Tit. My lord, here is my bill.

Luc. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord.

Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.

Phi. All our bills.

Tim. Knock me down with 'em:¹ cleave me to the girdle.

Luc. Serv. Alas! my lord,—

Tim. Cut my heart in sums.

Tit. Mine fifty talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that.—

What yours?—and yours?

1 Var. Serv. My lord,—

2 Var. Serv. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you! [Exit.]

Hor. 'Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money: these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em.

[Exeunt.]

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the slaves:

Creditors!—devils.

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flav. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so:—My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord.

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my friends again,
Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all:²
I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O, my lord,

You only speak from your distracted soul;
There is not so much left, to furnish out
A moderate table.

Tim. Be't not in thy care; go,
I charge thee; invite them all: let in the tide
Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide.

[Exeunt.]

1 Timon quibbles. They present their written bills; he catches at the word, and alludes to bills or battle-axes. The word is so played upon in As You Like It.

2 The first folio reads:—

'Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius, *Ullor*za all.'

What is meant by this strange corruption it is perhaps now vain to conjecture. Malone retains this strange word; and Steevens banters him pleasantly enough upon his perinacious adherence to the text of the first folio.

SCENE V. The same. The Senate House. The Senate sitting. Enter ALCIBIADES, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice to it; the fault's

Bloody; 'tis necessary he should die:
Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

1 Sen. Now, captain?

Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues;
For pity is the virtue of the law,
And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time, and fortune, to lie heavy
Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,
Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth
To those that, without heed, do plunge into it.
He is a man, setting his fate aside,³
Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice,
(An honour in him which buys out his fault;)
But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,
Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe:
And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave⁴ his anger, ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,⁵
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:
Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born:
He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breathe;⁶ and make his wrongs

His outsiders; wear them like his raiment, carelessly;
And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill,
What folly 'tis to hazard life for ill!

Alcib. My lord,—

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;
To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon me,
If I speak like a captain.—

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And not endure all threatenings? sleep upon it,
And let the foes quietly cut their throats,
Without repugnance? but if there be Such valour in the bearing, what make we Abroad?⁷ why then, women are more valiant,
That stay at home, if bearing carry it;
And th' ass more captain than the lion; the felon,⁸
Loaden with irons, wiser than the judge,
If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,

As you are great, be pitifully good:
Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;⁹
But, in defence, by mercy,¹⁰ 'tis most just.

To be in anger is impiety;
But who is man, that is not angry?
Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain! his service done

3 i. e. putting this action of his, which was predetermined by fate, out of the question.

4 The folio reads:—

'And with such sober and unnoted passion
He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent.'

5 You undertake a paradox too hard.

6 i. e. utter.

7 What do we, or what have we to do in the field?—

8 The old copy reads 'fellow.' The alteration was made at Johnson's suggestion, perhaps without necessity. Fellow is a common term of contempt.

9 Gust here means rashness. We still say, 'it was done in a gust of passion.'

10 i. e. 'I call mercy herself to witness.'

At Lacedæmon, and Byzantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 Sen. What's that?

Alcib. Why, I say, my lords, h'as done fair service,

And slain in fight many of your enemies :
How full of valour did he bear himself
In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds ?

2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em, he Is a sworn rioter, h'as a sin that often
Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner :
If there were no foes, that were enough alone
To overcome him : in that beastly fury
He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions : 'Tis infer'd to us,
His days are foul, and his drink dangerous.

1 Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fate ! he might have died in war.

My lords, if not for any parts in him
(Though his right arm might purchase his own time,
And be in debt to none,) yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both :
And, for I know your reverend ages love
Security, I'll pawn my victories, all²
My honour to you, upon his good returns.
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receive't in valiant gore ;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

1 Sen. We are for law, he dies ; urge it no more,
On height of our displeasure : Friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood, that spills another.

Alcib. Must it be so ? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How ?

Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.³

3 Sen. What ?

Alcib. I cannot think, but your age has forgot me ;
It could not else be, I should prove so base,⁴
To sue, and be denied such common grace :
My wounds ache at you.

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger ?
'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect ;
We banish thee for ever.

Alcib. Banish me ?
Banish your dotage ; banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.

1 Sen. If after two days' shine, Athens contain
thee,
Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit,⁵

He shall be executed presently. [Exit Senators.]

Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough ; that you may live

Only in bone, that none may look on you !
I am worse than mad : I have kept back their foes,
While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon large interest ; I myself,
Rich only in large hurts ;—All those, for this ?
Is this the balsam, that the usuring senate
Pours into captains' wounds ? ha ! banishment ?
It comes not ill ; I hate not to be banish'd ;
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
'That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My discontented troops, and lay for hearts.⁶
'Tis honour, with most lands to be at odds ;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs, as gods. [Exit.]

1 i. e. a man who practises riot as if he had made it an oath or duty.

2 He charges them obliquely with being usurers.
Thus in a subsequent passage :—

banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.⁷

3 Remembrances is here used as a word of five syllables. In the singular Shakspeare uses it as a word of four syllables only :

'And lasting in her sad remembrance.'

Twelfth Night, Act I. Sc. 1.

4 Base for dishonoured.

5 This, says Steevens, I believe, means 'not to put ourselves into any tumour of rage, take our definitive resolution.' So in King Henry VIII. Act iii. Sc. 1 :—

'The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it ; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms.'

SCENE VI.—A magnificent Room in Timon's House. Music. Tables set out : Servants attending. Enter divers Lords, at several doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.

2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think, this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring, when we encountered : I hope, it is not so low with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1 Lord. I should think so : He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off ; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you ?

1 Lord. A thousand pieces.

2 Lord. A thousand pieces !

1 Lord. What of you ?

3 Lord. He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.

Enter TIMON, and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both :—And how fare you ?

1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willing, than we your lordship.

Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter ; such summer-birds are men.—Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay : feast your ears with the music awhile ; if they will fare so harshly on the trumpet's sound : we shall toil presently.

1 Lord. I hope, it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you.

2 Lord. My noble lord,——

Tim. Ah, my good friend ! what cheer ?

[The Banquet brought in.]

2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e'en sick of shame, that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on't, sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,—

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrances.⁸
—Come, bring in all together.

2 Lord. All covered dishes !

1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

3 Lord. Doubt not that, if money, and the season can yield it.

2 Lord. How do you ? What's the news ?

3 Lord. Alcibiades is banished : Hear you of it ?

1 & 2 Lord. Alcibiades banished !

3 Lord. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1 Lord. How ? how ?

2 Lord. I pray you, upon what ?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near ?

3 Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.⁹

I think we might read with advantage :

—And not to quell our spirit.¹⁰

1 i. e. not to repress or humble it.

6 To lay for hearts, is to endeavour to win the affections of the people.

7 'Upon that were my thoughts feeding or most anxiously employed.'

8 i. e. 'your good memory.' Shakspeare and his contemporaries often use the comparative for the positive or superlative. Thus in King John :—

'Nay, but make haste the better foot before.'

9 i. e. near at hand, or in prospect. So in Romeo and Juliet :—

'We have a foolish trifling banquet towards.'

2 Lord. This is the old man still.

3 Lord. Will't hold? will't hold?

2 Lord. It does: but time will—and so—

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool, with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike.¹ Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: Sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts, make yourselves praised: but reserve still to give, lest your deities be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another: for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be beloved, more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: If there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are.—The rest of your lees,² O gods,—the senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people,—what is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends,—as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing they are welcome. Uncover, dogs, and lap.

[The dishes uncovered are full of warm water.

Some speak. What does his lordship mean?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better feast never behold, You knot of mouth-friends! smoke, and lukewarm water

Is your perfection.³ This is Timon's last; Who stuck and spangled you with flatteries, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces [Throwing water in their faces.

Your reeking villany. Live loath'd, and long, Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites, Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears, You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's flies,⁴ Cap and knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks! Of man, and beast, the infinite malady Crust you quite o'er!—What, dost thou go? Soft, take thy physic first—thou too,—and thou;—

[Throws the dishes at them, and drives them out.

Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none.—What, all in motion? Henceforth be no feast, Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest.

Burn, house; sink, Athens! henceforth hated be Of Timon, man, and all humanity! [Exit.

Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords and Senators.

1 Lord. How now, my lords?⁵

2 Lord. Know you the quality of Lord Timon's fury?

3 Lord. Pish! did you see my cap?

4 Lord. I have lost my gown.

3 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and nought but humour sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat:—Did you see my jewel?

4 Lord. Did you see my cap?

2 Lord. Here 'tis.

4 Lord. Here lies my gown.

1 Lord. Let's make no stay.

2 Lord. Lord Timon's mad

3 Lord. I feel't upon my bones.

4 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones.⁷ [Exeunt.

¹ 'In all places alike.' This alludes to the mode in which guests were formerly placed at table according to rank.

² Warburton and Mason say we should read foes instead of fees, which is the reading of the old copy. I have ventured to substitute lees, a more probable word to be misprinted fees, the long f and l being easily mistaken for each other. Timon means to call the senators the lees and dregs of the city, Sordes et fæx urbis, on account of their vile propensities.

³ i. e. the highest of your excellence.

⁴ i. e. flies of a season. Thus before:—

—one cloud of winter showers,

These flies are cough'd.

⁵ Minute-jacks, are the same as jacks of the clock-house; automaton figures appended to clocks: but the

ACT IV

SCENE I. Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall, That girdlest in those wolves! Dive in the earth, And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent; Obedience fail in children! slaves, and fools, Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench, And minister in their steads! to general filths^a Convert o' the instant, green virginity! Do't in your parents' eyes; bankrupts, hold fast; Rather than render back, out with your knives, And cut your trusters' throats! bound servants steal!

Large-handed robbers your grave masters are, And pill by law: maid, to thy master's bed; Thy mistress is o' the brothel! son of sixteen, Pluck the lin'd crutch from the old limping sire, With it beat out his brains! piety, and fear, Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth, Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood, Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries,² And yet confusion lie!—Plagues, incident to men. Your potent and infectious fevers heap On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold sciatica, Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty!¹⁰ Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth; That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive, And drown themselves in riot! itches, baines, Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop Be general leprosy! breath infect breath; That their society, as their friendship, may Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee, But nakedness, thou detestable town! Take thou that too, with multiplying bans!¹¹ Timon will to the woods; where he shall find The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind. The gods confound (hear me, you good gods all,) The Athenians both within and out that wall! And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow To the whole race of mankind, high and low! Amen. [Exit.

SCENE II. Athens. A Room in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with two or three Servants.

1 Serv. Hear you, master steward, where's our master?

Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining? Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you? Let me be recorded by the righteous gods, I am as poor as you.

1 Serv. Such a house broke! So noble a master fallen! All gone! and not One friend, to take his fortune by the arm, And go along with him!

2 Serv. As we do turn our backs term was used for 'time serving busy bodies, who had their oar in every man's boat, or hand in every man's dish.'

⁶ This and the next speech is spoken by the newly-arrived lords.

⁸ Steevens explains this 'common sewers,' which is quite ludicrous, unless he meant it metaphorically. General filths means common strumpets: filthiness, and obscenity were synonymous with our ancestors.

⁹ i. e. contrarities, whose nature it is to waste or destroy each other.

—as doth a galled rock

O'erhang and jutting his confounded base.

King Henry V.

¹⁰ Liberty here means licentiousness or libertinism. So in the Comedy of Errors:—

—And many such like liberties of sin.

¹¹ i. e. accumulated curses. Multiplying for multiplied, the active participle with a passive signification.

From our companion, thrown into his grave;
So his familiars to his buried fortunes!
Slink all away; leave their false vows with him,
Like empty purses pick'd: and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin'd house.

3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,
That see I by our faces; we are fellows still,
Serving alike in sorrow: Leak'd is our bark;
And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
Hearing the surges threat: we must all part
Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.
Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake,
Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads, and say,
As 'twere a knell unto our master's fortunes.
We have seen better days. Let each take some;

[Giving them money.] Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:
Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.²

[Ereunt Servants.]

O, the fierce³ wretchedness that glory brings us!
Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
Since riches point to misery and contempt?
Who'd be so mock'd with glory? or to live
But in a dream of friendship?
To have his pomp, and all what state compounds,
But only painted, like his varnish'd friends?
Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart;
Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood,⁴
When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!
Who then dares to be half so kind again?
For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men.
My dearest lord,—bless'd, to be most accurs'd,
Rich, only to be wretched;—thy great fortunes
Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord!
He's flung in rage from this ungrateful seat
Of monstrous friends: nor has he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it.
I'll follow, and inquire him out:
I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The Woods. Enter TIMON.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb⁵

1 'So those who were familiar to his buried fortunes, who in the most ample manner participated them, slink all away,' &c.

2 This conceit occurs again in King Lear :—

'Fairer Cordelia, thou art most rich, being poor.'
Johnson observes, that 'Nothing contributes more to the exaltation of Timon's character than the zeal and fidelity of his servants; nothing but real virtue can be honored by domestics; nothing but impartial kindness can gain affection from dependants.'

3 Fierce here means vehement.

4 Blood is here used for passion, propensity, affection. Malone asserts that 'blood is used for natural propensity or disposition throughout these plays; but he has not given a single instance, while we have many passages where it can mean nothing but passion or affection.'

5 That is, the moon's—this sublunary world.

6 'Brother, when his fortune is enlarged, will scorn brother: such is the general depravity of mankind. Not even beings besieged with misery can bear good fortune without contemning their fellow creatures, above whom accident has elevated them.' But is here used in its exceptive sense, and signifies without.

7 This is the reading of the old copy. Steevens reads 'denude.' It has been said that there is no antecedent to which 'deny,' can be referred. I think that it clearly refers to great fortune in the preceding sentence, with which I have now connected it, by placing a colon instead of a period at nature. The construction will be, 'Raise me this beggar to great fortune, and deny it to that lord,' &c.

8 The folio of 1623 reads :—

'It is the pastour lards the brother's sides,

The want that makes him leave.'

The second folio changes leave to lean. The probable

Infect the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,—
Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
Scarce is dividend,—touch them with several fortunes;

The greater scorns the lesser. Not nature,
To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great fortune,
But by contempt of nature:⁶

Raise me this beggar, and deny't⁷ that lord;

The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,

The beggar native honour.

It is the pasture lards the brother's sides,

The want that makes him lean.⁸ Who dares, who dares,

In purity of manhood stand upright,

And say, This man's a flatterer? if one be,

So are they all; for every grize⁹ of fortune

Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate

Ducks to the golden fool: All is oblique;

There's nothing level in our cursed natures,

But direct villany. Therefore, be abhorr'd

All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!

His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains:

Destruction fang¹¹ mankind! Earth, yield me roots!

[Digging.]

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate

With thy most operant poison! What is here?

Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold? No, gods

I am no idle votarist.¹² Roots, you clear heavens!¹³

Thus much of this, will make black, white; foul, fair;

Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward, valiant.

Ha, you gods! why this? What this, you gods?

Why this

Will lug your priests and servants from your sides;¹⁴

Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads:¹⁵

This yellow slave

Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd,

Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves,

And give them title, knee, and approbation,

With senators on the bench: this is it,

That makes the wappen'd¹⁶ widow wed again;

She, whom the spital-house, and ulcerous sores,

Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices

To the April day again.¹⁷ Come, damned earth,

Thou common whore of mankind, that put'st odds

Among the rout of nations, I will make thee

Do thy right nature.¹⁸—[March afar off.]—Ha! a drum? Thou'rt quick,

But yet I'll bury thee: Thou'lt go, strong thief,

When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand:—

Nay, stay thou out for earnest. [Keeping some gold.]

meaning of the passage as it now stands is, 'Men are courted and flattered according to their riches.' It is the possessions of a man that makes sycophants, 'enlarges his fat-already pride; if he wants wherewith to pasture his flatterers, his vanity will be starved. The poet is still thinking of the rich and poor brother he had before mentioned.

9 This man does not refer to any particular person, but to any supposed individual. So in As You Like It:

'Who can come in and say that I mean her,

When such a one as she such is her neighbours.'

10 Grize, step or degree.

11 i. e. seize, gripe.

12 No insincere or inconstant supplicant: gold will not serve me instead of roots.

13 You clear heavens, is you pure heavens. So in Lear :—

'—the clearest gods, who make them honours

Of men's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee.'

14 Aristophanes, in his Plutus, makes the priest of Jupiter desert his service to live with Plutus.

15 This alludes to an old custom of drawing away the pillow from under the heads of men, in their last agonies, to accelerate their departure.

16 It is not clear what is meant by wappen'd in this passage; perhaps worn out, debilitated. In Fletcher's Two Noble Kinsmen, (which tradition says was written in conjunction with Shakespeare,) we have unwappened in a contrary sense.

17 'Restores to all the freshness and sweetness of youth.' Youth is called by the old poets the 'April of man's life.' Young Fenton, in the Merry Wives of Windsor, 'smells April and May.'

18 i. e. lie in the earth, where nature laid thee; thou'rt quick, means thou hast life and motion in thee.

Enter ALCIABIADDES, with drum and fife, in warlike manner; PHRYNIA and TIMANDRA.

Alcib. What art thou there?

Speak.

Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy heart,

For showing me again the eyes of man!

Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to thee,

That art thyself a man?

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.

For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog,

That I might love thee something.

Alcib. I know thee well; But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.

Tim. I know thee, too; and more, than that I know thee,

I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;

With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules:

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;

Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine

Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,

For all her cherubin look.

Phr. Thy lips rot off!

Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns

To thine own lips again.¹

Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this change?

Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give:

But then renew I could not, like the moon;

There were no suns to borrow of.

Alcib. Noble Timon,

What friendship may I do thee?

Tim. None, but to Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?

Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: If Thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for

Thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee,

For thou'rt a man!

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.

Tim. Thou saw'st them, when I had prosperity.

Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed time.

Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of harlots.

Timan. Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world

Voic'd so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timan. Yes.

Tim. Be a whore still! they love thee not, that use thee;

Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust.

Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves

For tubs, and baths; bring down rose-cheeked youth

To the tub-fast, and the diet.²

Timan. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits

Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.—

I have but little gold of late, brave Timon,

The want whereof doth daily make revolt

In my penurious band: I have heard, and griev'd,

How curs'd Athens, mindless of thy worth,

Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,

But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them,—

² See Act ii. Sc. 2. The diet was a customary term for the regimen prescribed in these cases. So in The Mative, a Collection of Epigrams:—

'She took not diet nor the sweat in season.'

³ Warburton justly observes, that this passage is 'wonderfully sublime and picturesque.' The same image occurs in King Richard II.

⁴ Devouring pestilence hangs in our air.'

⁵ Cutting.

⁶ By window-bars the poet probably means 'the partlet, gorget, or kerchief, which women put about their neck, and pin down over their paps,' sometimes called a niced, and translated Mamillare or fascia pectoralis: and described as made of fine linen: from its semitransparency arose the simile of window bars. 'This is the best explanation I have to offer. The late Mr. Boswell thought that windows were used to signify a woman's

Tim. I pry'thee, beat thy drum, and get thee gone.

Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.

Tim. How dost thou pity him, whom thou dost trouble?

I had rather be alone.

Alcib. Why, fare thee well:

Here's some gold for thee.

Tim. Keep't, I cannot eat it

Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—

Tim. Warr'st thou against Athens?

Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have caus'd

Tim. The gods confound them all i' thy conquest; and

These after, when thou hast conquer'd!

Alcib. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That,

By killing villains, thou wast born to conquer

My country.

Put up thy gold; Go on,—here's gold,—go on;

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove

Will o'er some high-wic'd city hang his poison

In the sick air:³ Let not thy sword skip one:

Pity not honour'd age for his white beard,

He's an usurer; Strike me the counterfeit matron;

It is her habit only that is honest,

Herself's a bawd: Let not the virgin's cheek

Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those milkpaps,

That through the window-bars⁴ bore at men's eyes,

Are not within the leaf of pity writ,

But set them down horrible traitors: Spare not the babe

Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their mercy:

Think it a bastard,⁵ whom the oracle

Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut,

And mounce it sans remorse: Swear against objects;⁶

Put armour on thine ears, and on thine eyes;

Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,

Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding,

Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers:

Make large confusion; and, thy fury spent,

Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.

Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou giv'st me,

Not all thy counsel.

Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse upon thee!

Phr. & Timan. Give us some gold, good Timon:

Hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade,

And to make whores, a bawd.⁷ Hold up, you sluts,

Your aprons mountant: You are not oathable.—

Although, I know, you'll swear, terribly swear,

Into strong shudders, and to heavenly agues,

The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths

I'll trust to your conditions:⁸ Be whores still;

And he whose pious breath seeks to convert you,

Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up;

Let your close fire predominate his smoke,

And be no turncoats: Yet may your pains, six months,

Be quite contrary:⁹ And thatch your poor thin roofs breasts, in a passage he has cited from Weaver's Plantagenet's Tragical Story, but it seems to me doubtful. I can hardly think the passage warrants Johnson's explanation, 'The virgin shows her bosom through the lattice of her chamber.'

⁶ An allusion to the tale of Œdipus.

⁷ I.e. against objects of charity and compassion. So in Troilus and Cressida, Ulysses says:—

'For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes

To tender objects.'

⁸ That is, 'enough to make whores leave whoring, and a bawd leave making whores.'

⁹ Conditions for dispositions.

¹⁰ The meaning of this passage appears to be as Steevens explains it.—'Timon had been exhorting them to follow constantly their trade of debauchery, but he interrupts himself and imprecates upon them that for the year their pains may be quite contrary, that they may suffer such punishment as is usually inflicted upon harlots. He then continues his exhortations.'

With burdens of the dead ;—some that were hang'd,¹
No matter :—wear them, betray with them : whore still ;

Paint till a horse may mire upon your face :
A pox of wrinkles !

Phr. & Timon. Well, more gold ;—What then ?—
Believe't, that we'll do any thing for gold.

Tim. Consumptions sow

In hollow bones of man ; strike their sharp shins,
And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice,
That he may never more false title plead,²
Nor sound his quillets³ shrilly : hoarse the flamen,⁴
That scolds against the quality of flesh,
And not believes himself : down with the nose,
Down with it flat ; take the bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to foresee,
Smells from the general weal :⁵ make curl'd-pate
ruffians bald ;

And let the unscarr'd braggarts of the war
Derive some pain from you : Plague all ;
That your activity may defeat and quell
The source of all erection.—There's more gold :—
Do you damn others, and let this damn you,
And ditches grave⁶ you all !

Phr. & Timon. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon.

Tim. More where, more mischief first ; I have given you earnest.

Alcib. Strike up the drum, towards Athens. Farewell, Timon ;

If I thrive well, I'll visit thee again.

Tim. If I hope well, I'll never see thee more.

Alcib. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alcib. Call'st thou that harm ?

Tim. Men daily find it such. Get thee away,
And take thy beagles with thee.

Alcib. We but offend him.—
Strike. [Drum beats. Exeunt ALCIBIADES, PHRYNIA, and TIMANDRA.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness,
Should yet be hungry !—Common mother, thou,

[Digging.]
Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,⁸
Teems, and feeds all ; whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm,⁷
With all the abhorred births below crisp'd⁹ heaven,
Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine ;
Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate,
From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root !
Ensear thy fertile and conception womb,⁹

1 The fashion of periwigs for women, which Stowe informs us 'were brought into England about the time of the massacre of Paris,' seems to have been a fertile source of satire. Stubbes, in his Anatomy of Abuses, says that it was dangerous for any child to wander, as nothing was more common than for women to entice such as had fine locks into private places, and there to cut them off.

2 Quillets are subtleties, nice and frivolous distinctions. See Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 1.

3 The old copy reads 'hoar the flamen,' which Steevens suggests may mean, give him the hoary leprosy. I have not scrupled to insert Upton's reading of hoarse into the text, because I think the whole construction of the speech shows that is the word the poet wrote. To afflict him with leprosy would not prevent his scolding, to deprive him of his voice by hoarseness might.

4 To 'foresee his particular' is 'to provide for his private advantage, for which he leaves the right scent of public good.'

5 To graze is to bury. The word is now obsolete, but was familiar to our old writers. Thus Chapman in his version of the fifteenth Iliad :—
'—the throates of dogs shall grave
His manless limba.'

6 This image (as Warburton ingeniously supposes) would almost make one imagine that Shakspeare was acquainted with some personifications of nature similar to the ancient statues of Diana Ephesia Multimamma.

7 The serpent which we, from the smallness of the eye, call the blind-worm, and the Latins cæcilia. So in Macbeth :—
'Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting.'

Let it no more bring out ingrateful man !
Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears ;
Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward face
Hath to the marbled mansion all above!¹⁰
Never presented !—O, a root,—Dear thanks !
Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas ;
Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts,
And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
That from it all consideration slips !

Enter APEMANTUS.

More man ? Plague ! plague !

Apem. I was directed hither : Men report,
Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them.

Tim. 'Tis, then, because thou dost not keep a dog
Whom I would imitate. Consumption catch thee !

Apem. This is in thee a nature but affected ;
A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
From change of fortune. Why this spade ? this place ?

This slavlike habit ? and these looks of care ?
Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft ;
Hug their diseases'd perfumes,¹¹ and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods,
By putting on the cunning of a carper ;¹²
Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive
By that which has undone thee : hinge thy knee,¹³
And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,
Blow off thy cap ; praise his most vicious strain,
And call it excellent : Thou wast told thus ;
Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters, that bid welcome,

To knaves and all approachers : 'Tis most just,
That thou turn rascal ; hadst thou wealth again,
Rascals should have't. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself.

Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thyself ;

A madman so long, now a fool : What, think'st
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm ? Will these moss'd trees,

That have outliv'd the eagle,¹⁴ page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out ? Will the cold brook,

Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit ? call the creatures
Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven ; whose bare unhoussed trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mere nature,¹⁵—bid them flatter thee ;
O ! thou shalt find—

Tim. A fool of thee : Depart.

8 Perhaps Shakspeare meant curled (which was synonymous with crisp) from the appearance of the clouds in the Tempest, Ariel talks of sitting 'on the curPd clouds.' Chaucer, in his House of Fame, says :—
'Her heare that was oundie and crisp.'

i. e. wavy and curled. Again, in the Philosopher's Satires, by Robert Anton—
'Her face as beauteous as the crisp'd mora.'

9 So in King Lear :—
'Dry up in her the organs of increase.'

10 Thus Milton, b. iii. l. 564 :—
'Through the pure marble air.'

Again in Othello :—
'Now by your marble heaven.'

11 i. e. their diseased perfumed mistresses. Thus in Othello :—
'Such another fitchew ; marry, a perfum'd one.'

12 'Cunning of a carper' is the fastidiousness of a critic. Shame not these words, says Apemantus, by coming here to find fault. Carping momuses was a general term for ill-natured critics. Beatrice's sarcastic railery is thus designated by Ursula in Much Ado About Nothing :—
'Why sure such carping is not commendable.'

13 'To crook the pregnant hinges of the knee.' Hamlet.

14 Aquila Senectus is a proverb. Tuberville, in his Book of Falconry, 1575, says that the great age of this bird has been ascertained from the circumstance of its always building its eyrie or nest in the same place.

15 'And with presented nakedness outface
The winds.' King Lear, Act ii. Sc. 3.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem.

Tim.

Why?

Thou flatter'st misery.

Apem. I flatter not; but say, thou art a catiff.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's.

Dost please thyself in't?

Apem.

Ay.

Tim. What! a knave too?

Apem. If thou didst put this sour cold habit on

To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou

Dost it enforcedly; thou'dst courtier be again,

Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery

Outlives uncertain pomp, is crown'd before:¹

The one is filling still, never complete;

The other, at high wish: Best state, contentless,

Hath a distracted and most wretched being,

Worse than the worst, content.

Thou should'st desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath,² that is more miserable.

Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm

With favour never clasp'd; but bred a dog.

Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath,³ proceeded

The sweet degrees that this brief world affords

To such as may the passive drugs of it⁴

Freely command, thou would'st have plung'd thyself

In general riot; melted down thy youth

In different beds of lust; and never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect,⁵ but follow'd

The sugar'd game before thee. But myself,

Who had the world as my confectionary;

The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men

At duty, more than I could frame employment;⁶

That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves

Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush

Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare

For every storm that blows;⁷—I, to bear this,

That never knew but better, is some burden:

Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time

Hath made thee hard in't. Why should'st thou hate men?

They never flatter'd thee: What hast thou given?

If thou wilt curse,—thy father, that poor rag,

Must be thy subject: who, in spite, put stuff

To some she-beggar, and compounded thee,

Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!—

If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,

Thou hadst been a knave and flatterer.⁸

Apem.

Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.

Apem. I, that I was

No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now;

Were all the wealth I have, shut up in thee,

I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—

That the whole life of Athens were in this!

Thus would I eat it.

[Eating a root.]

Apem. Here; I will mend thy feast.

[Offering him something.]

Tim. First mend my company, take away thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of thine.

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botch'd;

If not, I would it were.

Apem. What would'st thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,

Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best, and truest:

For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

Apem. Where ly'st o' nights, Timon?

Tim. Under that's above me.

Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather,

where I eat it.

Tim. 'Would poison were obedient, and knew my mind!

Apem. Where would'st thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends: When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mock'd thee for too much curiosity;⁹ in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate, I feed not.

Apem. Dost hate a medlar?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou hadst hated meddlers sooner, thou should'st have loved thyself better now. What man didst thou ever know unthrift, that was beloved after his means?

Tim. Who, without those means thou talkest of, didst thou ever know beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What would'st thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

1 To have wishes crowned is to have them completed, to be content. The highest fortunes, if contentless, have a wretched being, worse than that of the most abject fortune accompanied by content.

2 By his breath means by his voice, i. e. suffrage.

3 i. e. from infancy, from the first swathe-band with which a new-born infant is enveloped. 'There is in this speech a sullen haughtiness and malignant dignity, suitable at once to the lord and the man-hater. The impatience with which he bears to have his luxury reproached by one that never had luxury within his reach, is natural and graceful.' Johnson. O si sic omnia. In the conception and expression of this note (says Mr. Pye) we trace the mind and the pen of the author; a collection of such notes by Johnson would have been indeed a commentary worthy the critic and the poet. Johnson has adduced a passage somewhat resembling this from a letter written by the unfortunate favourite of Elizabeth, the Earl of Essex, just before his execution. 'I had none but divines to call upon me, to whom I said, if my ambition could have entered into their narrow hearts, they would not have been so humble; or if my delights had been once tasted by them, they would not have been so precise.' The rest of this admirable letter is, as Johnson justly observes, 'too serious and so solemn to be inserted here without irrelevance.' It was very likely to make a deep impression upon Shakespeare's mind. But indeed no one can read it without emotion. Jolusien copied his extract from Birch's Memoirs of Queen Elizabeth, and has erroneously printed deceiters for divines.

4 The old copy reads 'The passive drugges of it,' Drug or druggie, is only a variation of the orthography of drudge, as appears by Baret's Alvearie.

5 The cold admonitions of cautious prudence. Respect is regardful consideration:—

Reason and respect

Makes livers pale, and lusthood deject.

Troilus and Cressida.

6 i. e. more than I could frame employment for.

7 'O summer friendship,

Whose flatter'ring leaves that shadow'd us in our

Prosperity, with the least gust drop off

In the autumn of adversity.'

Massinger's Maid of Honour.

8 Dryden has quoted two verses of Virgil to show how well he could have written satires. Shakespeare has here given a specimen of the same power, by a line bitter beyond all bitterness, in which Timon tells Apemantus that he had not virtue enough for the vices which he condemns. Dr. Warburton explains worst by lowest, which somewhat weakens the sense, and yet leaves it sufficiently vigorous.

I have heard Mr. Burke commend the subtlety of discrimination with which Shakespeare distinguishes the present character of Timon from that of Apemantus, whom, to vulgar eyes, he would seem to resemble

Johnson.

9 Curiosity is scrupulous exactness, finical niceness Baret explains it picked diligence, Accuratus corporis cultus. 'A waiting gentlewoman should flee affectation or curiosity,' (i. e. affectation or overniceness.)—It sometimes means scrupulous anxiety, precision.

Tim. Would'st thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee to attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee; and still thou livedst but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou should'st hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: wert thou a bear, thou would'st be kill'd by the horse: wert thou a horse, thou would'st be seized by the leopard: wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion,² and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remotion,³ and thy defence, absence. What beast could'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation?

Apem. If thou could'st please me with speaking to me, thou might'st have hit upon it here: The commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Apem. Yonder comes a poet and a painter: The plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way: When I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog, than Apemantus.

Apem. Thou art the cap⁴ of all the fools alive.

Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon.

Apem. A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All villains, that do stand by thee, are pure.

Apem. There is no leprosy but what thou speak'st.

Tim. If I name thee,—

I'll beat thee,—but I should infect my hands.

Apem. I would, my tongue could rot them off!

Tim. Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!

Choler does kill me, that thou art alive;
I swoon to see thee.

Apem. Would thou would'st burst.

Tim. Away,

Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry, I shall lose

A stone by thee. [Throws a stone at him.]

Apem. Beast!

Tim. Slave!

Apem. Toad!

Tim. Rogue, rogue, rogue!

[Apemantus retreats backward as going.]

I am sick of this false world; and will love nought

But even the mere necessities upon it.

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;

Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat

1 Alluding to the unicorn's being sometimes overcome from striking his horn into a tree in his furious pursuit of an enemy. See Gesner's History of Animals, and Julius Caesar, Act ii. Sc. 1.

2 This seems to imply that the lion 'bears, like the Turk, no brother near the throne.'

3 Both Steevens and Malone are wrong in their explanation of remotion here; which is neither 'removing from place to place,' nor 'remoteness;' but 'removing away, removing afar off. Remedio.'

4 I. e. the top, the principal.

5 See Act iii. Sc. 4.

6 Warburton remarks that the imagery here is exquisitely beautiful and sublime.

7 Touch for touchstone:—

'O Buckingham, now do I play the touch,

To try if thou be'st current gold.'

8 The old copy reads, 'Enter the Banditti.'

9 The old copy reads:—

'Your greatest want is, you want much of meat.'

Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in me at others' lives may laugh.
O thou sweet king-killer, and dear divorce

[Looking on the gold.]

'Twixt natural son and sire: thou bright defiler
Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
Thou ever young, fresh, lov'd, and delicate wooer,
Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow
That lies on Dian's lap!¹⁶ thou visible god,
That solder'st close impossibilities,
And mak'st them kiss! that speak'st with every tongue,

To every purpose! O thou touch⁷ of hearts!
Think, thy slave man rebels; and by thy virtue
Set them into confounding odds, that beasts
May have the world in empire!

Apem. 'Would 'twere so;—
But not till I am dead!—I'll say thou hast gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd to shortly.

Tim.

Throng'd to?

Apem.

Ay.

Tim. Thy back, I pry thee.

Apem.

Live and love thy misery!

Tim. Long live so, and so die!—I am quit.—

[Exit Apemantus.]

More things like men?—Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

*Enter Thieves.*⁸

1 Thief. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder: The mere want of gold, and the falling from of his friends, drove him into this melancholy.

2 Thief. It is noised, he hath a mass of treasure.

3 Thief. Let us make the assay upon him; if he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall'st get it?

2 Thief. True; for he bears it not about him, 'tis hid.

1 Thief. Is not this he?

Thieves. Where?

2 Thief. 'Tis his description.

3 Thief. He; I know him.

Thieves. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves?

Thieves. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women's sons.

Thieves. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of men.

Why should you want? Behold the earth hath roots;

Within this mile break forth a hundred springs:

The oaks bear maat, the briars scarlet hips:

The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush

Lays her full mess before you. Want? why want?

1 Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water,

As beasts, and birds, and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes.

You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con,
That you are thieves profess'd; that you work not
In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft
In limited¹⁰ professions. Rascal thieves,

Theobald proposed 'you want much of meat,' i. e. much of what you ought to be, much of the qualities befitting you as human creatures. Steevens says, perhaps we should read:—

'Your greatest want is, you want much of me.'

Your greatest want is that you expect supplies from me, of whom you can reasonably expect nothing. Your necessities are indeed desperate, when you apply to one in my situation. Dr. Farmer would point the passage differently, thus:

'Your greatest want is, you want much. Of meat

Why should you want?' &c.

10 Limited professions are allowed professions. Thus in Macbeth:—

'I'll make so bold to call, for 'tis my limited service.' I will request the reader to correct my explanation of limited in Macbeth, where I have unintentionally allowed the old glossarial explanation to stand, which interprets it appointed.

Here's gold : Go, suck the subtle blood of the grape
Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging : trust not the physician ;
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob : take wealth and lives together ;
Do villany, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery :
The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction
Robs the vast sea : the moon's an arrant thief,
And her pale fire she snatches from the sun :
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into salt tears :¹ the earth's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture² stol'n
From general excrement : each thing's a thief ;
The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power
Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves : away ;
Rob one another. There's more gold : Cut throats ;
All that you meet are thieves : To Athens, go,
Break open shops ; for nothing can you steal,
But thieves do lose it : Steal not less, for this
I give you ; and gold confound you howsoever !
Amen.

[TIMON retires to his Cave.]

3 Thief. He has almost charmed me from my profession, by persuading me to it.

1 Thief. 'Tis in the malice of mankind, that he thus advises us ; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2 Thief. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

1 Thief. Let us first see peace in Athens : There is no time so miserable, but a man may be true.³

[Exeunt Thieves.]

Enter FLAVIUS.

Flav. O you gods !

Is yon despis'd and ruinous man my lord ?
Full of decay and failing ? O monument
And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd !
What an alteration of honour⁴ has Desperate want made !
What viler thing upon the earth, than friends,
Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends !
How rarely⁵ does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was wish'd⁶ to love his enemies :
Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo
Those that would mischief me, than those that do !
He has caught me in his eye : I will present
My honest grief unto him ; and, as my lord,
Shall serve him with my life.—My dearest master !

TIMON comes forward from his Cave.

Tim. Away ! what art thou ?

Flav. Have you forgot me, sir ?

Tim. Why dost ask that ? I have forgot all men ;
Then, if thou grant'st thou'rt a man, I have forgot thee.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then

I know thee not : I ne'er had honest man
About me, I ; all that I kept were knaves,
To serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,
Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief
For his undone lord, than mine eyes for you.

1 The moon is called the moist star in Hamlet, and the poet in the last scene of The Tempest has shown that he was acquainted with her influence on the tides. The watery beams of the moon are spoken of in Romeo and Juliet. The sea is therefore said to resolve her into salt tears, and in allusion to the flow of the tides, and perhaps of her influence upon the weather, which she is said to govern. There is an allusion to the lachrymose nature of the planet in the following apposite passage in King Richard III :—

'That I, being govern'd by the wat'ry moon,

May bring forth plentiful tears to drown the world.'

2 I. e. compost, manure.

3 'There is no hour in a man's life so wretched but he always has it in his power to become true, i. e. honest.'

4 An alteration of honour, is an alteration of an honourable state to a state of disgrace.

5 How rarely, i. e. how admirably. So in Much Ado About Nothing, Act iii. Sc. 1. 'how rarely featur'd.'

6 i. e. desired. Friends and enemies here mean those who profess friendship and profess enmity. The proverb 'Defend me from my friends, and from my

Tim. What, dost thou weep ?—Come nearer ;—
then I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankind ; whose eyes do never give,⁷
But thorough lust and laughter. Pity's sleeping ;
Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping !

Flav. I beg of you to know me, good my lord,
To accept my grief, and, whilst this poor wealth lasts,
To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward so true, so just, and now
So comfortable ? It almost turns
My dangerous nature mild.⁸ Let me behold
Thy face.—Surely this man was born of woman.—
Forgive my general and exceptless rashness,
You perpetual-sober gods ! I do proclaim
One honest man,—mistake me not,—but one :
No more, I pray,—and he is a steward.—
How fain would I have hated all mankind,
And thou redeem'st thyself : But all, save thee,
I fell with curses.

Methinks thou art more honest now, than wise ;
For, by oppressing and betraying me,
Thou might'st have sooner got another service :
For many so arrive at second masters,
Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true
(For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,)
Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous,
If not⁹ a usuring kindness ; and as rich men deal

gifts,
Expecting in return twenty for one ?

Flav. No, my most worthy master, in whose breast

Doubt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late :
You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast :

Suspect still comes where an estate is least.
That which I show, heaven knows, is merely love,
Duty and zeal to your unmatched mind,
Care of your food and living : and, believe it,
My most honour'd lord,
For any benefit that points to me,
Either in hope, or present, I'd exchange
For this one wish, That you had power and wealth
To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 'tis so !—Thou singly honest man,

Here, take :—the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich, and happy :
But thus condition'd ; Thou shalt build from men ;¹⁰
Hate all, curse all : show charity to none ;
But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar : give to dogs
What thou deny'st to men ; let prisons swallow them, Debts wither them to nothing : Be men like blasted woods,

And may diseases lick up their false bloods !
And so farewell, and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay,
And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hat'st
Curses, stay not ; fly whilst thou'rt bless'd and free :
Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.

[Exeunt severally.]

enemies I will defend myself,' is a sufficient comment on this passage.

7 To give is to yield, to give way to tears

8 The old copy reads :—

'It almost turns

My dangerous nature wild.'

The emendation is Warburton's. Timon's dangerous nature is his savage wildness, a species of frenzy induced by the baseness and ingratitude of the world. It would be idle to talk of turning a 'dangerous nature wild' : the kindness and fidelity of Timon's steward was more likely to soften and compose him ; and he does indeed show himself more mild and gentle to Flavius in consequence, being moved by the tears of his affectionate servant.

9 I think with Mr. Tyrwhitt that If not has slipped in here by an error of the compositor, caught from the Is not of the preceding line. Both sense and metre would be better without it.

10 I. e. away from human habitation.

ACT V.

SCENE I. The same. Before Timon's Cave.—Enter Poet and Painter;¹ TIMON behind, unseen.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he is so full of gold?

Pain. Certain: Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'Tis said, he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else; you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore, 'tis not amiss, we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travel for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation: only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o' the time: it opens the eyes of expectation; performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying² is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable: performance is a kind of will or testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking, what I shall say I have provided for him: It must be a personating³ of himself: a satire against the softness of prosperity; with a discovery of the infinite flatteries, that follow youth and opulency.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? Wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him:

Then do we sin against our own estate,
When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Pain. True;

When the day serves, before black-corner'd night,⁴
Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light.
Come.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's gold,
That he is worship'd in a baser temple,
Than where swine feed!

'Tis thou that rigg'st the bark, and plough'st the foam;

Settlest admired reverence in a slave:
To thee be worship! and thy saints for aye
Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey!
'Fit I do meet them.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master.

Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest men?

Poet. Sir,

Having often of your open bounty tasted,
Hearing you were retir'd, your friends fall'n off,
Whose thankless natures—O abhorred spirits!

1 The poet and painter were within view when Apemantus parted from Timon; they must therefore be supposed to have been wandering about the woods in search of Timon's cave, and to have heard in the interim the particulars of Timon's bounty to the thieves and the steward. 'But (as Malone observes) Shakspeare was not attentive to these minute particulars, and if he and the audience knew these circumstances, he would not scruple to attribute the knowledge to persons who perhaps had not yet an opportunity of acquiring it.'

2 The doing of that we have said we would do. Thus in Hamlet:—

'As be in his peculiar act and force
May give his saying deed.'

3 Personating for representing simply. The subject of this projected satire was Timon's case, not his person.

Not all the whips of heaven are large enough—
What! to you!

Whose starlike nobleness gave life and influence
To their whole being! I'm rapt, and cannot cover
The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude
With any size of words.

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see't the better:
You, that are honest, by being what you are,
Make them best seen, and known.

Pain. He, and myself,
Have travell'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Aye, you are honest men.

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service.

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I requite you?

Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service.

Tim. You are honest men: You have heard that I have gold:

I am sure you have: speak truth; you are honest men.

Pain. So it is said, my noble lord: but therefore Came not my friend, nor I.

Tim. Good honest men:—Thou draw'st a counterfeit⁵

Best in all Athens: thou art, indeed, the best;
Thou counterfeit'st most lively.

Pain. So, so, my lord.

Tim. Even so, sir, as I say:—And for thy fiction,
[To the Poet.]

Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth,

That thou art even natural in thine art.—

But, for all this, my honest natur'd friends,

I must needs say you have a little fault:

Marry, 'tis not monstrous in you; neither wish I,
You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour,
To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you, indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's ne'er a one of you but trusts a knave,
That mightily deceives you.

Both. Do we, my lord?

Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him dissemble,
Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,
Keep in your bosom: yet remain assur'd,
That he's a made-up villain.⁶

Pain. I know none such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,
Rid me these villains from your companies:

Hang them, or stab them, drown them in a draught,
Confound them by some course, and come to me,
I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this, but two in company:—
Each man apart, all single and alone,

4 'Black-corner'd night.' Many conjectures have been offered about this passage, which appears to me a corruption of the text. Some have proposed to read black-coned, alluding to the conical form of the earth's shadow; others black-crown'd, and black-cover'd. It appears to me that it should be black-curtain'd. We have 'the blanket of the dark,' in Macbeth, 'Night's black mantle,' in the Third Part of King Henry VI. and the First Part of the same drama:—

'—night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle overvell'd the earth.'

I cannot think with Steevens that 'Night as obscure as a dark corner,' is meant.

5 It should be remembered that a portrait was called a counterfeit.

6 i. e. —complete, a finished villain.

7 i. e. jakes

Yet an arch villain keeps him company.¹

If, where thou art, two villains shall not be,

[To the Painter.

Come not near him.—If thou wouldst not reside

[To the Poet.

But where one villain is, then him abandon.—

Hence! pack! there's gold, ye came for gold, ye slaves:

You have done work for me, there's payment: hence!²

You are an alchymist, make gold of that:—

Out, rascal dogs!

[Exit, beating and driving them out.

SCENE II. The same. Enter FLAVIUS, and two Senators.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with Timon;

For he is set so only to himself,
That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
Is friendly with him.

1 Sen. Bring us to his cave:
It is our part, and promise to the Athenians,
To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike Men are not still the same: 'Twas time, and griefs

That fram'd him thus; time, with his fairer hand,
Offering the fortunes of his former days,
The former man may make him: Bring us to him,
And chance it as it may.

Flav. Here is his cave.—
Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
Look out, and speak to friends: The Athenians,
By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee:
Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak and be hang'd:

For each true word, a blister! and each false
Be as a caut'ring to the root o' the tongue,
Consuming it with speaking!

1 Sen. Worthy Timon—
Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon.

Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague,
Could I but catch it for them.

1 Sen. O, forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
The senators, with one consent of love,³
Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
On special dignities, which vacant lie
For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. They confess,
Toward thee, forgetfulness too general, gross:
Which⁴ now the public body,—which doth seldom
Play the recanter,—feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of it's own fall,⁵ restraining aid to Timon;

1 The plain and simple meaning of this is, 'where each of you is, a villain must be in his company, because you are both of you arch villains,' therefore a villain goes with you every where. Thus in Promos and Cassandra, 1578, 'Go, and a knave with thee.'

2 The word done is omitted by accident in the old copy. This line is addressed to the painter, the next to the poet.

3 With one united voice of affection. So in Sternhold's version of the hundredth Psalm.—

'With one consent let all the earth.'

4 Which should be and. It is now vain to inquire whether the mistake be attributable to the poet, or to a careless transcriber or printer, but in such a glaring error as this, it is but charitable to suppose of the last.

5 The Athenians have a sense of the danger of their own fall by the arms of Alcibiades, by their withholding aid that should have been given to Timon.

6 Render is confession. So in Cymbeline, Act iv. Sc. 4.—

'—may drive us to a render
Where we have liv'd.'

And send forth us, to make their sorrow'd render,⁶
Together with a recompense more fruitful
Than their offence can weigh down by the dram;
Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth,
As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it;

Surprise me to the very brink of tears:

Lend me a fool's heart, and a woman's eyes,

And I'll bewep these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with us,

And of our Athens (thine, and ours) to take

The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,

Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name

Live with authority:—so soon we shall drive back

Of Alcibiades the approaches wild;

Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up

His country's peace.⁷

2 Sen. And shakes his threat'ning sword

Against the walls of Athens.

1 Sen. Therefore, Timon,—

Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir;

Thus,—

If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,

Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,

That—Timon cares not. But if he sack fair

Athens,

And take our goodly aged men by the beards,

Giving our holy virgins to the stain

Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war;

Then, let him know,—and tell him, Timon speaks it,

In pity of our aged, and our youth,

I cannot choose but tell him, that—I care not,

And let him take't at worst; for their knives care not,

While you have throats to answer; for myself,

There's not a whistle⁸ in the unruly camp,

But I do prize it at my love, before

The reverend'st throat in Athens. So I leave you

To the protection of the prosperous gods,⁹

As thieves to keepers.

Flav. Stay not, all's in vain.

Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph,

It will be seen to-morrow; My long sickness

Of health,¹¹ and living, now begins to mend,

And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still;

Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,

And last so long enough!

1 Sen. We speak in vain.

Tim. But yet I love my country; and am not

One that rejoices in the common wreck,

As common bruit¹² doth put it.

1 Sen. That's well spoke

Tim. Commend me to my loving countrymen,—

1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them.

2 Sen. And enter in our ears, like great triumphers

In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them;

And let them, that to ease them of their griefs,

Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,

Their pangs of love,¹³ with other incident throes

7 Allowed here signifies confirmed. 'To approve or confirm. Ratum habere aliquid.' Baret. This word is generally used by our old writers in the sense of approved, and I am doubtful whether it has been rightly explained in other places in these dramas by licensed.

An allowed fool, I think, means an approved fool, a confirmed fool.

8 This image may have been caught from Psalm lxxx. 13.

9 A whistle is a clasp knife. The word is still provincially in use.

10 'The prosperous gods' undoubtedly here mean the propitious or favourable gods, Dii secundi. Thus in Othello, Act i. Sc. 3.

'To my unfolding lend your prosperous ear.'

In which passage the quarto of 1622 reads 'a gracious ear.'

11 He means 'the disease of life begins to promise me a period.'

12 Report, rumour.

13 Compare this part of Timon's speech with part of the celebrated soliloquy in Hamlet.

That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do
them:

I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.

2 Sen. I like this well, he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,
That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it; Tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that whoso please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself:—I pray you, do my greeting.

Flav. Trouble him no further, thus you still shall find him.

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Whom once a day with his embossed froth²
The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.—
Lips, let sour words go by, and language end:
What is amiss, plague and infection mend!
Graves only be men's works; and death their gain!
Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign.

[Exit TIMON.]

1 Sen. His discontents are unremovably
Coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear³ peril.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The Walls of Athens. Enter Two Senators and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd; are his files
As full as thy report?

Mess. I have spoke the least:
Besides, his expedition promises
Present approach.

2 Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend:
Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us speak like friends:—this man was riding

From Alcibiades to Timon's cave,
With letters of entreaty, which imported
His fellowship in the cause against your city,
In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter Senators from Timon.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers.

3 Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.—
The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scouring
Doth choke the air with dust: in and prepare;
Ours is the fall, I fear, our foes, the snare.

[Exeunt.]

1 This was suggested by a passage in Plutarch's Life of Antony, where it is said Timon addressed the people of Athens in similar terms from the public tribune in the market-place. See also The Palace of Pleasure, vol. 1. Nov. 23.

2 The first folio reads who. It was altered to which in the second folio. Malone reads whom, saying it refers to Timon, and not to his grave; as appears from The Palace of Pleasure:—'By his last will he ordained himself to be interred upon the seashore, that the waves and surges might beate and vex his dead carcas.'

3 Embossed froth is foaming, puffed or blown up froth. Among our ancestors 'a boss or a bubble of water when it raineth, or the pot seetheth,' were used indifferently.

3 So in Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1:—

'Whom thou in terms so bloody and so dear
Hast made thy enemies.'

4 This passage Stevens, with great reason, considers corrupt, the awkward repetition of the verb made, and the obscurity of the whole, countenance his opinion. Might we not read:—

'Yet our old love had a particular force,
And made us speak like friends.'

SCENE IV. The Woods. Timon's Cave, and a Tombstone seen. Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sol. By all description this should be the place.
Who's here? speak, ho!—No answer?—What is
this?

Timon is dead, who hath outstretch'd his span:
Some beast rear'd this;⁵ there does not live a man.
Dead, sure; and this his grave.—

What's on this tomb I cannot read; the character
I'll take with wax.

Our captain hath in every figure skill;
An ag'd interpreter, though young in days:
Before proud Athens he's set down by this,
Whose fall the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.]

SCENE V. Before the Walls of Athens. Trumpets sound. Enter ALCIBIADES, and Forces.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious town
Our terrible approach. [A parley sounded.]

Enter Senators on the Walls.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the time
With all licentious measure, making your wills
The scope of justice; till now, myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our travers'd arms,⁶ and breath'd

Our sufferance vainly: Now the time is flush,⁷
When crouching marrow, in the bearer strong,
Cries, of itself, No more: now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease;
And pury insolence shall break his wind,
With fear and horrid flight.

1 Sen. Noble and young,
When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit,
Ere thou hadst power, or we had cause of fear,
We sent to thee; to give thy rages balm,
To wipe out our ingratitude with loves
Above their quantity.⁸

2 Sen. So did we woo
Transformed Timon to our city's love,
By humble message, and by promis'd means;⁹
We were not all unkind, nor all deserve
The common stroke of war.

1 Sen. These walls of ours
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You have receiv'd your griefs: nor are they such,
That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall

For private faults in them.

2 Sen. Nor are they living,
Who were the motives that you first went out;¹⁰
Shame, that they wanted cunning,¹¹ in excess
Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord,

5 The old copy has 'Some beast read this.' The emendation is Warburton's. It is evident that the soldier, when he first sees Timon's everlasting dwelling, does not know it to be a tomb. He concludes Timon must be dead, because he receives no answer. It is evident that when he utters the words some beast, &c. he has not seen the inscription. 'What can this be?' (says the soldier.) Timon is certainly dead: Some beast must have rear'd this; a man could not live in it. Yes, he is dead sure enough, and this must be his tomb; What is this writing upon it?

6 Travers'd arms are arms crossed. The image occurs in The Tempest:—

'His arms in this sad knot.'

7 Flush is mature, ripe, or come to full perfection.

8 Their refers to griefs. 'To give thy rages balm,' must be considered as parenthetical.

9 I. e. by promising him a competent subsistence.

10 'The motives that you first went out,' I. e. those who made the motion for your exile. This word is used in the same manner in Troilus and Cressida:—

'—her wanton spleen look out

At every joint and motive of her body.'

11 Cunning is used in its old sense of skill or wisdom, extremity of shame that they wanted wisdom in procuring your banishment hath broke their hearts. Theobald had nearly thus interpreted the passage; and Johnson thought he could improve it by reading—

'Shame that they wanted, coming in excess
Hath broke their hearts.'
Johnson perhaps was not aware of the old meaning of cunning.

Into our city with thy banners spread :
By decimation, and a tithed death
(If thy revenges hunger for that food,
Which nature loathes,) take thou the destin'd tenth ;
And by the hazard of the spotted die,
Let die the spotted.

1 Sen. All have not offended :
For those that were, it is not square,¹ to take,
On those that are, revenges : crimes, like lands,
Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman,
Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage :
Spare thy Athenian cradle,² and those kin,
Which in the bluster of thy wrath, must fall
With those that have offended : like a shepherd,
Approach the fold, and cull the infected forth,
But kill not all together.

2 Sen. What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile,
Than hew to't with thy sword.

1 Sen. Set but thy foot
Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall ope ;
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say thou'lt enter friendly.

2 Sen. Throw thy glove ;
Or any token of thine honour else,
That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress,
And not as our confusion, all thy powers
Shall make their harbour in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alcib. Then there's my glove ;
Descend, and open your uncharged ports ;
Those enemies of Timon's and mine own,
Whom you yourself shall set out for reproof,
Fall, and no more : and,—to atone³ your fears
With my more noble meaning,—not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be remedied, to your public laws,
At heaviest answer.⁴

Boh. 'Tis most nobly spoken.

Alcib. Descend, and keep your words.

1 i. e. not regular, not equitable.

2 — Jovis incunabula Crete. Orid Metam. viii. 99.

3 i. e. Unattacked gates.

4 i. e. to reconcile them to it. The general sense of this word in Shakespeare. Thus in Cymbeline :—'I was glad I did atone my countryman and you.'

5. All attempts to extract a meaning from this passage as it stands, must be vain. 'We should certainly read :—

'But shall be remitted to your public laws

At heaviest answer.'

It is evident that the context requires a word of this import : remanded might serve. The comma at remedied is not in the old copy. Remedied to, as Steevens ob-

The Senators descend, and open the gates. Enter a Soldier.

Sol. My noble general, Timon is dead :
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea :
And on his gravestone, this insculpture ; which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression
Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. [Reads.] Here lies a wretched corse, of wretched soul bereft :
Seek not my name : A plague consume you wicked
catiffs left !

Here lie I, Timon : who alive, all living men did hate :
Pass by, and curse thy fill ; but pass, and stay not here thy gait.⁶

These well express in thee thy latter spirits :
Though thou abhor'st in us our human griefs,
Scorn'st our brains' flow,⁷ and those our droplets
which

From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead
Is noble Timon ; of whose memory
Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city
And I will use the olive with my sword :
Make war breed peace ; make peace stint⁸ war ;
make each

Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.⁹

Let our drums strike. [Exeunt.]

THE play of Timon is a domestic tragedy, and therefore strongly fastens on the attention of the reader. In the plan there is not much art, but the incidents are natural, and the characters various and exact. The catastrophe affords a very powerful warning against that ostentatious liberality, which scatters bounty, but confers no benefits ; and buys flattery, but not friendship.

In this tragedy are many passages perplexed, obscure, and probably corrupt, which I have endeavoured to rectify or explain with due diligence ; but having only one copy, cannot promise myself that my endeavours shall be much applauded. JOHNSON.

serves, is nonsense. Johnson's explanation will then serve, 'Not a soldier shall quit his station, or commit any violence, but he shall answer it regularly to the law.'

6 This epitaph is formed out of two distinct epitaphs in North's Plutarch. The first couplet is there said to have been composed by Timon himself ; the second by the poet Callimachus. The epithet catiffs was probably suggested by another epitaph, to be found in Kendall's Flowers of Epigrammes, 1577, and in the Palace of Pleasure, vol. i. Nov. 23.

7 So in Drayton's Miracles of Moses :—

'But he from rocks that fountains can command,

Cannot yet stay the fountains of his brain.'

CORIOLANUS.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

IN this play the narration of Plutarch, in the Life of Coriolanus, is very exactly followed ; and it has been observed that the poet shows consummate skill in knowing how to seize the true poetical point of view of the historical circumstances, without changing them in the least degree. His noble Roman is indeed worthy of the name, and his mob such as a Roman mob doubtless were ; such as every great city has possessed from the time of the polished Athenians to that of modern Paris, where such scenes have been exhibited by a people collectively considered the politest on earth, as shows that 'the many-headed multitude' have the same turbulent spirit, when there is an exciting cause, in all ages.

Shakespeare has extracted amusement from this popular humour, and with the aid of the pleasant satirical vein of Menenius has relieved the serious part of the play with some mirthful scenes, in which it is certain the people's folly is not spared.

The character of Coriolanus, as drawn by Plutarch, was happily suited to the drama, and in the hands of Shakespeare could not fail of exciting the highest interest and sympathy in the spectator. He is made of that stern unbending stuff which usually enters into the composition of a hero : accustomed to conquest and triumph, his inflexible spirit could not stoop to solicit by flattering condescension what it felt that its worthy services ought to command :

— he was

A noble servant to them ; but he could not

Carry his honours even :—

— commanding peace

Even with the same austerity and garb

As he controll'd the war.¹

He hated flattery ; and his sovereign contempt for the people arose from having witnessed their pussillanimity ; though he loved 'the bubble reputation,' and would have grappled with fate for honour, he hated the breath of vulgar applause as 'the reek o' the rotten fens.'

He knew that his actions must command the good opinion of men ; but his modesty shrunk from their open declaration of it: he could not bear to hear 'his nothings monstered.'

'— Pray you, no more; my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me.'

But yet his pride was his greatest characteristic:

'Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man.'

This it was that made him seek distinction from the ordinary herd of popular heroes; his honour must be won by difficult and daring enterprise, and worn in silence. It was this pride which was his overthrow; and from which the moral of the piece is to be drawn. He had thrown himself with the noble and confiding magnanimity of a hero into the hands of an enemy, knowing that the truly brave are ever generous; but two suns could not shine in one hemisphere; Tullus Aufidius found he was darkened by his light, and he exclaims:—

'— He bears himself more proudly
Even to my person than I thought he would
When I did first embrace him: Yet his nature
In that's no changing.'

The closeness with which Shakspeare has followed his original, Sir Thomas North's translation of Plutarch, will be observed upon comparison of the following passage, with the parallel scene in the play, describing Coriolanus's flight to Antium, and his reception by Aufidius. 'It was even twilight when he entered the city of Antium, and many people met him in the streets, but no man knew him. So he went immediately to Tullus Aufidius' house; and when he came thither he got him up straight to the chimney hearth, and sat him down, and spake not a word to any man, his face all muffled over. They of the house spying him, wondered what he should be, and yet they durst not bid him rise. For ill-favour'dly muffled and disguised as he was, yet there appeared a certain majesty in his countenance and in his silence; whereupon they went to Tullus, who was at supper, to tell him of the strange disguising of this man. Tullus rose presently from the board, and, coming towards him, asked him what he was, and wherefore he came. Then Martius unmuffled himself, and, after he had paused awhile, making no answer, he said unto himself, 'If thou knowest me not yet, Tullus, and seeing me, dost not perhaps believe me to be the man I am indeed, I must of necessity discover myself to be that I am. I am Caius Martius, who hath done to thyself particularly, and to all the Volces generally, great hurt and mischief, which I cannot deny for my surname of Coriolanus that I bear. For I never had other benefit of the true and painful service I have done, and the extreme dangers I have been in, but this surname: a good memory and witness of the malice and displeasure thou shouldst bear me. Indeed the name only remaineth with me; for the rest, the envy and cruelty of the people of Rome have taken from me, by the sufferance of the dastardly nobility and magistrates, who have forsaken me, and let me be banished by the people. This extremity hath now driven me to come as a poor suitor, to take thy chimney-hearth, not of any hope I have to save my life thereby. For if I feared death, I would not have come hither to put myself in hazard; but pricked forward with desire to be revenged of them that have thus banished me, which now I do begin, by putting my person in the hands of their enemies. Wherefore if thou hast any heart to be wreaked of the injuries thy enemies have done thee, speed thee now, and let my misery serve thy turn, and so use it as my service may be a benefit to the Volces; promising thee that I will fight with better good-will for all you, than I did when I was against you, knowing that they fight more valiantly who know the force of the enemy, than such as have never proved it. And if it be so that thou dare not, and that thou art weary to prove fortune any more, then am I also weary to live any longer. And it were no wisdom in thee to save the life of him who hath been heretofore thy mortal enemy, and whose service now can nothing help or please thee.'—Tullus, hearing what he said, was a marvellous glad man, and, taking him by the hand, he said to him, 'Stand up, O Martius, and be of good cheer, for in proffering thyself unto us, thou doest us great honour: and by this means thou mayest hope also of greater things at all Volces' hands.' So he feasted him for that time, and entertained him in the honourablest manner he could, talking with him of no other matter at that present; but within a few days after they fell to consultation together in what sort they should begin their wars.'

In the scene of the meeting of Coriolanus with his wife and mother, when they come to supplicate him to spare Rome, Shakspeare has adhered very closely to his original. He felt that it was sufficient to give it merely a dramatic form. The speech of Volumnia, as we have observed in a note, is almost in the very words of the old translator of Plutarch.

The time comprehended in the play is about four years; commencing with the accession to the Mons Sacer, in the year of Rome 262, and ending with the death of Coriolanus, A. U. C. 266.

Malone conjectures it to have been written in the year 1610.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street. Enter a Company of mutinous Citizens, with Staves, Clubs, and other Weapons.

1 Citizen.

BEFORE we proceed any further, hear me speak.

Cit. Speak, speak. [Several speaking at once.]

1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die, than to famish?

Cit. Resolved, resolved.

1 Cit. First you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

Cit. We know't, we know't.

1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is't a verdict

Cit. No more talking on't; let it be done: away, away.

2 Cit. One word, good citizens.

1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians, good: What authority surfeits on, would relieve us; If they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess, they relieved us humanely; but they think, we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become

1 Good, in a commercial sense. As in Eastward Hoe:—

'— known good men, well monied.'

Again in the Merchant of Venice:—

'Antonio's a good man'

rakes:¹ for the gods know, I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

2 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

Cit. Against him first; he's a very dog to the commonalty.

2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

1 Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

2 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft conscienc'd men can be content to say, it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

2 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him: You must in no way say, he is covetous.

1 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen: Why stay we prating here? To the Capitol.

Cit. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft; who comes here?

Enter MENENIUS AGRIPPA.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.

1 Cit. He's one honest enough; 'Would, all the rest were so!

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand?

Where go you

With bats and clubs? The matter? Speak, I pray you.

1 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling, this fortnight, what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say, poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know, we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,

Will you undo yourselves?

1 Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you. For your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves, as lift them Against the Roman state; whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong link asunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment:² For the dearth, The gods, not the patricians, make it; and Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack, You are transported by calamity Thither where more attends you; and you slander The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers, When you curse them as enemies.

1 Cit. Care for us!—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their store-houses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers: repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you A pretty tale; it may be, you have heard it; But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture To stale't a little more.

1 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir: yet you must not think to fob off our disgrace⁴ with a tale: but, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the body's members

Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it:— That only like a gulf it did remain

I' the midst o' the body, idle and inactive, Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing Like labour with the rest; where⁵ the other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel, And, mutually participate, did minister Unto the appetite and affection common Of the whole body. The belly answered,—

1 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile, Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even thus (For, look you, I may make the belly smile,⁶ As well as speak,) it tauntingly replied To the discontented members, the mutinous parts That envied his receipt; even so most fitly⁷ As you malign our senators, for that They are not such as you.

1 Cit. Your belly's answer: What?

Men. The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye, The counsellor heart,⁸ the arm our soldier, Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter, With other muniments and petty helps In this our fabric, if that they——

1 Cit. What then?—What then?—

Men. 'Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then? what then?

Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd, Who is the sink o' the body,——

1 Cit. Well, what then?

The former agents, if they did complain, What could the belly answer?

Men.

I will tell you;

If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little,) Patience, a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

1 Cit. You are long about it.

Men.

Note me this, good friend;

Your most grave belly was deliberate, Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd. True is it, my incorporate friends, quoth he, That I receive the general food at first, Which you do live upon: and fit it is; Because I am the store-house, and the shop Of the whole body: But if you do remember, I send it through the rivers of your blood, Even to the court, the heart,—to the seat o' the brain;⁹

ful version of the text. "Though some of you have heard the story, I will spread it yet wider, and diffuse it among the rest." There is nothing of this in Shakespeare; and indeed I cannot avoid looking upon the whole of his long note as a feeble attempt to justify a palpable error of the press, at the cost of taste and sense.¹—Gifford's Massinger, vol. i. p. 204, ed. 1813.

4 Disgraces are hardships, injuries.

5 Where for sohears.

6 'And so the belly, all this notwithstanding, laughed at their folly and said,' &c.—North's Plutarch.

7 i. e. exactly.

8 The heart was anciently esteemed the seat of the understanding. See the next note. There has been strange confusion in the appropriation of some parts of this dialogue in all editions, even to the last by Mr. Boswell. Not to encumber the page, I must request the reader to compare this with the former editions, and have no doubt he will approve the transposition of names which has been here made.

9 Shakespeare uses seat for throne. 'I send it (says

1 It should be remembered that 'as lean as a rake' is an old proverbial expression. There is, as Warburton observes, a miserable joke intended:—'Let us now revenge this with forks, before we become rakes;' a pike, or pike-fork, being the ancient term for a pitchfork. The origin of the proverb is doubtless 'as lean as a rake or racc;' (pronounced rake;) and signifying a greynound.

2 Thus in Othello:—

'I have made my way through more impediments Than twenty times your stop.'

3 'The old copies have "scale't a little more;" for which Theobald judiciously proposed stale. To this Warburton objects petulantly enough, it must be confessed, because to scale signifies to weigh; so indeed it does, and many other things; none of which, however, bear any relation to the text. Steevens too prefers scale, which he proves from a variety of authorities to mean 'scatter, disperse, spread:' to make any of them, however, suit his purpose, he is obliged to give an unfaith-

*And through the cranks¹ and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that natural competency
Whereby they live : And though that all at once,
You, my good friends, (this says the belly,) mark
me,—*

1 Cit. Ay, sir ; well, well.

Men. *Though all at once cannot
See what I do deliver out to each ;
Yet I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flower of all,
And leave me but the bran.* What say you to't ?

1 Cit. It was an answer : How apply you this ?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,
And you the mutinous members : For examine
Their counsels, and their cares ; digest things rightly,
Touching the weal of the common ; you shall find,
No public benefit which you receive,
But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you,
And no way from yourselves.—What do you think ?
You, the great toe of this assembly ?—

Cit. I the great toe ? Why the great toe ?

Men. For that being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost :
Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,²
Lead'st first to win some vantage.—

But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs ;
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle,
The one side must have bale.³ Hail, noble Marcius.

Enter CAIUS MARCIUS.

Mar. Thanks.—What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs ?

1 Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to thee, will flatter

Beneath abhorring.—What would you have, you curs,

That like nor peace, nor war ? the one affrights you,
The other makes you proud.⁴ He that trusts you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares ;
Where foxes, geese : You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is,
To make him worthy, whose offence subdues him,
And curse that justice did it.⁵ Who deserves greatness,

Deserves your hate ; and your affections are
A sick man's appetite, who desires most that
Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye !
Trust ye ?

With every minute you do change a mind ;
And call him noble that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. What's the matter,
That in these several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another ?—What's their seeking ?

the belly) through the blood, even to the royal residence, the heart, in which the kingly-crowned understanding sits enthroned.³ The poet, besides the relations in Plutarch, had seen a similar fable in Camden's Remaines ; Camden copied it from John of Salisbury, De Nugis Curialium, b. vi. c. 24. Mr. Douce, in a very curious note, has shown the high antiquity of this apologue, 'which is to be found in several ancient collections of Æsopian Fables : there may be, therefore, as much reason for supposing it the invention of Æsop, as there is for making him the parent of many others.

1 Cranks are windings ; the meandering ducts of the human body.

2 Rascal and in blood are terms of the forest, both here used equivocally. The meaning seems to be, 'thou worthless scoundrel, though thou art in the worst plight for running of all this herd of plebeians, like a deer not in blood, thou takest the lead in this tumult in order to obtain some private advantage to thyself.' 'Worst in blood' has a secondary meaning of lowest in condition. The modern editions have erroneously a comma at blood, which obscures the sense.

Men. For corn at their own rates ; whereof,
they say,
The city is well stor'd.

Mar. Hang 'em ! They say ?
They'll sit by the fire, and presume to know
What's done i' the Capitol ; who's like to rise, Who thrives, and who declines : side factions, and give out
Conjectural marriages ; making parties strong,
And feeling such as stand not in their liking,
Below their cobbled shoes. They say there's grain enough ?

Would the nobility lay aside their ruth,⁶
And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry⁷
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
As I could pick⁸ my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded ;

For though abundantly they lack discretion,
Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you,
What says the other troop ?

Mar. They are dissolved : Hang 'em !
They said, they were an hungry ; sigh'd forth proverbs ;

That, hunger broke stone walls ; that, dogs must eat ;

That, meat was made for mouths ; that, the gods sent not

Corn for the rich men only :—With these shreds
They vented their complainings ; which being an-swer'd,

And a petition granted them, a strange one
(To break the heart of generosity,⁹ And make bold power look pale,) they threw their caps

As they would hang them on the horns o' the moon,
Shouting their emulation.¹⁰

Men. What is granted them ?
Mar. Five tribunes to defend their vulgar wisdoms,
Of their own choice : One's Junius Brutus,
Sicinius Velutus, and I know not.—Sdeath !
The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere so prevail'd with me : it will in time
Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes
For insurrection's arguing.¹¹

Men. This is strange.

Mar. Go, get you home, you fragments !

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where's Caius Marcius ?

Mar. Here : What's the matter ?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volces are in arms.

Mar. I am glad on't ; then we shall have means to vent¹²

Our musty superfluity ;—See, our best elders.

Enter COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, and other Senators ; JUNIUS BRUTUS, and SICINIUS VE-LUTUS.

1 Sen. Marcius, 'tis true, that you have lately told us ;

The Volces are in arms.

3 Bale is evil or mischief, harm or injury. The word is pure Saxon, and was becoming obsolete in Shakspeare's time.

4 Coriolanus does not use these two sentences consequently ; but first reproaches them with unsteadiness, then with their other occasional vices.

5 'Your virtue is to speak well of him whom his own offences have subjected to justice ; and to rail at those laws by which he whom you praise was punished.'

6 i. e. pity, compassion.

7 Quarry or querre signified slaughtered game of any kind, which was so denominated from being deposited in a square enclosed space in royal hunting.

8 Pick, peck, or picke, i. e. pitch ; still in provincial use. The fact is, that, in ancient language, to pick was used for to cast, throw, or hurl ; to pitch was to set or fix any thing in a particular spot.

9 Generosity, in the sense of its Latin original, for nobleness, high birth. Thus in Measure for Measure :—
'The generous and gravest citizens.'

10 Emulation is factious contention.

11 For insurgents to debate upon

Mar. They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to't.
I sin in envying his nobility:
And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.
Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears, and he

Upon my party, I'd revolt to make
Only my wars with him: he is a lion
That I am proud to hunt.

I Sen. Then, worthy Marcius,
Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is;
And I am constant.¹—Titus Lartius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face:
What, art thou stiff? stand'st out?

Tit. No, Caius Marcius:
I'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with the other,
Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true bred!

I Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I
know,

Our greatest friends attend us.

Tit. Lead you on:
Follow, Cominius; we must follow you;
Right worthy you priority.²

Com. Noble Lartius!³
I Sen. Hence! To your homes, be gone.

Mar. [To the Citizens.]
Nay, let them follow:
The Voices have much corn; take these rats thither,
To gnaw their garners:—Worshipful mutineers,
Your valour puts⁴ well forth: pray, follow.

[Exeunt Senators, Com. Mar. Tit. and Men. Citizens steal away.]

Sic. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius?

Bru. He has no equal.

Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for the people,—

Bru. Mark'd you his lip, and eyes?

Sic. Nay, but his taunts.

Bru. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird⁵ the gods.

Sic. Bemock the modest moon.

Bru. The present wars devour him: he is grown Too proud to be so valiant.⁶

Sic. Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon: But I do wonder,
His insolence can brook to be commanded
Under Cominius.

Bru. Fame, at the which he aims,—
In whom already he is well grac'd,—cannot Better be held, nor more attain'd than by
A place below the first: for what miseries
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure

1 I.e. immovable in my resolution. So in Julius
Cæsar:—

'But I am constant as the northern star.'

2 You being right worthy of precedence.

3 The old copy has Marcius.

4 That is, You have in this mutiny shown fair blossoms of valour. So in King Henry VIII.:

—To-day he puts forth

'The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,' &c.
5 A gird is a cut, a sarcasm, or stroke of satire. See King Henry IV. Part II. Act I. Sc. 2.

6 'The present wars' Shakespeare uses to express the pride of Coriolanus, grounded on his military prowess; which kind of pride, Brutus says, devours him. In Trollius and Cressida, Act II. Sc. 3. we have:—

—He that's proud eats up himself.

Perhaps the meaning of the latter member of the sentence is, 'He is grown too proud of being so valiant to be endured.' It is still a common expression to say,
'eat up with pride.'

7 Demerits and merits had anciently the same meaning.

— and my demerits
May speak, &c.

Thus in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, p. 200, ed. 1825;

Will then cry out of Marcius, O, if he Had borne the business!

Sic. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall
Of his demerits' rob Cominius.

Bru. Come:
Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius,
Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults
To Marcius shall be honours, though, indeed,
In aught he merit not.

Sic. Let's hence, and hear
How the despatch is made: and in what fashion,
More than in singularity,⁸ he goes
Upon his present action.

Bru. Let's along. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Corioli. The Senate House. Enter
TULLUS AUFIDIUS, and certain Senators.

I Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,
And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?
What ever hath been thought on in this state,⁹
That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome
Had circumvention! 'Tis not four days gone,
Since I heard thence; these are the words: I think,
I have the letter here; yes, here it is: [Reads.]

*They have prest¹⁰ a power, but it is not known Whether for east or west: The dearth is great;
The people mutinous: and it is rumour'd,
Cominius, Marcius, your old enemy,
(Who is of Rome worse hated than of you),
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three lead on this preparation
Whither 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you:
Consider of it.*

I Sen. Our army's in the field:
We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly,
To keep your great pretences veil'd, till when They needs must show themselves; which in the hatching,

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,
We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was,
To take in¹¹ many towns, ere, almost, Rome
Should know we were afoot.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius,
Take your commission; hie you to your hands:
Let us alone to guard Corioli:
If they set down before us, for the remove!¹²
Bring up your army; but I think you'll find
They have not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O, doubt not that;
I speak from certainties. Nay, more.

Some parcels of their powers are forth already,
And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,
'Tis sworn between us, we shall never strike
Till one can do no more.

—'I have not promoted and preferred you to condign preferments according to your demerits.'

8 Perhaps the word singularity implies a sarcasm on Coriolanus, and the speaker means to say—after what fashion beside that in which his own singularity of disposition invests him, he goes into the field. So in Twelfth Night:—

—Put thyself into the trick of singularity.

9 The old copy reads:—

'What have been ever thought on in this state.'

We must either suppose this an ellipsis for 'What things have,' &c. or read with Steevens, hath, as in the text.

10 I.e. ready; from the old French prest. Thus in the Merchant of Venice, Act I. Sc. 1:—

—say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it.

11 To take in was formerly used as we now use to take for to subdue, to conquer. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

—cut the Ionian seas;

And take in Toryne.

12 'If the Romans besiege us, bring up your army to remove them.'

All. The gods assist you!

Auf. And keep your honours safe!

1 Sen.

Farewell.

2 Sen.

All. Farewell.

Farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Rome. An Apartment in Marcius' House. Enter VOLUMNIA and VIRGILIA: They sit down on two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort: If my son were my husband, I should freclier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way;¹ when, for a day of kings' entreaties, her mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I,—considering how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak.² I tell thee, daughter,—I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam? how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely: Had I a dozen sons,—each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius,—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire³ myself.

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks, I hear hither your husband's drum; See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair; As children from a bear, the Volces shunning him: Methinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—Come on, you cowards, you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome: His bloody brow With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes; Like to a harvest-man, that thins⁴ his task'd to mow Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O, Jupiter, no blood!

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man, Than gilt⁵ his trophy: The breasts of Hecuba, When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood At Grecian swords' contending.—Tell Valeria, We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gent.]

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee, And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with VALERIA and her Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam,

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest house-keepers. What, are you sewing here? A fine spot,⁵ in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

1 Attracted the attention of every one toward him.

2 The crown given by the Romans to him that saved the life of a citizen, which was accounted more honourable than any other.

3 This verb active (signifying to withdraw) occurs in The Tempest:—

'I will thence

Retire me to my Milan.'

4 Gilt means a superficial display of gold. The word is now obsolete.

'Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirched.'

King Henry V.

Vol. He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his school master.

Val. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly, and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; caught it again: or whether his fall enraged him, or how 'twas, he did so set his teeth, and tear it; O, I warrant, how he marmocked⁶ it!

Vol. One of his father's moods.

Val. Indeed la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack,⁷ madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Val. Not out of doors!

Vol. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.

Val. Fye, you confine yourself most unreasonably; Come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Val. You would-be another Penelope: yet they say, all the yarn she spun, in Ulysses' absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come, I would, your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Volces have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think she would:—Fare you well, then.—Come, good sweet lady.—Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No: at a word, madam; indeed, I must not. I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then, farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Before Corioli. Enter, with Drum and Colours, MARCIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Officers and Soldiers. To them a Messenger.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—A wager, they have met.

Lart. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. 'Tis done.

Lart.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy?

5 I.e. a handsome spot of embroidery. We often hear of spotted muslin.

6 To marmock is to tear or cut in pieces.

7 A crack signifies a sprightly forward boy: it is often used by Jonson and his contemporaries:—

'If we could get a witty boy, now, Eugene, That were an excellent crack, I could instruct him To the true height.' Devil is an Ass.

'A notable dissembling lad, a crack.'

Four Prentices of London, 1615.

Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll nor sell, nor give him: lend you him, I will,

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee make us quick in work;
That we with smoking swords may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy blast.

They sound a parley. Enter, on the walls, some Senators, and others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he,²
That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums

Are bringing forth our youth: We'll break our walls,
Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates,
Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes,
They'll open of themselves. Hark you, far off;

[Other Alarums.]
There is Aufidius; list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it!

Lart. Their noise be our instruction.—Ladders, ho!

The Voices enter and pass over the Stage.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.
Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than shields.—Advance, brave Titus:

They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath.—Come on, my fellows;

He that retires, I'll take him for a Volce,
And he shall feel mine edge.

Alarum, and exeunt Romans and Voices, fighting.
The Romans are beaten back to their trenches.
Re-enter MARCIUS.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you,
You shames of Rome! you herd of³—Boils and plagues

Plaster you o'er; that you may be abhorr'd
Further than seen, and one infect another
Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run
From slaves that apes would beat? Pluto and hell!
All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale
With flight and aged fear! Mend, and charge home,

Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe,
And make my wars on you: look to't: Come on;
If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives,
As they us to our trenches followed.

Another Alarum. The Voices and Romans re-enter, and the fight is renewed. The Voices retire into Corioli, and MARCIUS follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are ope:—Now prove good seconds:

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like.

[He enters the gates, and is shut in.]

- 1 i. e. our friends who are in the field of battle.
- 2 The poet means—No, nor a man that fears you more than he; but he often entangles himself in the use of less and more.
- 3 'You herd of—cowards!' Marcius would probably have said, but his rage prevents him.
- 4 The old copy reads:—

'Who sensibly outdares'—
Sensible is here having sensation. So before:—'I would your cambrick were as sensible as your finger.' Though Coriolanus has the feeling of pain like other men, he is more hardy in daring exploits than his senseless sword; for after it is bent, he yet stands firm in the field.

1 Sol. Fool-hardiness; not I.

2 Sol. Nor I.

3 Sol. See, they

Have shut him in. [Alarum continues.]

All. To the pot, I warrant him.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS.

Lart. What is become of Marcius?

All. Slain, sir, doubtless.

1 Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels,
With them he enters: who, upon the sudden,
Clapp'd to their gates; he is himself alone,
To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow!
Who, sensible,⁴ outdares his senseless sword,
And, when it bows, stands up! Thou art left, Mar-
cius:

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art,
Were not so rich a jewel.⁵ Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish,⁶ not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks, and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble.⁷

Re-enter MARCIUS bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

1 Sol. Look, sir.

Lart. 'Tis Marcius:

Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.⁸

[They fight, and all enter the City.]

SCENE V. Within the Town. A Street. Enter certain Romans, with spoils.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome

2 Rom. And I this.

3 Rom. A murrain on't! I took this for silver.

[Alarum continues still afar off.]

Enter MARCIUS, and TITUS LARTIUS, with a Trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers, that do prize their hours⁹

At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons,
Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up:—down with
them.—

And hark, what noise the general makes!—To
him:—

There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans: Then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city;
Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste
To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st;
Thy exercise hath been too violent for
A second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not:
My work hath yet not warm'd me: Fare you well.
The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus
I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers' swords? Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest! So farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius!

[Exit MARCIUS.]

- 5 We have a similar thought in Othello:—
'If heaven had made me such another woman,
Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have ta'en it from her.'
- 6 The old copy has erroneously 'Calves wish': the error would easily arise: Shakespeare wrote, according to the mode of his time, 'Calves wish,' omitting to cross the t, and forming the o inaccurately. Cato was not born till the year of Rome 519, that is, 255 years after the death of Coriolanus; but the poet was led into the anachronism by following Plutarch.
- 7 '—some say the earth
Was feverous, and did shake.' Macbeth.
- 8 'Make remain, is an old manner of speaking, which means no more than remain.'
- 9 i. e. their time. Johnson adopted Pope's reading—hOURS; for which there was no necessity.

Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;
Call thither all the officers of the town,
Where they shall know our mind. Away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Near the Camp of Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS and Forces, retreating.

Com. Breathe you, my friends; well fought: we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,
By interims, and conveying gusts, we have heard
The charges of our friends:—The Roman gods,
Lead their successes as we wish our own;
That both our powers, with smiling fronts encouraging,

Enter a Messenger.

May give you thankful sacrifice!—Thy news?

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued,
And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
I saw our party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st at truth,
Methinks, thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'Tis not a mile; briefly we heard their drums:

How could'st thou in a mile confound¹ an hour,
And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volces
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir,
Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter MARCIUS.

Com. Who's yonder,
That does appear as he were slay'd? O Gods!
He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,

More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
From every meaner man's.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip you
In arms as sound, as when I woo'd; in heart
As merry, as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burn'd to bedward.²

Com. Flower of warriors,
How is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile;
Ransoming him, or pitying,³ threat'ning the other;
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave,
Which told me they had beat you to your trenches?
Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone,
He did inform the truth: But for our gentlemen,
The common file (A plague!—Tribunes for them!)

¹ So in King Henry VI. Part i. Act i. Sc. 3.—

² He did confound the best part of an hour, &c.
Confound is here used not in its common acceptation,
but in the sense of to expend: conterere tempus.

³ I. e. towards bed or rest, or the time of resting.
Compounds were formerly made at pleasure, by sub-joining ward to the thing towards which the action tended.

⁴ I. e. remitting his ransom.

⁵ I. e. in the front are the soldiers of Antium. Shakspeare uses Antiates as a trieyllable, as if it had been written Antiatas.

⁶ I. e. 'do not let slip the present time.'

⁷ The old copy reads Lessen. The reading of the text was introduced by Stevens. His person means his personal danger. We have nearly the same sentiment in Troilus and Cressida:—

'If there be one among the fair'st of Greece
That holds his honour higher than his ease.'

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think—
Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' the field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com.

Marcius,

We have at disadvantage fought, and did
Retire, to win our purpose.

Mar. How lies their battle? Know you on which side

They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com.

As I guess, Marcius,

Their bands in the vaward are the Antiates,⁴
Of their best trust: o'er them Aufidius,
Their very heart of hope.

Mar.

I do beseech you,

By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we have shed together, by the vows
We have made to endure friends, that you directly
Set me against Aufidius, and his Antiates:
And that you not delay the present;⁵ but,
Filling the air with swords advanc'd, and darts,
We prove this very hour.

Com.

Though I could wish

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking; take your choice of those
That best can aid your action.

Mar.

Those are they

That most are willing;—If any such be here
(As it were sin to doubt,) that love this painting
Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear
Lesser his person than an ill report;⁶
If any think, brave death outweighs bad life,
And that his country's dearer than himself;
Let him, alone, or so many, so minded,
Wave thus [waving his hand,] to express his disposition,

And follow Marcius.

[They all shout and wave their swords; take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.]

O me, alone! Make you a sword of me?

If these shows be not outward, which of you

But is four Volces? None of you but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius.

A shield as hard as his. A certain number,

Though thanks to all, must I select from all: the rest

Shall bear the business in some other fight,

As cause will be obey'd. Please you to march;

And four shall quickly draw out my command,

Which men are best inclin'd.⁷

Com.

March on, my fellows:

Make good this ostentation, and you shall

Divide in all with us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. The Gates of Corioli. TITUS LAR-TIUS, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with a drum and trumpet toward Cominius and Caius Marcius, enters with a Lieutenant, a Party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So, let the ports⁸ be guarded: keep your duties,

As I have set them down. If I do send, despatch

Those centuries⁹ to our aid; the rest will serve

For a short holding: If we lose the field,

We cannot keep the town.

Lieu.

Fear not our care, sir.

⁷ From the obscurity of this passage there is good reason to suspect its correctness. Perhaps we might read some instead of four, words easily confounded in old MSS.; and then the last line may be interrogative, thus:

'Please you to march,

And some shall quickly draw out my command:—

Which men are best inclin'd?

The passage as it stands in the old copy has been thus explained:—'Coriolanus means to say, that he would appoint four persons to select for his particular, or party, those who are best inclined; and, in order to save time, he proposes to have this choice made while the army is marching forward.' The old translation of Plutarch also says:—'Wherefore, with those that willingly offered themselves to follow him, he went out of the city.'

⁸ Gates.

⁹ Companies of a hundred men

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us.—
Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volcian Camps. Alarum. Enter MARCIUS and AUFIDIUS.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike;
Not Afric owns a serpent, I abhor
More than thy fame and envy:¹ Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after!²

Auf. If I fly, Marcus,
Halloo me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleas'd; 'Tis not my blood,
Wherein thou seest me mask'd; for thy revenge,
Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector,
That was the whip³ of your bragg'd progeny,
Thou should'st not scape me here.—

[They fight, and certain Voices come to the aid of AUFIDIUS.]

Officious, and not valiant—you have sham'd me
In your condemned seconds.⁴

[Exeunt fighting, driven in by MARCIUS.]

SCENE IX. The Roman Camp. Alarum. A Retreat is sounded. Flourish. Enter at one side, COMINIUS, and Romans; at the other side, MARCIUS, with his arm in a scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,
Thou'dst not believe thy deeds; but I'll report it,
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles;
Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,
I'll the end, admire; where ladies shall be frighted,
And, gladly quak'd,⁵ hear more; where the dull
tribunes,

That, with the fusty plebeians, hate thine honours,
Shall say, against their hearts—*We thank the gods,
Our Rome hath such a soldier!*—
Yet canst thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS, with his Power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison:⁶
Hastst thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done,
As you have done; that's what I can; induc'd
As you have been; that's for my country:⁷
He, that has but effected his good will,
Hath overta'en mine act.⁸

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving; Rome must know

1 The construction here appears to be, 'Not Afric owns a serpent I more abhor and envy than thy fame.' The verb to envy, in ancient language, signified to hate.

2 Thus in Macbeth:—

'And damn'd be he that first cries, Hold, enough!'

3 I. e. the whip that your bragg'd progenitors were possessed of. Stevens suggests that whip might be used as crack has been since, to denote any thing peculiarly boasted of; as the crack house in the country, the crack boy of the school, &c.

4 'You have to my shame sent me help, which I must condemn as intrusive, instead of applauding it as necessary.'

5 I. e. thrown into grateful trepidation. To quake is used as a verb active by T. Heywood in his Silver Age, 1613:—

We'll quake them at the bar,
Where all souls wait for sentence.'

6 This is an odd encomium. The meaning is, 'This man performed the action, and we only filled up the show.'

7 Country is used here and in other place as a trisyllable.

The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest: Therefore, I beseech you,
(In sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done), before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart

To hear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not,⁹
Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses (Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store,) of all
The treasure, in this field achiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth; to be ta'en forth,
Before the common distribution, at
Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[A long Flourish. They all cry, Marcus!
Marcus! cast up their caps and lances;
COMINIUS and LARTIUS stand bare.]

May these same instruments, which you profane, Never sound more! When drums and trumpets shall I'll the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing: When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let him be made
An overture for the wars!¹⁰ No more, I say;
For that I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or foil'd some debile¹¹ wretch,—which, without note,

Here's many else have done,—you shout me forth
In acclamations hyperbolic;
As if I lov'd my little should be dicted
In praises sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you;
More cruel to your good report, than grateful
To us that give you truly: by your patience,
If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you (Like one that means his proper harm) in manacles,
Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it known,

As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcus Wears this war's garland: in token of the which
My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging; and, from this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all the applause and clamour of the host,
CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS.—
Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.]

All. Caius Marcus Coriolanus

Cor. I will go wash;

And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush, or no: Howbeit, I thank you:—

8 That is, 'has done as much as I have done, inasmuch as my ardour to serve the state is such that I have never been able to effect all that I wished.' So in Macbeth:—

'The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed goe with it.'

9 That is, not be remember'd.

10 The old copy reads:—

'—When steel grows
Soft as silk, let him be made
An overture for the wars!'

I think with Mr. Tyrwhitt that we should read a coverture. The personal pronoun him is not unfrequently used by old writers instead of it, the neuter. The sense of the passage will then be complete and apt:—
'When steel grows soft as silk, let armour be made of silk instead of steel.' Notwithstanding Malone's ingenious argument, it is impossible to extract sense from the word overture, which anciently, as now, meant 'a motion, or offer made, an opening, or entrance.'

11 Weak, feeble.

I mean to stride your steed ; and, at all times,
To undercrest your good addition,¹
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent :
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius, Must to Corioli back : send us to Rome
The best with whom we may articulate²
For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.
Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I that now
Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take it : 'tis yours.—What is't ?

Cor. I sometime lay, here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house ; he us'd me kindly :
He cried to me ; I saw him prisoner ;
But then Aufidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity : I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd !
Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free, as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcus, his name ?

Cor. By Jupiter, forgot :—
I am weary ; yea, my memory is tir'd.—
Have we no wine here ?

Com. Go we to our tent :
The blood upon your visage dries : 'tis time
It should be look'd to : come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X. The Camp of the Volces. A Flourish.
Cornets. Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

Auf. The town is ta'en !

I Sol. 'Twill be deliver'd back on good condition.

Auf. Condition ?—

I would, I were a Roman ; for I cannot,
Being a Volce,³ be that I am.—Condition !—
What good condition can a treaty find
I' the part that is at mercy ? Five times, Marcus,
I have fought with thee ; so often hast thou beat me :
And would'st do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat.—By the elements,
If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,
He is mine, or I am his : Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't, it had ; for where⁴
I thought to crush him in an equal force
(True sword to sword,) I'll potch⁵ at him some way ;
Or wrath, or craft, may get him.

I Sol. He's the devil.

Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle : My valour's poison'd,⁶

With only suffering stain by him ; for him
Shall fly out of itself : nor sleep, nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick ; nor fane, nor Capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements⁷ all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Marcus ; where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother's guard,⁸ even there,

1 'To undercrest your good addition,
To the fairness of my power'— appears to mean, 'he will endeavour to support the honourable distinction conferred upon him to the fair extent of his power.'

2 i. e. the chief men of Corioli, with whom we may enter into articles. Bullokar has the word 'articulate', to set down articles, or conditions of agreement. We still retain the word capitulate, which anciently had nearly the same meaning, viz. 'To article or agree upon articles.'

3 The Volsci are called Volces throughout the old translation of Plutarch, which Shakespeare followed.

4 Where for whereas, as in other places before noticed.

5 To potch is to thrust at with a sharp pointed instrument. Thus in Carew's Survey of Cornwall, p. 31 :—
'They use to potche them [i. e. fish] with an instrument somewhat like a salmon spear.' It is from the Fr.
pocher.

6 Mr. Tyrwhitt proposed to read :—

'My valour poison'd, &c.

And the context seems to require this emendation. 'To mischief him my valour should deviate from its native generosity.'

Against the hospitable canon, would I Wash my fierce hand in his heart. Go you to the city ;
Learn how 'tis held ; and what they are that must Be hostages for Rome.

I Sol. Will not you go ?

Auf. I am attended⁹ at the cypress grove :

I pray you,
('Tis south the city mills,)¹⁰ bring me word thither
How the world goes ; that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey.

I Sol. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Rome. A Public Place. Enter.
MENENIUS, SICINIUS, and BRUTUS.

Men. The augurer tells me, we shall have news to-night.

Brut. Good or bad ?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcus.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love ?¹¹

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him ; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcus.

Brut. He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear.

Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb.
You two are old men ; tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcus poor in,¹² that you two have not in abundance ?

Brut. He's poor in no one fault but stored with all.

Sic. Especially, in pride.

Brut. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange, now : Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o' the right hand file ? Do you ?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured ?

Men. Because you talk of pride now,—Will you not be angry ?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 'tis no great matter ; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience : give your disposition the reins, and be angry at your pleasures ; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame
Marcus for being proud !

Brut. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone : or your helps are many ; or else your actions would grow wondrous single : your abilities are too infant-like, for doing much alone. You talk of pride :
O, that you could turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks,¹³ and make but an interior survey of your good selves ! O, that you could !

Brut. What then, sir ?

7 Embarquements, as appears from Cotgrave and Sherwood, nasant not only an embarkation, but an embargoing ; which is evidently the sense of the word in this passage.

8 i. e. in my own house, with my brother posted to protect him.

9 Attended is waited for. So in Twelfth Night :—

'Thy interceptor attends thee at the orchard end.'

10 Malone observes that Shakespeare often introduces these minute local descriptions, probably to give an air of truth to his pieces. The poet attended not to the anachronism of mills near Antium. Lydgate has placed corn-mills near to Troy.

11 When the tribune, in reply to Menenius's remark on the people's hate to Coriolanus, had observed that
'even beasts know their friends,' Menenius asks,
'whom does the wolf love ?' implying that there are beasts which love nobody, and that among those beasts are the people.

12 It has been already observed that pleonasm of this kind were by no means unfrequent in Shakespeare's age.

13 With allusion to the fable, which says, that every man has a bag hanging before him, in which he puts his neighbour's faults ; and another behind him, in which he stows his own.

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates (alias fools,) as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying¹ Tyber in't; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint: hasty, and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttock of the night, than with the forehead of the morning.² What I think, I utter; and spend my malice in my breath: Meeting two such weals-men as you are (I cannot call you Lycurguses,) if the drink you give me, touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I cannot say, your worship have delivered the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables: and though I must be content to hear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they lie dead, that tell, you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm,³ follows it, that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson⁴ conspectuities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Bru. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs:⁵ you wear out a good wholesome forenoon, in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fosset-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience.⁶—When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the colic, you make faces like mummers; set up the bloody flag against all patience;⁷ and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause, is, calling both the parties knaves: You are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table, than a necessary bencher in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are.⁸ When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave, as to stuff a botcher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcius is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Deucalion; though peradventure, some of the best of them were hereditary hangmen. Good e'en to your worship; more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsmen of the beastly plebeians. I will be bold to take my leave of you.

[Bru. and Sic. retire to the back of the Scene.]

1 Lovelace, in his Verses to Althea, from Prison, has borrowed this expression:—

'When flowing cups run swiftly round,
With no allaying Thames,' &c.

2 Rather a late larder down than an early riser. So in Love's Labour's Lost:—'In the posteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.' Again in King Henry IV. Part ii.:—

'—Thou art a summer bird.
Which even in the haunch of Winter sings
The lifting up of day.'

3 So in King Lear:—

'Strives in this little world of men.'

Microcosm is the title of a poem by John Davies of Hereford.

4 Bisson is blind. Thus in Hamlet:—

'Ran barefoot up and down, threatening the flames
With bisson rheum.'

5 That is, for their obeisance showed by bowing to you.

6 It appears from this whole speech that Shakespeare mistook the office of præfectus urbis for the tribune's office.

7 That is, declare war against patience. Johnson

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and VALERIA, &c.
How now, my as fair as noble ladies, (and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler,) whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcius approaches; for the love of Juno, let's go.

Men. Ha! Marcius coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee:⁹—Hoo! Marcius coming home?

Two Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him; the state hath another, his wife another: and, I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night:—A letter for me?

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I saw it.

Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen¹⁰ is but empiric¹¹ cutick, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded, I thank the gods for't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much:—Brings 'a victory in his pocket?—The wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows, Menenius: he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.¹²

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes,—they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an he had staid by him, I would not have been so fidiused for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed¹² of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go:—Yes, yes, yes: the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Val. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous? ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true?

Vol. True? pow, wow.

Men. True? I'll be sworn they are true:—Where is he wounded? God save your good worships! [To the Tribunes, who come forward.] Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.—Where is he wounded?

Vol. P the shoulder, and i' the left arm: There will be large cicatrices to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin, seven hurts i' the body.

justly observes, that 'there is not wit enough in this satire to recompense its grossness.'

8 So in Much Ado About Nothing:—'Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.'

9 Shakespeare so often mentions throwing up caps in this play, that Menenius may well enough be supposed to throw up his cap in thanks to Jupiter.—Johnson.

10 In this mention of Galen there is an anachronism of near 650 years. Menenius flourished about 492 years before the birth of our Lord, Galen about 160 years after it. The word empiric¹¹ cutique (in the old copy) is evidently formed by the poet from empirick, a quack.

11 Volumnia answers Menenius without taking notice of his last words.—'The wounds become him.' Menenius had asked, 'Brings a victory in his pocket?' He brings it, says Volumnia, on his brows; for he comes the third time home brow-bound with the oaken garland, the emblem of victory. So afterwards:—

'He provid best man o' the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oak.'

12 Possessed is fully informed.

'I have possess'd your grace of what I purpose.'

Merchant of Venice

Men. One in the neck, and two in the thigh,—there's nine that I know.¹

Vol. He had before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave: [A Shout, and Flourish.] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him
He carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears;
Death, that dark spirit, in's nery arm doth lie;
Which being advanc'd, declines; and then men die.²

A Sennet. Trumpets sound. Enter COMINIUS and TITUS LARTIUS; between them, CORIOLANUS, crowned with an oaken Garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight

Within Corioli's gates: where he hath won,
With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these
In honour follows, Coriolanus:
Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

[Flourish.]
All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. No more of this, it does offend my heart:
Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother,—
Cor. O!

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods
For my prosperity. [Kneels.]

Vol. Nay, my good soldier up
My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius, and
By deed-achieving honour newly nam'd,
What is it? Coriolanus, must I call thee?
But O, thy wife,—

Cor. My gracious silence,³ hail!
Would'st thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd
home,

That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear
Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear,
And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now the gods crown thee!

Cor. And live you yet?—O my sweet lady, pardon.

Vol. I know not where to turn:—O, welcome home;

And welcome, general;—And you are welcome all.

Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep,
And I could laugh; I am light, and heavy; Welcome:

A curse begin at very root of his heart,
That is not glad to see thee!—You are three,
That Rome should dote on: yet, by the faith of men,
We have some old crab-trees here at home, that will not

1 The old man is minutely particular: 'Seven wounds? let me see: one in the neck, two in the thigh—Nay, I am sure there are nine that I know.'

2 Volumnia, in her boasting strain, says that her son, to kill his enemy, has nothing to do but to lift his hand and let it fall.

3 By 'gracious silence' it is probable the poet meant, 'thou whose silent tears are more eloquent and grateful to me than the clamorous applause of the rest.' Thus in Love's Cure, or The Marital Maid, by Beaumont and Fletcher:—

'A lady's tears are silent orators,
Or should be so at least, to move beyond
The honey-tongued rhetorician.'

4 By these words it should seem that Coriolanus means to say, 'Menenius is still the same affectionate friend as formerly.' So in Julius Caesar:—'For always I am Cæsar.'

5 'Change of honours' is variety of honours, as change of raiment is variety of raiment. Theobald would read charge.

6 A rapture anciently was synonymous with a fit or trance. Thus Torriano:—'Rauo, s. a rapture or trance of the mind, or a distraction of the spirits.' This is confirmed by Steevens's quotation from the Hospital for London Follies, 1602, where gossip Luce says, 'Your darling will weep itself into a rapture, if you do not take heed.'

Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors;
We call a nettle, but a nettle; and
The faults of fools, but folly.

Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.⁴

Her. Give way, there, and go on.

Cor. Your hand, and yours:
[To his Wife and Mother.]

Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
The good patricians must be visited;
From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings,
But with them change of honours.⁵

Vol. I have lived

To see inherited my very wishes,
And the buildings of my fancy: only there
Is one thing wanting, which I doubt not, but
Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother,
I had rather be their servant in my way,
Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. On to the Capitol.
[Flourish. Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before. The Tribunes remain.]

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights

Are spectacl'd to see him: Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture⁶ lets her baby cry,
While she chats him: the kitchen malkin⁷ pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy⁸ neck, Clambering the walls to eye him: stalls, bulks,
windows,

Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him: seld⁹ shown flames
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station;¹⁰ our veil'd dames Commit the war of white and damask,¹¹ in
Their nicely-gawded cheeks, to the wanton spoil
Of Phœbus' burning kisses; such a pother,
As if that whatsoever god, who leads him,
Were slyly crept into his human powers,
And gave him graceful posture.¹²

Sic. On the sudden,
I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may,
During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honours

From where he should begin, and end;¹³ but will Lose those that he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not, the commoners, for whom we stand,

But they, upon their ancient malice, will Forget, with the least cause, these his new honours;

Which that he'll give them, make as little question
As he is proud to do't.¹⁴

7 A malkin or maulkin was a kind of mop made of rags, used for sweeping ovens, &c.; a figure made of clouts to scare birds was also so called: hence it came to signify a dirty wench. The scullion very naturally takes her name from this utensil, her French title escullion being only another name for a malkin.

Lockram was a kind of coarse linen.

8 Reechy is fumant with sweat or grease.

9 Seld is seldom, often so used by old writers.

10 'A vulgar station' is a common standing-place among the vulgar.

11 So in Tarquin and Lucrece—

'The silent war of lilies and of roses,
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field.'

12 That is, as if that god who leads him, whatsoever god he be. So in Shakespeare's 26th Sonnet:—

'Till whatsoever star that guides my moving,
Points on me graciously with fair aspect.'

13 The meaning, though obscurely expressed, is, 'He cannot carry his honours temperately from where he should begin, to where he should end.' We have the same phraseology in Cymbeline:—

the gap

'That we shall make in time, from our hence going
And our return, to excuse.'

14 'Proud to do't,' is the same as 'proud of doing it.'

Br. I heard him swear,
Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put
The napless¹ vesture of humility;
Nor, showing (as the manner is) his wounds
To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'Tis right.

Br. It was his word: O, he would miss it, rather

Than carry it, but by the suit o' the gentry to him,
And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better,
Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it
In execution.

Br. 'Tis most like he will.

Sic. It shall be to him, then, as our good wills;²
A sure destruction.

Br. So it must fall out
To him, or our authorities. For an end,
We must suggest³ the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them: that, to his power, he would⁴

Have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders, and Disproportioned their freedoms: holding them,
In human action and capacity,
Of no more soul, nor fitness for the world,
Than camels in their war; who have their pro-
vand⁵

Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say, suggested
At some time when his soaring insolence Shall teach⁶ the people, (which time shall not want,

If he be put upon't; and that's as easy,
As to set dogs on sheep,) will be his fire
To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Br. What's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'Tis thought,

That Marcius shall be consul: I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind:
To hear him speak: matrons flung gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs,⁷
Upon him as he pass'd: the nobles bended,
As to Jove's statue; and the commons made
A shower, and thunder, with their caps and shouts;
I never saw the like.

Br. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time,
But hearts for the event.⁸

Sic. Have with you. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. The Capitol. Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions.

1 Off. Come, come, they are almost here: How many stand for consulships?

2 Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of every one, Coriolanus will carry it.

1 Off. That's a brave fellow: but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. 'Faith, there have been many great men

1 i. e. threadbare.

2 i. e. 'as our advantage requires.' Wills is here a verb.

3 i. e. prompt.

4 'That to the utmost of his power he would,' &c.

5 'Than camels in their war: who have their provand.' We should probably read the war. Provand is probander.

6 Theobald reads, 'Shall reach the people,' &c.
Teach the people, may however mean, 'instruct the people in favour of our purposes.'

7 Shakespeare here attributes some of the customs of his own times to a people who were wholly unacquainted with them. This was exactly what occurred at tilings and tournaments when a combatant had distinguished himself.

8 That is, 'let us observe what passes, but keep our hearts fixed on our design of crushing Coriolanus.'

9 i. e. 'he would have waded indifferently,' &c.

10 Their adversary or opponent.

that have flatter'd the people, who ne'er loved them;
and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground: Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition; and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see't.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he waded indifferently⁹ 'twixt doing them neither good, nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him: and leaves nothing undone, that may fully discover him their opposite.¹⁰ Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country:
And his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those,¹¹ who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonnetted,¹² without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report:
but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury; to report otherwise were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

1 Off. No more of him; he is a worthy man:
Make way, they are coming.

*A Sennet. Enter, with Lictors before them, COMI-NIUS, the Consul, MENENIUS, CORIOLANUS, many other Senators, SICINIUS and BRUTUS.
The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.*

Men. Having determin'd of the Volces, and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains,
As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service, that Hath thus stood for his country: Therefore, please
you,

Most reverend and grave elders, to desire

The present consul, and last general
In our well found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Marcius Coriolanus; whom
We meet here, both to thank, and to remember
With honours like himself.

1 Sen. Speak, good Cominius:
Leave nothing out for length, and make us think,
Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out.¹³ Masters o' the people,
We do request your kindest ears: and, after,
Your loving motion toward the common body,¹⁴
To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are convented

Upon a pleasing treaty; and have hearts
Inclinable to honour and advance

The theme of our assembly.¹⁵

Br. Which the rather

We shall be bless'd to do, if he remember

A kinder value of the people, than

He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off,¹⁶

11 As the ascent of those.

12 Bonnetted is here a verb, as bonnetter, Fr. to pull off the cap.

13 'Rather say that our means are too defective to afford an adequate reward, than our inclinations defective to extend it toward him.'

14 i. e. your kind interposition with the common people.

15 Shakespeare was probably not aware that until the promulgation of the Lex Atinia, which is supposed to have been in the time of Quintus Metellus Macedonicus, the tribunes had not the privilege of entering the senate, but had seats placed for them near the door, on the outside of the house. But in our ancient theatres the imagination of the spectators was frequently called upon to lend its aid to illusions much more improbable than that of supposing they saw the inside and outside of the same building at once.

16 i. e. 'that is nothing to the purpose.'

I would you rather had been silent : Please you
To hear Cominius speak ?

Bru. Most willingly :
But yet my caution was more pertinent,
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people ;
But tie him not to be their bedfellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place.
[CORIOLANUS rises, and offers to go away.]

1 Sen. Sit, Coriolanus : never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon ;
I had rather have my wounds to heal again,
Than hear say how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope
My words disbench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir : yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not : But, your
people,

I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the sun,
When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd.

[Exit CORIOLANUS.]
Men. Masters o' the people,
Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter,
(That's thousand to one good one,) when you now see,

He had rather venture all his limbs for honour,
Than one of his ears to hear it ?—Proceed, Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice : the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be utter'd feebly.—It is held,
That valour is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver : if it be,
The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome,¹ he fought
Beyond the mark of others : our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian chin he drov
The bristled lips before him : he bestrid
An o'er-press'd Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers : Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee :² in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,³
He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea ;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,⁴
He lurch'd⁵ all swords o' the garland. For this last,
Before and in Corioli, let me say,
I cannot speak him home : He stopp'd the fliers ;
And, by his rare example, made the coward
Turn terror into sport : as waves⁶ before

A vessel under sail, so men obey'd,
And fell below his stem : his sword (death's stamp)
Where it did mark, it took ; from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd⁷ with dying cries : alone he enter'd
The mortal gate⁸ o' the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny, aidless came off,
And with a sudden reinforcement struck
Corioli, like a planet : now all's his :
When by-and-by the din of war⁹ gan pierce
His ready sense : then straight his doubled spirit
Requicken'd what in flesh was fatigate,⁹
And to the battle came he ; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetual spoil : and, till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man !
1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours

Which we devise him.¹⁰

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at ;
And look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' the world ; he covets less
Than misery¹¹ itself would give ; rewards
His deeds with doing them ; and is content
To spend the time, to end it.

Men. He's right noble ;
Let him be call'd for.

1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life, and services.

Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.¹²

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'erleap that custom ; for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat there,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage :
please you,

That I may pass this doing.

Sic. Sir, the people
Must have their voices ; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't :
Pray you, go fit you to the custom : and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your form.¹

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that ?

Cor. To brag unto them,—Thus I did, and thus ;—

1 When Tarquin, who had been expelled, raised a party to recover Rome.

2 This does not mean that he gave Tarquin a blow on the knee, but gave him such a blow as occasioned him to fall on his knee : 'ad terram duplicato poplite Turnus.'

3 It has been before mentioned that the parts of women were, in Shakespeare's time, represented by the most smooth-faced young men to be found among the players. This is a palpable anachronism ; there were no theatres at Rome for the exhibition of plays until about two hundred and fifty years after the death of Coriolanus.

4 Plutarch says, 'seventeen years of service in the wars, and many and sundry battles' : but from Coriolanus's first campaign to his death was only a period of eight years.

5 To lurch is to win or carry off easily the prize or stake at any game. It originally signified to devour greedily, from lurco, Lat. ; then to purloin, subtract, or withdraw any thing from another. Thus in Ben Jonson's Silent Woman :—'You have lurch'd your friends of the better half of the garland.' Cole, in his Latin Dictionary, 1679, has 'A lurch, duplex palma facilis victoria.'

6 Thus the second folio. The first folio 'as weeds,'

&c. which Malone pertinaciously adheres to. I think with Stevens, that a vessel stemming the waves is an image much more suitable to the prowess of Coriolanus, than that which Malone would substitute.

7 The cries of the slaughtered regularly followed his motion, as music and a dancer accompany each other.

8 The gate which was made the scene of death.

9 Wearied.

10 No honour will be too great for him ; he will show a mind equal to any elevation.

11 Misery for avarice, because a miser signifies avaricious.

12 Coriolanus (as Warburton observes) was banished A. U. C. 262. But till the time of Manlius Torquatus, A. U. C. 393, the senate chose both consuls ; and then the people, assisted by the seditious temper of the tribunes, got the choice of one. Shakespeare follows Plutarch, who expressly says in the Life of Coriolanus, that 'it was the custom of Rome at that time, that such as dy'd sue for any office, should for certain days before be in the market-place, only with a poor gown on their backs, and without any coats underneath, to pray the people to remember them at the day of election.'—North's Translation, p. 244.

13 'Your form' is the form which custom prescribes to you.

Show them the unaking scars which I should hide, As if I had receiv'd them for the hire Of their breath only:—

Men. Do not stand upon't.— We recommend to you, tribunes of the people, Our purpose to them;¹ and to our noble consul Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour! [Flourish. Then exeunt Senators.]

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sic. May they perceive his intent! He will require them,

As if he did contemn what he requested Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come, we'll inform them Of our proceedings here: on the market-place, I know, they do attend us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. The Forum. Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once,² if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do it: for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them: so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous: and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once⁴ we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured: and truly I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one scull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent⁵ of one direct way should be at once to all the points o' the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way, do you judge, my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will, 'tis strongly wedged up in a blockhead: but if it were at liberty, 'twould, sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return for conscience sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:—You may, you may.⁶

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter CORIOLANUS and MENENIUS.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility; mark his behaviour. We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars: wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own

¹ 'We recommend to you, tribunes of the people, to declare our purpose to them,' namely, the appointment of Coriolanus to the consulship.

² I.e. once for all.

³ Power in the first instance here means natural power or force, and then moral power, or right. Davis has used the word with the same variety of meaning:—

'Use all thy powers that heavenly power to praise, That gave thee power to do'

⁴ Once signifies here one time, and not as soon as ever, which Malone takes to be its meaning. Rowe inserted when after once, which is indeed elliptically understood.

⁵ Consent is accord, agreement. To suppose that their agreement to go all one way should end in their tongues: therefore follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content. [Exeunt.]

Men. O, sir, you are not right: have you not known

The worthiest men have done it?

Cor. What must I say?— I pray, sir,—Plague upon't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace:—Look, sir;—my wounds!—

I got them in my country's service, when Some certain of your brethren roar'd, and ran From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods! You must not speak of that; you must desire them To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me! Hang 'em! I would they would forget me, like the virtues Which our divines lose by them.⁷

Men. You'll mar all; I'll leave you: Pray you, speak to them, I pray you, In wholesome manner.⁸ [Exit.]

Enter two Citizens.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces, And keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a brace.

You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to't.

Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert!

Cor. Ay, not Mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?

Cor. No, sir;

'Twas never my desire yet,

To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any thing, We hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well, then, I pray, your price o' the consulship?

1 Cit. The price is, sir, to ask it kindly

Cor. Kindly? Sir, I pray let me ha't: I have wounds to show you, Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice, sir;

What say you?

2 Cit. You shall have it, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir:—

There is in all two worthy voices begg'd:

I have your alms; adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An 'twere to give again,—But 'tis no matter. [Exeunt two Citizens.]

Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma.

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have not, indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother the people, to earn a flying to every point of the compass, is a just description of the variety and inconsistency of the many-headed multitude.

⁶ The force of this colloquial phrase appears to be 'You may divert yourself as you please at my expense.' It occurs again in Troilus and Cressida:—

'Hel. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine fore head.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.'

⁷ 'I wish they would forget me, as they do the virtuous precepts which our divines preach to them.' This is another amusing instance of anachronism.

⁸ So in Hamlet:—'If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer.'

dearer estimation of them: 'tis a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly: that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal¹ your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily! [Exeunt.]

Cor. Most sweet voices!

Better it is to die, better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve.
Why in this wolvis² gown³ should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick,⁴ that do appear,
Their needlessness vouches? Custom calls me to't:—
What custom wills, in all things should we do't,
The dust on antique time would lie unswept,
And mountainous error be too highly heap'd
For truth to overpeer. Rather than fool it so,
Let the high office and the honour go,
To one that would do thus.—I am half through:
The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices,—
Your voices; for your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices, bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six
I have seen, and heard of; for your voices, have⁴ Done many things, some less, some more: your voices:

Indeed, I would be consul.

5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.

6 Cit. Therefore, let him be consul: Tho' gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people!

All. Amen, Amen.—

God save thee, noble consul! [Exeunt Citizens.]

Cor. Worthy voices!

Re-enter MENENIUS, with BRUTUS and SICINIUS.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice; Remains
That, in the official marks invested, you
Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have discharged:⁵
The people do admit you; and are summon'd⁶
To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir.

1 I will not strengthen or complete your knowledge.
The scat is that which ratifies or completes a writing.

2 Thus the second folio. The first folio reads 'wolvis tongue,' apparently an error of the press for toge; the same mistake having occurred in Othello, where 'tongued consuls' is printed for 'toged consuls.' By a scotish gown Coriolanus means a deceitful one; in allusion to the fable of the wolf in sheep's clothing: not that he means to call himself the wolf, but merely to say, Why should I stand here playing the hypocrite, and simulating the humility that is not in my nature? Or, as Shakespeare expresses it in All's Well that Ends Well: 'To wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart.' Brutus afterwards says:—

'—With a proud heart he wore
His humble weeds.'

3 The poet has here given the names (as in many other places he has attributed the customs) of England to ancient Rome. Hob and Dick were names of frequent occurrence among the common people in Shakespeare's time, and generally used to signify a peasant or poor person.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself again,

Repair to the senate-house.

Men. I'll keep you company.—Will you along?

Br. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well.

[Exeunt CORIOL. and MENEN.]

He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,
'Tis warm at his heart.

Br. With a proud heart he wore

His humble weeds: Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters? have you chose this man?

1 Cit. He has our voices, sir.

Br. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves.

2 Cit. Amen, sir: To my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us, when he begg'd our voices.

3 Cit. Certainly,
He flouted us downright.

1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mock us.

2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says,
He us'd us scornfully: he should have show'd us
His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for his country.

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.

Cit. No; no man saw 'em.
[Several speak.]

3 Cit. He said, he had wounds, which he could show in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
I would be consul, says he: aged custom,¹

But by your voices, will not so permit me;
Your voices therefore: When we granted that,

Here was,—I thank you for your voices,—thank
you,—

Your most sweet voices:—now you have left your voices,

I have no further with you:—Was not this mockery?

Sis. Why, either, were you ignorant to see't?²
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness

To yield your voices?

Br. Could you not have told him,
As you were lesson'd—When he had no power,

But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy; ever spake against

Your liberties, and the charters that you bear,
P' the body of the weal: and now, arriving

A place of potency, and away o' the state,
If he should still malignantly remain

Fast foe to the plebeii, your voices might
Be curses to yourselves. You should have said,

That, as his worthy deeds did claim no less
Than what he stood for; so his gracious nature

Would think upon you for your voices,³ and Translate his malice towards you into love,

Standing your friendly lord.

Sic. Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his spirit,

And try'd his inclination; from him pluck'd
Either his gracious promise, which you might,

4 Dr. Farmer says, perhaps we should read:—

'—battles thrice six
'Pre seen, and you have heard of; for your voices
Done many things,' &c.

Coriolanus seeming now in earnest to petition for the consulate.

5 The Romans (as Warburton observes) had but lately changed the regal for the consular government:
for Coriolanus was banished the eighteenth year after the expulsion of the kings. Plutarch, as we have before seen, led the poet into the error concerning this ages custom.

6 'Were you ignorant to see't?' is 'did you want knowledge to discern it?'

7 '—arriving

A place of potency.'
Sol'n the Thir'd Part of King Henry VI. Act v. Sc. 3:—

'—those powers that the queen
Hath rais'd in Gallia have arriv'd our coast.'

8 I. e. 'Would retain a grateful remembrance of you,' &c.

As cause had call'd you up, have held him to ;
Or else it would have gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article
Tying him to aught ; so, putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unselected.

Bru. Did you perceive,
He did solicit you in free contempt,¹
When he did need your loves ; and do you think
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush ? Why, had your bodies

No heart among you ? Or had you tongues, to cry
Against the rectorship of judgment ?

Sic. Have you,
Ere now, deny'd the asker ? and, now again,
On him, that did not ask, but mock, bestow
Your sued-for tongues ?²

3 Cit. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2 Cit. And will deny him :

I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1 Cit. I twice five hundred, and their friends to piece 'em.

Bru. Get you hence instantly ; and tell those friends,—

They have chose a consul, that will from them take
Their liberties ; make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to do so.

Sic. Let them assemble ;
And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
Your ignorant election : Enforce his pride,
And his old hate unto you : besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed ;
How in his suit he scorn'd you : but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,⁴
Which most gibingly, ungravely he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay
A fault on us, your tribunes ; that we labour'd (No impediment between) but that you must Cast your election on him.

Sic. Say you chose him
More after our commandment, than as guided
By your own true affections : and that, your minds
Preoccupy'd with what you rather must do
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul : Lay the fault on us.

Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures to you,

How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued : and what stock he springs of,
The noble house of the Marcians ; from whence came
That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son,
Who, after great Hostilius, here was king :
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
That our best water brought by conduits hither ;
And Censorinus, darling of the people,⁵
And nobly nam'd so, being censor twice,
Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did commend

1 That is, in pure contempt, open and unrestrained.
2 'Your voices, to obtain which so many have hitherto solicited.'

3 Object his pride, and enforce the objection. So afterwards :—

'Enforce him with his envy to the people.'

4 I. e. carriage. So in Othello :—

'And portance in my travels' history.'

5 Pope supplied this verse, which the context evidently requires, and which is warranted by the narration in Plutarch, from whence this passage is taken :—'The house of the Marcians at Rome was of the number of the patricians, out of which sprung many noble personages, whereof Ancus Martius was one, King Numa's daughter's son, who was King of Rome after Tullus Hostilius. Of the same house were Publius and Quintus, who brought to Rome their best water they had by conduits. Censorinus came of that familie, that was so surnamed because the people had chosen him censor twice.' Publius and Quintus and Censorinus were not

To your remembrances : but you have found,
Scaling⁶ his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say, you ne'er had done't,
(Harp on that still,) but by our putting on :
And presently, when you have drawn your number,
Repair to the Capitol.

Cit. We will so : almost all [Several speak.
Repent in their election. [Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. Let them go on ;
This mutiny were better put in hazard,
Than stay, past doubt, for greater :
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sic. To the Capitol :
Come, we'll be there before the stream o' the people,
And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,
Which we have goaded onward. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I. The same. A Street. Cornets. Enter
CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, TITUS
LARTIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

Cor. Tullius Aufidius then had made new head ?

Lart. He had, my lord ; and that it was, which caus'd

Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then the Volces stand but as at first ;
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon us again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul,⁸ so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius ?

Lart. On safeguard⁹ he came to me ; and did curse

Against the Volces, for they had so vilely
Yielded the town : he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me ?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How ? what ?

Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword :
That, of all things upon the earth, he hated
Your person most : that he would pawn his fortunes
To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he ?

Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish, I had cause to seek him there
To oppose his hatred fully.—Welcome home

[To LARTIUS.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Behold ! these are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' the common mouth. I do despise
them ;

For they do prank¹⁰ them in authority,
Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha ! what is that ?

Bru. It will be dangerous to Go on : no further.

the ancestors of Coriolanus, but his descendants. Cains Martius Rutilius did not obtain the name of Censorinus till the year of Rome 487 ; and the Marcian waters were not brought to the city by aqueducts till the year 613, near 350 years after the death of Coriolanus. Shakspeare has conjoined the ancestors and posterity of Coriolanus together.

6 That is, weighing his past and present behaviour.

7 I. e. our incitation. So in King Lear :—

'— you protect this course,

'And put it on by your allowance.'

8 Shakspeare has here again given the usage of England to Rome. In his time the title of lord was given to many officers of state who were not peers, as lords of the council, lord ambassador, lord general.

9 That is, with a convoy. a guard appointed to tect him.

10 So in Measure for Measure, Act ii. Sc. 2 :—

'Drest in a little brief authority.'

Cor. What makes this change?
Men. The matter?
Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the commons?
Bru. Cominius, no.
Cor. Have I had children's voices?
1 Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place.
Bru. The people are incens'd against him.
Sic. Stop,
 Or all will fall in broil.
Cor. Are these your herd?—
 Must these have voices, that can yield them now,
 And straight disclaim their tongues?—What are your offices?
 You, being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?
 Have you not set them on?
Men. Be calm, be calm.
Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,
 To curb the will of the nobility:—
 Suffer it, and live with such as cannot rule,
 Nor ever will be rul'd.
Bru. Call't not a plot:
 The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late,
 When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;
 Scandal'd the supplicants for the people; call'd them
 Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.
Cor. Why, this was known before.
Bru. Not to them all.
Cor. Have you inform'd them since?
Bru. How! I inform them!
Cor. You are like to do such business.
Bru. Not unlike,
 Each way to better yours.¹
Cor. Why then should I be consul? By yon
 clouds,
 Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
 Your fellow tribune.
Sic. You show too much of that,
 For which the people stir: If you will pass
 To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,
 Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;
 Or never be so noble as a consul,
 Nor yoke with him for tribune.
Men. Let's be calm.
Com. The people are abus'd:—Set on.—This palt'ring²
 Becomes not Rome: Nor has Coriolanus
 Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely³
 I' the plain way of his merit.
Cor. Tell me of corn!
 This was my speech, and I will speak't again;—
Men. Not now, not now.
1 Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.
Cor. Now, as I live, I will,—My nobler friends,
 I crave their pardons:—
 For the mutable, rank-scented many,⁴ let them Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves: I say again,
 In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
 The cockle⁵ of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
 Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,
 By mingling them with us, the honour'd number;
 Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that
 Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.
1 Sen. No more words, we beseech you.
Cor. How! no more?
 As for my country I have shed my blood,
 Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs
 Coin words till their decay, against those meazeis,⁶
 Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought
 The very way to catch them.
Bru. You speak o' the people,
 As if you were a god to punish, not
 A man of their infirmity.
Sic. 'Twere well
 We let the people know't.
Men. What, what? his choler?
Cor. Choler!
 Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
 By Jove, 'twould be my mind.
Sic. It is a mind,
 That shall remain a poison where it is,
 Not poison any further.
Cor. Shall remain!—
 Hear you this Triton of the minnows?⁷ mark you
 His absolute shall?
Com. 'Twas from the canon.
Cor. Shall!
 O good,⁸ but most unwise patricians, why,
 You grave, but reckless⁹ senators, have you thus Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
 That with his peremptory shall, being but
 The horn and noise¹⁰ o' the monsters, wants not spirit
 To say, he'll turn your current in a ditch,
 And make your channel his? If he have power,
 Then vail your ignorance:¹¹ if none, awake
 Your dangerous lenity. If you are learned,
 Be not as common fools; if you are not,
 Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,
 If they be senators: and they are no less,
 When both your voices blended, the greatest taste
 Most palates theirs.¹² They choose their magistrate;
 And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
 His popular shall, against a graver bench
 Than ever frown'd in Greece! By Jove himself,
 It makes the consuls base; and my soul aches,
 To know, when two authorities are up,
 Neither supreme, how soon confusion
 May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
 The one by the other.¹³
Com. Well—on to the market place.
Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth
 The corn o' the storehouse gratis, as 'twas us'd
 Sometime in Greece,—
Men. Well, well, no more of that.
Cor. (Though there the people had more absolute power,)
 I say they nourish'd disobedience, fed
 The ruin of the state.
Bru. Why, shall the people give
 One, that speaks thus, their voice?
Cor. I'll give my reasons,
 More worthy than their voices. They know, the corn
 Was not our recompense; resting well assur'd
 They ne'er did service for't: Being press'd to the war,
 Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,

1 i. e. likely to provide better for the security of the commonwealth than you (whose business it is) will do. To which the reply is pertinent, 'Why then should I be consul?'

2 Palt'ring is shuffling.

3 i. e. treacherously. The metaphor is from a rub at bowls.

4 i. e. the populace.

5 Cockle is a weed which grows up with and chokes the corn. The thought is from North's Plutarch:—'Moreover, he said, that they nourish'd against themselves the naughty seed and cockle of insolency and sedition, which had been sowed and scattered abroad among the people,' &c.

6 Meazel, or mesell, is the old term for a leper, from the Fr. meselle.

7 So in Loves Labours Lost:—'That base minnow of thy mirth.'

8 The old copy has 'O God, but,' &c. The emendation was made by Theobald.

9 Careless.

10 'The horn and noise,' alluding to his having called him Triton of the minnows before.

11 'If this man has power, let the ignorance that gave it him tail or bow down before him.'

12 'The plebeians are no less than senators, when the voices of the senate and the people being blended, the predominant taste of the compound smacks more of the populace than the senate.'

13 'The mischief and absurdity of what is called imperium in imperio is here finely expressed,' says Warburton.

That would not thread¹ the gates: this kind of service

Did not deserve corn gratis: being i' the war, Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd Most valour, spoke not for them: The accusation Which they have often made against the senate, All cause unborn, could never be the native² Of our so frank donation. Well, what then? How shall this bosom multiplied³ digest The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express What's like to be their words:—We did request it; We are the greater poll, and in true fear They gave us our demands:—Thus we debase The nature of our seats, and make the rabble Call our cares, fears: which will in time break ope The locks o' the senate, and bring in the crows To peck the eagles.—

Men. Come, enough.

Cor. Enough, with over measure.

Br. No, take more: What may be sworn by, both divine and human, Seal what I end withal!⁴—This double worship,—Where one part does disdain with cause, the other Insult without all reason; where gentry, title, wisdom

Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no Of general ignorance,—it must omit Real necessities, and give way the while To unstable slightness: purpose so barr'd, it follows,

Nothing is done to purpose: Therefore, beseech you,—

You that will be less fearful than discreet; That love the fundamental part of state, More than you doubt⁵ the change of't; that prefer

A noble life before a long, and wish To jump⁶ a body with a dangerous physic That's sure of death without it,—at once pluck out The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state Of that integrity which should become it;⁷ Not having the power to do the good it would, For the ill which doth control it.

Br. He has said enough.

Sic. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer

As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee!—What should the people do with these bald tribunes?

On whom depending, their obedience fails To the greater bench: In a rebellion, When what's not meet, but what must be was law, Then were they chosen: in a better hour, Let what is meet, be said it must be meet,⁸ And throw their power i' the dust.

Br. Manifest treason.

Sic. This a consul? no.

Br. The Ædiles, ho!—Let him be apprehended.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit BRUTUS.] in whose name, myself

Attach thee, as a traitorous innovator, A foe to the public weal: Obey, I charge thee, And follow to thine answer.

1 To thread the gates is to pass through them. So in King Lear:—'Threading dark-eyed night.'

2 Native, if it be not a corruption of the text, must be put for native cause, the producer or bringer forth. Mason's proposed emendation of native would be very plausible, were it not that the poet seems to have intended a kind of antithesis between cause unborn and native cause.

3 'This bosom multiplied,' is this multitudinous bosom, the bosom of that many-headed monster the people.

4 'No, let me add this further, and may every thing divine and human that can give force to an oath, bear witness to the truth of what I shall conclude with.'

5 To doubt is to fear.

6 To jump a body is apparently 'to risk or hazard a body.' So in Holland's Pliny, b. xxv. ch. v. p. 219:—

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Sen. & Pat. We'll surety him.

Com.

Aged sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments.⁹

Sic.

Help, ye citizens.

Re-enter BRUTUS, with the Ædiles, and a Rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic.

Here's he, that would Take from you all your power.

Br.

Seize him, Ædiles.

Cit.

Down with him, down with him!

[Several speak.]

2 Sen.

Weapons, weapons, weapons!

[They all bustle about CORIOLANUS.]

Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what ho!—

Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Cit.

Peace, peace, peace; stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath; Confusions's near: I cannot speak:—You, tribunes

To the people,—Coriolanus, patience:—

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic.

Hear me, people;—Peace.

Cit.

Let's hear our tribune:—Peace. Speak, speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties;

Marcus would have all from you; Marcus,

Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men.

Fye, fye, fye!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

1 Sen.

To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.

Sic.

What is the city, but the people?

Cit.

True,

The people are the city.

Br. By the consent of all, we were establish'd The people's magistrates.

Cit.

You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Cor.

That is the way to lay the city flat,

To bring the roof to the foundation;

And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic.

This deserves death.

Br. Or let us stand to our authority,

Or let us lose it:—We do here pronounce,

Upon the part o' the people, in whose power

We were elected theirs, Marcus is worthy

Of present death.

Sic.

Therefore, lay hold of him;

Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence

Into destruction cast him.

Br.

Ædiles, seize him.

Cit.

Yield, Marcus, yield.

Men.

Hear me one word.

Beseech you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Ædi.

Peace, peace.

Men.

Be that you seem, truly your country's friend,

And temperately proceed to what you would

Thus violently redress.

Br.

Sir, those cold ways

That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous

Where the disease is violent:—Lay hands upon him,

And bear him to the rock.

'If we looke for good successe in our cure by ministering hellebore, &c. for certainly it putteth the patient to a jumpe or great hazard.'

7 'Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state

Of that integrity which should become it.'

8 Judgment is the faculty by which right is distinguished from wrong. Integrity is in this place soundness, uniformity, consistency.

9 'Let it be said by you that what is meet to be done, must be meet, i. e. shall be done and put an end at once to the tribunitian power, which was established when irresistible violence, not a regard to propriety, directed the legislature.'

9 '—here's a stay,

That shakes the rotten carcase of old death

Out of his rags.'

King John.

Cor. No; I'll die here

[Drawing his Sword.]

There's some among you have beheld me fighting;
Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me.

Men. Down with that sword;—Tribunes, withdraw awhile.

Bru. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Help, help, Marcius! help,
You that be noble; help him, young, and old!

Cit. Down with him, down with him!

[In this Mutiny, the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and the People, are all beat in.]

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone away,
All will be naught else.

2 Sen. Get you gone.

Cor. Stand fast;
We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

Sen. The gods forbid!
I prythee, noble friend, home to thy house;
Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 'tis a sore upon us,
You cannot tent yourself: Begone, 'beseech you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us,
Cor. I would they were barbarians (as they are, Though in Rome litter'd, not Romans, (as they are
not,

Though calv'd i' the porch o' the Capitol,)

Men. Be gone;
Put not your worthy rage into your tongue;
One time will owe another.'

Cor. On fair ground,
I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself
Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic;
And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands
Against a falling fabric.—Will you hence,
Before the tag² return? whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear.

Men. Pray you, begone:
I'll try whether my old wit be in request
With those that have but little; this must be patch'd
With cloth of any colour.

Com. Nay, come away.

[Exeunt Cor. Com. and others.]

1 Pat. This man has marr'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for his power to thunder. His heart's his mouth;

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;
And, being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the name of death. [A noise within.]
Here's goodly work!

2 Pat. I would they were a-bed!

Men. I would they were in Tyber!—What, the vengeance,
Could he not speak them fair?

Re-enter BRUTUS and SICIPIUS, with the Rabble.

Sic. Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes,—

Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial

1 'One time will owe another.' I think Menenius means to say, 'Another time will offer when you may be quits with them.' There is a common proverbial phrase, 'One good turn deserves another.'

2 The lowest of the populace, tag, rag, and bobtail.

3 We should probably read:—
'He shall, be sure on't.'

4 This signal for general slaughter was not to be pronounced with impunity, but by authority: 'Item que nul soit si hardy de crier harok, sur peine d'avoir la test coupe.'—Ordonances des Battailles, 9 R. ii. Art. 10. Again, in the Statutes and Ordynances of Warre, printed by Tynson, 1513:—'That no man be so hardy to cry harok, upon payne of him that is so founde begynnar,

Than the severity of the public power,
Which he so sets at naught.

1 Cit. He shall well know,

The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands

Cit. He shall, sure on't.³

[Several speak together]

Men. Sir,—

Sic. Peace.

Men. Do not cry, havoc,⁴ where you should but hunt

With modest warrant.

Sic. Sir, how comes it, that you
Have help to make this rescue?

Men. Hear me speak.—

As I do know the consul's worthiness,

So can I name his faults.

Sic. Consul!—what consul?

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Bru. He a consul!

Cit. No, no, no, no, no.

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good people,

I may be heard, I'd crave a word or two;

The which shall turn you to no further harm,⁵

Than so much loss of time.

Sic. Speak briefly, then,

For we are peremptory, to despatch

This viperous traitor: to eject him hence,

Were but one danger; and, to keep him here,

Our certain death; therefore it is decreed,

He dies to-night.

Men. Now, the good gods forbid,

That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude

Towards her deserved⁶ children is enroll'd

In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam

Should now eat up her own!

Sic. He's a disease, that must be cut away.

Men. O, he's a limb, that has but a disease;

Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.

What has he done to Rome, that's worthy death?

Killing our enemies? The blood he hath lost,

(Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath,

By many an ounce,) he dropp'd it for his country;

And, what is left, to lose it by his country,

Were to us all, that do't, and suffer it,

A brand to the end o' the world.

Sic. This is clean kam.⁷

Bru. Merely⁸ awry: when he did love his country,

It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot

Being once gangren'd, is not then respected

For what before it was?

Bru. We'll hear no more:—

Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence;

Lest his infection, being of catching nature,

Spread further.

Men. One word more, one word.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find

The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will, too late,

Tie leaden pounds to his heels. Proceed by process;

Lest parties (as he is belov'd) break out,

And sack great Rome with Romans.

Bru. If it were so,—

Sic. What do ye talk?

Have we not had a taste of his obedience?

Our Ædiles smote? ourselves resisted?—Come:—

to dye therfore, and the remenant to be emprysoned and their bodies to be punyshed at the kinges will.

5 'The which shall turn you to no further harm.' This singular expression, occurs again in The Tem pest:—
—my heart bleeds

To think o' the teen that I have turn'd you to.

6 Deserved for deserving; as delighted for delighting in Othello, and other similar changes of termination in words of like ending.

7 Kam is crooked. 'Clean contrarie, quite kamme, a contrepoil,' says Cotgrave: and the same worthy lexicographer explains 'a revers, cross, cleune kamme'

8 I. e. absolutely.

Men. Consider this;—He has been bred i' the wars

Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In bouted language; meal and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
(In peace,) to his utmost peril.

I Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody; and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer:
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.

Sic. Meet on the market-place:—We'll attend
you there:

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you:
Let me desire your company. [To the Senators.]

He must come,
Or what is worse will follow.

I Sen. Pray you, let's to him.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room in Coriolanus's House.

Enter CORIOLANUS, and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears; present
me
eath on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;¹
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still
Be thus to them.

Enter VOLUMNIA.

1 Pat. You do the nobler.

Cor. I muse,² my mother
Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats; to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance³ stood up
To speak of peace, or war. I talk of you;

[To VOLUMNIA.]
Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me
False to my nature? Rather say, I play
The man I am.

Vol. O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.
Vol. You might have been enough the man you are,
With striving less to be so: Lesser had been
The thwartings⁴ of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.
Vol. Ay, and burn too.

1 Breaking a criminal on the wheel was a punishment unknown to the Romans; and, except in the single instance of Metius Suffetius, according to Livy, dismemberment by being torn to death by wild horses never took place in Rome. Shakespeare attributes to them the cruel punishments of a later age.

2 I muse, that is, I wonder.

3 Ordinance is here used for rank.

4 The old copy reads 'things of your disposition.' The emendation is Theobald's.

5 Old copy, 'stoop to the heart.' Theobald made the correction. Herd being anciently heard, the error easily crept in. Coriolanus thus describes the people in another passage:—

'You shames of Rome, you herd of ———'

6 'Except in cases of extreme necessity, when your resolute and noble spirit, however commendable at other times, ought to yield to the occasion.'

7 'Why urge you this?' So in King Henry VIII.:—
'If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy.'

8 The word to, which is wanting in the first folio, was supplied in the second. Malone contends for the Enter MENENIUS, and Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough:
Something too rough;

You must return, and mend it.

1 Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray be counsell'd:

I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger,
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman:
Before he should thus stoop to the herd,⁵ but that
The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic
For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,
Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well,

What then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them!—I cannot do it to the gods;

Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;

Though therein you can never be too noble,
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' the war do grow together:⁶ Grant that, and tell
me,

In peace, what each of them by th' other lose,
That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand

Vol. If it be honour, in your wars, to seem

The same you are not, (which, for your best ends,
You adopt your policy,) how is it less, or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war; since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force⁷ you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you to,⁸
But with such words that are but rote⁹ in
Your tongue, though but bastards, and syllables
Of no allowance, to your bosom's truth.¹⁰
Now, this no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in¹¹ a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood.—

I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd,
I should do so in honour: I am in this,
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;
And you will rather show our general lowts¹²
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want¹³ might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!

Come, go with us; speak fair: you may save so,
Not¹⁴ what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, my son,
Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;

old reading, and Steevens says that we should perhaps read:—

'Nor by the matter which your heart prompts in you' Without some additional syllable the line, as it stands in the first folio, is defective.

9 The old copy reads rotated. Mr. Boswell says, perhaps it should be rooted: we have no example of roted for got by rote, but it is much in Shakspeare's manner of forming expressions.

10 I. e. of no approbation. Allowance has no connection with the subsequent words, 'to your bosom's truth.'
The construction is 'though but bastards to your bosom's truth, not the lawful issue of your heart.' The words 'and syllables of no allowance,' are put in opposition with bastards, and are as it were parenthetical.

11 See Act i. Sc. 2.

12 Common clowns.

13 I. e. the want of their loves.

14 Not seems here to signify not only.

And thus far having stretch'd it (here be with them.)

Thy knee bussing the stones (for in such business Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant More learned than the ears,) waving thy head, Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,¹ Now humble, as the ripest mulberry, That will not hold the handling: Or, say to them, Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils, Hast not the soft way;² which, thou dost confess, Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim, In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far As thou hast power, and person.

Men. This but done, Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours: For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free As words to little purpose.

Vol. Pr'ythee now, Go, and be rul'd: although, I know, thou hadst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf, Than flatter him in a bower.³ Here is Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. I have been i' the market-place: and, sir, 'tis fit

You make strong party, or defend yourself By calmness, or by absence; all's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. I think, 'twill serve, if he Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will:— Pr'ythee, now, say, you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarb'd⁴ sconce? Must I

With my base tongue, give to my noble heart A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do't: Yet were there but this single plot⁵ to lose, This mould of Marcus, they to dust should grind it, And throw it against the wind—To the market-place:—

You have put me now to such a part, which⁶ never

I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, sweet son; as thou hast said, My praises made thee first a soldier, so, To have my praise for this, perform a part Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't: Away, my disposition, and possess me Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd, Which quired⁷ with my drum, into a pipe Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice That babies lull asleep! The smiles of knaves Tent⁸ in my cheeks; and schoolboys' tears take up The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd knees,

1 It is probably from want of a more complete acquaintance with the rules of grammar which guided our ancestors, that the use they made of the pronouns appears to us anomalous. Which here, as Malone observes, is to be understood as if the poet had written 'It often,' &c. Steevens pertinaciously insists upon attributing these seeming anomalies of ancient grammar to the incorrectness of ancient printers, whose press-work, he supposes, seldom received any correction; but those who are familiar with the manuscripts of Shakspeare's age will at once acquit the learned and useful body of typographers.

2 Thus in Othello, folio ed. 1623:—

'— Rude am I in speech,
And little bless'd with the soft phrase of peace;
And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broils and battles.'

3 Bower was the ancient term for a chamber. Spenser, speaking of the Temple, Prothalamion, st. 8, says:—

'Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers.'

4 Unbarb'd is unarmed, uncovered, uncovered. Colgrave says that a barbute was a ridinghood, or a morion or close hood, and that it also signified the beaver of a helmet. It was probably used for any kind of covering that concealed the head and face. Thus in

Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't: Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth, And, by my body's action, teach my mind A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice then:

To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour Than thou of them. Come all to ruin: let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear Thy dangerous stoutness;⁹ for I mock at death With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list. Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it from me; But owe¹⁰ thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content;

Mother, I am going to the market-place; Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves, Cog their hearts from them, and come home below'd Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going: Commend me to my wife. I'll return consul; Or never trust to what my tongue can do I'll the way of flattery, further.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit.]

Com. Away, the tribunes do attend you: arm yourself

To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd With accusations, as I hear, more strong Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is, mildly:—Pray you, let us go, Let them accuse me by invention, I Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it, then; mildly. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. The Forum. Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannical power: If he evade us there, Enforce him with his envy¹¹ to the people; And that the spoil, got on the Antiates, Was ne'er distributed.—

Enter an Ædile.

What, will he come?

Æd. He's coming.

Bru. How accompanied?
Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators That always favoured him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue Of all the voices that we have procur'd, Set down by the poll?

Æd. I have; 'tis ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither: And when they hear me say, it shall be so P the right and strength of the commons, be it either For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them, If I say, fine, cry fine; if death, cry death; Insisting on the old prerogative And power, i' the truth of the cause.

Æd. I shall inform them.

Chaucer, Troilus and Cressida, II. v. 110, Pandarus says to Cressida:—

'Do way your barbe and show your face bare.' Where Speght explains barbe a mask or visard; Mr. Hawklus, a veil or covering; and Mr. Tyrwhitt, a hood or muffler. It should be remembered that a barbed steed was an accoutred steed, or one covered with trappings.

5 Plot is piece, portion, applied to a piece of earth, and here elegantly transferred to the body, carcass.

6 Some of the modern editors substituted as for which here. Malone has shown that this was Shakspeare's usual phraseology. And Horne Tooke tells us why as and which were convertible words. See note on Julius Caesar, Act I. Sc. 2.

7 i. e. 'which played in concert with my drum. So in The Merchant of Venice:—

'Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubins.'

8 To tent is to dwell, to take up residence.

9 The meaning appears to be, 'Go, do thy worst; let me rather feel the utmost extremity that thy pride can bring upon us than live thus in fear of thy dangerous obstinacy.'

10 i. e. own.

11 Enforce his envy, i. e. object his hatred.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.

Æd. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint,
When we shall hap to give 't them.

Bru. Go about it.—
[Exit Ædile.]

Put him to choler straight: He hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth¹
Of contradiction: Being once chaf'd, he cannot
Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart; and that is there, which looks
With us to break his neck.²

Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by the volume.³—The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supplied with worthy men! plant love among us!
Throng our large temples with the shews of peace,
And not our streets with war!

1 Sen. Amen, amen!

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter Ædile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people.

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Æd. List to your tribunes; audience: Peace I say.

Both Tri. Well, say.—Peace, ho.

Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this present?

Must all determine here?

Sic. I do demand,

If you submit you to the people's voices,

Allow their officers, and are content

To suffer lawful censure for such faults

As shall be prov'd upon you?

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says, he is content:

The warlike service he has done, consider;

Think on the wounds his body bears, which show

Like graves i' the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with briars,

Scars to move laughter only.

Men. Consider further,

That when he speaks not like a citizen,

You find him like a soldier: Do not take

His rougher accents for malicious sounds,

But, as I say, such as become a soldier,

Rather than envy⁴ you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter,

That being pass'd for consul with full voice,

I am so dishonour'd, that the very hour

You take it off again?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 'tis true, I ought so.

Sic. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take

From Rome all season'd⁵ office, and to wind

Yourself into a power tyrannical;

For which, you are a traitor to the people.

¹ I.e. his full part or share, as we should now say his pennyworth of contradiction. So in Romeo and Juliet—

'—You take your pennyworth [of sleep] now.'

² 'The sentiments of Coriolanus's heart are our coadjutors, and look to have their share in promoting his destruction.'

³ 'Will bear being called a knave as often as would fall out a volume.'

⁴ 'Do not take his rougher accents for malicious sounds, but rather for such as become a soldier, than spite or malign you.' See the first note on this scene, Act I. Sc. viii.

⁵ I.e. wisely tempered office, established by time.

⁶ Grasp'd. So in Macbeth—

'Come let me clutch thee'

Cor. How! Traitor?

Men. Nay; temperately: Your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the people!

Call me their traitor!—Thou injurious tribune!

Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,

In thy hands clutch'd⁶ as many millions, in

Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,

Thou liest, unto thee, with a voice as free

As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?

Cit. To the rock; to the rock with him!

Sic. Peace.

We need not put new matter to his charge:

What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,

Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,

Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying

Those whose great power must try him; even this,

So criminal, and in such capital kind,

Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath

Serv'd well for Rome,——

Cor. What do you prate of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You?

Men. Is this

The promise that you made your mother?

Com. Know,

I pray you,——

Cor. I'll know no further:

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,

Vagabond exile, flaying; Pent to linger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word;

Nor check my courage for what they can give,

To have 't with saying, Good morrow.

Sic. For that he has

(As much as in him lies) from time to time

Envied⁷ against the people, seeking means

To pluck away their power; as⁸ now at last

Given hostile strokes, and that not⁹ in the presence

Of dread justice, but on the ministers

That do distribute it; In the name o' the people,

And in the power of us the tribunes, we,

Even from this instant, banish him our city;

In peril of precipitation

From off the rock Tarpeian, never more

To enter our Rome gates: I' the people's name,

I say, it shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so, it shall be so; let him away:

He's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common

friends;——

Sic. He's sentenc'd: no more hearing.

Com. Let me speak:

I have been consul, and can show from¹⁰ Rome,

Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love

My country's good, with a respect more tender,

More holy, and profound, than mine own life,

My dear wife's estimate,¹¹ her womb's increase,

And treasure of my loins; then if I would

Speak that——

Sic. We know your drift: Speak what!

Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is ba-nish'd,

As enemy to the people, and his country.

It shall be so.

⁷ Showed hatred.

⁸ As may here be a misprint for has, or and; or it may signify as well as; such elliptical modes of expression are not uncommon in Shakspeare. We have as apparently for as soon as in All's Well that Ends Well.

⁹ Not is here again used for not only. It is thus used in the New Testament, 1 Thess. iv. 8—

'He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God.'

¹⁰ I.e. received in her service, or on her account
Theobald substituted for, and supported his emendation by these passages:—

'To banish him that struck more blows for Rome.'

Again:—

'Good man! the wounds that he does bear for Rome'

¹¹ 'I love my country beyond the rate at which I value my dear wife,' &c.

Cit. It shall be so, it shall be so.

Cor. You common cry¹ of curs! whose breath I hate

As reek o'the rotten fens,² whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;³
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts:
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till, at length,
Your ignorance, (which finds not, till it feels,) Making but reservation of yourselves,⁴ (Still your own foes,) deliver you, as most Abated⁵ captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt CORIOLANUS, COMINIUS, MENE-
NIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

Æd. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!

Cit. Our enemy's banish'd! he is gone! Hoo!
hoo!

[The People shout, and throw up their Caps.

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city.

Cit. Come, come, let us see him out at gates:
come:—

The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA,
MENENIUS, COMINIUS, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell:—
the best⁶

With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd
To say, extremity⁷ was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear;
That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded,
craves

A noble cunning:⁸ you were us'd to load me
With precepts, that would make invincible
The heart that conn'd them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I prythee, woman,—

Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish!

¹ Cry here signifies a pack. So in a subsequent scene:

'— You have made good work,
You and your cry.'

A cry of hounds was the old term for a pack.

² So in the Tempest:—

'Seb. As if it had lungs, and rotted ones.

Ant. Or, as 'twere, perfum'd by a fen.'

³ 'When it was cast in Diogenes' teeth that the Sino-penetes had banished him Pontus; yea, said he, I them.' We have the same thought in King Richard
II.:

'Think not the king did banish thee,
But thou the king.'

⁴ Thus in the old copy. Malone, following Opell's mending, changed this line to—

'Making not reservation of yourselves.' &c.

and attempted to defend his reading by a wordy argument, which shows that he did not understand the passage. Dr. Johnson's explanation of the text is as correct as his subsequent remark upon it is judicious. Coriolanus
'precat upon the base plebeians that they may still retain the power of banishing their defenders, till their undiscerning folly, which can foresee no consequences, leave none in the city but themselves; so that for want of those capable of conducting their defence, they may fall an easy prey to some nation who may conquer them

Cor.

What, what, what!

I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius,
Droop not; adieu:—Farewell, my wife! my mother!
I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime general,
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hard'ning spectacles; tell these sad women,
'Tis fond⁹ to wait inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them.—My mother, you wot
well,

My hazards still have been your solace; and Believe't not lightly, (though I go alone
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen,) your son

Will, or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous¹⁰ baits and practice.

Vol.

My first¹¹ son,

Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee a while: Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure¹² to each chance
That starts i'the way before thee.

Cor.

O the gods!

Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us,
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needer.

Cor.

Fare ye well;—

Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full
Of the wars' surfeits, to go rove with one
That's yet unbruised: bring me but out at gate.—
Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch,¹³ when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men.

That's worthily

As any ear can hear. Come, let's not weep.—
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
I'd with thee every foot.

Cor.

Give me thy hand:—

Com.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Street near the Gate.

Enter SICIPIUS, BRUTUS, and an Ædile.

Sic. Bid them all home: he's gone, and we'll no further.—

without a struggle. If we were to read as Malone would have us—

'Making not reservation of yourselves,' it would imply that the people banished themselves, after having banished their defenders.

⁵ Abated, is overthrown, depressed. To abate castles and houses, &c. is to overthrow them. See Blount's Glossography, in voce. To abate the courage of a mar was to depress or diminish it.

⁶ Horace, speaking of the Roman mob, says:—

'Bellua multorum est capitum.'

⁷ This is the reading of the second folio; the first folio reads, extremities was, &c.

⁸ 'When fortune strikes her hardest blows, to be wounded, and yet continue calm, requires a noble wisdom.' Cunning is often used in this sense by Shakspeare. Johnson reprehends Warburton for misinterpreting the poet's words, and has himself mistaken the meaning of this.

⁹ Foolish.

¹⁰ Cautelous here means insidious.

¹¹ I. e. noblest.

¹² Exposure; for which it is probably a typographical error, as we have no other instance of the word expos-ture.

¹³ I. e. of true metal. The metaphor from the touchstone for trying metals, is common in Shakspeare

The nobility are vex'd, who, we see have sided
In his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shown our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a doing.

Sic. Bid them home :
Say, their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dismiss them home.
[Exit Ædile.]

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and MENENIUS.

Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.
Bru. Why?

Sic. They say, she's mad.

Bru. They have ta'en note of us :

Keep on your way.

Vol. O, you're well met : The hoarded plague
o' the gods
Requite your love !

Men. Peace, peace ; be not so loud.

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear,—

Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone !

Vir. You shall stay too : [To Sic.] I would, I had the power
To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind ?

Vol. Ay, fool ; is that a shame ?—Note but this fool.—

Was not a man my father ? Hadst thou foxship ?
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words ?

Sic. O blessed heavens !

Vol. More noble blows, than ever thou wise words ;

And for Rome's good.—I'll tell thee what :—yet go :—

Nay, but thou shalt stay too :—I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then ?

Vir. What then ?

He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards, and all.—

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome !

Men. Come, come, peace.

Sic. I would he had continu'd to his country,
As he began ; and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made.

Bru. I would he had.

Vol. I would he had ! 'Twas you incens'd the rabble :

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Bru. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone :

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear
this :

As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The meanest house in Rome : so far, my son,
(This lady's husband here, this, do you see,)
Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Bru. Well, well, we'll leave you.

Sic. Why stay we to be baited
With one that wants her wits ?

Vol. Take my prayers with you.—
I would the gods had nothing else to do,

[Exeunt Tribunes.]

But to confirm my curses ! Could I meet them
But once a day, it would unclog my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

Men. You have told them home,
And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup
with me ?

Vol. Anger's my meat ; I sup upon myself,
And so shall starve with feeling.—Come, let's go
Leave this faint pulsing, and lament as I do,
In anger, Juno-like. Come, come, come.

Men. Fye, fye, fye ! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Highway between Rome and An-tium. Enter a Roman and a Volce meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir, and you know me :
your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vol. It is so, sir : truly I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman ; and my services are, as you are, against them : know you me yet ?

Vol. Nicanor ? No.

Rom. The same, sir.

Vol. You had more beard, when I last saw you ;
but your favour is well appay'd³ by your tongue.
What's the news in Rome ? I have a note from the Volcian state, to find you out there : You have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrection : the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vol. Hath been ! Is it ended then ? Our state thinks not so ; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again. For the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe apness, to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus banished ?

Rom. Banished, sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence.
Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you : You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome ; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you ?

Vol. A most royal one : the centurions, and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment,⁴ and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vol. You take my part from me, sir ; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.]

mon in our elder language than well appaid, i. e. satisfied, contented. The Volcian means to say, 'Your countenance is altered, but your voice perfectly satisfies me.'

'They by thy help : but sin ne'er gives a fee,
He grads comes ; and thou art well appay'd,
As well to hear as grant what he hath said.'

Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece

'Glad in his heart, and inly well appay'd,
That to his court so great a lord was brought.'

Fairfax Tasso, ix. 5.

4 i. e. taken into pay.

1 Mankind is fierce, ferocious. That it had this sensa is evident, because we sometimes find it applied to a stubborn or ferocious animal. Volumnia chooses to understand it as meaning a human creature.

2 i. e. mean cunning.

3 The old copy reads, 'Your favour is well appeared by your tongue.' For the emendation in the text I am answerable. Warburton proposed appealed ; Johnson, appeared ; Steevens, approved ; and Malone thought the old reading might be right. No phrase is more com-

SCENE IV. Antium. Before Aufidius's House.

Enter CORIOLANUS, in mean Apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium: City,
'Tis I that made thy widows; many an heir
Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars
Have I heard groan, and drop: then know me not;
Lest that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,

Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle slay me.—Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will,
Where great Aufidius lies: Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state,
At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, 'beseech you?

Cit. This, here, before you.

Cor. Thank you sir, farewell.

[Exit Citizen.]

O, world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose beds, whose meal, and exercise
Are still together, who twin, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity; so, fellest foes, Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep

To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear
friends,

And interjoin their issues. So with me:—
My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon
This enemy town.—I'll enter: if he slay me,
He does fair justice; if he give me way,
I'll do his country service. [Exit.]

SCENE V. The same. A Hall in Aufidius's House. Music within. Enter a Servant.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here!
I tunk our fellows are asleep. [Exit.]

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Cotsus! my master calls for him.
Cotsus! [Exit.]

Enter CORIOLANUS.

Cor. A goodly house: the feast smells well:
but I
Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you: Pray, go to the door.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment,
In being Coriolanus.²

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away? Get you away.

Cor. Now thou art troublesome.

2 Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servant. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow's this?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o' the house: Pr'ythee, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow?
Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your hearth.

3 Serv. What are you?

Cor. A gentleman.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you; pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function, go!

And batten³ on cold bits. [Pushes him away.]

3 Serv. What, will you not? Pr'ythee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

2 Serv. And I shall. [Exit.]

3 Serv. Where dwellest thou?

Cor. Under the canopy.

3 Serv. Under the canopy?

Cor. Ay.

3 Serv. Where's that?

Cor. I⁴ the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. I⁴ the city of kites and crows?—What an ass it is!—Then thou dwellest with daws too?

Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

3 Serv. How, sir! Do you meddle with my master?

Cor. Ay; 'tis an honest service than to meddle with thy mistress:

Thou prat'st, and prat'st; serve with thy trencher,
hence! [Beats him away.]

Enter AUFIDIUS and the second Servant.

Auf. Where is this fellow?

2 Serv. Here, sir; I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auf. Whence comest thou? what wouldst thou?
Thy name?

Why speak'st not? Speak, man: What's thy
name?

Cor. If, Tullus, [Unmuffling.]

Not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not Think me the man I am, necessity

Commands me name myself.

Auf. What is thy name
[Servants retire.]

Cor. A name unmusical to the Volcians' ears,
And harsh in sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn,
Thou show'st a noble vessel: What's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown: Know'st thou me yet?

Auf. I know thee not:—Thy name?

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done
To thee particularly, and to all the Volces,

Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may
My surname, Coriolanus: The painful service,

The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
Shed for my thankless country, are required.

But with that surname; a good memory,⁴
And witness of the malice and displeasure

Which thou should'st bear me: only that name remains;

The cruelty and envy of the people,
Permitted by our dastard nobles, who

Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest;
And suffer'd me by the voice of slaves to be

Whoop'd out of Rome. Now, this extremity
Hath brought me to thy hearth; Not out of hope

Mistake me not, to save my life; for if
I had fear'd death, of all the men i⁵ the world

I would have voided thee: but in mere spite,
To be full quit of those my banishers,

Stand I before thee here. Then if thou hast
A heart of wreak⁶ in thee, that will revenge

Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those maims
Of shame⁶ seen through thy country, speed thee

straight,

And make my misery serve thy turn: so use it,

³ Feed.

⁴ Memory for memorial.

⁵ Wreak is an old term for revenge. So in Titus Andronicus:

'Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude.'

⁶ i. e. disgraceful diminutions of territory

² i. e. in having derived that surname from the sack of Corioli.

That my revengeful services may prove
As benefits to thee; for I will fight Against my canker'd country with the spleen
Of all the under fiends. But if so be Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more fortunes
Thou art tir'd, then, in a word, I also am
Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice;
Which not to cut, would show thee but a fool;
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast,
And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Auf. O, Marcius, Marcius,
Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my
heart

A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter
Should from yon cloud speak divine things, and say,
'Tis true; I'd not believe them more than thee,
All noble Marcius.—O, let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters! Here I clip
The anvil of my sword;¹ and do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
I love the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Bestride thy threshold.² Why, thou Mars! I tell thee,

We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose mine arm for't: Thou hast beat me out³
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dream'd of encounters 'twixt myself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Mar-
cius,

Had we no other quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-beat.⁴ O, come, go in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepar'd against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods.

Auf. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have

The leading of thine own revenges, take
The one half of my commission; and set down,—
As best thou art experienced, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways:

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But, come in:
Let me commend thee first to those, that shall Say, yea, to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand! Most welcome! [Exeunt Cor. and Auf.]

1 Serv. [Advancing.] Here's a strange alteration!

1 To clip is to embrace. He calls Coriolanus the anvil of his sword, because he had formerly laid as heavy blows on him as a smith strikes on his anvil.
Thus in Hamlet:

'And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall

On Mars's armour —

With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword

Now falls on Priam.'

2 Shakespeare was unaware that a Roman bride, on her entry into her husband's house, was prohibited from bestriding his threshold; and that, lest she should even touch it, she was always lifted over it. Thus Lucan, lib.
ii. 359:—

'Tralata vetuit contingere limine planta.'

Stevens.

3 I. e. fully, completely

2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have stricken him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me, his clothes made a false report of him.

1 Serv. What an arm he has! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: He had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

1 Serv. He had so: looking as it were,—— 'Would I were hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn: He is simply the rarest man i' the world.

1 Serv. I think, he is: but a greater soldier than he, you wot one.

2 Serv. Who? my master?

1 Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Serv. Worth six of him.

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. 'Faith, look you, one cannot tell bow to say that: for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third Servant.

3 Serv. O, slaves, I can tell you news; news,
you rascals.

1 & 2 Serv. What, what, what? let's partake.

3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations;
I had as lieve be a condemned man.

1 & 2 Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

3 Serv. Why, here's he that was wont to thwack our general,—Caius Marcius.

1 Serv. Why do you say, thwack our general?

3 Serv. I do not say, thwack our general; but he was always good enough for him.

2 Serv. Come, we are fellows, and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth on't: before Coriol, he scotched him and notched him like a carbonado.

2 Serv. An he had been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him too.

1 Serv. But, more of thy news?

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o' the table: no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him: Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with his hand,⁵ and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i' the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday; for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table.
He'll go, he says, and sowle⁶ the porter of Rome gates by the ears: He will mow down all before him, and leave his passage polled.⁷

2 Serv. And he's as like to do't, as any man I can imagine.

3 Serv. Do't? he will do't: For, look you, sir,
he has as many friends as enemies: which friends,
sir, (as it were,) durst not, (look you, sir,) show themselves, (as we term it,) his friends, whilst he's in directitude.

1 Serv. Directitude! what's that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood,⁸ they will out of their burrows, like conies after rain, and revel all with
him.

4 I think with Steevens that we should read, o'er bear instead of o'er-beat. Thus in Othello:—

'Is of such flood-gate and o'er-bearing nature.'

5 'Considers the touch of his hand as holy; clasps it with the same reverence as a lover would clasp the hand of his mistress.'

6 To sowle is to pull by the ears. It is still provincially in use for pulling, dragging, or lugging.

7 I. e. bared, cleared. To poll is to crop close, to shear; and has all the figurative meanings of tondeo in Latin. To pill and poll was to plunder and strip.

8 See Act i. Sc. 1.

1 Serv. But when goes this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon: 'tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing,¹ but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I; it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it's sprightly, waking, audible, and full of vent.² Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy; muffled,³ deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bastard children, than war's a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'Tis so: and as wars, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher; so it cannot be denied, out peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volcians. They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Rome. A public Place. Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;

His remedies are tame i' the present peace And quietness o' the people, which before Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends Blush, that the world goes well; who rather had, Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold Dissentious numbers pestering streets, than see Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions friendly.

Enter MENENIUS.

Bru. We stood to't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind Of late,—Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus, sir, is not much miss'd, But with his friends: the commonwealth doth stand; And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much better, if He could have temporiz'd.

Sic. Where is he, hear you?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his wife Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good e'en, our neighbours.

Bru. Good e'en to you all, good e'en to you all.

1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees, Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live, and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours; we wish'd Coriolanus Had lov'd you as we did.

Cit. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Citizens.]

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time, Than when these fellows ran about the streets, Crying, Confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent, O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking, Self-loving,—

1 We should probably read, 'This peace is good for nothing but,' &c.

2 I. e. full of rumour, full of materials for discourse.

3 Muffled is softened, as wine when it is burnt and sweetened.

4 I. e. he aimed at absolute power, he wanted to sway the state alone, without the participation of the tribunes.

5 We should surely read, 'I have found it so;' without this word the construction of the sentence is imperfect.

6 I. e. stood up in its defence. 'Had the expression

Sic. And affecting one sole throne, Without assistance.⁴

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation, If he had gone forth consul, found it so.⁵

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome Sits safe and still without him.

Enter Ædile.

Æd. Worthy tribunes, There is a slave, whom we have put in prison, Reports,—the Volces with two several powers Are enter'd in the Roman territories; And with the deepest malice of the war Destroy what lies before them.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius, Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment, Thrusts forth his horns again into the world: Which were inshell'd, when Marcius stood⁶ for Rome And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd. It cannot be, The Volces dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be! We have record, that very well it can; And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason⁷ with the fellow, Before you punish him, where he heard this; Lest you should chance to whip your information, And beat the messenger who bids beware Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me:

I know, this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles, in great earnestness, are going All to the senate-house: some news is come, That turns⁸ their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave;— Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising! Nothing but his report!

Mess. Yes, worthy sir, The slave's report is seconded; and more, More fearful is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths, (How probable, I do not know,) that Marcius, Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome; And vows revenge as spacious, as between The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish Good Marcius home again.

Sic. The very trick on't.

Men. This is unlikely; He and Aufidius can no more atone,⁹ Than violentest contrariety.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. You are sent for to the Senate: A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius, Associated with Aufidius, rages Upon our territories; and have already, O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and took What lay before them.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. O, you have made good work!

Men. What news? what news?

Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters, and

To melt the city leads upon your pates;

To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses;—

In the text (says Steevens) been met with in a learned author, it might have passed for a Latinism:—

'Summis stantem pro turribus Idam.'

Æneid, ix. 575.

7 To reason with is to talk with.

8 Changes.

9 I. e. atone, accord, agree. Atone and atonement are many times used by Shakespeare in this sense.

Men. What's the news? what's the news?
Com. Your temples burned in their cement; and Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
 Into an augre's bore.¹

Men. Pray now, your news?—
 You have made fair work, I fear me:—Pray, your news?

If Marcius should be join'd with Volcians,——

Com. If! He is their god; he leads them like a thing
 Made by some other deity than nature,
 That shapes man better: and they follow him,
 Against us brats, with no less confidence,
 Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
 Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work,
 You, and your apron men;² you that stood so much
 Upon the voice of occupation, and
 The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake
 Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules
 Did shake down mellow fruit:³ You have made fair work!

Bru. But is this true, sir?

Com. Ay; and you'll look pale
 Before you find it other. All the regions
 Do smilingly revolt,⁴ and, who resist,
 Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
 And perish constant fools. Who is 't can blame
 him?

Your enemies, and his, find something in him.

Men. We are all undone, unless

The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?
 The tribunes cannot do 't for shame; the people
 Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf
 Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, Be good to Rome, they charg'd him⁵ even

As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
 And therein show'd like enemies.

Men. 'Tis true:
 If he were putting to my house the brand
 That should consume it, I have not the face
 To say, Beseech you, cease.—You have made fair
 hands,

You, and your crafts! you have crafted fair!

Com. You have brought
 A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
 So incapable of help.

Tri. Say not we brought it.

Men. How! Was it we? We lov'd him; but,
 like beasts,

And cowardly nobles, gave way to your clusters,
 Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But, I fear
 They'll roar him in again.⁶ Tullus Aufidius,
 The second name of men, obeys his points
 As if he were his officer:—Desperation
 Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
 That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troop of Citizens.

Men. Here come the clusters.—
 And is Aufidius with him?—You are they
 That made the air unwholesome, when you cast
 Your stinking, greasy caps, in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
 And not a hair upon a soldier's head,
 Which will not prove a whip: as many cockcombs,
 As you threw caps up, will he tumble down,

—— our fate hid in an augre-hole."

² i.e. mechanics. See Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2.
 Horace uses artes for artifices. In a future passage he calls them crafts. To smell of garlic was a brand of vulgarity; as to smell of leeks was no less so among the Roman people:—

—— quis tecum scitille porrum
 Sutor, et elixi vervecis labra comedit?"

³ A ludicrous allusion to the apples of the Hesperides.

⁴ Revolt with pleasure.

And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter;
 If he could burn us all into one coal,
 We have deserv'd it.

Cit. Faith, we hear fearful news.

1 Cit. For mine own part,
 When I said, banish him, I said, 'twas pity.

2 Cit. And so did I.
3 Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us; That we did, we did for the best:
 and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. You are goodly things, you voices!

Men. You have made
 Good work, you and your cry!—Shall us to the Capitol?

Com. O, ay; what else?

[Exeunt Com. and Men.]

Sic. Go, masters, get you home, be not dismay'd,
 These are a side, that would be glad to have
 This true, which they so seem to fear. Go home,
 And show no sign of fear.

1 Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said, we were i' the wrong, when we banished him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home.

[Exeunt Citizens.]

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol:—Would, half my wealth

Would buy this for a lie!

Sic. Pray, let us go.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. A Camp; at a small distance from Rome. Enter Aufidius, and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lieu. I do not know what witchcraft's in him; but
 Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat,
 Their talk at table, and their thanks at end,
 And you are darken'd in this action, sir,
 Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now,
 Unless, by using means, I lame the foot
 Of our design. He bears himself more proudlier
 Even to my person, than I thought he would,
 When first I did embrace him: Yet his nature
 In that's no changeling; and I must excuse
 What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wish, sir,
 (I mean for your particular,) you had not
 Join'd in commission with him; but either
 Had borne the action of yourself, or else
 To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou sure,
 When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems,
 And so he thinks, and is no less apparent
 To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,
 And shows good husbandry for the Volcian state;
 Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
 As draw his sword: yet he hath left undone
 That, which shall break his neck, or hazard mine,
 Whene'er we come to our account.

Lieu. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry
 Rome?

Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits down;
 And the nobility of Rome are his:
 The senators, and patricians, love him too:
 The tribunes are no soldiers: and their people
 Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty
 To expel him thence. I think, he'll be to Rome,
 As is the osprey⁶ to the fish who takes it

⁵ 'They charg'd, and therein show'd,' has here the force of 'they would charge, and therein show.'

⁶ 'As they hooted' at his departure, they will roar at his return; as he went out with scoffs, he will come back with lamentations.'

⁷ Pack, alluding to a pack of hounds.

⁸ The following account of the osprey shows the just ness and beauty of this simile:—

'I will provide thee with a princely osprey,
 That as she lieth over fish in pools,

By sovereignty of nature. First he was
A noble servant to them; but he could not
Carry his honours even: whether 'twas pride,
Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man: whether defect of judgment,
To fail in the disposing of those chances
Which he was lord of; or whether nature,
Not to be other than one thing, not moving
From the casque to the cushion,¹ but commanding peace

Even with the same austerity and garb
As he controll'd the war: but, one of these
(As he hath spices of them all, not all,²
For I dare so far free him,) made him fear'd,
So hated, and so banish'd: But he has a merit,
To choke it in the utterance.³ So our virtues
Lie in the interpretation of the time:
And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a hair
To extol what it hath done.⁴
One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Rights by rights fouler,⁵ strengths by strengths do fail.

Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine,
Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou mine.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V

SCENE I. Rome. A public Place. Enter MENENIUS, COMINIUS, SICINIUS, BRUTUS, and others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear, what he hath said,

Which was sometime his general; who lov'd him
In a most dear particular. He call'd me, father:
But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him,
A mile before his tent fall down, and kneel
The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd⁶
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:
I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to: forbad all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name⁷ the fire
Of burning Rome.

Men. Why so: you have made good work:
A pair of tribunes that have rack'd⁸ for Rome,
To make coals cheap: A noble memory!⁹

Com. I minded him, how royal 'twas to pardon
When it was less expected: He replied,

The fish shall turn their glittering bellies up,
And thou shalt take thy liberal choice of all.¹⁰

Drayton mentions the same fascinating power of the osprey in Polyolbion, Song xxv. The bird is described in Pennant's British Zoology.

1 Aufidius assigns three probable reasons for the miscarriage of Coriolanus; pride, which easily follows an uninterrupted train of success; unskillfulness to regulate the consequences of his own victories; a stubborn uniformity of nature, which could not make the proper transition from the casque to the cushion, or chair of civil authority; but acted with the same despotism in peace as in war.—Johnson.

2 Not all in their full extent. So in the Winter's Tale :—

'Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it.'

3 But such is his merit as ought to choke the utterance of his faults.

4 ——— So our virtue

Lie in the interpretation of the time;
And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair
To extol what it hath done.

Thus the old copy. Well Stevens might exclaim that the passage and the comments upon it were equally intelligible. The whole speech is very incorrectly printed in the folio. Thus we have 'twas for 'twas; defect for defect; virtue for virtues; and, evidently, chair for hair. What is the meaning of—

'Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair?'

It was a bare⁹ petition of a state
To one whom they had punish'd.

Men. Could he say less?

Very well:

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard
For his private friends: His answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome, musty chaff: He said, 'twas folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt,
And still to nose the offence.

Men. For one poor grain
Or two? I am one of those; his mother, wife,
His child, and this brave fellow too, we are the grains:

You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt
Above the moon: We must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: If you refuse your aid
In this so never-heeded help, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. But, sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue,
More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I'll not meddle.

Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?

Bru. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome, towards Marcus.

Men. Well, and say that Marcus
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unheard; what then?—

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot

With his unkindness? Say't be so?

Sic. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake it:
I think, he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well; he had not din'd:¹⁰
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We pout upon the morning, are unapt

To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our blood
With wine and feeding,¹¹ we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch
him

Till he be dieted to my request,
And then I'll set upon him.

Bru. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge
Of my success. [Exit.]

A hair has some propriety, as used for a thing almost invisible. As in The Tempest :—

'—— not a hair perish'd.'

I take the meaning of the passage to be, 'So our virtues lie at the mercy of the time's interpretation, and power, which esteems itself while living so highly, hath not when defunct the least particle of praise allotted to it.'

5 'Rights by rights fouler, strengths by strengths do fail.'

Malone reads founder, with a worthy but unsatisfactory argument in favour of his reading. I could wish to read, 'Rights by rights foiled,' &c. an easy and obvious emendation. Stevens has given the following explanation of the passage :— 'What is already right, and is received as such, becomes less clear when supported by supernumerary proof.'

6 i. e. condescended unwillingly, with reserve, coldness.

7 Harassed by exactions.

8 Memorial.

9 Bare may mean palpable, evident; but I think we should read base.

10 'This observation is not only from nature, and finely expressed, but admirably befits the mouth of one who, in the beginning of the play, had told us that he loved convivial doings.'—Warburton.

11 The poet had the discipline of modern Rome in his thoughts; by the discipline of whose church priests are forbid to break their fast before the celebration of mass, which must take place after sun-rise, and before midday.

Com. He'll never hear him.

Sic. Not?

Com. I tell you he does sit in gold;¹ his eye
Red as 'twould burn Rome; and his injury
The gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said, Rise; dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand: What he would do,
He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
Bound with an oath, to yield to his conditions:²
So, that all hope is vain,
Unless his noble mother, and his wife;³
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. An advanced Post of the Volcian Camp before Rome. The Guard at their Stations. Enter to them, MENENIUS.

1 G. Stay: Whence are you?

2 G. Stand, and go back.

Men. You guard like men; 'tis well: But, by your leave,
I am an officer of state, and come
To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

1 G. You may not pass, you must return: our general

Will no more hear from thence.

2 G. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before

You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks,⁴
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.

1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover:⁵ I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply, amplified;
For I have ever verifi'd⁶ my friends,
(Of whom he's chief,) with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle⁷ ground,
I have tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leasing:⁸ Therefore, fellow,

I must have leave to pass.

1 G. 'Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf, as you have uttered words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie, as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary⁹ on the part of your general.

1 So in North's Plutarch:—'He was set in his chair of state, with a marvellous and unspeakable majesty.' The idea expressed by Cominius occurs in the eighth Iliad. Pope was perhaps indebted to Shakspeare in the translation of the passage:—

'The eternal Thunderer sat throned in gold.'

2 None of the explanations or proposed emendations of this passage satisfies me. Perhaps we might read, 'to yield to no conditions.' The sense of the passage would then be, 'What he would do he sent in writing after me; the things he would not do, he bound himself with an oath to yield to no conditions that might be proposed.' It afterwards appears what these were:—

'The things I have forsworn to grant may never

Be held by you denials. Do not bid me

Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate

Again with Rome's mechanics.'

3 To satisfy modern notions of construction, this line must be read as if written:—

'Unless in his noble mother and his wife.'

4 Lots to blanks is chances to nothing. Equivalent to another phrase in King Richard III.:—

'All the world to nothing.'

5 i. e. friend.

6 Verified must here be used for displayed or testified,

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, (as you say, you have,) I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is.

1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy¹⁰ groans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decayed dotant¹¹ as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemned, our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean, thy general.

1 G. My general cares not for you. Back, I say go, lest I let forth your half pint of blood;—back,—that's the utmost of your having:—back.

Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow,——

Enter CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.

Cor. What's the matter?

Men. Now, you companion, I'll say an errand for you; you shall know now that I am in estimation; you shall perceive that a Jack¹² guardant can not office me from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou stand'st not i' the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueller in suffering; behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee.—The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O, my son! my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured, none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs; and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here; this, who like a block, hath denied my access to thee.

Cor. Away!

Men. How! away?

Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs

Are servanted to others: Though I owe
My revenge properly, my remission lies
In Volcian breasts.¹³ That we have been familiar; Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much.—Therefore, be gone.

if it be not a corruption of the text for notified, or some other word. Mr. Edwards proposed to read varnished; which, as it was anciently written varnished, might easily be mistaken for verified. Shakspeare, however, seems to have made Dogberry use verified for testified; but as he is never orthodox in his meaning, it may be no evidence:—'They have verified unjust things.' Much Ado about Nothing, Act v. Sc. 1.

7 Subtle here means smooth, level. 'Tityus's breast is counted the subtlest bowling ground in all Tartary.' Ben Jonson's Clorinda, vol. viii. p. 105.

8 i. e. have almost given the lie such a sanction as to render it current.

9 Factionary is adherent, partisan. See Shakspeare in v. Faction. Thus in King Henry VI. Part ii.:—

'Her faction will be full as strong as ours.'

10 i. e. slight, inconsiderable. So in King Henry VI

Part ii. Act v. Sc. 2:—

'—these faults are easy, quickly answer'd.'

11 Dotard.

12 Equivalent to Jack in office, one who is proud of his petty consequence.

13 Though I have a peculiar right in revenge, in the power of forgiveness the Volcians are joined;

Mine ears against your suits are stronger, than Your gates against my force. Yet, for I lov'd
thee,
Take this along; I writ it for thy sake,

[Gives a Letter.

And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius,
I will not hear thee speak.—This man, Aufidius,
Was my belov'd in Rome; yet thou behold'st—
Auf You keep a constant temper.

[Exeunt COR. and AUF.

1 G. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?

2 G. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power: You know the way home again.

1 G. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back?

2 G. What cause do you think, I have to swoon?
Men. I neither care for the world, nor your general: for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, you are so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself, fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age!
I say to you, as I was said to, away. [Exit.

1 G. A noble fellow, I warrant him.

2 G. The worthy fellow is our general: He is the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The Tent of Coriolanus. Enter
CORIOLANUS, AUFIDIUS, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow

Set down our host.—My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volcan lords, how plainly
I have borne this business.

Auf. Only their ends
You have respected; stopp'd your ears against
The general suit of Rome; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him: for whose old love, I have (Though I show'd sourly to him,) once more offer'd

The first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only,
That thought he could do more; a very little
I have yielded to: Fresh embassies, and suits,
Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
Will I lend ear to.—Ha! what shout is this?

[Shout within.

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the same time 'tis made? I will not.

Enter, in mourning habits, VIRGILIA, VOLUMNIA, leading young MARCIUS, VALERIA, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand

1 i. e. cause, or because.

2 i. e. by his own hands.

3 How plainly is how openly, how remotely from artifice or concealment.

4 'Virgilia makes a voluntary misinterpretation of her husband's words. He says, "These eyes are not the same," meaning that he saw things with other eyes, or other dispositions. She lays hold on the word eyes, to turn his attention on their present appearance.'—
Johnson.

5 'As an imperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put beside his part.'

Shakespeare's Twenty-third Sonnet.

6 Juno, the guardian of marriage, and consequently the avenger of connubial perfidy.

7 The hungry beach is the sterile beach; hungry soil, and hungry gravel, are common phrases. If it be necessary to seek a more recondite meaning, the shore hungry, or eager for shipwrecks, littus atavum, will serve.

8 Though the scheme to solicit Coriolanus was originally proposed by Valeria, Plutarch has allotted her no address when she appears with his wife and mother on this occasion. The poet has followed him. Some lady of the name of Valeria was one of the great ex-

The grand child to her blood. But, out, affection!
All bond and privilege of nature, break!
Let it be virtuous, to be obstinate.—
What is that curt'sy worth, or those doves' eyes,
Which can make gods forsworn?—I melt, and am
not

Of stronger earth than others.—My mother bows;
As if Olympus to a molehill should
In supplication nod: and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which Great nature cries, Deny not.—Let the Volces Plough Rome, and harrow Italy; I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand,
As if a man was author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband!

Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow, that delivers us thus chang'd,
Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out,
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say,
For that, Forgive our Romans.—O, a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. You gods! I prate,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted: Sink, my knee, to the earth; [Kneels.

Of the deep duty more impression show
Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up bless'd!
Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint,
I kneel before thee; and unproperly Show duty, as mistaken all the while
Between the child and parent. [Kneels.

Cor. What is this?
Your knees to me? to your corrected son?
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun;
Murdering impossibility to make
What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior;
I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle,
That's curd'd by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple: Dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which by the interpretation of full time
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou may'st prove

The shame invulnerable, and stick to the war
Like a great sear-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

amples of chastity held out by the writers of the middle age. The following beautiful lines, from Shirley's Gentleman of Venice, in praise of a lady's chastity, deserve to be cited:—

—thou art chaste

As the white down of heaven, whose feathers play
Upon the wings of the cold winter's gale,
Trembling with fear to touch th' impurer earth.

9 This is inserted with great decorum. Jupiter was the tutelary god of Rome.

10 A flaw is a violent blast or sudden gust of wind.
Carew thus describes it, in his Survey of Cornwall:—

'One kind of these storms they call a flaw, or flough, which is a mighty gale of wind passing suddenly to the shore, and working strong effects upon whatsoever it encounters in its way.' The word is not obsolete, as stated in Todd's Johnson: it will be found in the interesting Journal of Captain Hall, 1824, vol. i. p. 4, and in Captain Lyon's Narrative of his attempt to reach Repulse Bay, 1824. There is a corresponding thought in Shakespeare's hundred and sixteenth sonnet:—

'O no! it is an ever-fixed mark,

That looks on tempests, and is never shaken.

Vol. Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy.

Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself, Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace : Or, if you'd ask, remember this before ; The things, I have forsworn to grant, may never Be held by you denials. Do not bid me Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate Again with Rome's mechanics :—Tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural : Desire not To allay my rages and revenges, with Your colder reasons.

Vol. O, no more, no more ! You have said, you will not grant us any thing ; For we have nothing else to ask, but that Which you deny already : Yet we will ask ; That, if you fail in our request, the blame May hang upon your hardness : therefore hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volces, mark ; for we'll Hear nought from Rome in private.—Your request ?

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment,

And state of bodies would bewray what life We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself, How more unfortunate than all living women Are we come hither : since that thy sight, which should

Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,

Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow ;

Making the mother, wife, and child, to see The son, the husband, and the father, tearing His country's bowels out. And to poor we, Thine enmity's most capital : thou barr'st us Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort That all but we enjoy : For how can we, Alas ! how can we for our country pray,

Whereto we are bound ; together with thy victory, Whereto we are bound ? Alack ! or we must lose The country, our dear nurse ; or else thy person, Our comfort in the country. We must find An evident calamity, though we had Our wish, which side should win ; for either thou Must, as a foreign recreant, be led With manacles through our streets, or else Triumphant tread on thy country's ruin ;

And bear the palm, for having bravely shed Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son, I purpose not to wait on fortune, till These wars determine :² if I cannot persuade thee Rather to show a noble grace to both parts, Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner March to assault thy country, than to tread (Trust to't, thou shalt not,) on thy mother's womb, That brought thee to this world.

Vir. Ay, and on mine, That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name Living to time.

Boy. He shall not tread on me ; I'll run away, till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be, Requires nor child nor woman's face to see. I have sat too long.

Vol. Nay, go not from us thus. If it were so, that our request did tend To save the Romans, thereby to destroy The Volces whom you serve, you might condemn us, As poisonous of your honour : No ; our suit Is, that you reconcile them : while the Volces May say, This mercy we have shew'd ; the Romans, This we receiv'd ; and each in either side Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, Be bless'd

¹ This speech is very closely taken from North's Plutarch, the poet has done little more than throw the very words into blank verse.

² I. e. conclude, end. So in King Henry IV. Part ii. :—
'Tell thy friend sickness have determin'd me.'

³ 'Keeps me in a state of ignominy, talking to no purpose.'

⁴ I. e. does argue for us and our petition.

For making up this peace ! Thou know'st, great son, The end of war's uncertain ; but this certain ; That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit Which thou shalt thereby reap, is such a name, Whose reputation will be dogg'd with curses ; Whose chronicle thus writ,—The man was noble, But with his last attempt he wip'd it out ; Destroy'd his country ; and his name remains To the ensuing age, abhor'd. Speak to me, son : Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour, To imitate the graces of the gods ; To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak ? Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man Still to remember wrongs ?—Daughter, speak you : He cares not for your weeping.—Speak thou, boy : Perhaps, thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons.—There is no man in the world More bound to his mother ; yet here he lets me prate Like one i' the stocks.³ Thou hast never in thy life Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy : When she (poor hen !) fond of no second brood, Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home, Loaden with honour. Say, my request's unjust, And spurn me back : But, if it be not so, Thou art not honest ; and the gods will plague thee, That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away : Down, ladies ; let us shame him with our knees. To his surname Coriolanus' longs more pride Than pity to our prayers. Down ; an end : This is the last ;—So we will home to Rome, And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold us : This boy, that cannot tell what he would have, But kneels, and holds up hands, for fellowship, Does reason our petition⁴ with more strength Than thou hast to deny't.—Come, let us go : This fellow had a Volcian to his mother ; His wife is in Corioli, and his child Like him by chance :—Yet give us our despatch ; I am hush'd until our city be afire, And then I'll speak a little.

Cor. O mother, mother !

[Holding VOLUMINA by the Hands, silent.]

What have you done ? Behold, the heavens do ope, The gods look down, and this unnatural scene They laugh at. O my mother, mother ! O ! You have won a happy victory to Rome : But, for your son,—believe it, O, believe it, Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd, If not most mortal to him. But, let it come :—Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars, I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius, Were you in my stead, say, would you have heard A mother less ? or granted less, Aufidius ?

Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn, you were :

And, sir, it is no little thing, to make Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you'll make, advise me : For my part, I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you ; and pray you Stand to me in this cause.—O, mother ! wife !

Auf. I am glad, thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour

At difference in thee : out of that I'll work Myself a former fortune.⁵

[The Ladies make signs to CORIOLANUS.]

Cor. Ay, by and by ; [To VOLUMINA, VIRGILIA, &c.] But we will drink together ;⁶ and you shall bear A better witness back than words, which we, On like conditions, will have countersail'd. Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve

⁵ 'I will take advantage of this concession to restore myself to my former credit and power.'

⁶ Farmer has suggested that we should perhaps read think. Shakspeare has however introduced drinking as a mark of confederation in King Henry IV. Part ii. :—
'Let's drink together friendly, and embrace.'

The text therefore may be allowed to stand, though at the expense of female delicacy, which, in the present instance, has not been sufficiently consulted.

To have a temple built you :¹ all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Rome. A public Place. Enter
MENENIUS and SICINIUS.

Men. See you yond' coign o' the Capitol : yond' corner-stone ?

Sic. Why, what of that ?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him.
But I say, there is no hope in't ; our throats are sentenced, and stay² upon execution.

Sic. Is't possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man ?

Men. There is differency between a grub, and a butterfly ; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcius is grown from man to dragon ; he has wings ; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me : and he no more remembers his mother now, than an eight year old horse. The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes. When he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading. He is able to pierce a corset with his eye ; talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made³ for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him : There is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a male tiger ; that shall our poor city find : and all this is 'long of you.

Sic. The gods be good unto us !

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banish'd him, we respected not them : and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house ;

The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down ; all swearing, if
The Roman ladies bring not comfort home,
They'll give him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sic. What's the news ?

Mess. Good news, good news :—The ladies have prevail'd,

The Volces are dislodg'd, and Marcius gone :
A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,
No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend,
Art thou certain this is true ? is it most certain ?

Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire :

Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it ?
Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide,⁴
As the recomforted through the gates. Why, hark
you ;

[Trumpets and Hautboys sounded, and Drums beaten, all together. Shouting also within.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,
Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the sun dance. Hark you ! [Shouting again.

Men. This is good news :

I will go meet the ladies. This Volturnia
Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians,
A city full ; of tribunes, such as you,
A sea and land full : You have pray'd well to-day ;
This morning, for ten thousand of your throats
I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy !

[Shouting and Music.

¹ Plutarch informs us that a temple dedicated to the Fortune of the Ladies was built on this occasion by order of the senate.

² I. e. stay but for it. So in Macbeth :—

'Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.'

Sic. First, the gods bless you for your tidings ; next,

Accept my thankfulness.

Mess. Sir, we have all

Great cause to give great thanks.

Sic. They are near the city ?

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sic. We will meet them,
And help the joy, [Going.

Enter the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and People. They pass over the Stage.

1 Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome :
Call all your tribes together, praise the gods,
And make triumphant fires ; strew flowers before
them ;

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius,
Repeat¹ him with the welcome of his mother ;
Cry,—Welcome, ladies, welcome !—

All. Welcome, ladies !

Welcome ! [A Flourish with Drums and Trumpets.
[Exeunt.

SCENE V. Antium. A public Place. Enter TUL-
LUS AUFIDIUS, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here :
Deliver them this paper : having read it,
Bid them repair to the market-place ; where I,
Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse,²
The city ports³ by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping
To purge himself with words : Despatch.

[Exeunt Attendants

Enter Three or Four Conspirators of Aufidius' Faction.

Most welcome !

1 Con. How is it with our general ?

Auf. Even so,

As with a man by his own alms empoison'd,
And with his charity slain.

2 Con. Most noble sir,

If you do hold the same intent wherein
You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you
Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell ;

We must proceed, as we do find the people.

3 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst 'Twixt you there's difference ; but the fall of either
Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it

And my pretext to strike at him admits
A good construction. I raised him, and I pawn'd Mine honour for his truth : Who being so height-
en'd,

He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery,
Seducing so my friends : and, to this end,
He bow'd his nature, never known before
But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3 Con. Sir, his stoutness,
When he did stand for consul, which he lost
By lack of stooping,—

Auf. That I would have spoke of—Being banish'd for't, he came unto my hearth ;

Presented to my knife his throat : I took him ;
Made him joint servant with me ; gave him way
In all his own desires : nay, let him choose
Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,
My best and freshest men ; serv'd his designments
In my own person ; help to reap the fame,
Which he did end all his ; and took some pride
To do myself this wrong : till, at the last,
I seem'd his follower, not partner ; and

3 That is, as one made to resemble Alexander.

4 'As through an arch the violent roaring tide
Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste.'
Rape of Lucrece

5 Recall.

6 I. e. he whom I accuse :—

'I am appointed him to murder you'

The Winter's Tale

7 Ports are gates. See Act I. Sc. 7.

He waged me with his countenance,¹ as if I had been mercenary.

I Con. So he did, my lord:
The army marvell'd at it. And, in the last,
When he had carried Rome; and that we look'd
For no less spoil, than glory, —

Auf. There was it; —
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him.²
At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action; Therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

[Drums and Trumpets sound, with great Shouts of the People.]

1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post,
And had no welcomes home; but he returns,
Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear,

With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Ere he express himself, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd, shall bury
His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more;
Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it,
But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd
What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear it.
What faults he made before the last, I think,
Might have found easy fines: but there to end
Where he was to begin; and give away
The benefit of our levies, answering us
With our own charge; making a treaty, where
There was a yielding; This admits no excuse.

Auf. He approaches, you shall hear him.

Enter CORIOLANUS, with Drums and Colours; a Crowd of Citizens with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know,
That prosperously I have attempted, and
With bloody passage, led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home,

Do more than counterpoise, a full third part,
The charges of the action. We have made peace
With no less honour to the Antiates,
Than shame to the Romans: And we here deliver,
Subscrib'd by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords;
But tell the traitor, in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor! — How now?

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius.

Cor. Marcius!

Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius; Dost thou think

I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name
Coriolanus in Corioli? —

¹ The verb to wage was formerly in general use for to spend, to reward. The meaning is, 'the countenance he gave me was a kind of wages.'

For his defence great store of men I wag'd.

Mirror for Magistrates.

'— I receive thee gladly to my house,
And wage thy stay.'

Heywood's Wise Woman of Hogsdon.

² 'This is the point on which I will attack him with all my energy.'

³ 'Rewarding us with our own expenses, making the cost of the war its recompense.'

You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,
(I say, your city,) to his wife and mother:
Breaking his oath and resolution, like
A twist of rotten silk; never admitting Counsel o' the war; but at his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory:
That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor.

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears, —

Cor.

Auf. No more.⁴

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart
Too great for what contains it. Boy! O, slave! —
Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever
I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave lords,

Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion (Who wears my stripes impress'd on him; that must bear

My beating to his grave,) shall join to thrust
The lie unto him.

1 Lord.

Peace, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volces; men and lads,
Stain all your edges on me. — Boy! False hound!
If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,
That like an eagle in a dove-cote, I
Flutter'd your Volces in Corioli:

Alone I did it. — Boy!

Auf.

Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart,
'Fore your own eyes and ears?

Con. Let him die for't. [Several speak at once.]
Cit. [Speaking promiscuously.] Tear him to pieces, do it presently. He killed my son; — my daughter; — He killed my cousin Marcus; — He killed my father. —

2 Lord. Peace, ho; — no outrage; — peace.

The man is noble, and his fame folds in
This orb o' the earth.⁵ His last offence to us
Shall have judicious⁶ hearing. — Stand, Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Cor.

O, that I had him,
With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe,
To use my lawful sword!

Auf.

Insolent villain!

Con. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

[AUFIDIUS and the Conspirators draw, and kill CORIOLANUS, who falls, and AUFIDIUS stands on him.]

Lords.

Hold, hold, hold, hold.

Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord.

O, Tullus! —

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valour will weep.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him. — Masters all, be quiet;

Put up your swords.

Auf. My lords, when you shall know, (as in this rage,

Provok'd by him, you cannot,) the great danger
Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice
That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours

To call me to your senate, I'll deliver
Myself your loyal servant, or endure

Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord.

Bear from hence his body,
And mourn you for him: let him be regarded

⁴ This must be considered as continuing the former speech of Aufidius; he means to tell Coriolanus that he was 'no more than a boy of tears.'

⁵ 'His fame overspreads the world.'

⁶ 'Perhaps judicious, in the present instance, means judicial; such a hearing as is allowed to criminals in courts of justice.' — Steevens. Steevens is right, it appears from Bullokar's Expositor that the words were convertible: the same meaning is assigned to both, viz. 'belonging to judgment.'

As the most noble corse, that ever herald
Did follow to his urn.¹

2 Lord His own impatience
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.
Let's make the best of it.

Auf. My rage is gone,
And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up:
Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers: I'll be one.—
Beat thou the drum that it speak mournfully:
Trail your steel pikes.—Though in this city he

1 This allusion is to a custom which was most probably unknown to the ancients, but which was observed in the public funerals of English princes, at the conclusion of which a herald proclaims the style of the deceased.

[*Exeunt, bearing the Body of CORIOLANUS
A dead March sounded.*]

THE tragedy of Coriolanus is one of the most amusing of our author's performances. The old man's merriment in Menenius; the lofty lady's dignity in Volumnia; the bridal modesty in Virgilia; the patrician and military haughtiness in Coriolanus; the plebeian malignity and tribunitian insolence in Brutus and Sicinius, make a very pleasing and interesting variety; and the various revolutions of the hero's fortune, fill the mind with anxious curiosity. There is, perhaps, too much bustle in the first Act, and too little in the last.—JOHNSON.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

IT appears from the Appendix to Peck's Memoirs of Oliver Cromwell, &c. p. 14, that a Latin play on this subject has been written: 'Epilogus Cæsari interfecti, quomodo in scenam prodit ea res acta, in Ecclesia Christi, Oxon. Qui epilogus a Magistro Ricardo Eedes, et scriptus, et in proscenio ibidem dictus fuit, A. D. 1592.' Meres, in his Wits' Commonwealth, 1598, enumerates Dr. Eedes among the best tragic writers of that time.

From what Polonius says in Hamlet, it seems probable that there was also an English play on the story before Shakspeare commenced writer for the stage. Stephen Gosson, in his School of Abuse, 1579, mentions a play entitled The History of Cæsar and Pompey.

William Alexander, afterwards earl of Sterline, wrote a tragedy of the story of Julius Cæsar; the death of Cæsar, which is not exhibited, but related to the audience, forms the catastrophe of his piece, which appeared in 1607, when the writer was little acquainted with English writers; it abounds with Scotticisms, which the author corrected in the edition he gave of his works in 1637. There are parallel passages in the two plays, which may have arisen from the two authors drawing from the same source; but there is reason to think the coincidences more than accidental, and that Shakspeare was acquainted with the drama of Lord Sterline. It has been shown in a note on The Tempest, that the celebrated passage ('The cloud-capt towers,' &c.) had its prototype in Darius, another play of the same author.

It should be remembered that Shakspeare has many plays founded on subjects which had been previously treated by others; whereas no proof has hitherto been produced that any contemporary writer ever presumed to new model a story that had already employed the pen of Shakspeare. If the conjecture that Shakspeare was indebted to Lord Sterline be just, his drama must have been produced subsequent to 1607, or at latest in that year; which is the date ascribed to it, upon these grounds, by Malone.

Upton has remarked that the real duration of time in Julius Cæsar is as follows:—About the middle of February, A. U. C. 709, a frantic festival sacred to Pan, and called Lupercalia, was held in honour of Cæsar, when the regal crown was offered to him by Antony. On the 15th of March in the same year, he was slain. November 27th, A. U. C. 710, the triumphs met at a small island, formed by the river Rhenus near Bononia, and there adjusted their cruel proscription. A. U. C. 711, Brutus and Cassius were defeated near Philippi.

Gildon long ago remarked that Brutus was the true hero of this tragedy, and not Cæsar; Schlegel makes the same observation: the poet has portrayed the character of Brutus with peculiar care, and developed all the amiable traits, the feeling, and patriotic heroism of it with supereminent skill. He has been less happy in personifying Cæsar, to whom he has given several ostentatious speeches, unsuited to his character, if we may judge from the impression made upon us by his own commentaries. The character of Cassius is also touched with great nicety and discrimination, and is admirably contrasted to that of Brutus: his superiority (in independent volition, and his discernment in judging of human affairs, are pointed out; while the purity of mind and conscientious love of justice in Brutus, unfit him to be the head of a party in a state entirely corrupted: these amiable failings give, in fact, an unfortunate turn to the cause of the conspirators. The play abounds in well wrought and affecting scenes; it is scarcely necessary to mention the celebrated dialogue between Brutus and Cassius, in which the design of the conspiracy is opened to Brutus. The quarrel between them, rendered doubly touching by the close, when Cassius learns the death of Portia: and which one is surprised to think that any critic susceptible of feeling should pronounce 'cold and uninteresting.' The scene between Brutus and Portia, where she endeavours to extort the secret of the conspiracy from him, in which is that heart-thrilling burst of tenderness, which Portia's heroic behaviour awakens:—

'You are my true and honourable wife,
As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.'

The speeches of Mark Antony over the dead body of Cæsar, and the artful eloquence with which he captivates the multitude, are justly classed among the happiest effusions of poetic declamation.

There are also those touches of nature interspersed, which we should seek in vain in the works of any other poet. In the otherwise beautiful scene with Lucius, an incident of this kind is introduced, which, though wholly immaterial to the plot or conduct of the scene, is perfectly congenial to the character of the agent, and beautifully illustrative of it. The sedate and philosophic Brutus, discomposed a little by the stupendous cares upon his mind, forgets where he had left his book of recreation:—

'Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so.'

Another passage of the same kind, and of eminent beauty, is to be found in the scene where the conspirators assemble at the house of Brutus at midnight. Brutus, welcoming them all, says:—

'What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night?

Cassius. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.]
Decius. Here lies the east: doth not the day break here?

Casca. No.

Cinna. O pardon, sir, it doth; and yon gray lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

Casca. You shall confess, that you are both deceived:

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises:
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence, up higher toward the north
He first presents his fire; and the high east
Stands as the Capitol, directly here.

It is not only heroic manners and incidents which the all-powerful pen of Shakspeare has expressed with great historic truth in this play, he has entered with no less penetration into the manners of the factious plebeians, and has exhibited here, as well as in Coriolanus, the manners of a Roman mob. How could Johnson say, that 'his adherence to the real story, and to Roman manners, seems to have impeded the natural vigour of his genius!'

ACT I.

SCENE I. Rome. A Street. Enter FLAVIUS, MARULLUS, and a Rabble of Citizens.

Flavius.

HENCE ; home, you idle creatures, get you home ;
 Is this a holiday ? What ! know you not,
 Being mechanical, you ought not walk,
 Upon a labouring day, without the sign
 Of your profession ? Speak, what trade art thou ?

1 Cit. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule ?
 What dost thou with thy best apparel on ?—
 You, sir ; what trade are you ?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But what trade art thou ? Answer me directly.

Cit. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience : which is indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Mar. What trade, thou knave ; thou naughty knave, what trade ?

Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me ; yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What mean'st thou by that ? Mend me, thou saucy fellow ?

Cit. Why, sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou ?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is, with the awl : I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with awl. I am indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes ; when they are in great danger I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's leather, have gone upon my handy work.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day ?
 Why dost thou lead these men about the streets ?

Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Cæsar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice ? What conquest brings he home ?

What tributaries follow him to Rome,
 To grace in captive bonds his chariot-wheels ?
 You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things !

O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome,
 Knew you not Pompey ? Many a time and oft
 Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,

1 The Tyber being always personified as a god, the feminine gender is here, strictly speaking, improper.
 Milton says that—
 '— the river of bliss

Rolls o'er Elysian flowers her amber streams.'
 But he is speaking of the water, and not of its presiding power or genius. Malone observes that Drayton describes the presiding powers of the rivers of England as females ; Spenser more classically represents them as males.

2 Condition, rank.

3 Whether.

4 Honorary ornaments ; tokens of respect.

5 We gather from a passage in the next scene what these trophies were. Casca there informs Cassius that Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Cæsar's images, are put to silence.

2 G

To towers and windows, yea to chimney tops,
 Your infants in your arms, and there have sat
 The live-long day, with patient expectation,
 To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome ;
 And when you saw his chariot but appear,
 Have you not made an universal shout,
 That Tyber trembled underneath her banks,¹
 To hear the replication of your sounds,
 Made in her concave shores ?
 And do you now put on your best attire ?
 And do you now cull out a holiday ?
 And do you now strew flowers in his way,
 That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood ?
 Be gone ;
 Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
 Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
 That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and, for this fault,

Assemble all the poor men of your sort ;²
 Draw them to Tyber banks, and weep your tears
 Into the channel, till the lowest stream
 Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

[Exeunt Citizens.]

See, whe'r³ their basest metal be not mov'd ;
 They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.
 Go you down that way towards the Capitol ;
 This way will I : Disrobe the images,
 If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.⁴

Mar. May we do so ?

You know it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter ; let no images
 Be hung with Cæsar's trophies.⁵ I'll about,
 And drive away the vulgar from the streets ;
 So do you too, where you perceive them thick.
 These growing feathers pluck'd from Cæsar's wing,
 Will make him fly an ordinary pitch ;
 Who else would soar above the view of men,
 And keep us all in servile fearfulness. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A public Place. Enter
in Procession, with Music, CÆSAR, ANTONY, for the Course; CALPHURNIA, PORTIA, DECIUS, CICERO, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and CASCA, a great
Crowd following, among them a Soothsayer.

Cæs. Calphurnia,—

Casca.

Peace, ho ! Cæsar speaks.

[Music ceases.]

Cæs.

Calphurnia,—

Cal. Here, my lord.

Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,⁷

When he doth run his course.—Antonius.

6 This person was not Decius but Decimus Brutus.
 The poet (as Voltaire has done since) confounds the characters of Marcus and Decimus. Decimus Brutus was the most cherished by Cæsar of all his friends, while Marcus kept aloof, and declined so large a share of his favours and honours as the other had constantly accepted. Lord Sterling has made the same mistake in his tragedy of Julius Cæsar. The error has its source in North's translation of Plutarch, or in Holland's Sue- tonius, 1606.

7 The old copy reads 'Antonius's way.' in other places we have Octavio, Flavio. The players were more accustomed to Italian than Latin terminations, on account of the many versions from Italian novels, and the many Italian characters in dramatic pieces formed

Ant. Cæsar, my lord.

Cæs. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia: for our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their steril curse.

Ant. I shall remember:
When Cæsar says, Do this, it is perform'd.

Cæs. Set on; and leave no ceremony out.

[Music.]

Sooth. Cæsar.

Cæs. Ha! who calls?

Casca. Bid every noise be still:—Peace yet again.

[Music ceases.]

Cæs. Who is it in the press, that calls on me?

I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,
Cry, Cæsar: Speak; Cæsar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. What man is that?

Bru. A soothsayer, bids you beware the ides of March.

Cæs. Set him before me, let me see his face.

Cæs. Fellow, come from the throng: Look upon Cæsar.

Cæs. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once again.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. He is a dreamer: let us leave him;—pass.

[Sennet. Exeunt all but BRU. and CÆS.]

Cæs. Will you go see the order of the course?

Bru. Not I.

Cæs. I pray you, do.

Bru. I am not gamesome: I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.
Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;
I'll leave you.

Cæs. Brutus, I do observe you now of late:
I have not from your eyes that gentleness,
And show of love, as I was wont to have:
You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand
Over your friend that loves you.

Bru. Cassius,
Be not deceiv'd: if I have veil'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance
Merely upon myself. Vexed I am,
Of late, with passions of some difference,
Conceptions only proper to myself,
Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behaviours:
But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd,
(Among which number, Cassius, be you one;)
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,
Forgets the shows of love to other men.

Cæs. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion,³
By means whereof, this breast of mine hath buried
Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

Bru. No, Cassius: for the eye sees not itself,
But by reflection, by some other things.

Cæs. 'Tis just:

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you have no such mirrors, as will turn

Your hidden worthiness into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I have heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome
(Except immortal Cæsar,) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning underneath this age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes:

Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me,
Cassius,

That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me?

Cæs. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to hear:
And, since you know you cannot see yourself
So well as by reflection, I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself which you yet know not of.
And be not jealous of me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common laugh, or did use
To stale⁴ with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protester; if you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself in banqueting
To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish and Shout.]

Bru. What means this shouting? I do fear, the people

Choose Cæsar for their king.

Cæs. Ay, do you fear it?
Then must I think you would not have it so.

Bru. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him well:—
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it that you would impart to me?

If it be aught toward the general good,
Set honour in one eye, and death i' the other,
And I will look on both indifferently:
For, let the gods so speed me, as I love
The name of honour more than I fear death.

Cæs. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward favour:
Well, honour is the subject of my story.—
I cannot tell what you and other men
Think of this life; but for my single self,
I had as lief not be, as live to be
In awe of such a thing as I myself.

I was born free as Cæsar; so were you.
We both have fed as well: and we can both Endure the winter's cold, as well as he.

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with her shores,
Cæsar said to me, *Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap with me into this angry flood?*⁵

And swim to yonder point? Upon the word,

Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did.
The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside

And stemming it with hearts of controversy.
But ere we could arrive⁶ the point propos'd,
Cæsar cry'd, Help me, Cassius, or I sink.

I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear, so, from the waves of Tyber

3 Johnson has erroneously given the meaning of allurement to stale, in this place. 'To stale with ordinary oaths my love,' is 'to prostitute my love, or make it common with ordinary oaths,' &c. The use of the verb to stale here, may be adduced as a proof that in a disputed passage of Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. 1, we should read stale instead of scale: see note there.

4 Shakspeare probably remembered what Suetonius relates of Cæsar's leaping into the sea, when he was in danger by a boat being overladen, and swimming to the next ship with his Commentaries in his hand. Holland's Translation of Suetonius, 1606, p. 26. And in another passage, 'Were rivers in his way to hinder his passage, cross over them he would, either swimming, or else bearing himself upon blowed leather bottles.' Ibid. p. 24.

5 'But ere we could arrive the point propos'd.' The verb arrive, in its active sense, according to its etymology, was formerly used for to approach, or come near. Milton several times uses it thus without the preposition. Thus in Paradise Lost, b. ii. —

— ere he arrive
The happy isle.

on the same originals. The correction was made by Pope.

The allusion is to a custom at the Lupercalia, 'the which (says Plutarch) in older time men say was the feast of shepherds or herdsmen, and is much like unto the feast Lyceiana in Arcadia. But howsoever it is, that day there are diverse noble men's sonnes, young men (and some of them magistrates themselves that govern them) which run naked through the city, striking in sport them they meet in their way with leather thongs. And many noblemen and gentlewomen also go of purpose to stand in their way, and doe put forth their handes to be stricken, perswading themselves that being with childe they shall have good deliverie: and also being barren, that it will make them conceive with child. Cæsar sat to behold that sport upon the pulpit for orations, in a chayre of gold, apparelled in triumphant manner. Antonius, who was consul at that time, was one of them that ronne this holy course.'—North's translation.

1 See King Henry VIII. Act ii. Sc. 4.

2 I. e. the nature of the feelings which you are now suffering. Thus in Timon of Athens:—

'I feel my master's passion.'

Did I the tired Cæsar : And this man
Is now become a god ; and Cassius is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body,
If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.
He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake : 'tis true, this god did shake :
His coward lips did from their colour fly ;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,
Did lose his lustre : I did hear him groan :
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,
Alas ! it cried, Give me some drink, Titinius :
As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper² should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone. [Shout. Flourish.]

Bru. Another general shout !
I do believe, that these applauses are
For some new honours that are heap'd on Cæsar.

Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world,

Like a Colossus : and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs,³ and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.
Men at some time are masters of their fates :
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
Brutus, and Cæsar : What should be in that Cæsar ?
Why should that name be sounded more than yours ?
Write them together, yours is as fair a name ;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well ;⁴
Weigh them, it is as heavy ; conjure with them,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar. [Shout.]
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great ? Age, thou art sham'd :
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods !
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man ?
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide walls encompass'd but one man ?
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O ! you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus⁵ once, that would have brook'd
The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome,
As easily as a king.

Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous ;
What you would work me to, I have some aim ;⁶
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter ; for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further mov'd. What you have said,
I will consider ; what you have to say,
I will with patience hear : and find a time
Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things.
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this ;
Brutus had rather be a villager,

Than to repute himself a son of Rome,
Under these hard conditions as⁷ this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad that my weak words
Have struck but thus much show of fire from Brutus.

Re-enter CÆSAR and his Train.

Bru. The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

Cas. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve,
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded, worthy note, to-day.

Bru. I will do so :—But, look you, Cassius,
The angry spot doth glow on Cæsar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train :
Calphurnia's cheek is pale ; and Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd⁸ in conference by some senators.

Cas. Casca will tell us what the matter is.

Cas. Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar.

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat ;
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights :
Yond' Cassius has a lean and hungry look ;
He thinks too much : such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous :⁹
He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. 'Would he were fatter :—But I fear him
not :

Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much ;
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men : he loves no plays,
As thou dost, Antony ; he hears no music :¹⁰
Seldom he smiles ; and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves ;
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Than what I fear, for always I am Cæsar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

[Exit CÆSAR and his Train. CASCA stays behind.]

Casca. You pull'd me by the cloak ; Would you speak with me ?

Bru. Ay, Casca ; tell us what hath chanc'd today,
That Cæsar looks so sad.

Casca. Why, you were with him, were you not ?

Bru. I should not then ask Casca what hath chanc'd.

Casca. Why, there was a crown offer'd him ;¹¹ and being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus ; and then the people fell a shouting.

1 This is oddly expressed, but a quibble, alluding to a coward flying from his colours, was intended.

2 Temperament, constitution.

3 'But I the meanest man of many more,
Yet much disdainning unto him to lout,
Or creep between his legs.'

Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. x. st. 19.

4 A similar thought occurs in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece :—

'What diapason's more in Tarquin's name
Than in a subject's ? Or what's Tullia
More in the sound than should become the name
Of a poor maid ?'

5 'Lucius Junius Brutus (says Dion Cassius) would as soon have submitted to the perpetual dominion of a dæmon, as to the lasting government of a king.'

6 i. e. guess. So in the Two Gentlemen of Verona :—
'But fearing lest my jealous aim might err.'

7 Ruminant on this, consider it at leisure.

8 As, according to Tooke, is an article, and means the same as that, which, or it : accordingly we find it often so employed by old writers ; and particularly in our excellent version of the Bible. Thus Lord Bacon also, in his Apophthegmes, No. 210 :—'One of the Romans said to his friend ; what think you of such a one, as was taken with the manner in adultery ?' Like other vestiges of old phraseology it still lingers among the common people :—'I cannot say as I did,' &c. for that I did. I will add an example from Langland, who flourished in the middle of the fourteenth century :—

'The godes of the ground aren like to the grete wawes
As [which] wyndes and wederes walwen aboute.'

Piers Ploughman, ed. 1813, p. 168.

9 'When Cæsar's friends complained unto him of Antonius and Dolabella, that they pretended some mischief towards him, he answered, As for those fat men and smooth-combed heads (quoth he,) I never reckon of them ; but these pale-visaged and carrion-lean people,
I fear them most ; meaning Brutus and Cassius.'

North's Plutarch, 1579.

And in another place :—'Cæsar had Cassius in great jealousy, and suspected him much ; whereupon he said on a time to his friends, What will Cassius do, think you ? I like not his pale looks.'

10 Shakespeare considered this as an infallible mark of an austere disposition. The reader will remember the passage in The Merchant of Venice so often quoted :—
'The man who hath no music in himself,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils.'

11 Thus in the old translation of Plutarch :—'— he came to Cæsar, and presented him a diadem wreathed about with laurel.'

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Cas. They shouted thrice: What was the last cry for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Casca. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by, mine honest neighbours shouted.

Cas. Who offered him the crown?

Casca. Why, Antony.

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Casca.

Casca. I can as well be hanged, as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery. I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown;—yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again; but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time; he put it the third time by: and still as he refused it, the rabblement hooted, and clapped their chapped hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Cæsar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Cæsar; for he swooned, and fell down at it: And for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you: What? did Cæsar swoon?

Casca. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like: he hath the falling-sickness.

Cas. No, Cæsar hath it not; but you, and I, And honest Casca, we have the falling-sickness.

Casca. I know not what you mean by that; but, I am sure Cæsar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him, and hiss him, according as he pleased, and displeased them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he when he came unto himself?

Casca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me ope his doublet, and offered them his throat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation,¹ if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues: and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, if he had done, or said any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infirmity. Three or four venches, where I stood, cried, Alas, good soul!—and forgave him with all their hearts: But there's no heed to be taken of them; if Cæsar had stabbed their mothers, they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that, he came, thus sad, away?

Casca. Ay.

Cas. Did Cicero say any thing?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you i' the face again: But those, that understood him, smiled at one another, and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Cæsar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good; I will expect you to-morrow.

Casca. Do so: Farewell, both. [Exit Casca.]

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?

He was quick mettle when he went to school.

Cas. So he is now, in execution. Of any bold or noble enterprize,

However he puts on this tardy form.

This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit,

Which gives men stomach to digest his words

With better appetite.

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave you:

To-morrow, if you please to speak with me,

I will come home to you: or, if you will,

Come home with me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so:—till then, think of the world.

[Exit Brutus.]

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see,

Thy honourable metal may be wrought

From that it is dispos'd:² Therefore 'tis meet

That noble minds keep ever with their likes:

For who so firm, that cannot be seduc'd?

Cæsar doth bear me hard;³ but he loves Brutus:

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,

He should not humour me.⁴ I will this night,

In several hands, in at his windows throw,

As if they came from several citizens,

Writings all tending to the great opinion

That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely

Cæsar's ambition shall be glanced at:

And, after this, let Cæsar seat him sure;

For we will shake him, or worse days endure.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Street. Thunder and Lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, CASCA, with his sword drawn, and CICERO.

Cic. Good even, Casca: Brought you Cæsar home?⁵

Why are you breathless? and why stare you so?

Casca. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth⁶

Shakes, like a thing unfirm? O, Cicero,

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds

Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen

The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam

To be exalted with the threatening clouds:

But never till to-night, never till now,

Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.

Either there is a civil strife in heaven;

Or else the world, too saucy with the gods,

Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?

Casca. A common slave⁷ (you know him well by sight)

Held up his left hand, which did flame and burn

Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand,

Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.

Besides (I have not since put up my sword,)

Against the Capitol I met a lion,

Who glar'd⁸ upon me, and went surly by, humour signifies to turn and wind by inflaming his passions.

⁶ Did you attend Cæsar home? So in Measure for Measure:—

⁷ That we may bring you something on the way.

⁸ The whole weight or momentum of this globe.

⁹ A slave of the souldiers that did cast a marvellous burning flame out of his hands, inasmuch as they that saw it thought he had been burnt; but when the fire was out, it was found that he had no hurt.—North's Plutarch.

⁹ The old copies erroneously read:—

'Who glaz'd upon me.'

² Had I been a mechanic, one of the plebeians to whom he offered his throat.' So in Coriolanus:—

'—You have made good work,

You and your apron-men; you that stood so much

Upon the voice of occupation, and

The breath of garlic-eaters.'

Men of occupation; Opifices et tabernarii.—Baret.

³ The best metal or temper may be worked into qualities contrary to its disposition, or what it is disposed to.

⁴ Has an unfavourable opinion of me.' The same phrase occurs again in the first scene of Act III.

⁵ I think Warburton's explanation of this passage the true one:—'If I were Brutus, (said he,) and Brutus Cassius, he should not cajole me as I do him.' To,

Malone determined obstinately to oppose himself to Steevens's judicious reading of glar'd, and reads, with less propriety and probability, glaz'd. Steevens has,

Without annoying me! And there were drawn
Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women,
Transformed with their fear; who swore, they saw
Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets.
And yesterday, the bird of night did sit,
Even at noon-day, upon the market-place,
Hooting, and shrieking. When these prodigies
Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,
These are their reasons,—They are natural;
For, I believe they are portentous things
Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time:
But men may construe things after their fashion,
Clean! from the purpose of the things themselves.
Comes Cæsar to the Capitol to-morrow?

Casca. He doth; for he did bid Antonius
Send word to you, he would be there to-morrow.

Cic. Good night, then, Casca: this disturbed sky
Is not to walk in.

Casca. Farewell, Cicero.

[Exit CICERO.]

Enter CASSIUS.

Cas. Who's there?

Casca. A Roman.

Cas. Casca, by your voice.
Casca. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is this?

Cas. A very pleasing night to honest men.

Casca. Who ever knew the heavens menace so?

Cas. Those, that have known the earth so full of faults.

For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perilous night:
And, thus unbraced, Casca, as you see,
Have bar'd my bosom to the thunder-stone:²
And, when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heaven, I did present myself
Even in the aim and very flash of it.

Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt the heavens?

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Cas. You are dull, Casca; and those sparks of life

That should be in a Roman, you do want,
Or else you use not: You look pale, and gaze,
And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens:
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why birds, and beasts, from quality and kind;
Why old men, fools, and children calculate;³
Why all these things change, from their ordinance,
Their natures, and preformed faculties,
To monstrous quality; why, you shall find,
That heaven hath infus'd them with these spirits,
To make them instruments of fear, and warning,
Unto some monstrous state. Now could I, Casca,
Name to thee a man most like this dreadful night;
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion in the Capitol:
A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In personal action; yet prodigious⁴ grown,
And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.

Casca. 'Tis Cæsar that you mean: Is is not,
Cassius?

clearly shown from the poet's own works that his emendation is the true one.

1 Altogether, entirely.

2 What is now, in modern language, called a thunder-bolt.

3 i. e. why birds and beasts deviate from their condition and nature; why old men, fools, and children calculate; i. e. foretell or prophesy. At the suggestion of Sir William Blackstone this last line has been erroneously pointed in all the late editions:—

'Why old men fools, and children calculate.'
He observed that 'there was no prodigy in old men's calculating; but who were so likely to listen to prophecies as children, fools, and the superstitious old?'

4 Portentous.

5 i. e. sinews, muscular strength. See note on King Henry IV. Part II. Act III. Sc. 2.

Cas. Let it be wno it is: for Romans now
Have thewes⁵ and limbs like to their ancestors;
But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits;
Our yoke and sufferance show us womanish.

Casca. Indeed, they say, the senators to-morrow
Mean to establish Cæsar as a king:
And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger then;
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius:
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat:
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit;
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.

If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny, that I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure.

Casca. So can I:
So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.⁶

Cas. And why should Cæsar be a tyrant, then?
Poor man! I know, he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees the Romans are but sheep:
He were no lion, were not Romans hinds.
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weak straws: What trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate
So vile a thing as Cæsar? But, O, grief!
Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman: then I know
My answer must be made: 'But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.'

Casca. You speak to Casca; and to such a man,
That is no flattering tell-tale. Hold my hand:
Be factious⁸ for redress of all these griefs;
And I will set this foot of mine as far,
As who goes farthest.

Cas. There's a bargain made.
Now know you, Casca, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans,
To undergo, with me, an enterprize
Of honourable-dangerous consequence;
And I do know, by this, they stay for me
In Pompey's porch; for now, this fearful night
There is no stir, or walking in the streets;
And the complexion of the element,
In favour's⁹ like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter CINNA.

Casca. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cas. 'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait:
He is a friend.—Cinna, where haste you so?

Cin. To find out you: Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cas. No, it is Casca: one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not staid for, Cinna?

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this?
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cas. Am I not staid for, Cinna? Tell me.
Cin. Yes,

You are. O, Cassius, if you could but win
The noble Brutus to our party—

6 Thus in Cymbeline, Act v. Posthumus, speaking of his chains:—

—take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds.'

7 'I know I shall be called to account, and must answer for having uttered seditious words.' So in Much Ado about Nothing:—'Sweet prince, let me go no further to mine answer; do you hear me, and let this count kill me.'

8 'Hold my hand' is the same as 'Here's my hand.'
'Be factious for redress,' means, be contentious, enterprising for redress.

9 The old copy reads, 'Is favours.' Favour here is put for appearance, look, countenance; to favour is to resemble.

Cas. Be you content: Good Cinna, take this paper,

And look you lay it in the prætor's chair, Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this in at his window: set this up with wax Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done, Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?

Cin. All but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone To seek you at your house. Well, I will hie, And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Cas. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre.

[Exit CINNA.]

Come, Casca, you and I will yet, ere day, See Brutus at his house: three parts of him Is ours already; and the man entire, Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Casca. O, he sits high in all the people's hearts: And that, which would appear offence in us, His countenance, like richest alchymy, Will change to virtue, and to worthiness.

Cas. Him and his worth, and our great need of him,

You have right well conceited. Let us go, For it is after midnight; and, ere day, We will awake him, and be sure of him. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. The same. Brutus's Orchard.¹ Enter BRUTUS.

Bru. What, Lucius! ho! I cannot, by the progress of the stars, Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!— I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.— When Lucius, when? Awake, I say: What, Lucius!

Enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord?

Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius: When it is lighted, come and call me here. Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit.]

Bru. It must be by his death: and for my part, I know no personal cause to spurn at him, But for the general. He would be crown'd:— How that might change his nature, there's the question.

It is the bright day, that brings forth the adder; And that craves wary walking. Crown him?— That;—

And then, I grant, we put a sting in him, That at his will he may do danger with. The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins Remorse² from power: And, to speak truth of Cæsar,

I have not known when his affections sway'd More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof,³

That lowliness is young ambition's ladder, Whereto the climber-upward turns his face: But when he once attains the utmost round, He then unto the ladder turns his back, Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees By which he did ascend:⁴ So Cæsar may; Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel

Will bear no colour for the thing he is, Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented, Would run to these, and these extremities: And therefore think him as a serpent's egg, Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind,⁵ grow mischievous, And kill him in the shell.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir. Searching the window for a flint, I found This paper, thus seal'd up; and I am sure, It did not lie there, when I went to bed.

Bru. Get you to bed again, it is not day. Is not to-morrow, boy, the idea of March?

Luc. I know not, sir.

Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me word. Luc. I will, sir. [Exit.]

Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air, Give so much light, that I may read by them. [Opens the Letter, and reads.]

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake, and see thyself.

Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress!

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake,—— Such instigations have been often dropp'd Where I have took them up. Shall Rome, &c.— Thus must I piece it out; Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What! Rome?

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king. Speak, strike, redress!—Am I entreated To speak, and strike? O Rome! I make thee promise,

If the redress will follow, thou receivest Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.⁷

[Knock within.]

Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks. [Exit LUCIUS.]

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cæsar, I have not slept.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream: The genius, and the mortal instruments, Are then in council; and the state of man,⁸ Like to a little kingdom, suffers then The nature of an insurrection.⁹

one of his earliest comments on Shakspeare, addressed to Concanen, when, in league with Theobald and others, he made war against Pope. The following note, by the Rev. Mr. Blakeway, is quite of another character, and takes with it my entire concurrence and approbation:—

'The genius, and the mortal instruments,' &c. Mortal is assuredly deadly; as it is in Macbeth:—

—Come, you spirits,

That tend on mortal thoughts,

By instruments, I understand our bodily powers, our members: as Othello calls his eyes and hands his speculative and active instruments: and Menenius, in Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. 1, speaks of the —cranks and offices of man,

The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins. So intending to point, as he does very finely, the inward conflict which precedes the commission of some dreadful crime; he represents, as I conceive him, the genius, or soul, consulting with the body, and, as it were, questioning the limbs, the instruments which are to perform this deed of death, whether they can undertake to bear her out in the affair, whether they can screw up their courage to do what she shall enjoin them. The tumultuous commotion of opposing sentiments and feelings, produced by the firmness of the soul contending with the secret misgivings of the body; during which the ¹ Orchard and garden appear to have been synonymous with our ancestors. In Romeo and Juliet, Capulet's garden is twice called orchard.

² Shakspeare usually uses remorse for pity, tenderness of heart.

³ I. e. a matter proved by common experience.

⁴ 'The aspirer once attain'd unto the top,

Cuts off those means by which himself got up:

And with a harder hand, and straighter rein,

Doth curb that looseness he did find before:

Doubting the occasion like might serve again,

His own example makes him fear the more.'

Daniel's Civil Wars, 1603.

⁵ 'As his kind,' like the rest of his species. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—'You must think this, look you, the worm [i. e. serpent] will do his kind.'

⁶ The old copy erroneously reads, 'the first of March.' The correction was made by Theobald; as was the following.

⁷ Here again the old copy reads, fifteen. This was only the dawn of the fifteenth when the boy makes his report.

⁸ The old copy reads:—

'Are then in council, and the state of a man,' &c.

⁹ There is a long and fanciful, but erroneous note by Warburton on this passage, which is curious, as being

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door,
Who doth desire to see you.

Bru. Is he alone?

Luc. No, sir; there are more with him.

Bru. Do you know them?

Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their ears.

And half their faces buried in their cloaks,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favour.¹

Bru. Let them enter.

[Exit LUCIUS.]

They are the faction. O, conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most free? O, then, by day,
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;

Hide it in smiles, and affability:
For if thou path thy native semblance² on,
Not Erebus itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention.

Enter CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIVS, CINNA, METELLUS CIMBER, and TREBONIUS.

Cas. I think we are bold upon your rest;
Good morrow, Brutus: Do we trouble you?

Bru. I have been up this hour; awake, all night.
Know I these men, that come along with you?

Cas. Yes, every man of them; and no man here,
But honours you: and every one doth wish,
You had but that opinion of yourself,
Which every noble Roman bears of you.
This is Trebonius.

Bru. He is welcome hither.

Cas. This, Decius Brutus.

Bru. He is welcome too.

Cas. This, Casca; this, Cinna;
And this, Metellus Cimber.

Bru. They are all welcome.
What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night?

Cas. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.]

Dec. Here lies the east: Doth not the day break here?

Casca. No.

Cin. O, pardon, sir, it doth; and yon gray lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

Casca. You shall confess, that you are both deceived.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises:
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence, up higher toward the north
He first presents his fire; and the high east
Stands as the Capitol, directly here.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

Cas. And let us swear our resolution.

Bru. No, not an oath: If not the face³ of men, mental faculties are, though not actually dormant, yet in a sort of waking stupor, 'crushed by one overwhelming image,' is finely compared to a phantasm or a hideous dream, and by the state of man suffering the nature of an insurrection. Tibalt has something like it in Romeo and Juliet :—

'Patience perforce with wilful choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.'

² 'If thou walk in thy true form.'

³ Johnson thus explains this passage: in which, with a view perhaps to imitate the abruptness of discourse, Shakspeare has constructed the latter part without any regard to the beginning. 'The face of men' is the 'countenance, the regard, the esteem of the public'; in other terms, honour and reputation: or the face of men may mean 'the dejected look of the people.' Thus Cicero in Catilinam:—'Nihil horum orationis movetur.'

Gray may perhaps support Johnson's explanation:

'And read their history in a nation's eyes.'
Mason thought we should read, 'the faith of men' to which, he says, the context evidently gives support:—
what other bond,

'Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter,' &c.

The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse,—
If these be motives weak, break off betimes,
And every man hence to his idle bed;
So let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery.⁴ But if these,
As I am sure they do, bear fire enough
To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour
The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen,
What need we any spur but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? what other bond,
Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter?⁵ and what other oath,
Than honesty to honesty engag'd,
That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautelous,⁶
Old feeble carriages, and such suffering souls
That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear
Such creatures as men doubt: but do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise,
Nor the insuppressive mettle of our spirits,
To think, that, or our cause, or our performance,
Did need an oath; when every drop of blood,
That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
Is guilty of a several bastardy,
If he do break the smallest particle
Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

Cas. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him
I think, he will stand very strong with us.

Casca. Let us not leave him out.

Cin.

No, by no means

Met. O, let us have him; for his silver hairs
Will purchase us a good opinion,⁷
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:
It shall be said, his judgment rul'd our hands;
Our youths, and wildness, shall no whit appear
But all be buried in his gravity.

Bru. O, name him not; let us not break⁸ with him;
For he will never follow any thing
That other men begin.

Cas.

Then leave him out.

Casca. Indeed, he is not fit.

Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Cæsar?

Dec. Decius, well urg'd:—I think it is not meet,
Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,
Should outlive Cæsar: We shall find of him
A shrewd contriver; and, you know, his means
If he improves them, may well stretch so far,
As to annoy us all; which to prevent,
Let Antony, and Cæsar, fall together.

Bru. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius
Cassius,

To cut the head off, and then hack the limbs;
Like wrath in death, and envy⁹ afterwards:
For Antony is but a limb of Cæsar.

Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.
We all stand up against the spirit of Cæsar;
And in the spirit of men there is no blood:
O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
And not dismember Cæsar! But, alas,
Cæsar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends,

The speech is formed on the following passage in North's Plutarch:—'The conspirators having never taken oath together, nor taken or given any caution or assurance, nor binding themselves one to another by any religious oaths, they kept the matter so secret to themselves,' &c.

⁴ Steevens thinks there may be an allusion here to the custom of decimation, i. e. the selection by lot of every tenth soldier in a general mutiny for punishment.

The poet speaks of this in Coriolanus:—

'By decimation and a tithed death

Take thou thy fate.'

⁵ To palter is to shuffle, to equivocate; to go from engagements once made.

⁶ Though cautelous is often used for wary, circumspect, by old writers, the context plainly shows that Shakspeare uses it here for artful, insidious; opposed to honesty. It is used in Coriolanus, Act iv Sc 1, in the same sense.

⁷ i. e. character. Thus in King Henry IV. Part i, Act v. Sc. 4:—

'Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion.'

⁸ Let us not break the matter to him.

⁹ Envy here, as almost always by Shakspeare, is used for malice.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully ;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcase fit for hounds :¹
And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
Sir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after seem to chide them. This shall make
Our purpose necessary, and not envious :
Which so appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.
And for Mark Antony, think not of him ;
For he can do no more than Cæsar's arm,
When Cæsar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I do fear him :
For in the ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar,——

Bru. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him :
If he love Cæsar, all that he can do
Is to himself ; take thought,² and die for Cæsar :
And that were much he should ; for he is given
To sports, to wildness, and much company.

Treb. There is no fear in him ; let him not die ;
For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter.

[Clock strikes.]

Bru. Peace, count the clock.

Cas. The clock hath stricken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet,

Where³ Cæsar will come forth to-day, or no :

For he is superstitious grown of late ;

Quite from the main opinion he held once

Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies :⁴

It may be, these apparent prodigies,

The unaccustom'd terror of this night,

And the persuasion of his augurers,

May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that : If he be so resolv'd,

I can o'ersway him : for he loves to hear,

That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,

And bears with glasses, elephants with holes,⁵

Lions with toils, and men with flatterers :

But, when I tell him, he hates flatterers,

He says, he does ; being then most flattered.

Let me work :

For I can give his humour the true bent ;

And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eighth hour : Is that the uttermost ?

Cin. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Cæsar hard,

Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey ;

I wonder, none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him :⁶

He loves me well, and I have given him reasons ;

Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.

Cas. The morning comes upon us : We'll leave you, Brutus ;——

And, friends, disperse yourselves : but all remember

1 ' Gradive, dedisti,
Ne qua manus vatem, ne quid mortalia bello
Ledere tela queant, sanctum et venerabile Didi
Fusus erat.' Statius, Theb. vii. 1. 696.

The following passage of the old translation of Plutarch was probably in the poet's thoughts :—' Cæsar turned himself no-where but he was stricken at by some, and still naked swords in his face, and was hacked and mangled among them as a wild beast taken of hunters.'

2 To take thought, is to grieve, to be troubled in mind. See note on Hamlet, Act iv. Sc. 5 ; and Antony and Cleopatra, Act iii. Sc. 2. ' My bodie surely is well, or in good case ; but I take thought, or my minde is full of fancies and trouble.'—Baret.

3 Whether.

4 ' Quite from the main opinion he held once

Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.'

Main opinion is fixed opinion, general estimation.

Thus in Troilus and Cressida :—

' Why then should we our main opinion crush,

In taint of our best man ?'

Fantasy was used for imagination or conceit in Shakespeare's time ; but the following passage from Lavater on Ghosts and Spirits, 1772, may elucidate its meaning in the present instance :—' Suidas maketh a difference between phantasma and phantasia, saying that phantasma is an imagination or appearance of a sight or thing which is not, as are those sights which

What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily ;
Let not our looks put on our purposes ;
But bear it as our Roman actors do,
With untir'd spirits, and formal constancy :
And so, good-morrow to you every one.

[Eseunt all but BRUTUS.]

Boy ! Lucius !—Fast asleep ?—It is no matter ;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber :
Thou hast no figures,⁸ nor no fantasies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men :
Therefore thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter PORTIA.

Por. Brutus, my lord !

Bru. Portia, what mean you ? Wherefore rise you now ?

It is not for your health, thus to commit
Your weak condition to the raw-cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours, neither. You have ungently,

Brutus,

Stole from my bed : And yesternight, at supper,

You suddenly arose, and walk'd about,

Musing, and sighing, with your arms across

And when I ask'd you what the matter was,

You start'd upon me with ungently looks :

I urg'd you further ; then you scratch'd your head,

And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot :

Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not ;

But, with an angry wafture of your hand,

Gave sign for me to leave you : So I did ;

Fearing to strengthen that impatience,

Which seem'd too much enkindled ; and, withal,

Hoping it was but an effect of humour,

Which sometime hath his hour with every man.

It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep ;

And, could it work so much upon your shape,

As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,⁹

I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,

Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and were he not in health,
He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do :—Good Portia, go to bed,

Por. Is Brutus sick ? and is it physical

To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours

Of the dank morning ? What, is Brutus sick

And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,

To dare the vile contagion of the night ?

And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air

To add unto his sickness ? No, my Brutus ;

You have some sick offence within your mind,

Which, by the right and virtue of my place,

I ought to know of : And, upon my knees,

I charm you,¹⁰ by my once commended beauty, men in their sleeps do thinke they see ; but that phantasia is the seeing of that only which is in-vary deede.' Ceremonies signify omens or signs deduced from sacrifices or other ceremonial rites. Thus in a subsequent passage :—

' Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies,

Yet now they fright me.'

5 Unicorns are said to have been taken by one, who, running behind a tree, eluded the violent push the animal was making at him, so that his horn spent its force on the trunk, and stuck fast, detaining the animal till he was despatched by the hunter. This is alluded to by Spenser, F. Q. b. ii. c. 5 ; and by Chapman, in his Bussy d'Ambois, 1607. Bears are reported to have been surprised by means of a mirror, which they would gaze on, affording their pursuers an opportunity of taking the surer aim. This circumstance is mentioned by Claudian. Elephants were seduced into pitfalls, lightly covered with hurdles and turf, on which a proper bait to tempt them was placed. See Pliny's Natural History, b. viii.

6 i. e. by his house ; make that your way home.

7 ' Let not our faces put on that, is, wear or show, our designs.'

8 Shapes created by imagination.

9 Condition is temper, disposition, demeanour.

10 ' I charm you.' This is the reading of the old copy, which Pope and Hanmer changed to ' I charge you,' without necessity. To charm is to invoke or en-

By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, yourself, your half,
Why you are heavy; and what men to-night
Have had resort to you: for here have been
Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkness.

Bru. Kneel not, gentle Portia.

Por. I should not need, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
Is it excepted, I should know no secrets
That appertain to you? Am I yourself,
But, as it were, in sort, or limitation;
To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,
And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs

Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.¹

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife;
As dear to me, as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.²

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.

I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman that Lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman well reputed; Cato's daughter.
Think you, I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd, and so husbanded?
Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose them:
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound
Here, in the thigh: Can I bear that with patience,
And not my husband's secrets?

Bru. O ye gods,
Render me worthy of this noble wife!

[Knocking within.]

Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in a while;
And by and by thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart.

All my engagements I will construe to thee,

All the charactery³ of my sad brows:—
Leave me with haste. [Exit PORTIA.]

Enter LUCIUS and LIGARIUS.

Lucius, who is that knocks?
Luc. Here is a sick man, that would speak with
you.

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.—
Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius! how?

Lig. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.

Bru. O, what a time have you chose out, brave
Caius,

To wear a kerchief? 'Would, you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of honour.⁴

treat by words or other fascinating means. Thus in Cymbeline:—

'tis your graces

That from my mutest conscience to my tongue
Charms this report out.⁵

1 The general idea of this part of Portia's speech is taken from the old translation of Plutarch. Lord Ster-line, in his Julius Cæsar, 1607, uses similar language:—

'I was not, Brutus, match'd with thee, to be

A partner only of thy board and bed:

Each servile where in those might equal me,

That did herself to nought but pleasure wed.

No;—Portia spous'd thee with a mind i' abide

Thy fellow in all fortunes, good or ill,

With chains of mutual love together tied,

As those that have two breasts, one heart, two souls, one will.⁶

2 These glowing words have been adopted by Gray in his celebrated Ode:—

'Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart.'

3 Charactery is defined 'writing by characters or strange marks.' Brutus therefore means that he will divulge to her the secret cause of the sadness marked on his countenance.' In The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. Sc. 1, it is said, 'Fairies use flowers for their charactery.'

4 This is from Plutarch's Life of Brutus, as translated by North:—'Brutus went to see him being sick in his bedde, and sayed unto him, O Ligarius, in what a time art thou sick?' Ligarius, rising up in his bed and taking

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before,
I here discard my sickness. Soul of Rome!

Brave son, deriv'd from honourable loins!

Thou, like an exorcist,⁷ hast conjur'd up

My mortified spirit. Now bid me run,

And I will strive with things impossible;

Yea, get the better of them. What's to do?

Bru. A piece of work, that will make sick men whole.

Lig. But are not some whole, that we must make sick?

Bru. That must we also. What it is, my Caius,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going

To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot;

And, with a heart new-fir'd, I follow you,

To do I know not what: but it sufficeth,

That Brutus leads me on.

Bru. Follow me, then.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. *The same. A Room in Cæsar's
Palace. Thunder and Lightning. Enter CÆSAR, in his Night-gown.*

Cæs. Nor heaven, nor earth, have been at peace
to-night:

Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out,
Help, ho! they murder Cæsar!—Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord?

Cæs. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice,

And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit.]

Enter CALPHURNIA.

Cal. What mean you, Cæsar? Think you to walk forth?

You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

Cæs. Cæsar shall forth: The things that threaten'd me,

Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall see
The face of Cæsar, they are vanished.

Cal. Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies,⁸

Yet now they fright me. There is one within,

Besides the things that we have heard and seen,

Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.

A lioness hath whelped in the streets;

And graves have yaw'n'd, and yielded up their dead:⁹

Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,

In ranks, and squadrons, and right form of war,¹⁰

Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol:

The noise of battle hurl'd¹¹ in the air,

him by the right hande, sayed unto him, Brutus, if thou hast any great enterprise in hande worthe of thy selfe, I am whole.' Lord Sterling has also introduced this passage into his Julius Cæsar. Shakespeare has given to Romans the manners of his own time. It was a common practice in England for those who were sick to wear a kerchief on their heads, and still continues among the common people in many places. 'If (says Fuller) this county [Cheshire] hath bred no writers in that faculty [physic], the wonder is the less, if it be true what I read, that if any there be sick, they make him a posset and tie a kerchief on his head, and if that will not mend him, then God be merciful to him.'—Worthies,
Cheshire, p. 180.

5 Here and in all other places Shakespeare uses exorcist for one who raises spirits, not one who lays them.
But it has been erroneously said that he is singular in this use of the word.

6 Never paid a regard to prodigies or omens. The adjective is used in the same sense in The Devil's Charter, 1607:—

'The devil hath provided in his covenant

I should not cross myself at any time,

I never was so ceremonious.'

7 Shakespeare has adverted to this again in Hamlet:—

'A little ere the mighty Julius fell,

The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead

Did squeak and gibber in the streets of Rome.'

8 Visæ per cælum co. currere accies, rudiantia arma, et subito nubium igne collucere.—Tacitus, Hist. b. v.

9 To hurtle is to clash, or move with violence and noise.

Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan :
And ghosts did shriek, and squeal about the streets.
O, Cæsar ! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cæs. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty gods ?
Yet Cæsar shall go forth ; for these predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Cæsar.

Cal. When beggars die, there are no comets seen ;
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.¹

Cæs. Cowards die many times before their deaths ;²

The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear ;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come.

Re-enter a Servant.

Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to-day.

Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cæs. The gods do this in shame of cowardice :³
Cæsar should be a beast without a heart,
If he should stay at home to-day for fear.
No, Cæsar shall not : Danger knows full well,
That Cæsar is more dangerous than he.
We were⁴ two lions litter'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible ;
And Cæsar shall go forth.⁵

Cal. Alas, my lord,
Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence.
Do not go forth to-day : Call it my fear,
That keeps you in the house, and not your own.
We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house ;
And he shall say, you are not well to-day :
Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this.

Cæs. Mark Antony shall say, I am not well ;
And, for thy humour, I will stay at home.

Enter DECIVS.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Dec. Cæsar, all hail ! Good morrow, worthy
Cæsar :

I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

1 This may have been suggested by Suetonius, who relates that a blazing star appeared for seven days together during the celebration of games, instituted by Augustus, in honour of Julius. The common people believed that this indicated his reception among the gods, his statues were accordingly ornamented with its figure, and medals struck on which it was represented ; one of them is engraved in Mr. Douce's Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 82 ; from whence this note is taken. Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, in his Defensive against the Poison of supposed Prophecies, 1583, says, 'Next to the shadows and pretences of experience (which have been met with all at large,) they seem to brag most of the strange events which follow (for the most part) after blazing stars ; as if they were the summonses of God to call princes to the seat of judgment. The surest way to shake their painted bulwarke of experience is, by making plaine that neither princes always dye when comets blaze, nor comets ever (i. e. always) when princes dye.' In this work is a curious anecdote of Queen Elizabeth, 'then lying at Richmond, being dissuaded from looking on a comet ; with a courage equal to the greatness of her state she caused the window to be sette open, and said, jacta est alea—the dice are thrown.'

2 'When some of his friends did counsel him to have a guard for the safety of his person, he would never consent to it ; but said, it was better to die once than always to be afraid of death.'—North's Plutarch.

Lord Essex in a letter to Lord Rutland, observes, 'That as he which dieth nobly doth live for ever, so he that doth live in fear doth die continually.'—And Marston, in his Insatiate Countess, 1613 :—

'Fear is my vassel ; when I frown he flies :

A hundred times in life a coward dies.'

3 Johnson remarks, 'That the ancients did not place courage in the heart.' Mr. Douce observes, that he had

Cæs. And you are come in very happy time,
To bear my greeting to the senators,
And tell them that I will not come to-day :
Cannot, is false ; and that I dare not, falser :
I will not come to-day : Tell them so, Decius.

Cal. Say, he is sick.

Cæs. Shall Cæsar send a lie ?
Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell gray-breads the truth ;
Decius, go tell them, Cæsar will not come.

Dec. Most mighty Cæsar, let me know some cause,
Lest I be laugh'd at, when I tell them so.

Cæs. The cause is in my will, I will not come ;
That is enough to satisfy the senate.

But, for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will let you know ;
Calphurnia here, my wife, stays me at home :
She dreamt to-night she saw my statue,⁶
Which, like a fountain, with a hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood ; and many lusty Romans
Came smiling, and did bathe their hands in it.
And these doth she apply for warnings and portents.
And evils imminent ; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day.

Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted ;
It was a vision, fair and fortunate :
Your statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck
Reviving blood : and that great men shall press
For tinctures, stains, relics, and cognizance.⁷
This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

Cæs. And this way have you well expounded it.

Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say ;
And know it now : The senate have concluded
To give, this day, a crown to mighty Cæsar.
If you shall send them word, you will not come,
Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock
Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,
Break up the senate till another time,
When Cæsar's wife shall meet with better dreams.
If Cæsar hide himself, shall they not whisper,
Lo, Cæsar is afraid ?
Pardon me, Cæsar ; for my dear, dear love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this ;
And reason to my love is liable.⁸

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now, Calphurnia ?

forgotten his classics strangely, as he has shown by several extracts from Virgil and Ovid.

4 The old copy reads, 'We heare,' &c. The emendation was made by Theobald. Upon proposed to read, 'We are,' &c.

5 Steevens observes, that any speech of Cæsar, throughout this scene, will appear to disadvantage, if compared with the following, put into his mouth by May in the seventh book of his Supplement to Lucan :—

'—— Plus me Calphurnia luctus,
Et lachrymæ movere tuæ, quam tristitia vatum
Responsa, infatuæ volucres, aut ulla dierum
Vana superstitio poterant. Ostenta timere
Si nunc inciperem, que non mihi tempora posthac
Anxia transirent ? que lux jucunda maneret ?
Aut que libertas ? frustra servire timori
(Dum nec luctus frui, nec mortem arceret libet)
Cogar, & huic capiti quod Roma veretur, aruspex
Jus dabit, et vanus semper dominabitur augur.'

6 'The old copy reads statue ; but it has been shown by Mr. Reed beyond controversy that statua was pronounced as a trisyllable by our ancestors, and hence generally written statua. Thus in Lord Bacon's Advancement of Learning, ed. 1633, p. 38 :—'It is not possible to have the true pictures or statuaes of Cyrus, Alexander, Cæsar, no, nor of the kings or great personages of much later years.' Again :—'without which the history of the world seems to be as the statua of Polyphemus, with his eye out.'

7 At the execution of several of our ancient nobility, martyrs, &c. we are told that handkerchiefs were tinctured with their blood, and preserved as affectionate or salutary memorials of the deceased.

8 'And reason, or propriety of conduct and language, is subordinate to my love.'

I am ashamed I did yield to them.—
Give me my robe, for I will go:—

Enter PUBLIUS, BRUTUS, LIGARIUS, METELLUS, CASCA, TREBONIUS, and CINNA.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good morrow, Cæsar.

Cæs. Welcome, Publius.—
What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?—
Good morrow, Casca.—Caius Ligarius,
Cæsar was ne'er so much your enemy,
As that same ague which hath made you lean.—
What is't o'clock?

Bru. Cæsar, 'tis stricken eight.

Cæs. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter ANTONY.

See! Antony, that revels long o' nights,
Is notwithstanding up:—
Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Cæsar.

Cæs. Bid them prepare within:—

I am to blame to be thus waited for.—
Now, Cinna:—Now, Metellus:—What, Trebonius!
I have an hour's talk in store for you;
Remember that you call on me to-day:
Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Cæsar, I will:—and so near will I be,
[Aside.

That your best friends shall wish I had been further.
Cæs. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine
with me;

And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

Bru. That every like is not the same, O Cæsar,
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. The same. A Street near the Capitol.
Enter ARTEMIDORUS, reading a Paper.

Art. Cæsar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius;
come not near Casca; have an eye to Cinna;
trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber;
Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou be'st not immortal, look about you: Security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, ARTEMIDORUS.

Here will I stand, till Cæsar pass along,
And as a suitor will I give him this.
My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.¹

If thou read this, O Cæsar, thou may'st live;
If not, the fates with traitors do contrive.² [Exit.

SCENE IV. The same. Another Part of the same Street, before the House of Brutus. Enter PORTIA and LUCIUS.

Por. I pry'thee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:
Why dost thou stay?³

Luc. To know my errand, madam.
Por. I would have had thee there, and here again,
Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there.—
O constancy, be strong upon my side!
Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!
I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel!—
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?
And so return to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look
well,
For he went sickly forth: And take good note,

¹ Emulation is here used in its old sense, of envious, or factious rivalry. See Troilus and Cressida, Act ii. Sc. 3.

² 'The fates join with traitors in contriving thy destruction.'

³ Shakspeare has expressed the perturbation of King Richard the Third's mind by the same incident:—
'—— Dull unmindful villain!
Why stayest thou here, and go'st not to the duke?

What Cæsar doth, what suitors press to him.
Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por. Pry'thee, listen well;
I heard a bustling rumour, like a fray,
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

*Enter Soothsayer.*⁴

Por. Come hither, fellow:
Which way hast thou been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.

Por. What is't o'clock?

Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol?

Sooth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand,
To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou not?

Sooth. That I have, lady; if it will please Cæsar
To be so good to Cæsar, as to hear me,
I shall beseech him to befriend himself.

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

Good morrow to you. Here the street is narrow:
The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels,
Of senators, of prætors, common suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. [Exit.

Por. I must go in.—Ah me! how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O, Brutus!
The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!
Sure, the boy heard me:—Brutus hath a suit,⁵
That Cæsar will not grant.—O, I grow faint:
Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord:
Say, I am merry: come to me again,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I. The same. The Capitol; the Senate sitting. A Crowd of People in the Street leading to the Capitol; among them ARTEMIDORUS, and the Soothsayer. Flourish. Enter CÆSAR, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIUS, METELLUS, TREBONIUS, CINNA, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, POPILIUS, PUBLIUS, and others.

Cæs. The ides of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar; but not gone.

Art. Hail, Cæsar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read,
At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Art. O, Cæsar, read mine first; for mine's a suit
That touches Cæsar nearer: Read it, great Cæsar.

Cæs. What touches us ourself, shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly.

Cæs. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

Cæs. What, urge you your petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitol.

CÆSAR enters the Capitol, the rest following. All the Senators rise.

Pop. I wish, your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cæs. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well.

[Advances to CÆSAR.

Bru. What said Popilius Lena?

Cat. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness' pleasure,

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

⁴ Mr. Tyrwhitt says, 'The introduction of the Soothsayer here is unnecessary, and improper. All that he is made to say should be given to Artemidorus; who is seen and accosted by Portia in his passage from his first stand to one more convenient.'

⁵ These words Portia addresses to Lucius, to deceive him, by assigning a false cause for her present perturbation.

Cas. He wish'd, to-day our enterprize might thrive.
I fear our purpose is discover'd.

Bru. Look, how he makes to Cæsar: Mark him.

Cas. Casca, be sudden, for we fear prevention.—
Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known,
Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back,
For I will slay myself.

Bru. Cassius, be constant:
Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes;
For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cas. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you,
Brutus,
He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exeunt ANTONY and TREBONIUS. CÆSAR and the Senators take their seats.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go,
And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Bru. He is address'd: I press near, and second him.

Cin. Casca, you are the first that rears your² hand.

Cas. Are we all ready? what is now amiss,
That Cæsar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant
Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat
An humble heart:— [Kneeling.]

Cas. I must prevent thee, Cimber.
These couchings, and these lowly courtesies,
Might fire the blood of ordinary men;
And turn pre-ordinance,³ and first decree,
Into the law of children.⁴ Be not fond,
To think that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,
Low-crook'd curtsies, and base spaniel fawning.
Thy brother by decrees is banished;
If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn for him,
I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.
Know, Cæsar doth not wrong; nor without cause
Will he be satisfied.⁵

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my own,
To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear,
For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Bru. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar;
Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may
Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

1 i. e. he is ready.

2 According to the rules of modern grammar Shakespeare should have written his hand; but other instances of similar false concord are to be found in his compositions. Steevens is angry with Malone for laying them to the charge of the poet, and would transfer them to the player-editors or their printer. Ritson thinks the words 'Are we all ready?' should be given to Cinna, and not to Cæsar.

3 Pre-ordinance for ordinance already established.

4 The old copy erroneously reads 'the lane of children.' Lance, as anciently written, was easily confounded with lane.

5 Ben Jonson has shown the ridicule of this passage in the Induction to The Staple of News; and notices it in his Discoveries as one of the lapses of Shakespeare's pen; but certainly without that malevolence which has been ascribed to him: and be it observed, that is almost the only passage in his works which can justly be construed into an attack on Shakespeare. He has been accused of quoting the passage unfaithfully; but Mr. Tyrwhitt surmised, and Mr. Gifford is decidedly of opinion, that the passage originally stood as cited by Jonson; thus:—

'Met. Cæsar, thou dost me wrong.

Cas. Cæsar, did never wrong, but with just cause.' Mr. Tyrwhitt has endeavoured to defend the passage by observing, that wrong is not always a synonymous term for injury; and that Cæsar is meant to say, that he doth not inflict any evil or punishment but with just cause. 'The fact seems to be (says Mr. Gifford,) that this verse, which closely borders on absurdity, without being absolutely absurd, escaped the poet in the heat of composition; and being one of those quaint slips which are readily remembered, became a jocular and familiar phrase for reproving (as in the passage of Ben Jonson's Induction) the perverse, and unreasonable expectations of the male or female gossips of the day.'

6 i. e. intelligent, capable of apprehending.

7 i. e. 'still holds his place unshaken by eulogy or solicitation,' of which the object is to move the person addressed.

Cas. What, Brutus!

Cas. Pardon, Cæsar; Cæsar, pardon:
As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall,
To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cas. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you;
If I could pray to move, prayers would move me:
But I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true-fix'd, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the firmament.
The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,
They are all fire, and every one doth shine;
But there's but one in all doth hold his place:
So, in the world; 'Tis furnish'd well with men,
And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive;
Yet, in the number, I do know but one
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion;⁷ and, that I am he,
Let me a little show it, even in this;
That I was constant, Cimber should be banish'd,
And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O, Cæsar,—

Cas. Hence! wilt thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Cæsar,—

Cas. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

Casca. Speak, hands, for me.

[*CASCA STABS CÆSAR IN THE NECK. CÆSAR catches hold of his arm. He is then stabbed by several other Conspirators, and at last
by MARCUS BRUTUS.*]

Cas. Et tu, Brute?⁸—Then, fall, Cæsar.

[Dies. The Senators and People retire in confusion.]

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—
Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cas. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out,
Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!

Bru. People, and senators! be not affrighted;

Fly not; stand still:—ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Bru. Where's Publius?

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Cæsar's

Should chance—

8 Suetonius says, that when Cæsar put Metellus Cimber back 'he caught hold of Cæsar's gowne, at both shoulders, whereupon, as he cried out, This is violence, Cassius came in second, full a front, and wounded him a little beneath the throat. Then Cæsar, catching Cassius by the arme, thrust it through with his stile or writing punches; and with that, being about to leap forward, he was met with another wound and stayed.' Being then assailed on all sides, 'with three and twenty he was stabbed, during which time he gave but one groan (without any word uttered), and that was at the first thrust; though some have written, that, as Marcus Brutus came running upon him, he said, and thou my sonne.' Holland's Translation, 1607. Plutarch says that, on receiving his first wound from Casca, 'he caught hold of Casca's sword, and held it hard; and they both cried out, Cæsar in Latin, O vile traitor Casca, what dost thou?' and Casca, in Greek, to his brother, Brother, help me. The conspirators, having then compassed him on every side, 'hacked and mangled him,' &c.; 'and then Brutus himself gave him one wound above the privities. Men report also, that Cæsar did still defend himself against the rest, running every way with his bodie; but when he saw Brutus with his sword drawn, in his hand, then he pulled his gowne over his head, and made no more resistance.' Neither of these writers, therefore, furnished Shakespeare with this exclamation. It occurs in The True Tragedie of Richard Duke of York, 1600; on which he formed the Third Part of King Henry VI.— 'Et tu, Brute? Wilt thou stab Cæsar too?'
And is translated in Cæsar's Legend, Mirror for Magistrates, 1587:—

'And Brutus thou my sonne, quoth I, whom erst
I loved best.'

The words probably appeared originally in the old Latin play on the Death of Cæsar.

9 We have now taken leave of Casca. Shakespeare knew that he had a sufficient number of heroes on his hands, and was glad to lose an individual in the crowd, Casca's singularity of manners would have appeared to little advantage amid the succeeding war and tumult.

Bru. Talk not of standing;—Publius, good cheer; There is no harm intended to your person, Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people, Rushing on us, do to your age some mischief.

Bru. Do so;—and let no man abide this deed, But we the doers.

Re-enter TREBONIUS.

Cas. Where's Antony?

Tre. Fled to his house amaz'd: Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run, As it were doomsday.

Bru. Fates! we will know your pleasures:— That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time, And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cas. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life, Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit: So are we Cæsar's friends, that have abridg'd His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop, And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords: Then walk we forth, even to the market-place; And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads, Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cas. Stoop, then, and wash. How many ages hence,

Shall this our lofty scene be acted over, In states unborn, and accents yet unknown?

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport, That now on Pompey's basis lies along, No worthier than the dust?

Cas. So oft as that shall be, So often shall the knot of us be call'd The men that gave our country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away: Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Bru. Soft, who comes here? A friend of Antony's.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel; Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down:

And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:

Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;

Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving;

Say, I love Brutus, and I honour him;

Say, I fear'd Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony

May safely come to him, and be resolv'd

How Cæsar hath deserv'd to lie in death,

Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead

So well as Brutus living; but will follow

The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus,

Thorough the hazards of this untrod state,

With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;

I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,

He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour,

Depart untouch'd.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently.

[Exit Servant.]

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish we may: but yet have I a mind,

That fears him much; and my misgiving still

Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

1 Johnson explains this:—'Who else may be supposed to have overtopped his equals, and grown too high for the public safety.' This explanation will derive more support than has yet been given to it, from the following speech of Oliver, in As You Like It, Act i. Sc. 1, when incensed at the high bearing of his brother Orlando:—'Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will physic your rankness.'

2 'To you (says Brutus) our swords have leaden points: our arms, struck in the deed of malice they have just performed, and our hearts united like those of brothers in the action, are yet open to receive you with all possible regard.' This explanation by Steevens is, it must be confessed, very ingenious; and yet I think we should read, as he himself suggested:—
'Our arms no strength of malice?'

Re-enter ANTONY.

Bru. But here comes Antony.—Welcome, Mark Antony.

Ant. O, mighty Cæsar! Dost thou lie so low?

Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,

Shrunk to this little measure?—Fare thee well.—

I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,

Who else must be let blood, who else is rank:¹

If I myself, there is no hour so fit

As Cæsar's death's hour! nor no instrument

Of half that worth, as those your swords, made rich

With the most noble blood of all this world.

I do beseech you, if you bear me hard,

Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke,

Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years,

I shall not find myself so apt to die:

No place will please me so, no mean of death,

As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,

The choice and master spirits of this age.

Bru. O, Antony! beg not your death of us.

Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,

As by our hands, and this our present act,

You see we do; yet see you but our hands,

And this the bleeding business they have done:

Our hearts you see not, they are pitiful;

Add pity to the general wrong of Rome,

(As fire drives out fire, so pity, pity),

Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,

To you our swords have leaden points, Mark Antony:

Our arms in strength of malice, and our hearts,

Of brothers' temper, do receive you in

With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.²

Cas. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's,

In the disposing of new dignities.³

Bru. Only be patient, till we have appeas'd

The multitude, beside themselves with fear,

And then we will deliver you the cause,

Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,

Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom.

Let each man render me his bloody hand:

First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you:—

Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand:—

Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours, Metellus;

Yours, Cinna;—and, my valiant Casca, yours;—

Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonus.

Gentlemen all,—alas! what shall I say?

My credit now stands on such slippery ground,

That one of two bad ways you must conceit me,

Either a coward or a flatterer.—

That I did love thee, Cæsar, O, 'tis true:

If then thy spirit look upon us now,

Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death

To see thy Antony making his peace,

Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,

Most noble! in the presence of thy corpse?

Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,

Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,

It would become me better, than to close

In terms of friendship with thine enemies.

Pardon me, Julius!—Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart:

Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand,

Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe.⁴

which would render the passage clear without a commentary.

3 Mr. Blakeway observes, that Shakspeare has maintained the consistency of Cassius's character, who, being selfish and greedy himself, endeavours to influence Antony by similar motives. Brutus, on the other hand, is invariably represented as disinterested and generous, and is adorned by the poet with so many good qualities, that we are almost tempted to forget that he was an assassin.

4 Lethe is used by many old writers for death.

'The proudest nation that great Asia nurs'd

Is now extinct in lethe.'

Heywood's Iron Age, Part ii. 1632.

It appears to have been used as a word of one syllable in this sense; and is derived from lethum, Lat. Our ancient language was also enriched with the derivatives lethal, lethality, lethiferous. &c

O world! thou wast the forest to this hart;
And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.—
How like a deer, stricken by many princes,
Dost thou here lie!

Cas. Mark Antony—

Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius:
The enemies of Cæsar shall say this;
Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Cæsar so;
But what compact mean you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our friends;
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was indeed,

Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.
Friends! am I with you all, and love you all;
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons,
Why, and wherein, Cæsar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle:
Our reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seek:
And am moreover suitor, that I may Produce his body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.

Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.—
You know not what you do; Do not consent,
[Aside.

That Antony speak in his funeral:
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter?

Bru. By your pardon;
I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Cæsar's death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission;
And that we are contented, Cæsar shall
Have all true rites, and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more, than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall; I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Cæsar's body.
You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar;
And say, you do't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral: and you shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;
I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body, then, and follow us.

[Exeunt all but ANTONY.

Ant. O, pardon me, thou piece of bleeding earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,
That ever lived in the tide of times.¹
Wo to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,—
Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,

¹ This grammatical impropriety is still so prevalent, that the omission of the anomalous s would give some uncommonness to the sound of an otherwise familiar expression.

² That is, in the course of time

³ By men, Antony means not mankind in general, but those Romans whose attachment to the cause of the conspirators, or wish to revenge Cæsar's death, would expose them to wounds in the civil wars which he supposed that event would give rise to. The generality of the curse is limited by the subsequent words, 'the parts of Italy,' and 'in these confines.'

⁴ 'Cry Havoc, and let slip the dogs of war.' Havoc was the word by which declaration was made, in the military operations of old, that no quarter should be given: as appears from 'the Office of the Constable and Mareschall in the Tyne of Werre,' included in the Black Book of the Admiralty.

To let slip a dog was the technical phrase in hunting the hart, for releasing the hounds from the leash or slip of leather by which they were held in hand until it was judged proper to let them pursue the animal chased.

To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue!—
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;²
Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war;
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds:
And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
Cry Havoc,⁴ and let slip the dogs of war;
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Cæsar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Cæsar, did write for him to come to Rome.

Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming:

And bid me say to you by word of mouth,—

O, Cæsar!— [Seeing the Body.

Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep.
Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what hath chanc'd:

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome⁵ of safety for Octavius yet;
Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay awhile;
Thou shalt not back, till I have borne this corse
Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men;
According to the which, thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lend me your hand.

[Exeunt, with CÆSAR'S Body.

SCENE II. The same. The Forum. Enter
BRUTUS and CASSIUS, and a Throng of Citizens.

Cit. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied.

Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience,
friends.—

Cassius, go you into the other street,
And part the numbers.—
Those that will hear me speak, let them stay here;
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Cæsar's death.

1 Cit. I will hear Brutus speak.

2 Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons,

When severally we hear them rendered.

[Exit CASSIUS, with some of the Citizens,
BRUTUS goes into the Rostrum.

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: Silence!

Bru. Be patient till the last.
Romans, countrymen, and lovers!⁶ hear me for my

Steele, in the Tautler, No. 137, and some others after him, think that, by the dogs of war, fire, sword, and famine are typified. So in the Chorus to Act i. of King Henry V.

_____ at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment.

⁵ This jingling quibble upon Rome and room has occurred before in Act i. Sc. 2:—

'Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough.'
It is deserving of notice on no other account than as it shows the pronunciation of Rome in Shakespeare's time, So in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece, 1633:—

_____ You shall have my room,
My Rome indeed; for what I seem to be,
Brutus is not, but born great Rome to free.'

⁶ Warburton thinks this speech very fine in its kind, though unlike the laconic style of ancient oratory attributed to Brutus. Steevens observes that 'this artificial jingle of short sentences was affected by most of the orators of Shakespeare's time, whether in the pulpit or cause; and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for mine honour; and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom; and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Cæsar was no less than his. If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer,—Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves; than that Cæsar were dead, to live all free men? As Cæsar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him: but, as he was ambitious, I slew him: There is tears, for his love; joy, for his fortune; honour, for his valour; and death, for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bondman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile, that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

Cit. None, Brutus, none.

[Several speaking at once.

Bru. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar, than you shall do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol: his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter ANTONY and others, with CÆSAR'S Body.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony: who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart; That, as I slew my best lover¹ for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

Cit. Live, Brutus, live! live!

1 Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

2 Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

3 Cit. Let him be Cæsar.

4 Cit. Cæsar's better parts Shall now be crown'd in Brutus.

1 Cit. We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamours.

Bru. My countrymen,—

2 Cit. Peace; silence! Brutus speaks.

1 Cit. Peace, ho!

Bru. Good countrymen, let me depart alone, And, for my sake, stay here with Antony: Do grace to Cæsar's corpse, and grace his speech Tending to Cæsar's glories; which Mark Antony, By our permission, is allow'd to make. I do entreat you not a man depart, Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.

1 Cit. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3 Cit. Let him go up into the public chair;

We'll hear him:—Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholden to you.

4 Cit. What does he say of Brutus?

3 Cit. He says, for Brutus' sake, He finds himself beholden to us all.

4 Cit. 'Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

1 Cit. This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3 Cit. Nay, that's certain:

We are bless'd, that Rome is rid of him.

2 Cit. Peace; let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,—

Cit. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.

The evil, that men do, lives after them;

The good is oft interred with their bones;

So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus

Hath told you, Cæsar was ambitious;

If it were so, it was a grievous fault;

And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,

(For Brutus is an honourable man;

So are they all; all honourable men,)

Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.

He was my friend, faithful and just to me:

But Brutus says, he was ambitious,

And Brutus is an honourable man.

He hath brought many captives home to Rome,

Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?

When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept:

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.

You all did see, that on the Lupercal,

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And, sure, he is an honourable man.

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,

But here I am to speak what I do know.

You all did love him once, not without cause;

What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?

O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,

And men have lost their reason!—Bear with me;

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,

And I must pause till it come back to me.

1 Cit. Methinks, there is much reason in his sayings.

2 Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter, Cæsar has had great wrong.

3 Cit. Has he, masters?

I fear, there will a worse come in his place.

4 Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;

Therefore, 'tis certain, he was not ambitious.

1 Cit. If it be found so, some will dear abide it.

2 Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

3 Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome, than Antony.

4 Cit. Now mark him, he begins again to speak

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Cæsar might

Have stood against the world: now lies he there,

And none so poor² to do him reverence.

O, masters! if I were dispos'd to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,

Who, you all know, are honourable men:

I will not do them wrong; I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,

Than I will wrong such honourable men.

But here's a parchment, with the seal of Cæsar,

I found it in his closet, 'tis his will:

Let but the commons hear his testament,

(Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read,)

And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds,

And dip their napkins³ in his sacred blood;

Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,

And, dying, mention it within their wills,

Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,

Unto their issue.

4 Cit. We'll hear the will: Read it, Mark Antony.

tors. It would not have been again noticed, but for Mr. Reed's whimsical notion that it was not authenticated by examples, and that Shakespeare found it in North's Plutarch alone. Malone has adduced a host of examples, but any old Latin Dictionary, under the word amicus, would serve to confute Mr. Reed.

2 'The meanest man is now too high to do reverence to Cæsar.'

3 Handkerchiefs

at the bar. It may therefore be regarded rather as an imitation of the false eloquence then in vogue, than as a specimen of laconic brevity.⁴ It is worthy of remark, that Voltaire, who has stolen and transplanted into his tragedy of Brutus the fine speech of Antony to the people, and has unblushingly received the highest compliments upon it from the King of Prussia, Count Algarotti, and others, affects to extol this address of Brutus, while he is most disingenuously silent on the subject of that of Antony, which he chose to purloin.

1 Lover and friend were synonymous with our ances-

Cit. The will, the will; we will hear Cæsar's will.

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it;

It is not meet you know how Cæsar lov'd you. You are not wood, you are not stones, but men; And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar, It will inflame you, it will make you mad:

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs; For if you should, O, what would come of it!

4 Cit. Read the will; we will hear it, Antony; You shall read us the will; Cæsar's will.

Ant. Will you be patient? Will you stay awhile? I have o'er-shot myself, to tell you of it.

I fear, I wrong the honourable men, Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar; I do fear it.

4 Cit. They were traitors: Honourable men!

Cit. The will! the testament!

2 Cit. They were villains, murderers: The will! read the will!

Ant. You will compel me then to read the will? Then make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar, And let me show you him that made the will.

Shall I descend? And will you give me leave?

Cit. Come down.

2 Cit. Descend.

[He comes down from the Pulpit.]

3 Cit. You shall have leave.

2 Cit. A ring; stand round.

1 Cit. Stand from the hearse, stand from the body.

2 Cit. Room for Antony;—most noble Antony.

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.

Cit. Stand back! room! bear back!

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember

The first time ever Cæsar put it on;

'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent;

That day he overcame the Nervii:—

Look! in this place, ran Cassius' dagger through;

See, what a rent the envious Casca made:

Through this, the well beloved Brutus stabb'd;

And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,

Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it;

As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd

If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no;

For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel:¹

Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar lov'd him!

This was the most unkindest cut of all:

For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,

Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,

Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,

Even at the base of Pompey's statue,²

Which all the while ran blood,³ great Cæsar fell.

O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!

Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,

Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.

O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel

The dint⁴ of pity: these are gracious drops.

Kind souls, what, weep you, when you but behold

Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Look you here,

Here is himself, marr'd,⁵ as you see, with traitors.

1 Cit. O, piteous spectacle!

2 Cit. O, noble Cæsar!

¹ i. e. his guardian angel, or the being in whom he put most trust.

² See Act ii. Sc. 2. Beaumont in his Masque writes this word statua, and its plural statuaes. Even is generally used as a dissyllable by Shakespeare.

³ The image seems to be that the blood flowing from Cæsar's wounds appeared to run from the statue; the words are from North's Plutarch:—'Against the very base whereon Pompey's image stood, which ran all a gore of blood, till he was slain.'

⁴ Dint anciently written dent; 'a stroke, and the impression which it makes on any thing.'

⁵ Marr'd is defaced, destroyed. Is is often, for the sake of the jingle, opposed to make.

⁶ Grievances.

⁷ The first folio reads, 'For I have neither wit.' The second folio corrects it to wit, which Johnson supposed might mean 'a peined and premeditated oration.'—Malone perversely adheres to the erroneous reading.

3 Cit. O, woful day!

4 Cit. O, traitors, villains!

1 Cit. O, most bloody sight!

2 Cit. We will be revenged: revenge: about,—seek,—burn,—fire,—kill,—slay!—let not a traitor live.

Ant. Stay, countrymen.

1 Cit. Peace there;—Hear the noble Antony.

2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny.

They, that have done this deed, are honourable;

What private griefs⁶ they have, alas, I know not,

That made them do it; they are wise and honourable,

And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.

I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;

I am no orator, as Brutus is:

But, as you know me all, a plain blut man,

That love my friend; and that they know full well

That gave me public leave to speak of him.

For I have neither wit,⁷ nor words, nor worth,

Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,

To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;

I tell you that which you yourselves do know;

Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor dumb

mouths,

And bid them speak for me: But were I Brutus,

And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony

Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue

In every wound of Cæsar, that should move

The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

Cit. We'll mutiny.

1 Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.

3 Cit. Away then, come, seek the conspirators.

Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak.

Cit. Peace, ho! Hear Antony, most noble An tony.

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what:

Wherein hath Cæsar thus deserv'd your loves?

Alas, you know not:—I must tell you, then:

You have forgot the will I told you of.

Cit. Most true;—the will;—let's stay, and hear the will.

Ant. Here is the will, and under Cæsar's seal.

To every Roman citizen he gives,

To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.⁸

2 Cit. Most noble Cæsar!—we'll revenge his death.

3 Cit. O royal Cæsar!

Ant. Hear me with patience.

Cit. Peace, ho!

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,

His private arbours, and new planted orchards,

On this side Tyber;⁹ he hath left them you,

And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures,

To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.

Here was a Cæsar: When comes such another?

1 Cit. Never, never:—Come, come, away:

We'll burn his body in the holy place,

And with the brands fire¹⁰ the traitors' houses.

Take up the body.

The context, I think, fully calls for the emendation, which Steevens has well defended.

⁸ A drachma was a Greek coin, the same as the Roman denier, of the value of four sesterces, i. e. 7d.

⁹ 'This scene (says Theobald) lies in the Forum, near the Capitol, and in the most frequented part of the city; but Cæsar's gardens were very remote from that quarter:—'

Trans Tiberim longe cubat is. prope Cæsaris hortos, says Horace: and both the Naumachia and gardens of Cæsar were separated from the main city by the river, and lay out wide in a line with Mount Janiculum.' He would therefore read, 'on that side Tyber.' But Dr. Farmer has shown that Shakespeare's study lay in the old translation of Plutarch, 'He bequeathed unto every citizen of Rome seventy-five drachmas a man, and left his gardens and arbours unto the people, which he had on this side of the river Tyber.'

¹⁰ Fire again as a dissyllable

2 Cit. Go, fetch fire.

3 Cit. Pluck down benches.

4 Cit. Pluck down forms, windows, any thing.
[Exeunt Citizens, with the Body.]

Ant. Now let it work : Mischief, thou art afoot,
Take thou what course thou wilt!—How now, fellow?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Cæsar's house.

Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him :

He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us any thing.

Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.
Ant. Belike, they had some notice of the people,
How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Street. Enter CINNA,
the Poet.

Cin. I dreamt to-night, that I did feast with Cæsar, and things unluckily charge my fantasy :¹
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

1 Cit. What is your name?

2 Cit. Whither are you going?

3 Cit. Where do you dwell?

4 Cit. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?

2 Cit. Answer every man directly.

1 Cit. Ay, and briefly.

4 Cit. Ay, and wisely.

3 Cit. Ay, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going?
Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor? Then to answer every man directly, and briefly, wisely, and truly. Wisely I say, I am a bachelor.

3 Cit. That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry :—You'll bear me a bang for that, I fear.
Proceed ; directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cæsar's funeral.

1 Cit. As a friend, or an enemy?

Cin. As a friend.

2 Cit. That matter is answered directly.

4 Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly.

Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.

3 Cit. Your name, sir, truly.

Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1 Cit. Tear him to pieces, he's a conspirator.

Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.

4 Cit. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.

2 Cit. It is no matter, his name's Cinna ; pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.

3 Cit. Tear him, tear him. Come, brands, ho !
firebrands. To Brutus', to Cassius' ; burn all.—
Some to Decius' house, and some to Casca's ; some to Ligarius' : away ; go. [Exeunt.]

1 i. e. circumstances oppress my fancy with an ill-omened weight. ' I learn (says Steevens) from an old Treatise on Fortune-Telling, &c. that to dream of being at banquets betokeneth misfortune, &c.' The subject of this scene is taken from Plutarch.

2 The place of this scene is not marked in the old copy. It appears from Plutarch and Appian, that these triumvirs met, upon the proscription, in a little island near Mutina, upon the river Lavinius. That Shakspeare, however, meant the scene to be at Rome may be inferred from what almost immediately follows :—

' Lep. What, shall I find you here ?

Oct. Or here, or at the Capitol.'

Malone placed the scene in Antony's house.

3 Upton has shown that the poet made a mistake as to this character mentioned by Lepidus ; Lucius, not Publius, was the person meant, who was uncle by the mother's side to Mark Antony.

4 i. e. condemn him.

' Vouchsafe to give my damned husband life.'

Promos and Cæcandra, 1578.

5 So in Measure for Measure, Act iii. Sc. 1 :—

' — like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
Till death unloads thee.'

2 I

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. A Room in Antony's House. ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS, seated at a Table.

Ant. These many then shall die ; their names are prick'd.

Oct. Your brother too must die ; Consent you,
Lepidus ?

Lep. I do consent.

Oct. Prick him down, Antony

Lep. Upon condition Publius² shall not live,
Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony.

Ant. He shall not live ; look, with a spot I damn³
him.

But, Lepidus, go you to Cæsar's house ;
Fetch the will hither, and we will determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here ?

Oct.

The Capitol. Or here, or at

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man,

Meet to be sent on errands : Is it fit,
The threefold world divided, he should stand
One of the three to share it ?

Oct.

So you thought him ;
And took his voice who should be prick'd to die,
In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you :

And though we lay these honours on this man,

To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads,

He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold.⁵

To groan and sweat under the business,

Either led or driven, as we point the way ;

And having brought our treasure where we will,

Then take we down his load, and turn him off,

Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears,

And graze in commons.

Oct.

You may do your will ;

But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius ; and, for that,

I do appoint him store of provender.

It is a creature that I teach to fight,

To wind, to stop, to run directly on ;

His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit.

And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so ;

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth :

A barren-spirited fellow ; one that feeds

On objects, arts, and imitations ;

Which, out of use, and stal'd by other men,

Begin his fashion.⁶ Do not talk of him,

But as a property.⁷ And now, Octavius,

Listen great things.—Brutus and Cassius

Are levying powers : we must straight make head

Therefore let our alliance be combin'd,

Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd out,⁸

And let us presently go sit in council,

How covert matters may be best disclos'd,

And open perils surest answered.

Oct. Let us do so ; for we are at the stake,

And bay'd about with many enemies ;

And some, that smile, have in their hearts, I fear,

Millions of mischiefs. [Exeunt.]

6 Shakspeare had already woven this circumstance into the character of Justice Shallow :—' He came ever in the rearward of the fashion ; and sung those tunes that he heard the carmen whistle.'

7 i. e. as a thing quite at our disposal, and to be treated as we please. Malvolio complains in Twelfth

Night :—

' They have property'd me, kept me in darkness'

8 The old copy gives this line imperfectly :—

' Our best friends made, our means stretch'd.'

Malone supplied it thus :—

' Our best friends made, our means stretch'd to the utmost.'

The reading of the text is that of the second folio edition, which is sufficiently perspicuous.

9 An allusion to bear baiting. Thus in Macbeth, Act

v. Sc. 7 :—

' They have chain'd me to a stake I cannot fly,

But bear-like, I must fight the course.'

SCENE II.—Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis. Drum. Enter BRUTUS, LUCILIUS, LUCIUS, and Soldiers: TITINIUS and PINDARUS, meeting them.

Bru. Stand, ho!

Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Bru. What now, Lucilius? is Cassius near?

Luc. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come To do you salutation from his master.

[PINDARUS gives a Letter to BRUTUS.]

Bru. He greets me well.—Your master, Pindarus, In his own charge, or by ill officers,¹ Hath given me some worthy cause to wish Things done, undone: but, if he be at hand, I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt;

But that my noble master will appear Such as he is, full of regard, and honour.

Bru. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucilius: How he receiv'd you, let me be resolv'd.

Luc. With courtesy, and with respect enough; But not with such familiar instances, Nor with such free and friendly conference, As he hath used of old.

Bru. Thou hast describ'd A hot friend cooling: Ever note, Lucilius, When love begins to sicken and decay, It useth an enforced ceremony. There are no tricks in plain and simple faith: But hollow men, like horses hot at hand, Make gallant show and promise of their mettle: But when they should endure the bloody spur, They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Comes his army on?

Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd;

The greater part, the horse in general, Are come with Cassius. [March within.]

Bru. Hark, he is arriv'd:— March gently on to meet him.

Enter CASSIUS and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho!

Bru. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.

Bru. Judge me, you gods! Wrong I mine enemies?

And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?

Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs;

And when you do them—

Bru. Cassius, be content, Speak your griefs softly,—I do know you well:— Before the eyes of both our armies here, Which should perceive nothing but love from us, Let us not wrangle: Bid them move away; Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus, Bid our commanders lead their charges off A little from this ground.

Bru. Lucilius, do you the like; and let no man Come to our tent, till we have done our conference. Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exeunt.]

1 It having been thought that alteration was requisite in this line, it may be as well to observe Brutus charges both Cassius and his officer, Lucius Pella, with corruption; and he says to Lucilius, when he hears how he had been received by Cassius:—

'Thou hast describ'd

A hot friend cooling.'

This is the change which Brutus complains of.

2 Nice here means silly, simple.

3 This question is far from implying that any of those who touched Cæsar's body were villains. On the contrary, it is an indirect way of asserting that there was not one man among them who was base enough to stab him for any cause but that of justice.

4 The old copy reads, 'Brutus, bait not me.' Theo-

SCENE III.—Within the Tent of Brutus. LUCIUS and TITINIUS at some distance from it. Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me, doth appear in this:

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella, For taking bribes here of the Sardians; Wherein, my letters, praying on his side, Because I knew the man, were slighted off.

Bru. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this, it is not meet That every nice² offence should bear his comment.

Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm; To sell and mart your offices for gold, To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm?

You know, that you are Brutus that speak this, Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

Bru. The name of Cassius honours this corruption, And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement!

Bru. Remember March, the ides of March remember!

Did not great Julius bleed for justice sake?

What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,

And not for justice? What, shall one of us,

That struck the foremost man of all this world,

But for supporting robbers; shall we now

Contaminate our fingers with base bribes;

And sell the mighty space of our large honours,

For so much trash, as may be grasped thus?—

I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon, Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bay⁴ not me,

I'll not endure it: you forget yourself,

To hedge me in;⁵ I am a soldier, I,

Older in practice, able than yourself

To make conditions.⁶

Bru. Go to; you're not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Bru. I say, you are not.⁷

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself;

Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.

Bru. Away, slight man!

Cas. Is't possible?

Bru. Hear me, for I will speak.

Must I give way and room to your rash choler?

Shall I be frightened, when a madman stares?

Cas. O ye gods! ye gods! Must I endure all this?

Bru. All this? ay, more: Fret, till your proud heart break;

Go, show your slaves how choleric you are,

And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge?

Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch

Under your testy humour? By the gods,

You shall digest the venom of your spleen,

Though it do split you: for, from this day forth,

I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,

When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this?

Bru. You say, you are a better soldier:

Let it appear so; make your vaunting true,

And it shall please me well: For mine own part,

I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

bald made the alteration, which has been adopted by all subsequent editors except Malone. The fact is, that bay and bait are both frequently used by Shakespeare in the same sense, and as the repetition of the word used by Brutus seems to add spirit to the reply, I have continued it in the text.

5 i. e. to limit my authority by your direction or censures.

6 To know on what terms it is fit to confer the offices at my disposal.

7 This passage (says Steevens) may be easily reduced to metre if we read:—

Cas. Brutus, I am.

Bru. Cassius I say you are not.

Cas. You wrong me every way, you wrong me,
Brutus;
I said, an elder soldier, not a better:
Did I say, better?

Bru. If you did, I care not.

Cas. When Cæsar liv'd, he durst not thus have mov'd me.

Bru. Peace, peace; you durst not so have tempted him.

Cas. I durst not?

Bru. No.

Cas. What? durst not tempt him?

Bru. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love,
I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Bru. You have done that you should be sorry for.

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats;
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me, as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me:—
For I can raise no money by vile means:
By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,
By any indirection. I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions,
Which you denied me: Was that done like Cassius?
Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

Cas. I denied you not.

Bru. You did.

Cas. I did not; he was but a fool
That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv'd
my heart:

A friend should bear his friend's infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.¹

Cas. You love me not.

Bru.

I do not like your faults.

Cas. A flatterer's eye could never see such faults.

Bru. A flatterer's would not, though they do appear

As huge as high Olympus.

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius,
For Cassius is aweary of the world:
Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother;
Check'd like a bondman; all his faults observ'd,
Set in a note-book, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes!—There is my dagger,
And here my naked breast; within, a heart
Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold:
If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth;
I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart:
Strike as thou didst at Cæsar; for, I know,
When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov'dst him better

Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius.

Bru. Sheath your dagger:

Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, dishonour shall be humour.
O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb,
That carries anger as the flint bears fire;

1 The meaning is this:—I do not look for your faults, I only see them, and mention them with vehemence, when you force them into my notice, by practising them on me.²

2 Shakespeare found the present incident in Plutarch. The intruder, however, was Marcus Phaonius, who had been a friend and follower of Cato; not a poet, but one who assumed the character of a cynic philosopher.

3 This passage is a translation from the first book of Homer's Iliad, which is thus given in Sir Thomas North's Plutarch:—

'My lords I pray you hearken both to me,
For I have seen more years than such ye three.'

4 I.e. these silly poets. A fig signified a ballad or

Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd

To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,

When grief, and blood ill temper'd, vexeth him?

Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill temper'd too.

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

Bru. And my heart too.

Cas. O, Brutus!—

Bru. What's the matter?

Cas. Have you not love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful?

Bru. Yes, Cassius; and, from henceforth,
When you are over earnest with your Brutus,
He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.

[Noise within.]

Poet. [Within.] Let me go in to see the generals;
There is some grudge between them, 'tis not meet
They be alone.

Luc. [Within.] You shall not come to them.

Poet. [Within.] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter Poet.²

Cas. How now? What's the matter?

Poet. For shame, you generals; What do you mean?

Love, and be friends, as two such men should be
For I have seen more years, I am sure, than ye.³

Cas. Ha, ha: how vilely doth this cynic rhyme!

Bru. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow,
hence.

Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion.

Bru. I'll know his humour, when he knows his time.

What should the wars do with these jiggling fools?⁴
Companion,⁵ hence.

Cas. Away, away, be gone.

[Exit Poet.]

Enter LUCILIUS and TITINIUS.

Bru. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders
Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.

Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Messala with you
Immediately to us.

[Exit LUCILIUS and TITINIUS.]

Bru. Lucius, a bowl of wine.

Cas. I did not think you could have been so angry.

Bru. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use,

If you give place to accidental evils.

Bru. No man bears sorrow better: Portia is dead.

Cas. Ha! Portia?

Bru. She is dead.

Cas. How scap'd I killing, when I cross'd you so?

O, insupportable and touching loss!—

Upon what sickness?

Bru. Impatient of my absence;

And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony
Have made themselves so strong:—for with her death

That tidings came;—With this she fell distract,
And, her attendants absent, swallow'd fire.⁶

Cas. And died so?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Enter LUCIUS, with Wine and Tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her. Give me a bowl of wine:—

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [Drinks.]

ditty, as well as a dance. See note on Hamlet, Act ii.
Sc. 2.

5 Companion is used as a term of contempt in many of the old plays; as we say at present fellow! Doll Tearsheet says to Pistol:—

—I scorn you, scurvy companion, &c.

6 This circumstance is taken from Plutarch. It is also mentioned by Valerius Maximus, iv. 6. Portia is however reported by Pliny to have died at Rome of a lingering illness while Brutus was abroad.

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge :—
Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup ;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. [Drinks.]

Re-enter TITINIUS with MESSALA.

Bru. Come in, Titinius :—Welcome, good Messala.—

Now sit we close about this taper here,
And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone ?

Bru. No more, I pray you.—

Messala, I have here received letters,
That young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Mes. Myself have letters of the selfsame tenour.

Bru. With what addition ?

Mes. That by proscription, and bills of outlawry,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Have put to death an hundred senators.

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree ;

Mine speak of seventy senators, that died

By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one ?

Mes. Ay, Cicero is dead,

And by that order of proscription.—

Had you your letters from your wife, my lord ?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her ?

Bru. Nothing, Messala.

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.

Bru. Why ask you ? Hear you aught of her in yours ?

Mes. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell :

For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die, Messala :

With meditating that she must die once,¹

I have the patience to endure it now.

Mes. Even so great men great losses should endure.

Cas. I have as much of this in art² as you,

But yet my nature could not bear it so.

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think

Of marching to Philippi presently ?

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason ?

Cas. This it is :

'Tis better that the enemy seek us :

So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,

Doing himself offence ; whilst we, lying still,

Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.

The people, 'twixt Philippi and this ground,

Do stand but in a forc'd affection ;

For they have grudg'd us contribution :

The enemy, marching along by them,

By them shall make a fuller number up,

Come on refresh'd, new added, and encourag'd :

From which advantage shall we cut him off,

If at Philippi we do face him there.

Cas. Hear me, good brother.

Bru. Under your pardon.—You must note beside,

That we have try'd the utmost of our friends,

Our legions are brim full, our cause is ripe :

The enemy increaseth every day,
We, at the height, are ready to decline.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune ;

Omitted, all the voyage of their life

Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.³

On such a full sea are we now afloat ;

And we must take the current when it serves,

Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on ;

We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.

Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our talk,

And nature must obey necessity ;

Which we will niggard with a little rest.

There is no more to say ?

Cas. No more. Good night ;

Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my gown. [Exit LUCIUS.] Farewell, good Messala ;—

Good night, Titinius :—Noble, noble Cassius

Good night, and good repose.

Cas. O, my dear brother !

This was an ill beginning of the night :

Never come such division 'tween our souls !

Let it not, Brutus.

Bru. Every thing is well.

Cas. Good night, my lord.

Bru. Good night, good brother.

Tit. Mes. Good night, Lord Brutus.

Bru. Farewell, every one.

[Exeunt CAS. TIT. and MES.]

Re-enter LUCIUS, with the Gown.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument ?

Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily :

Poor knave, I blame thee not ; thou art o'erwatch'd.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men ;

I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro, and Claudius !

Enter VARRO and CLAUDIUS.

Var. Calls my lord ?

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent, and sleep ;

It may be, I shall raise you by and by

On business to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you, we will stand, and watch your pleasure.

Bru. I will not have it so : lie down, good sirs ;

It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me.

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so ;

I put it in the pocket of my gown. [Servants lie down.]

Luc. I was sure, your lordship did not give it me.

Bru. Bear with me, good boy, I am much forgetful.

Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile,

And touch thy instrument a strain or two ?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an it please you.

Bru. It does, my boy :

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir.

Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy might ;

I know, young bloods look for a time to rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It is well done ; and thou shalt sleep again ;

I will not hold thee long : if I do live,

I will be good to thee. [Music, and a Song.]

This is a sleepy tune :—O, murder'ous slumber !

Lay'st thou thy leaden mace⁴ upon my boy,

A similar sentiment is found in Chapman's Bussy d'Ambois, 1607 :—

'There is a deep nick in time's restless wheel,
For each man's good, when which nick comes, it strikes,

So no man riseth by his real merit,
But when it cries click in the raiser's spirit.'

⁴ A mace is the ancient term for a ceptre :—

—proud Tarquinius

Rooted from Rome the sway of kingly mace.'

Marius and Scylla, 1694

Shakspeare probably remembered Spenser in his Faerie

Queene, b. i. c. iv. st. 44 :—

'When as Morpheus had with leaden mace

Arrested all that courtly company.'

¹ I. e. at some time or other. So in The Merry Wives of Windsor.

'I pray thee, once to-night
Give my sweet Nan this ring.'

² In art, that is, in theory.

³ Beaumont and Fletcher have more than once imitated this passage, but with very little success :—

'There is an hour in each man's life appointed
To make his happiness, if then he seize it,' &c.
Custom of the Country.

'—Consider then, and quickly :

And like a wise man take the current with you,

Which once turn'd head will sink you.'

Bloody Brother.

That plays thee music?—Gentle knave, good night! I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee. If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument; I'll take it from thee; and, good boy, good night. Let me see, let me see;—Is not the leaf turn'd down,
Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.
[He sits down.]

Enter the Ghost of CÆSAR.

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes here? I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes, That shapes this monstrous apparition. It comes upon me:—Art thou any thing? Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil, That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare? Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well;

Then I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.
[Ghost vanishes.]

Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi, then.—

Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest: Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.— Boy! Lucius!—Varró! Claudius! Sirs, awake!— Claudius!

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks, he still is at his instrument.

Lucius awake.

Luc. My lord!

Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so cry'd'st out?

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst: Didst thou see any thing?

Luc. Nothing, my lord.

Bru. Sleep again, Lucius.—Sirrah, Claudius! Fellow thou! awake.

Var. My lord.

Clau. My lord.

Bru. Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep?

Var. Clau. Did we, my lord?

Bru. Ay; Saw you any thing?

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Clau. Nor I, my lord.

Bru. Go, and commend me to my brother Cassius;

Bid him set on his powers betimes before, And we will follow.

Var. Clau. It shall be done, my lord.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The Plains of Philippi. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered: You said the enemy would not come down, But keep the hills and upper regions; It proves not so: their battles are at hand;

They mean to warn² us at Philippi here, Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know Wherefore they do it: they could be content To visit other places; and come down With fearful bravery,³ thinking, by this face, To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage; But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, generals: The enemy comes on in gallant show, Their bloody sign of battle is hung out, And something to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on, Upon the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I, keep thou the left.

Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?

Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.

[March.]

Drum. Enter BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and their Army; LUCILIUS, TITINIUS, MESSALA, and others.

Bru. They stand, and would have parley.

Cas. Stand fast, Titinius: We must out and talk.

Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?

Ant. No, Cæsar, we will answer on their charge.

Make forth, the general would have some words.

Oct. Stir not until the signal.

Bru. Words before blows: Is it so, countrymen?

Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.

Bru. Good words are better than bad strokes, Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words:

Witness the hole you made in Cæsar's heart, Crying, Long live! hail, Cæsar!

Cas. Antony, The posture of your blows are yet unknown;⁴ But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees, And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too.

Bru. O, yes, and soundless, too;

For you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony,

And, very wisely, threat before you sting.

Ant. Villains, you did not so, when your vile daggers

Hack'd one another in the sides of Cæsar:

You show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds,

And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Cæsar's feet;

Whilst damned Casca, like a cur, behind,

Struck Cæsar on the neck. O, flatterers!

Cas. Flatterers!—Now, Brutus, thank yourself: This tongue had not offended so to-day, If Cassius might have rul'd.

Oct. Come, come, the cause: If arguing make us sweat,

The proof of it will turn to redder drops.

Look;

I draw a sword against conspirators;

When think you that the sword goes up again:— Never, till Cæsar's three and twenty wounds⁵

1 Shakespeare has on this occasion deserted his original. It does not appear from Plutarch that the ghost of Cæsar appeared to Brutus, but 'a wonderful strange and monstrous shape of a body.' This apparition could not be at once the shade of Cæsar and the evil genius of Brutus. See the story of Cassius Parmensis in Valerius Maximus, lib. i. c. vii. Shakespeare had read the account of this vision in Plutarch's Life of Cæsar, as well as in that of Brutus; it is there called the ghost, and it is said that 'the light of the lampe waxed very dimme.' It is more than probable that the poet would consult the Life of Cæsar, as well as that of Brutus, in search of materials for his play.

2 To warn is to summon. So in King John:—

'Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walls.'

And in King Richard III.:—

'And sent to warn them to his royal presence.'

3 'Fearful bravery.' Though fearful is often used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries in an active sense, for producing fear, or terrible, it may in this instance bear its usual acception of timorous, or, as it was sometimes expressed, false-hearted. Thus in a passage, cited by Stevens, from Sidney's Arcadia, lib. ii.:—'Her horse faire and lustie; which she rid so as might show a fearful boldness, daring to do that which she knew that she knew not how to doe.'

4 'The posture of your blows are yet unknown.'

It should be 'is yet unknown'; but the error was probably the poet's: more correct writers than Shakespeare have committed this error, where a plural noun immediately precedes the verb, although it be the nominative case by which it is governed. Stevens attributes the error to the transcriber or printer, and would have it corrected; but Malone has adduced several examples of similar inaccuracy in Shakespeare's writings.

5 The old copy reads, two-and-thirty wounds. Theobald corrected the error, which Beaumont and Fletcher have also fallen into in their Noble Gentleman

Be well aveng'd; or till another Cæsar
Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.

Bru. Cæsar, thou canst not die by traitors,
Unless thou bring'st them with thee.

Oct. So I hope;

I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.

Bru. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou could'st not die more honourable.

Cas. A peevish schoolboy, worthless of such honour,

Join'd with a masker and a reveller.

Ant. Old Cassius still!

Oct. Come, Antony; away.—

Defiance, traitors, hurl! we in your teeth:

If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;

If not, when you have stomachs.

[Exeunt OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and their Army.]

Cas. Why now, blow, wind; swell, billow; and swim, bark!

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Bru. Ho!

Lucilius; hark, a word with you.

Luc. My lord.

[BRUTUS and LUCILIUS converse apart.]

Cas. Messala,—

Mes. What says my general?

Cas. Messala,²

This is my birth-day; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala:

Be thou my witness, that against my will,

As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set

Upon one battle all our liberties.

You know, that I held Epicurus strong,

And his opinion: now I change my mind,

And partly credit things that do presage.

Coming from Sardis, on our former³ ensign

Two mighty eagles fell, and there they perch'd,

Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;

Who to Philippi here consorted us;

This morning are they fled away, and gone;

And in their steads, do ravens, crows, and kites,

Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us,

As we were sickly prey;⁴ their shadows seem

A canopy most faithful, under which

Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly;

For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd

To meet all perils very constantly.

Bru. Even so, Lucilius.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,

The gods to-day stand friendly; that we may,

Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age!

But, since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,

Let's reason with the worst that may befall.

If we do lose this battle, then is this

The very last time we shall speak together:

What are you then determined to do?⁵

Bru. Even by the rule of that philosophy,

By which I did blame Cato for the death

Which he did give himself:—I know not how,

But I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent⁶
The time of life:—arming myself with patience,
To stay the providence of some high powers,
That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Through the streets of Rome?

Bru. No, Cassius, no: think not, thou noble
Roman,

That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day

Must end that work, the ides of March begun;

And whether we shall meet again, I know not.

Therefore our everlasting farewell take:—

For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!

If we do meet again, why we shall smile;

If not, why then this parting was well made.

Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!

If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed:

If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.

Bru. Why, then, lead on.—O, that a man might
know

The end of this day's business, ere it come!

But it sufficeth, that the day will end,

And then the end is known.—Come, ho! away!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. The Field of Battle.

Alarum. Enter BRUTUS and MESSALA.

Bru. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills^a

Unto the legions on the other side: [Loud Alarum.]

Let them set on at once; for I perceive

But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing,

And sudden push gives them the overthrow.

Ride, ride, Messala: let them all come down.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter CASSIUS and TITINIUS.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look; the villains fly!

Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy:

This ensign here of mine was turning back:

I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early:

Who having some advantage on Octavius,

Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,

Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.

Enter PINDARUS.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;

Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord!

Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.

Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;

Are those my tents, where I perceive the fire?

Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou lov'st me,

Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,

Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,

And here again: that I may rest assur'd,

Whether yond' troops are friend or enemy.

¹ Hurl is peculiarly expressive. The challenger was said to hurl down his gage when he threw his glove down as a pledge that he would make good his charge against his adversary.

² And interchangeably hurl down my gage
Upon this over-weening traitor's foot.

King Richard II.

Milton perhaps had this passage in mind, Paradise Lost, b. i. v. 669:—

'Hurting defiance toward the vault of Heaven.'

³ Almost every circumstance in this speech is taken from Sir Thomas North's translation of Plutarch.

⁴ I. e. fore ensign; it probably means the chief ensign. Baret has 'the former teeth [I. e. fore teeth,] dentes primores.'

⁵ So in King John:—

'As doth a raven on a sick-fallen prey.'

⁶ I. e. I am resolved in such a case to kill myself.—What are you determined of?

⁷ 'To prevent,' is here used for to anticipate. By time is meant the full and complete time; the natural period. See note on King Henry IV. Part II. Act i. Sc. 2. It has been said that there is an apparent contradiction between the sentiments Brutus expresses in this and in his subsequent speech; but there is no real inconsistency. Brutus had laid down to himself as a principle, to abide every chance and extremity of war; but when Cassius reminds him of the disgrace of being led in triumph through the streets of Rome, he acknowledges that to be a trial which he could not endure. Shakespeare, in the first speech, makes that to be the present opinion of Brutus, which in Plutarch is mentioned only as one he formerly entertained, and that, being now in the midst of danger, he was of a contrary mind.

⁸ This, though censured as ungrammatical, was the phraseology of the poet's day, as might be shown by numerous examples. But Dryden and Pope have used it, and Johnson has sanctioned it in his Dictionary:—'Begin, v. n. I began, or begun.' The fact is, that the past tense was, in our old language, written begon or begonne.

⁹ This and much of the subsequent scene is from the old translation of Plutarch:—'In the mean time Brutus, that led the right wing, sent little billes to the colonels and captains of private bandes, in which he wrote the order of the battle.'

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought.¹

[Exit.]

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill;²
My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—

[Exit PINDARUS.]

This day I breathed first: time is come round,³
And where I did begin, there shall I end;
My life is run his compass.—Sirrah,⁴ what news?

Pin. [Above.] O, my lord!

Cas. What news?

Pin. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;—
Yet he spurs on.—Now they are almost on him;
Now, Titinius!—now some 'light:—Oh, he 'lights too:—he's ta'en;—

And hark! [Shout] they shout for joy.

Cas. Come down, behold no more.—
O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!

Enter PINDARUS.

Come hither, sirrah:

In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do, [oath!
Thou should'st attempt it. Come now, keep thine
Now be a freeman; and with this good sword,
That ran through Cæsar's bowels, search this bosom.
Stand not to answer: Here, take thou the hilts;
And, when my face is cover'd as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword.—Cæsar, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

Pin. So, I am free; yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will. O, Cassius!
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him. [Exit.]

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

Mes. Where did you leave him?

Tit. All disconsolate,

With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.

Mes. Is not that he, that lies upon the ground?

Tit. He lies not like the living. O, my heart!

Mes. Is not that he?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala,
But Cassius is no more.—O, setting sun!
As in thy red rays thou dost sink to night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set;
The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone; [done!
Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.

Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed,—

O, hateful error, melancholy's child!

Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O, error, soon conceiv'd,
Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.

Tit. What, Pindarus; Where art thou, Pindarus?

Mes. Seek him, Titinius: whilst I go to meet

The noble Brutus, thrusting this report

Into his ears: I may say, thrusting it;

For piercing steel, and darts envenomed,

Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus,

As tidings of this sight.

Tit. Hie you, Messala,

And I will seek for Pindarus the while.

[Exit MESSALA.]

1 The same expression occurs in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'That which was a horse, even with a thought,
The rack dissolves.'

2 Cassius is now on a hill: he therefore means a hillock somewhat higher than that on which he now is.

3 So in Lear Lear, the Bastard, dying, says:—
'The wheel is come full circle.'

4 Sirrah, as appears from many of the old plays, was the usual address in speaking to servants and children.
See note on Macbeth, Act iv. Sc. 2.

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give 't thee? Didst thou not hear their shouts?

Alas, thou hast misconstrued every thing.
But hold thee, take this garland on thy brow;
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Cains Cassius.—
By your leave, gods:—This is a Roman's part:
Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart.

[Dies.]

Alarum. Re-enter MESSALA, with BRUTUS, young CATO, STRATO, VOLUMNIUS, and LUCILIUS.

Bru. Where, where, Messala, doth his body lie?

Mes. Lo, yonder; and Titinius mourning it.

Bru. Titinius' face is upward.

Cato.

He is slain.

Bru. O, Julius Cæsar, thou art mighty yet!

Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords

In our own proper entrails.⁵ [Low Alarums.]

Cato.

Brave Titinius!

Look, wher' he have not crown'd dead Cassius!

Bru. Are yet two Romans living such as these?

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!⁶

It is impossible, that ever Rome

Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe more tears

To this dead man, than you shall see me pay.—

I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.—

Come, therefore, and to Thasos send his body;

His funeral shall not be in our camp,

Lest it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come;—

And come, young Cato; let us to the field.—

Labeo, and Flavius, set our battles on:—

'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night

We shall try fortune in a second fight. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Another Part of the Field. Alarum.

Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both Armies; then BRUTUS, CATO, LUCILIUS, and others.

Bru. Yet, countrymen, O, yet, hold up your heads!

Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go with
me?

I will proclaim my name about the field:—

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend:

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

[Charges the Enemy.]

Bru. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I;

Brutus, my country's friend: know me for Brutus.

[Exit, charging the Enemy. CATO is overpowered, and falls.]

Luc. O, young and noble Cato, art thou down?

Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius;

And may'st be honour'd, being Cato's son.

1 Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

Luc.

Only I yield to die:

There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight;

[Offering Money.]

Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

1 Sold. We must not.—A noble prisoner!

2 Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.

1 Sold. I'll tell the news.—Here comes the general:—

Enter ANTONY.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Luc. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough:

I dare assure thee, that no enemy

5 '—populumque potentem
In sua victrici conversum viscera dextra.'

Lucan, lib. i.

6 'So when he [Brutus] was come thither, after he had lamented the death of Cassius, calling him the last of all the Romans, being impossible that Rome should ever breed againe so noble and valiant a man as he, he caused his body to be buried.—North's Plutarch.

'Objectum est Historic (Cremutio Cordo. Tacit Ann, lib. iv. 34.) quod Brutum Cassiumque ultimos Romanorum dixisset.—Suet. Tiber lib. iii. c. 61.

Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus :
The gods defend him from so great a shame !
When you do find him, or alive, or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himself.

Ant. This is not Brutus, friend ; but, I assure you,
A prize no less in worth : keep this man safe,
Give him all kindness : I had rather have Such men my friends, than enemies. Go on,
And see whe'r Brutus be alive or dead :
And bring us word, unto Octavius' tent,
How every thing is chanc'd. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Another Part of the Field. Enter BRUTUS, DARDANIUS, CLITUS, STRATO, and VOLUMNIUS.

Bru. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.

Cl. Statilius show'd the torch-light ; but, my lord,
He came not back ; he is or ta'en, or slain.¹

Bru. Sit thee down, Clitus : Slaying is the word ;
It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.—

[Whispering.]
Cl. What, I, my lord ? No, not for all the world.

Bru. Peace, then, no words.

Cl. I'll rather kill myself.

Bru. Hark thee, Dardanius ! [Whispers him.]

Dar. I do such a deed ?

Cl. O, Dardanius !

Dar. O, Clitus !

Cl. What ill request did Brutus make to thee ?

Dar. To kill him, Clitus : Look, he meditates.

Cl. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.

Bru. Come hither, good Volumnius : list a word.

Vol. What says my lord ?

Bru. Why, this, Volumnius :
The ghost of Cæsar hath appear'd to me
Two several times by night : at Sardis, once ;
And, this last night, here in Philippi's fields.
I know, my hour is come.

Vol. Not so, my lord.

Bru. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes ;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit :
It is more worthy to leap in ourselves,
Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,
Thou know'st that we two went to school together ;
Even for that our love of old, I pray thee,
Hold thou my sword-hilts,² whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.]
Cl. Fly, fly, my lord ; there is no tarrying here.

Bru. Farewell to you ;—and you ;—and you,
Volumnius.—

1 A passage from Plutarch will illustrate this scene :—'Furthermore, Brutus thought that there was no great number of men slain in battell, and to know the truth of it there was one called Statilius, that promised to goe through his enemies, (for otherwise it was impossible to goe see their campe,) and from thence, if all were well, that he would lift up a torch-light in the aire, and then returne againe with speed to him. The torch-light was lift up as he had promised, for Statilius went thither. Nowe Brutus seeing Statilius tarie long after, and that he came not againe, he sayd : If Statilius be alive, he will come againe. But his evil fortune was suche that, as he came backe, he lighted in his enemies' hauds, and was slaine. Now the night being farre spent, Brutus, as he sate, bowed towarde Clitus, one of his men, and told him somewhat in his eare ; the other answered him not, but fell a weeping. Thereupon he proved Dardanius, and sayd somewhat also to him : at length he came to Volumnius him selfe, and speaking to him in Greeke, prayed him for the studies sake which brought them acquainted together, that he would helpe him to put his hande to his sword, to thrust it in him to kill him. Volumnius denied his request, and so did many others : and amongst the rest one of them said there was no tarrying for them there, but that they must needs flie. Then Brutus rising up, We must flie in leede, sayd he ; but it must be with our hands, not with our feete. Then taking every man by the hand, he sayd these words unto them with a chearful countenance :—I rejoyceth my hart that no one of my friends hath failed me at my neede, and I do not complayne of Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep ;

Farewell to thee, too, Strato.—Countrymen,
My heart doth joy, that yet, in all my life,
I found no man, but he was true to me.
I shall have glory by this losing day,
More than Octavius, and Mark Antony,
By this vile conquest shall attain unto.
So, fare you well at once ; for Brutus' tongue
Hath almost ended his life's history :
Night hangs upon mine eyes ; my bones would rest,
That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within ; Fly, fly, fly.]
Cl. Fly, my lord, fly.

Bru. Hence ; I will follow.

[Exeunt CLITUS, DARDANIUS, and VOLUMNIUS.]

I pr'ythee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord :
Thou art a fellow of a good respect ;
Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in it :
Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,
While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato ?

Strato. Give me your hand first : Fare you well,
my lord.

Bru. Farewell, good Strato.—Cæsar, now be still :

I kill'd not thee with half so good a will.

[He runs on his Sword and dies.]

Alarum. Retreat. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, MESSALA, LUCILIUS, and their Army.

Oct. What man is that ?

Mes. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy master ?

Strato. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala ;
The conquerors can but make a fire of him ;
For Brutus only overcame himself,
And no man else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee,
Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain them.³

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me ?

Strato. Ay, if Messala will prefer⁴ me to you.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.

Mes. How died my master, Strato ?

Strato. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all :

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar ;
He, only, in a general honest thought,
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle ; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, This was a man !⁵

my fortune, but only for my countries sake : for as for me, I thinke myselfe happier than they that have overcome, considering that I leave a perpetual fame of our corage and manhoode, the which our enemies the conquerors shall never attaine unto by force nor money, neither can let their posteritie to say, that they have beene naughty and unjust men, have slaine good men to usurpe tyrannical power not pertaining to them. Having sayd so, he prayd every man to shift for themselves, and then he went a little aside, &c.

2 Hilts is frequently used where only one weapon is spoken of. Cassius says to Findarus, in a former scene, 'Here, take thou the hilts.' And, King Richard III. :—'Take him over the costard with the hilts of thy sword.' So in the Mirror for Magistrates, 1597 :—

'—A naked sword he had,
That to the hilts was all with blood imbrued.'

3 I. e. receive them into my service.

4 To prefer seems to have been the general term for recommending a servant. Thus in The Merchant of Venice, Act iii. Sc. 2 :

'Shylock thy master, spoke with me this day,
And hath preferr'd thee.'

Its usual sense was 'to advance, or set before others.'

5 Drayton, in his Barons' Wars, has a similar passage, thus given by Steevens :—

'He was a man (then boldly dare to say)
In whose rich soul the virtues well did suit,

Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,
With all respect and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.—
So, call the field to rest : and let's away,
To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.]

OF this tragedy many particular passages deserve regard, and the contention and reconciliation of Brutus and Cassius is universally celebrated ; but I have never

*In whom so mix'd the elements all lay,
That none to one could sov'reignty impute ;
As all did govern, so all did obey :
He of a temper was so absolute,
As that it seem'd when nature him began,
She meant to show all that might be in man.'*

He afterwards revised the poem, which was, I believe, first published, under the title of the Barons' Wars, in 1603 ; and the stanza is thus exhibited in that edition :—

*'Such one he was (of him we boldly say),
In whose rich soule all sovraigne powers did sute ;
In whom in pace the elements all lay
So mix'd, as none could sovraigntie impute ;*

been strongly agitated in perusing it ; and I think it somewhat cold and unaffecting, compared with some other of Shakspeare's plays : his adherence to the real story, and to Roman manners, seem to have impeded the natural vigour of his genius. JOHNSON.

Gildon has justly observed that this tragedy ought to have been called Marcus Brutus, Cæsar being a very inconsiderable personage in the scene, and being killed in the third act.

*As all did govern, yet did all obey ;
His lively temper was so absolute,
That seem'd, when heaven his modell first began,
In him it shew'd perfection in a man.'*

The poem originally appeared under the title of 'Mortimeriados,' in 1506 ; but Malone says, there is no trace of the stanza in the poem in that form. He is wrong in asserting that the Barons' Wars were first published in 1608, as the following title-page of my copy will show :—'The Barons' Wars, in the reign of Edward the Second, with England's Heroicall Epistles, by Michaell Drayton. At London, printed by J. R. for N. Ling, 1603.' So that, if Malone be right in placing the date of composition of Julius Cæsar in 1607, Shakspeare imitated Drayton.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

AFTER a perusal of this play, the reader will, I doubt not, be surprised when he sees what Johnson has asserted :—That 'its power of delighting is derived principally from the frequent changes of the scene ;—and that 'no character is very strongly discriminated.' If our great poet has one supereminent dramatic quality in perfection, it is that of being able 'to go out of himself at pleasure to inform and animate other existences.' It is true, that in the number of characters many persons of historical importance are merely introduced as passing shadows in the scene ; but 'the principal personages are most emphatically distinguished by lineament and colouring, and powerfully arrest the imagination.' The character of Cleopatra is indeed a masterpiece : though Johnson pronounces that she is 'only distinguished by feminine arts, some of which are too low.' It is true that her seductive arts are in no respect veiled over ; but she is still the gorgeous Eastern Queen, remarkable for the fascination of her manner, if not for the beauty of her person ; and though she is vain, ostentatious, fickle, and luxurious, there is that heroic regal dignity about her, which makes us, like Antony, forget her defects :
'Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety. Other women cloy
Th' appetites they feed ; but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies.'

The mutual passion of herself and Antony is without moral dignity, yet it excites our sympathy :—they seem formed for each other. Cleopatra is no less remarkable for her seductive charms, than Antony for the splendour of his martial achievements. Her death, too, redeems one part of her character, and obliterates all faults.

Warburton has observed that Antony was Shakspeare's hero ; and the defects of his character, so lavish and luxurious spirit, seem almost virtues when opposed to the heartless and narrow-minded littleness of Octavius Cæsar. But the ancient historians, his flatterers, had delivered the latter down ready cut and dried for a hero ; and Shakspeare has extricated himself with great address from the dilemma. He has admitted all those great strokes of his character as he found them, and yet has made him a very unamiable character, deceitful, mean-spirited, proud, and revengeful.

Schlegel attributes this to the penetration of Shakspeare, who was not to be led astray by the false glitter of historic fame, but saw through the disguise thrown around him by his successful fortunes, and distinguished in Augustus a man of little mind.

Malone places the composition of this play in 1608. No previous edition to that of the folio of 1623 has been hitherto discovered ; but there is an entry of 'A Booke called Antony and Cleopatra,' to Edward Blount, in 1608, on the Stationers' books.

Shakspeare followed Plutarch, and appears to have been anxious to introduce every incident and every personage he met with in his historian. Plutarch mentions Lamprius his grandfather, as authority for some of the stories he relates of the profuseness and luxury of Antony's entertainments at Alexandria. In the stage-direction of Scene 2, Act 1. in the old copy, Lamprius, Ramnus, and Lucillus are made to enter with the rest ; but they have no part in the dialogue, nor do their names appear in the list of Dramatis Personæ.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Alexandria. A Room in Cleopatra's Palace. Enter DEMETRIUS and PHILO.

Philo.

NAY, but this dotage of our general's O'erflows the measure: those his goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn,
The office and devotion of their view
Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges¹ all temper;
And is become the bellows, and the fan,
To cool a gipsy's lust. Look where they come!

Flourish. Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA, with their Trains; Eunuchs fanning her.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple² pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's fool: behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.³

Cleo. I'll set a bourn how far to be belov'd.

Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.⁴

Enter an Attendant.

Ant. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me:—The sum.⁵

Cleo. Nay, hear them,⁶ Antony:

Fulvia, perchance, is angry; Or, who knows
If the scarce-bearded Cæsar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you, Do this, or this:
Take in' that kingdom, and enfranchise that;
Perform't, or else we damn thee.

1 i. e. renounces. The metre would be improved by reading reneges, or reneies, a word used by Chaucer and other of our elder writers: but we have in King Lear, reneege, affirm, &c. Stanyhurst, in his version of the second book of the Æneid, has the word:—

'To live now longer, Troy burst, he flatly reneageth.'

2 Triple is here used for third, or one of three; one of the Triumvirs, one of the three masters of the world. To sustain the pillars of the earth is a scriptural phrase. Triple is used for third in All's Well that Ends Well:

'Which, as the dearest issue of his practice;
He bade me store up as a triple eye.'

3 So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'They are but beggars that can count their worth.'
And in Much Ado about Nothing:

'I were but little happy, if I could say how much.'

⁴ Basia pauca cupit, qui numerare potest.

Martial, vi. 36.

4 'Then must you set the boundary at a distance greater than the present visible universe affords.'

5 'Be brief, sum thy business in a few words.'

6 i. e. the news; which was considered plural in Shakespeare's time. See King Richard III. Act IV. Sc. 4.

7 Take in, it has before been observed, signifies subdue, conquer.

Ant. How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance,—nay, and most like,
You must not stay here longer, your dismission
Is come from Cæsar; therefore hear it, Antony.—
Where's Fulvia's process? Cæsar's, I would say?

—Both?

Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's queen,
Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Cæsar's homager: else so thy cheek pays shame,
When shrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds.—The messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt! and the wide arch
Of the rang'd⁷ empire fall! Here is my space;
Kingdoms are clay: our dunghy earth alike
Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life
Is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair,

Embracing.

And such a twain can do't, in which, I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weed,⁸
We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood!

Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?—
I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
Will be himself.

Ant. But¹¹ stirr'd by Cleopatra.—

Now, for the love of Love,¹² and her soft hours,
Let's not confound¹³ the time with conference harsh:
There's not a minute of our lives should stretch
Without some pleasure now: What sport to-night?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fie, wrangling queen!

Whom every thing becomes,¹⁴ to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose¹⁵ every passion fully strives
To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd!
No messenger; but thine and all alone,
To-night, we'll wander through the streets, and note

8 Process here means summons. 'Lawyers call that the process by which a man is called into the court, and no more. To serve with process is to cite, to summon.'—Minshew.

9 The rang'd empire is the well arranged, well ordered empire. Shakespeare uses the expression again in Coriolanus:—

'—bury all which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruins.'

10 To weep is to know.

11 I think that Johnson has entirely mistaken the meaning of this passage, and believe Mason's explanation nearly correct. Cleopatra means to say that 'Antony will act like himself,' (i. e. nobly,) without regard to the mandates of Cæsar or the anger of Fulvia. To which he replies, 'But stirr'd by Cleopatra,' i. e. 'Add, if moved to it by Cleopatra.' This is a compliment to her. Johnson was wrong in supposing but to be used here in its exceptive sense.

12 That is, 'for the sake of the Queen of Love.'

13 To confound the time, is to consume it, to lose it.

14 'Quicquid enim dicit, seu facit, omne decet.'

Marellus, lib. II.

See Shakespeare's 150th Sonnet.

15 The folio reads, who, every, &c.: corrected by Rowe.

The qualities of people.¹ Come, my queen ;
Last night you did desire it :—Speak not to us.

[Exeunt ANT. and CLEO. with their Train.]

Dem. Is Cæsar with Antonius priz'd so slight?

Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
He comes too short of that great property
Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I'm full sorry,
That he approves the common liar,² who
Thus speaks of him at Rome : But I will hope
Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Another Room. Enter
CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen?
O, that I knew this husband, which, you say, must charge his horns with garlands!³

Alex. Soothsayer.

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man?—Is't you, sir, that know things?

Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy,
A little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand.

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine enough,
Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means, in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall part when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more beloved, than beloved.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking.⁴

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune! Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all: let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage:⁵ find me to marry me with Octavius Cæsar, and companion me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than figs.

Sooth. You have seen and proved a fairer former fortune
Than that which is to approach.

Char. Then, belike, my children shall have no names:⁶ Pr'ythee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb,
And fertile⁷ every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool; I forgive thee for a witch.⁸

Alex. You think, none but your sheets are lively to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be—drunk to bed.

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the o'erflowing Nilus presageth famine.

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot sooth say.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication,⁹ I cannot scratch mine ear.—Pr'ythee, tell her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how, but how? give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.

Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worse thoughts heavens mend!—
Alexas,—come, his fortune, his fortune.—O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee! And let her die, too, and give him a worse! and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight; good Isis,
I beseech thee!

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncuckolded: Therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo, now! if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they'd do't.

Eno. Hush! here comes Antony.

Char. Not he, the queen.

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No, madam.

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth; but on the sudden
A Roman thought hath struck him.—Enobarbus,—

Eno. Madam.

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's Alexas?

Alex. Here, madam, at your service.—My lord approaches.

Enter ANTONY, with a Messenger and Attendants.

Cleo. We will not look upon him: Go with us.

[Exeunt CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, ALEXAS, IRAS, CHARMIAN, Soothsayer, and Attendants.]

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field

Ant. Against my brother Lucius?

Mess. Ay:

But soon that war had end, and the time's state at such power and dominion that the proudest and fiercest monarchs of the earth may be brought under his yoke. It should be remembered that Herod of Jewry was a favourite character in the mysteries of the old stage, and that he was always represented a fierce, haughty, blustering tyrant.

⁶ That is, prove bastards. Thus in the Rape of Lucrece:—

'Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy.'

And Launce, in the third act of The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—'That's as much as to say bastard virtues, that indeed know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.' A fairer fortune means a more serene or more prosperous fortune.

⁷ The old copy reads, foretel. Warburton has the merit of the emendation.

⁸ This has allusion to the common proverbial saying,
'You'll never be burnt for a witch,' spoken to a silly person, who is indeed no conjuror.

⁹ This prognostic is alluded to in Othello:—

'—This hand is moist, my lady:—

This argues fruitfulness and liberal heart.'

¹ 'Sometimes also when he would goe up and down the city disguised like a slave in the night, and would peere into poor mens windows and their shops, and cold and brawl with them within the house; Cleopatra would be also in a chambermaid's array, and amble up and down the streets with him.'

Life of Antonius in North's Plutarch.

² 'That he proves the common liar, Fame, in his case to be a true reporter.' Shakspeare usually uses approve for prove, and approve for proof.

³ The old copy reads, 'change his horns,' &c. A similar error of change for charge is also found in Co- riolanus.

⁴ The liver being considered the seat of love, Char- man says she would rather heat her liver with drinking than with love's fire. A heated liver was supposed to make a pimply face.

⁵ This (says Johnson) is one of Shakspeare's natural touches. Few circumstances are more flattering to the fair sex, than breeding at an advanced period of life. Charman wishes for a son too who may arrive

Made friends of them, jointing their force 'gainst
Cæsar;

Whose better issue in the war, from Italy,
Upon the first encounter, drave¹ them.

Ant. Well,
What worst?

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the teller.

Ant. When it concerns the fool or coward.—On:
Things, that are past, are done, with me.—'Tis
thus;

Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death,
I hear him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labienus
(This is stiff² news) hath, with his Parthian force,
Extended³ Asia from Euphrates;
His conquering banner shook, from Syria
To Lydia, and to Ionia;
Whilst—

Ant. Antony, thou would'st say,—

Mess. O, my lord!

Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general
tongue;

Name Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome:
Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase: and taunt my faults
With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth weeds,
When our quick minds⁴ lie still: and our ills told us,
Is as our earing. Fare thee well a while.

Mess. At your noble pleasure. [Exit.

Ant. From Sicily how the news? Speak there.

1 Att. The man from Sicily.—Is there such a one?

2 Att. He stays upon your will.

Ant. Let him appear,—
These strong Egyptian fetters I must break,

Enter another Messenger.

Or lose myself in dotage.—What are you?

2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where died she?

2 Mess. In Sicily:
Her length of sickness, with what else more serious
Importeth thee to know, this bears. [Gives a letter.

Ant. Forbear me.—

[Exit Messenger.

There's a great spirit gone: Thus did I desire it:
What our contempts do often hurl from us,
We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
By revolution lowering, does become
The opposite of itself:⁵ she's good, being gone;
The hand could⁶ pluck her back, that shov'd her on.
I must from this enchanting queen break off;
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women: We see how mortal an unkindness is to them: if they suffer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women

1 Drave is the ancient preterite of the verb to drive, and frequently occurs in the Bible.

2 'Stiff news' is 'hard news.' As in Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece:

'Fearing some hard news from the warlike band.'

3 'Extended Asia from Euphrates.'

To extend is a law term for to seize. Thus in Selimus, Emperor of the Turks, 1594:—

'Ay, though on all the world we make extent,
From the south pole unto the northern bear.'

4 The old copy reads, 'quick winds'; an error which has occurred elsewhere. Warburton made the correction. 'Our quick minds' means our lively apprehensive minds; which, when they lie idle, bring forth virtues instead of virtues, weeds instead of flowers and fruits; to tell us of our faults is, as it were, the first culture of the mind, and is the way to kill these weeds.

5 'The pleasure of to-day, by revolution of events and change of circumstances, often loses all its value to us, and becomes to-morrow a pain.'

6 Could is here used with an optative meaning.—Could would and should are often used by our old writers: It were pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly; I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment: I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.

Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: We cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacks can report: this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. 'Would, I had never seen her!

Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work: which not to have been blessed withal, would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir?

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new.⁸ If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented; this grief is crowned with consolation; your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:—and, indeed, the tears live in an onion, that should water this sorrow.

Ant. The business she hath broached in the state, Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends upon your abode.

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers Have notice what we purpose. I shall break The cause of our expedience⁹ to the queen, And get her love¹⁰ to part. For not alone The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches, Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too Of many our contriving friends in Rome Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands The empire of the sea: our slippery people, (Whose love is never link'd to the deserver, Till his deserts are past,) begin to throw Pompey the Great, and all his dignities, Upon his son: who, high in name and power, Higher than both in blood and life, stands up For the main soldier: whose quality, going on, The sides o' the world may danger: Much is breeding,

Which, like the courser's¹¹ hair, hath yet but life, And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure, To such whose place is under us, requires Our quick remove from hence.¹²

Eno. I shall do't.

[Exeunt.

ters, in what appears to us an indiscriminate manner, and yet appear to have been so employed rather by choice than chance.

7 i. e. for less reason, upon a weaker motive.

8 'As the gods have been pleased to take away your wife Fulvia, so they have provided you with a new one in Cleopatra; in like manner as the tailors of the earth, when your old garments are worn out, accommodate you with new ones.'

9 Expedition.

10 I think with Mason that we should read leave instead of love.

11 This alludes to the ancient vulgar error, that a horse hair dropped into corrupted water would become animated. Dr. Lister, in the Philosophical Transactions, showed that these animated horse-hairs were real insects, and displayed the fallacy of the popular opinion. It was asserted that these insects moved like serpents, and were poisonous to swallow.

12 'Say to those whose place is under us (i. e. to our attendants,) that our pleasure requires us to remove in haste from hence.'

SCENE III. Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he does:—

I did not send you;¹—If you find him sad,
Say, I am dancing: if in mirth, report
That I am sudden sick: Quick, and return.

[Exit ALEX.]

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,

You do not hold the method to enforce
The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not?

Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool: the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so too far: I wish, forbear;
In time we hate that which we often fear.

Enter ANTONY.

But here comes Antony.

Cleo. I am sick, and sullen.

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose,—

Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian, I shall fall;
It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature
Will not sustain it.²

Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—

Cleo. Pray you, stand further from me.

Ant. What's the matter?

Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.

What says the married woman?—You may go;
'Would, she had never given you leave to come!
Let her not say, 'tis I that keep you here,
I have no power upon you; hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know,—

Cleo. O, never was there queen
So mightily betray'd! Yet, at the first,
I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Why should I think, you can be mine, and true,

'Though you in swearing shake the throned gods,
Who have been false to Fulvia? Riotous madness,
To be entangled with those mouth-made vows,
Which break themselves in swearing!

Ant. Most sweet queen,—

Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going,

But bid farewell, and go: when you sued staying,
Then was the time for words: No going then;—
Eternity was in our lips and eyes;
Bliss in our brows' bent;³ none our parts so poor,
But was a race⁴ of heaven: They are so still,
Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world,
Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady!

Cleo. I would, I had thy inches; thou should'st know,

There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, queen;

The strong necessity of time commands

1 'You must go as if you came without my order or knowledge.' So in Troilus and Cressida:—

'We met by chance; you did not find me here.'

2 Thus in Twelfth Night:—

'There is no woman's sides
Can bide the beating of so strong a passion.'

3 'Our brows' bent,' is the bending or inclination of our brows. The brow is that part of the face which expresses most fully the mental emotions. So in King John:—

'Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?'

4 i. e. of heavenly mould.

'Divine stirpis alumnus.'

5 The poet here means, 'in pledge,' the use of a thing is the possession of it. Thus in The Merchant of Venice:—

'I am content, so he will let me have

The other half in use.'

6 Gate.

Our services a while; but my full heart
Remains in use⁷ with you. Our Italy
Shines o'er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approaches to the port⁸ of Rome:
Equality of two domestic powers Breeds scrupulous faction: The hated, grown to strength,

Are newly grown to love: the condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his father's honour, creeps apace
Into the hearts of such as have not thriv'd
Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;
And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge
By any desperate change: My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe⁹ my going,
Is Fulvia's death.

Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me freedom,

It does from childishness:—Can Fulvia die?⁹

Ant. She's dead, my queen:

Look here, and, at thy sovereign leisure, read
The garbols she awak'd;⁹ at the last, best:
See, when, and where she died.

Cleo. O, most false love:
Where be the sacred vials thou should'st fill
With sorrowful water?¹⁰ I see, I see,
In Fulvia's death, how mine receiv'd shall be.

Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepar'd to know
The purposes I bear; which are, or cease,
As you shall give the advice: By the fire,
That quickens Nilus' slime, I go from hence,
Thy soldier, servant; making peace, or war,
As thou affect'st.

Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come;—
But let it be.—I am quickly ill, and well:
So Antony loves.

Ant. My precious queen, forbear;
And give true evidence to his love, which stands
An honourable trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I pry thee, turn aside, and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say, the tears
Belong to Egypt:¹¹ Good, now, play one scene
Of excellent dissembling; and let it look Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll heat my blood; no more.

Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is meetly.

Ant. Now, by my sword,—

Cleo. And target,—Still he mends;
But this is not the best: Look, pry thee, Charmian,
How this Herculean Roman¹² does become
The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.

Sir, you and I must part,—but that's not it:
Sir, you and I have lov'd,—but there's not it:
That you know well: Something it is I would,—
O, my oblivion¹³ is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your royalty
Holds idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself.¹⁴

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour,
To bear such idleness so near the heart
As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me;
Since my becomings kill me, when they do not

7 i. e. render my going not dangerous.

8 Cleopatra apparently means to say, 'Though age could not exempt me from folly, at least it frees me from a childish and ready belief of every assertion. Is it possible that Fulvia is dead? I cannot believe it.'

9 The commotion she occasioned.

10 Alluding to the lachrymatory vials filled with tears, which the Romans placed in the tomb of a departed friend.

11 To me, the queen of Egypt.

12 Antony traced his descent from Anton, a son of Hercules.

13 Oblivion is used for oblivious memory, a memory apt to be deceitful.

14 An antithesis seems intended between royalty and subject. 'But that I know you to be a queen, and that your royalty holds idleness in subjection to you, I should suppose you, from this idle discourse, to be the very genius of idleness itself.'

Eye well to you:¹ Your honour calls you hence ;
Therefore be deaf to my unpitied folly,
And all the gods go with you ! upon your sword
Sit laurel'd victory ! and smooth success
Be strew'd before your feet !

Ant. Let us go. Come ;
Our separation so abides, and flies,
That thou, residing here, go'st yet with me,
And I, hence fleeting, here remain with thee.²
Away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Rome. An Apartment in Cæsar's House. Enter OCTAVIUS CÆSAR, LEPIDUS, and Attendants.

Cæs. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It is not Cæsar's natural vice to hate
Our great competitor:³ From Alexandria
This is the news ; He fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamps of night in revel ; is not more manlike
Than Cleopatra ; nor the queen of Ptolemy
More womanly than he ; hardly gave audience, or Vouchsaf'd to think he had partners : you shall find
there

A man, who is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think, there are
Evils enough to darken all his goodness :
His faults, in him, seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness ;⁴ hereditary,
Rather than purchas'd ;⁵ what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses.

Cæs. You are too indulgent : Let us grant it is not

Amiss to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy ;
To give a kingdom for a mirth ; to sit
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave ;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knaves that smell of sweat : say, this becomes
him,

(As his composure must be rare indeed, Whom these things cannot blemish,) yet must Antony

No way excuse his soils, when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness.⁶ If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him⁷ for't : but to confound such time,
That drums him from his sport, and speaks as loud
As his own state, and ours,—'tis to be chid
As we rate boys ; who, being mature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Here's more news.

Mes. Thy biddings have been done : and every hour,
Most noble Cæsar, shalt thou have report
How 'tis abroad. Pompey is strong at sea ;

1 'That which would seem to become me most, is hateful to me when it is not acceptable in your sight.'
There is perhaps an allusion to what Antony said in the first scene :—

— wrangling queen,
Whom every thing becomes.'

2 This conceit may have been suggested by the following passage in Sidney's Arcadia, b. i. :—

'She went, they staid ; or rightly for to say,
She staid with them, they went in thought with her.'
Thus also in the Mercator of Plautus :— 'Si domi sum, foris est amicus ; sin foris sum, amicus domi est.'

3 The old copy reads, 'One great competitor.' Dr.
Johnson proposed the emendation. So Menas says :—
'These three world-sharers, these competitors
Are in thy vessel.'

4 'As the stars or spots of heaven appear more bright and prominent from the darkness of the night, so the faults of Antony seem enlarged and aggravated by his goodness, which gives relief to his faults, and makes them show out more prominent and conspicuous.'

5 i. e. procured by his own fault.

6 'His trifling levity throws so much burden upon us.'
7 i. e. 'visit him fort.' 'If Antony followed his debaucheries at times of leisure only, I should leave him to be punished (says Cæsar) by their natural conse-

And it appears, he is belov'd of those
That only have fear'd Cæsar :⁸ to the ports
The discontents⁹ repair, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Cæs. I should have known no less :—
It hath been taught us from the primal state,
That he, which is, was wish'd until he were ;
And the ebb'd man, ne'er lov'd till ne'er worth love,
Comes dear'd, by being lack'd.¹⁰ This common
body,

Like a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lacheking the varying tide,¹¹
To rot itself with motion.

Mes. Cæsar, I bring thee word,
Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates,
Make the sea serve them ; which they ear¹² and wound

With keels of every kind : Many hot inroads
They make in Italy : the borders maritime Lack blood¹³ to think on't, and flush¹⁴ youth revolt :
No vessel can peep forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen ; for Pompey's name strikes more,
Than could his war resisted.

Cæs. Antony,
Leave thy lascivious wassals.¹⁵ When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow ; whom thou fought'st against,
Though daintily brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer ; Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle¹⁶
Which beasts would cough at : thy palate then did deign

The roughest berry on the rudest hedge ;
Yea, like a stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The barks of trees thou browsed'st ; on the Alps
It is reported, thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on : And all this,
(It wounds thine honour, that I speak it now,)
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'Tis pity of him.

Cæs. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome : 'Tis time we twain
Did show ourselves i' the field ; and, to that end, Assemble we immediate council : Pompey
Thrives in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Cæsar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able,
To 'front this present time,

Cæs. 'Till which encounter,

It is my business too, Farewell.

Lep. Farewell, my lord ; What you shall know mean time

Of stirs abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be partaker.

Cæs. Doubt not, sir ;
I knew it for my bond.¹⁷ [Exeunt.]

quences, by surfeits and dry bones ; but to consume each time,' &c.

8 'Those whom not love but fear made adherents to Cæsar, now show their affection for Pompey.'

9 That is, the matecontents. So in King Henry VI.
Part i. Act v. Sc. 1 :—

— that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings and poor discontents.'

10 The old copy reads, 'Comes fear'd by being lack'd.'
Warburton made the correction, which was necessary to the sense. Coriolanus says :—

'I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd.'
We should perhaps read in the preceding line :—
— ne'er lov'd till not worth love.'

11 The folio reads, 'lashing the varying tide.' The emendation, which is well supported by Steevens, was made by Theobald. Perhaps another Messenger should be noted as entering here with fresh news.

12 Plough.

13 i. e. turn pale.

14 Flush youth is youth ripened to manhood, youth whose blood is at the flow.

15 Wassals, or wassails, is here put for intemperance in general.

16 All these circumstances of Antony's distress are literally taken from Plutarch.

17 That is, to be my bounden duty.

SCENE V. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Charmian,—

Char. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha!

Give me to drink mandragora.¹

Char. Why, madam?

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of time,

My Antony is away.

Char. You think of him

Too much.

Cleo. O, 'tis treason!

Char. Madam, I trust, not so.

Cleo. Thou, eunuch! Mardian!

Mar. What's your highness' pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing; I take no pleasure

In aught an eunuch has: 'Tis well for thee,

That, being unseminar'd, thy freer thoughts

May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed?

Mar. Not in deed, madam; for I can do nothing

But what indeed is honest to be done:

Yet have I fierce affections, and think,

What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O, Charmian,

Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?

Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?

O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony!

Do bravely, horse! for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st?

The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm

And burget² of men.—He's speaking now,

Or murmuring, Where's my serpent of old Nile?

For so he calls me: Now I feed myself

With most delicious poison:³—Think on me,

That am with Phœbus' amorous pinches black,

And wrinkled deep in time? Broad-fronted Cæsar,⁴

When thou wast here above the ground, I was

A morsel for a monarch: and great Pompey

Would stand, and make his eyes grow in my brow;

There would he anchor his aspect, and die

With looking on his life.

Enter ALEXAS.

Alex. Sovereign of Egypt, hail!

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark Antony!

Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath

With its tinct gilded thee.⁵

How goes it with my brave Mark Antony?

Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen,

He kiss'd,—the last of many doubled kisses,

This orient pearl:—His speech sticks in my heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alex. Good friend, quoth he,

Say, The firm Roman to great Egypt sends

This treasure of an oyster; at whose foot

To mend the pretty present, I will piece

1 A plant, of which the infusion was supposed to procure sleep. Thus in Addington's translation of The Golden Ass of Apuleius:—'I gave him no poison but a doling drink of mandragoras, which is of such force, that it will cause any man to sleepe as though he were dead.' See Pliny's Natural History by Holland, 1601; and Plutarch's Morals, 1602, p. 19.

2 A burget is a helmet, a head-piece.

3 Hence perhaps Pope's Eloisa:—

'Still drink delicious poison from thine eye.'

4 'Broad-fronted,' in allusion to Cæsar's baldness.

5 Alluding to the philosopher's stone, which, by its touch, converts base metal into gold. The alchemists call the matter, whatever it be, by which they perform transmutation, a medicine. Thus Chapman in his Shadow of Night, 1594:—

'O then, thou great elixir of all treasures.'

And on this passage he has the following note:—'The philosopher's stone, or philosophica medicina, is called the great elixir.'

6 The old copy reads 'an arm-gaunt seed,' upon which conjecture has been vainly employed. Steevens adopted Monck Mason's suggestion of 'a termagant seed,' with high commendation. A striking objection to that reading, which escaped Mr. Steevens in adopt-

Her opulent throne with kingdoms; All the east, Say thou, shall call her mistress. So he nodded, And soberly did mount an arrogant⁶ steed, Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke Was beastly dumb⁷ by him.

Cleo. What, was he sad, or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o' the year, between the extremes

Of the hot and cold; he was nor sad, nor merry.

Cleo. O well-divided disposition!—Note him,

Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note him;

He was not sad; for he would shine on those

That make their looks by his: he was not merry;

Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay

In Egypt with his joy: but between both;

O heavenly mingle!—Be'st thou sad, or merry,

The violence of either thee becomes;

So does it no man else.—Met'st thou my posts?

Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers:

Why do you send so thick?⁸

Cleo. Who's born that day

When I forget to send to Antony,

Shall die a beggar.—Ink and paper, Charmian.—

Welcome, my good Alexas,—Did I, Charmian,

Ever love Cæsar so?

Char. O that brave Cæsar!

Cleo. Be chok'd with such another emphasis!

Say, the brave Antony.

Char. The valiant Cæsar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth,

If thou with Cæsar paragon again

My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,

I sing but after you.

Cleo. My sallad days:

When I was green in judgment:—Cold in blood,

To say, as I said then!—But, come, away:

Get me ink and paper: he shall have every day

A several greeting, or I'll unpeople Egypt.

[Exeunt]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Messina. A Room in Pompey's House.

Enter POMPEY, MENECEPATES, and MENAS.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist
The deeds of justest men.

Mene. Know, worthy Pompey,
That what they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne, decays

The thing we sue for.⁹

Mene. We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers
Deny us for our good; so find we profit,
By losing of our prayers.

ing it, is that an could never stand before termagant. The epithet now admitted into the text is the happy suggestion of Mr. Boaden, and is to be preferred both on account of its more striking propriety, and because it admits of the original article an retaining its place before it. That it is an epithet fitly applied to the steed of Antony, may be shown by high poetical authority. In the Auraco Domado of Lope de Vega, the reader will find the following passage:—

'Y el cavallo arrogante, in que subido

El hombre parecia

Monstruosa fiera que sies pies tenia.'

Termagant, it should be observed, is furious; arrogant, which answers to the Latin ferox, is only fierce, proud. Our great poet 'of imagination all compact,' is the greatest master of poetic diction the world has yet produced; he could not have any knowledge of the Spanish poet, but has anticipated him in the use of this expressive epithet. The word arrogant, as written in old MSS. might easily be mistaken for arm-gaunt.

7 Thus the old copy; which was altered by Theobald to dumb'd without necessity. The arrogant steed, says Alexas, would let no sound be heard but his own, he neigh'd so loud that what I would have spoke was beastly obstructed by him.

8 i. e. in such quick succession.

9 'While we are praying, the thing for which we pray is losing its value.'

Pom. I shall do well :
The people love me, and the sea is mine ;
My power's a crescent,¹ and my auguring hope
Says, it will come to the full. Mark Antony
In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make
No wars without doors : Cæsar gets money, where He loses hearts : Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd ; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.

Men. Cæsar and Lepidus
Are in the field ; a mighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where have you this ? 'tis false.

Men. From Silvius, sir.

Pom. He dreams ; I know, they are in Rome together,

Looking for Antony : But all the charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan'd² lip !
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both !
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming : Epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite ;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even till³ a lethe'd dulness.—How now, Varrius ?

Enter VARRIUS.

Var. This is most certain that I shall deliver :
Mark Antony is every hour in Rome
Expected ; since he went from Egypt, 'tis
A space for further travel.⁴

Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear.—Menas, I did not think,
This amorous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm
For such a petty war : his soldiiership
Is twice the other twain : But let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow⁵ pluck
The ne'er lust-wearied Antony.

Men. I cannot hope,⁶
Cæsar and Antony shall well greet together :
His wife, that's dead, did trespasses to Cæsar ;
His brother warr'd upon him ; although, I think,
Not mov'd by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,
How lesser enmities may give way to greater.
Were't not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant they should square⁷ between themselves ;

For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords : but how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know.
Be it as our gods will have it ! It only stands
Our lives upon,⁸ to use our strongest hands.
Come, Menas. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rome. A Room in the House of Lepidus. Enter ENOBARBUS and LEPIDUS.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your captain
To soft and gentle speech.

Eno. I shall entreat him
To answer like himself : if Cæsar move him,

1 Old copy, 'My powers are crescent,' &c. The judicious emendation was made by Theobald.

2 I. e. thy wann'd or pallid lip. It should be remarked that the lips of Africans and Asiatics are paler than those of Europeans.

3 I. e. delay his sense of honour from exerting itself till he is become habitually sluggish ; till was anciently used for to. So in Candlemas Day, 1512.

'This lurdyn take heed what I say the tyll.'
And in George Cavendish's Metrical Visions, p. 19 :—
'I espied certeyn persons coming me tyll.'

4 I. e. since he quitted Egypt a space of time has elapsed in which a longer journey might have been performed than from Egypt to Rome.

5 Julius Cæsar had married Cleopatra to young Ptolemy, who was afterwards drowned.

6 I. e. I cannot expect. So Chaucer in The Reve's Tale, v. 4027 :—

'Our manacle I hope he wol be ded.'

7 I. e. quarrel.

8 I. e. it is incumbent upon us for the preservation of our lives.

9 I. e. I would meet him undressed, without any show

Let Antony look over Cæsar's head,
And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard,
I would not shave't to-day.⁹

Lep. 'Tis not a time
For private stomaching.

Eno. Every time
Serves for the matter that is then born in it.

Lep. But small to greater matters must give way
Eno. Not if the small come first.

Lep. Your speech is passion :
But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes
The noble Antony.

Enter ANTONY and VENTIDIUS.

Eno. And yonder, Cæsar.

Enter CÆSAR, MECENAS, and AGRIPPA.

Ant. If we compose¹⁰ well here, to Parthia :
Hark you, Ventidius.

Cæs. I do not know,
Mecenas ; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends,
That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A leaner action rend us. What's amiss,
May it be gently heard : When we debate
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit
Murder in healing wounds : Then, noble partners,
(The rather, for I earnestly beseech,) Touch you the sourest points with sweetest terms,
Nor curtness¹¹ grow to the matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well ;
Were we before our armies, and to fight,
I should do thus.

Cæs. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Cæs. Sit.

Ant. Sit, sir !¹²
Cæs. Nay,

Then—
Ant. I learn, you take things ill, which are not so ;
Or, being, concern you not.

Cæs. I must be laugh'd at,
If, or for nothing, or a little, I Should say myself offended ; and with you Chiefly i' the world : more laugh'd at, that I should Once name you derogately, when to sound your name

It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Cæsar,
What was't to you ?

Cæs. No more than my residing here at Rome
Might be to you in Egypt : Yet, if you there
Did practise¹³ on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question.¹⁴

Ant. How intend you, practis'd ?

Cæs. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent,
By what did here befall me. Your wife, and brother,
Made wars upon me : and their contestation
Was theme for you,¹⁵ you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake my business ; my brother never of respect. Plutarch mentions that Antony, 'after the overthrow he had at Modena, suffered his beard to grow at length, and never clip't it, that it was marvellous long.' Perhaps this circumstance was in Shakespeare's thoughts.

10 That is, if we come to a lucky composition or agreement. So afterwards :—

'I crave our composition may be written.'

11 'Let not till humour' be added to the real subject of our difference.

12 The note of admiration here was added by Steevens, who thinks that Antony is meant to resent the invitation Cæsar gives him to be seated, as indicating a consciousness of superiority in his too successful partner in power.

13 To practise is to use unwarrantable arts or stratagems. The word is frequently applied to traitorous designs against those in power, by old writers.

14 Theme or subject of conversation.

15 This passage has been misunderstood, erroneously explained, and considered corrupt. Its meaning evidently is, 'You were the theme or subject for which your wife and brother made their contestation ; you were the

Did urge me in his act :¹ I did inquire it ;
 And have my learning from some true reports,²
 That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather Discredit my authority with yours ;
 And make the wars alike against my stomach,
 Having alike your cause ? Of this my letters
 Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,
 As matter whole you have not to make it with,
 It must not be with this.

Cæs. You praise yourself
 By laying defects of judgment to me ; but
 You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so ;
 I know you could not lack, I am certain on't,
 Very necessity of this thought, that I,
 Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,
 Could not with graceful eyes³ attend those wars
 Which 'fronted mine own peace. As for my wife,
 I would you had her spirit in such another :
 The third o' the world is yours ; which with a snaffle
 You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eno. Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women !

Ant. So much uncurable, her garboils, Cæsar,
 Made out of her impatience, (which not wanted Shrewdness of policy too,) I grieving grant,
 Did you too much disquiet : for that, you must
 But say, I could not help it.

Cæs. I wrote to you,
 When rioting in Alexandria ; you
 Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
 Did gibe my missive⁴ out of audience.

Ant. Sir,
 He fell upon me, ere admitted ; then
 Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want
 Of what I was i' the morning : but, next day,
 I told him of myself :⁵ which was as much,
 As to have ask'd him pardon : Let this fellow
 Be nothing of our strife ; if we contend,
 Out of our question wipe him.

Cæs. You have broken
 The article of your oath ; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Cæsar.

Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak ;
 The honour's sacred which he talks on now,
 Supposing that I lack'd it :⁶ But on, Cæsar :
 The article of my oath,——

Cæs. To lend me arms, and aid, when I requir'd⁷
 them ;

The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather ;
 And then, when poison'd hours had bound me up
 From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,
 I'll play the penitent to you : but mine honesty
 Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power
 Work without it :⁸ Truth is, that Fulvia,
 To have me out of Egypt, made wars here ;
 For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
 So far ask pardon, as befits mine honour
 To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis nobly spoken.

Mec. If it might please you, to enforce no further
 The griefs⁹ between ye : to forget them quite,
 Were to remember that the present need Speaks to atone.⁹

word of war.⁷ Mason supposed some words had been transposed, and that the passage ought to stand thus :——
 '—— and for contestation

Their theme was you ; you were the word of war.'

1 i. e. never did make use of my name as a pretence for the war.

2 Reporters.

3 i. e. could not look graciously upon them, could not approve them. ⁴Fronted is affronted, opposed.

4 Messenger.

5 'I told him the condition I was in when he had his last audience.'

6 'The theme of honour which he now speaks of, namely, the religion of an oath, for which he supposes me not to have a due regard, is sacred ; it is a tender point, and touches my character nearly. Let him therefore urge his charge, that I may vindicate myself.'

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mecænas.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again : you shall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only ; speak no more.

Eno. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak no more.

Eno. Go to, then ; your considerate stone.¹⁰

Cæs. I do not much dislike the matter, but
 The manner of his speech : for it cannot be,
 We shall remain in friendship, our conditions
 So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew
 What hoop should hold us stanch, from edge to edge
 O' the world I would pursue it.¹¹

Ag. Give me leave, Cæsar,——

Cæs. Speak, Agrippa.

Ag. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side,
 Admir'd Octavia : great Mark Antony
 Is now a widower.

Cæs. Say not so, Agrippa ;

If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
 Were well deserv'd of rashness.¹²

Ant. I am not married, Cæsar : let me hear Agrippa further speak.

Ag. To hold you in perpetual amity,
 To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
 With an unslipping knot, take Antony
 Octavia to his wife : whose beauty claims
 No worse a husband than the best of men ;
 Whose virtue, and whose general graces, speak
 That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
 All little jealousies, which now seem great,
 And all great fears, which now import their dangers,
 Would then be nothing : truths would be tales,
 Where now half tales be truths ; her love to both,
 Would, each to other, and all loves to both,
 Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke ;
 For 'tis a studied, not a present thought ;
 By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Cæsar speak ?

Cæs. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd
 With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa,

If I would say, Agrippa, be it so,
 To make this good ?

Cæs. The power of Cæsar, and His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shows,
 Dream of impediment !—Let me have thy hand :
 Further this act of grace ; and, from this hour,
 The heart of brothers govern in our loves,
 And sway our great designs !

Cæs. There is my hand.

A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother
 Did ever love so dearly : Let her live
 To join our kingdoms, and our hearts ; and never Fly off our loves again !

Lep. Happily, amen !

Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst
 Pompey ;
 For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great,

7 'Nor my greatness work without mine honesty.'

8 Grievances.

9 i. e. reconcile you.

10 'Go to, then, henceforward I will be as mute as a marble statue, which seems to think, though it can say nothing.'

'—— statua taciturnior exit

Plurumque et risum populi quit.'

Horace.

As mute as a stone, and As silent as a stone, are common expressions.

11 'I do not (says Cæsar) think the man wrong, but too free of his interposition ; for it cannot be, we shall remain in friendship ; yet if it were possible, I would endeavour it.'

12 That is, 'You might be reproved for your rashness, and would well deserve it.' The old copy reads 'proof.'
 Warburton made the emendation.

Of late upon me: I must thank him only,
Lest my remembrance suffer ill report;
At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon us:
Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks out us.

Ant. Where lies he?

Cæs. About the Mount Misenum.

Ant. What's his strength
By land?

Cæs. Great, and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.
'Would, we had spoke together! Haste we for it:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, despatch we
The business we have talk'd of.

Cæs. With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I will lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,
Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Exeunt CÆSAR, ANTONY, and LEPIDUS.]

Mec. Welcome from Egypt, sir.

Eno. Half the heart of Cæsar, worthy Mecænas!
my honourable friend, Agrippa!—

Agr. Good Enobarbus!

Mec. We have cause to be glad, that matters are so well digested. You stayed well by it in Egypt.

Eno. Ay, sir; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight wild boars roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there; is this true?

Eno. This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had much more monstrous matter of feast, which worthily deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square¹ to her.

Eno. When she first met Mark Antony, she pursed up his heart upon the river of Cydnus.²

Agr. There she appeared, indeed; or my reporter devised well for her.

Eno. I will tell you:
The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,⁴ Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold;
Purple the sails, and so perfumed, that
The winds were lovesick with them: the oars were silver;

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water, which they beat, to follow faster,

¹ 'Lest I be thought too willing to forget benefits, I must barely return him thanks, and then I will defy him.'

² i. e. if report quadrates, or suits with her merits.

³ Enobarbus is made to say that Cleopatra gained Antony's heart on the river Cydnus; but it appears from the conclusion of his own description, that Antony had never seen her there; that whilst she was on the river, Antony was sitting alone, enthroned in the market-place, whistling to the air, all the people having left him to gaze upon her: and that when she landed he sent to her to invite her to supper.

⁴ The reader will be pleased to have it in his power to compare Dryden's description with that of Shakspeare:—

'Her galley down the silver Cydnus row'd,
The tackling, silk, the streamers wav'd with gold,
The gentle winds were lodg'd in purple sails:
Her nymphs, like Nereids, round her couch were plac'd,

Where she, another sea-horn Venus, lay,—
She lay, and leant her cheek upon her hand,
And cast a look so languishingly sweet,
As if secure of all beholders' hearts,
Neglecting she could take 'em: Boys, like Cupids,
Stood fanning with their painted wings the winds
That play'd about her face: But if she smil'd,
A daring glory seem'd to blaze abroad,
That man's desiring eyes were never wearied,
But hung upon the object: To soft flutes
The silver oars kept time; and while they play'd,
The hearing gave new pleasure to the sight,
And both to thought. 'Twas heaven, or somewhat
more;

As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,
It beggar'd all description: she did he
In her pavilion; (cloth of gold, of tissue.)
O'er-picturing that Venus, where we see,
The fancy outwork nature: on each side her,
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With diverse-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
And what they undid did.

Agr. O, rare for Antony!

Eno. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,⁵
And made their bends adorings:⁶ at the helm
A seeming mermaid steers: the silken tackle
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame⁷ the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her; and Antony,
Enthron'd in the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

Agr. Rare Egyptian!

Eno. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper: she replied,
It should be better, he became her guest;
Which she entreated: Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of No woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast;
And for his ordinary, pays his heart,⁸
For what his eyes eat only.

Agr. Royal wench!
She made great Cæsar lay his sword to bed;
He plough'd her, and she crop'd⁹.

Eno. I saw her once
Hop forty paces through the public street:
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and panted,
That she did make defect, perfection,
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly.

Eno. Never; he will not;
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety:¹⁰ Other women
Cloy th' appetites they feed; but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies. For vilest things
Become themselves in her; that the holy priests
Bless her, when she is riggish.¹¹

Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery¹² to him.

For she so charm'd all hearts, that gazing crowds
Stood panting on the shore, and wanted breath
To give their welcome voice.'

⁵ i. e. waited upon her looks, discovered her will by her looks. So Spenser, Faerie Queene, b. i. c. iii. —
'From her fayre eyes he took commandement,
And by her looks concel'd her intent.'

⁶ 'Made their bends adorings.' On this passage there are several pages of notes in the variorum Shakspeare, which, as Stevens remarks, supply a powerful instance of the uncertainty of verbal criticism; for the same phrase is there explained with reference to four different images—bows, groups, eyes, and tails.
Until some more fortunate conjecture shall be offered, I adopt Stevens's opinion, that 'the plain sense of the passage seems to be, these ladies rendered that homage which their assumed characters obliged them to pay their queen, a circumstance ornamental to themselves.
Each inclined her person so gracefully, that the very act of humiliation was an improvement of her own beauty.'

⁷ 'Yarely frame,' i. e. readily perform.
⁸ Cleopatra, as appears from the tetradrachms of Antony, was no Venus; and indeed the majority of ladies who most successfully enslaved the hearts of princes, are known to have been less remarkable for personal than mental attractions. The reign of insipid beauty is seldom lasting; but permanent must be the rule of a woman who can diversify the sameness of life by an inexhausted variety of accomplishments.

⁹ Riggish is wanton, immodest. Dryden has emulated Shakespeare in this, as well as the passage before cited; it should be remembered, however, that Shakspeare furnished him with his most striking images

¹⁰ Lottery, for allotment.

Ag. Let us go.—
Good Enobarbus, make yourself my guest,
Whilst you abide here.
Eno. Humbly, sir, I thank you.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in Cæsar's House. Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, OCTAVIA between them; Attendants, and a Soothsayer.

Ant. The world, and my great office, will sometimes

Divide me from your bosom.

Octa. All which time
Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers
To them for you.

Ant. Good night, sir.—My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report :
I have not kept my square ; but that to come Shall all be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.—

Octa. Good night, sir.

Cæs. Good night.

[Exeunt CÆSAR and OCTAVIA.]

Ant. Now, sirrah! you do wish yourself in Egypt?

Sooth. 'Would, I had never come from thence, nor you Thither!

Ant. If you can, your reason?

Sooth. I see't in My motion, have it not in my tongue : But yet
Hie you again to Egypt.

Ant. Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Cæsar's, or mine?
Sooth. Cæsar's.

Therefore, O, Antony, stay not by his side :
Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Cæsar's is not ; but near him, thy angel Becomes a Fear,¹ as being overpowered ; therefore Make space enough between you.

Ant. Speak this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee ; no more, but when to thee.

If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to lose ; and of that natural luck,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds : thy lustre thickens²
When he shines by : I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him ;
But, he away, 'tis noble.

Ant. Get thee gone :
Say to Ventidius, I would speak with him :
[Exit Soothsayer.]

He shall to Parthia.—Be it art, or hap,
He hath spoke true : The very dice obey him :
And, in our sports, my better cunning faints
Under his chance : if we draw lots, he speeds :
His cocks do win the battle still of mine,
When it is all to nought : and his quails⁴ ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds. I will to Egypt :
And though I make this marriage for my peace,

1 The same construction is found in Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. 1, 'Shouting thy emulation.' And in King Lear, Act ii. Sc. 2, 'Smile you my speeches?'

2 A Fear was a personage in some of the old Moralities. See Troilus and Cressida, Act iii. Sc. 2. The whole thought is borrowed from North's translation of Plutarch.

3 So in Macbeth, 'light thickens.'

4 Shakspeare derived this from Plutarch. The ancients used to match quails as we match cocks. Julius Pollux relates that a circle was made in which the birds were placed, and he whose quail was first driven out of this circle lost the stake. We are told by Mr. Marsden that the Sumatrans practice these quail combats. The Chinese have always been extremely fond of quail fighting. Mr. Douce has given a print, from an elegant Chinese miniature painting, which represents some ladies engaged at this amusement, where the quails are actually inhooped. See Illustrations of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 87.

6 Mount Misenum.

7 Moody here means melancholy. Cotgrave explains moody by the French words morne, triste.

Enter VENTIDIUS.

F the east my pleasure lies :—O, come, Ventidius,
You must to Parthia ; your commission's ready :
Follow me, and receive it. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Street. Enter LEPIDUS, MÆCENAS and AGrippa.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no further : pray you, hasten

Your generals after

Ag. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,
Which will become you both, farewell.

Mec. We shall,
As I conceive the journey, be at mount⁵
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter,
My purposes do draw me much about ;
You'll win two days upon me.

Mec. Ag. Sir, good success!

Lep. Farewell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Give me some music ; music, moody⁶ food
Of us that trade in love.

Attend. The music, ho!

Enter MARDIAN.

Cleo. Let it alone ; let us to billiards :
Come, Charmian.

Char. My arm is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play'd,
As with a woman ;—Come, you'll play with me, sir?

Mar. As well as I can, madam.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though it come too short,

The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now :—
Give me mine angle,—We'll to the river : there,
My music playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-fin'd fishes ; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws ; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say, Ah, ha ! you're caught.

Char. 'Twas merry, when
You wager'd on your angling ; when your diver
Did hang a salt fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time !—O times !—
I laugh'd him out of patience ; and that night
I laugh'd him into patience : and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed ;
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan.⁷ O ! from Italy ;

Enter a Messenger.

Rain!⁸ thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren.

Mess. Madam, madam,
Cleo. Antony's dead?

7 It is scarcely necessary to remark that this is an anachronism. Billiards were not known to the ancients.

8 This circumstance is from Plutarch : Antony had fished unsuccessfully in Cleopatra's presence, and she laughed at him. The next time, therefore, he directed the boatmen to dive under water, and attach a fish to his hook. The queen perceived the stratagem, but affecting not to notice it, congratulated him on his success. Another time, however, she determined to laugh at him once more, and gave orders to her own people to get the start of his divers, and put some dried salt fish on his hook.

9 The battle of Philippi being the greatest action of Antony's life, it was an adroit piece of flattery to name his sword from it. It does not, however, appear to be perfectly in costume ; the dignifying of weapons with names in this manner had its origin in later times. The swords of the heroes of romance have generally pompous names.

10 The old copy reads 'Ram thou,' &c. Rain agrees better with the epithets fruitful and barren. So in Timon :—

'Rain's sacrificial whisperings in his ear

If thou say so, villain, thou kill'st thy mistress :
But well and free,
If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veins to kiss; a hand, that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he's well.

Cleo. Why, there's more gold. But, sirrah, mark;
We use

To say, the dead are well: bring it to that,
The gold I give thee, will I melt, and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will;

But there's no goodness in thy face: If Antony
Be free, and healthful,—why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings? If not well,
Thou should'st come like a fury crown'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man.¹

Mess. Will't please you hear me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee, ere thou
speak'st:

Yet if thou say, Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Cæsar, or not captive to him,
I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pearls upon thee.²

Mess. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo. Thou'rt an honest man.

Mess. Cæsar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Mess. But yet, madam,—

Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does allay

The good precedence;³ lie upon but yet:

But yet is as a gaoler to bring forth

Some monstrous malefactor. Pry'thee, friend,

Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear,

The good and bad together: He's friend with Cæsar;

In state of health, thou say'st; and, thou say'st, free.

Mess. Free, madam! no; I made no such report:

He's bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turn?

Mess. For the best turn 't' the bed.

Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.

Mess. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee!

[Strikes him down.]

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you?—Hence,

[Strikes him again.]

Horrible villain! or I'll spurn thine eyes

Like balls before me; I'll unhair thy head;

[She hales him up and down.]

Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire, and stew'd in brine,

Smarting in ling'ring pickle.

Mess. Gracious madam,

I, that do bring the news, made not the match.

Cleo. Say, 'tis not so, a province I will give thee,

And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou hadst

Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage;

And I will boot⁴ thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.

Mess. He's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long.

[Draws a Dagger.]

1 I. e. not like a man in form, not in your own proper shape. Thus in A Mad World my Masters, by Middleton, 1608:—

'The very devil assum'd thee formally.'

2 That is, I will give thee a kingdom, it being the eastern ceremony at the coronation of their kings to powder them with gold dust and seed pearl. So Milton:—

'—the gorgeous east, with liberal hand,

Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold.'

See the Life of Tuner Bee, or Taineirane, by M. Petit de la Croix, liv. li. c. 2.

3 I. e. abate the good quality of what is already reported.

4 Profit thee, recompense thee.

5 'Contain yourself, restrain your passion within bounds.' So in the Taming of the Shrew.—

'Doubt not, my lord, we can contain ourselves.'

Mess. Nay, then I'll run:—

What mean you, madam? I have made no fault.

[Exit.]

Char. Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;⁵

The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents' scape not the thunderbolt.

Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures

Turn all to serpents!—Call the slave again:

Though I am mad, I will not bite him:—Call.

Char. He is afraid to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him:—

These hands do lack nobility, that they strike

A meaner than myself;⁶ since I myself

Have given myself the cause.—Come hither, sir.

Re-enter Messenger.

Though it be honest, it is never good

To bring bad news: Give to a gracious message

An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell

Themselves when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?

I cannot hate thee worse than I do,

If thou again say, Yes.

Mess. He is married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O, I would thou didst;

So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made

A cistern for scald'd snakes! Go, get thee hence;

Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me

Thou would'st appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. Take no offence, that I would not offend

you:

To punish me for what you make me do,

Seems much unequal: He is married to Octavia.

Cleo. O, that his fault should make a knave of

thee,

That art not!—What? thou'rt sure of—Get thee hence:—

The merchandise which thou hast brought from

Rome,

Are all too dear for me; Lie they upon thy hand,

And be undone by 'em! [Exit Messenger.]

Char. Good your highness, patience.

Cleo. In praising Antony, I have dispraised

Cæsar.

Char. Many times, madam.

Cleo. I am paid for't now.

Lead me from hence,

I faint; O, Iras, Charmian,—'Tis no matter;—

Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him

Report the feature⁷ of Octavia, her years,

Her inclination, let him not leave out

The colour of her hair:—bring me word quickly.—

[Exit ALEXAS.]

Let him for ever go:—Let him not—Charmian,

Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,

The other way he's a Mars:—Bid you Alexas

[To MARDIAN.]

Bring me word, how tall she is.—Pity me, Charmian.

But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber.

[Exit.]

6 This thought seems to be borrowed from the laws of chivalry, which forbade a knight to engage with his inferior.

7 The old copy thus exhibits this line:—

'That art not what thou'rt sure of. Get thee hence.'

The emendation admitted in the text is partly that of Monck Mason. Johnson has observed that the line consists of abrupt starts. Cleopatra interrupts herself with passionate exclamations, and breaks off her interrogatory by again driving out the hateful messenger of ill news. Mason would read, 'What! tho'rt sure of't' and Stevens adopted his reading.

8 Feature was anciently used for the form or fashion of the whole body.

9 Cleopatra is now talking in broken sentences, not of the messenger, but of Antony.

SCENE VI. Near Misenum. Enter POMPEY and MENAS, at one side, with Drum and Trumpet: at another, CÆSAR, LEPIDUS, ANTONY, ENOBARRUS, MECÆNAS, with Soldiers marching.

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you mine; And we shall talk before we fight.

Cæs. Most meet That first we come to words; and therefore have we Our written purposes before us sent; Which, if thou hast consider'd, let us know If 'twill tie up thy discontented sword; And carry back to Sicily much tall' youth, That else must perish here.

Pom. To you all three, The senators alone of this great world, Chief factors for the gods,—I do not know, Wherefore my father should revengers want, Having a son and friends: since Julius Cæsar, Who, at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,² There saw you labouring for him. What was it, That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what Made the all-honour'd, honest Roman Brutus, With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom, To drench the Capitol; but that they would Have one man but a man? And that is it, Hath made me rig my navy: at whose burden The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant To scourge the ingratulate that desp'ful Rome Cast on my noble father.

Cæs. Take your time.
Ant. Thou canst not fear³ us, Pompey, with thy sails,
We'll speak with thee at sea: at land, thou know'st How much we do o'ercount thee.

Pom. At land, indeed, Thou dost o'ercount me of my father's house:⁴ But, since the cuckoo builds not for himself, Remain in't as thou may'st.⁵

Lep. Be pleas'd to tell us (For this is from the present,⁶) how you take The offers we have sent you.

Cæs. There's the point.
Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh What it is worth embrac'd.

Cæs. And what may follow, To try a larger fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must. Rid all the sea of pirates; then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome: This greed upon, To part with unhack'd edges, and bear back Our targe undinted.

Cæs. Ant. Lep. That's our offer.

Pom. Know then, I came before you here, a man prepar'd To take this offer: But Mark Antony Put me to some impatience:—Though I lose The praise of it by telling, You must know, When Cæsar and your brothers were at blows, Your mother came to Sicily, and did find Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey; And am well studied for a liberal thanks, Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand: I did not think, sir, to have met you here.

Ant. The beds i' the east are soft; and thanks to you,
That call'd me, timelier than my purpose, hither; For I have gain'd by it.

Cæs. Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not What counts' harsh fortune casts upon my face; But in my bosom shall she never come, To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here.
Pom. I hope so, Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed: I crave, our composition may be written, And seal'd between us.

Cæs. That's the next to do.
Pom. We'll feast each other, ere we part; and let us Draw lots who shall begin.

Ant. That will I, Pompey.
Pom. No, Antony, take the lot: but, first, Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery Shall have the fame. I have heard, that Julius Cæsar Grew fat with feasting there.

Ant. You have heard much.
Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them.
Pom. Then so much have I heard:—

And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—
Eno. No more of that:—He did so.

Pom. What, I pray you?
Eno. A certain queen to Cæsar in a mattress.⁷
Pom. I know thee now;—How far'st thou, soldier?

Eno. Well;
And well am like to do; for, I perceive, Four feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand: I never hated thee: I have seen thee fight, When I have envied thy behaviour.

Eno. Sir,
I never lov'd you much: but I have prais'd you, When you have well deserv'd ten times as much As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness, It nothing ill becomes thee.—
Aboard my galley I invite you all: Will you lead, lords?

Cæs. Ant. Lep. Show us the way, sir.
Pom. Come.

[Exeunt POMPEY, CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, Soldiers, and Attendants.]

Men. Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—[Aside.—You and I have known,⁹ sir.

Eno. At sea, I think.

Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me:¹⁰ though it cannot be denied what I have done by land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Eno. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety: you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

6 i. e. foreign to the object of our present discussion. Shakspeare uses the present as a substantive many times.

7 A metaphor from making marks or lines in casting accounts in arithmetic.

8 i. e. to Julius Cæsar. This is derived from the margin of North's Plutarch, 1579:—'Cleopatra trussed up in a mattress, and so brought to Cæsar upon Apollodorus' back.'

9 i. e. been acquainted. So in Cymbeline:—'Sir, we have known together at Orleans.'

10 'The poet's art in delivering this humorous sentiment (which gives so very true and natural a picture of the commerce of the world) can never be sufficiently admired. The confession could come from none but a frank and rough character, like the speaker's: and the moral lesson insinuated under it, that flattery can make its way through the most stubborn manners, deserves our serious reflection.'—Warburton.

1 Brave, courageous.

2 This verb is used by Burton in his Anatomy of Melancholy, Pref. p. 22, ed. 1632: 'What madness ghosts this old man? but what madness ghosts us all?'

3 'Thou canst not affront us with thy numerous navy.' So in Measure for Measure:—
'Setting it up to fear the birds of prey.'

4 'At land indeed thou dost exceed me in possessions; having added to thy own my father's house.' O'ercount seems to be used equivocally, and Pompey perhaps is meant to insinuate that Antony not only outnumbered but had overreached him. The circumstance of Antony's obtaining the house of Pompey's father, the poet had from Plutarch.

5 'Since, like the cuckoo, that seizes the nests of other birds, you have invaded a house which you could not build, keep it while you can.'

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas: If our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Menas. All men's faces are true, whatso'er their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Menas. No slander; they steal hearts.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Menas. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure he cannot weep it back again.

Menas. You have said, sir. We looked not for Mark Antony here; Pray, you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eno. Cæsar's sister is call'd Octavia.

Menas. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Menas. Pray you, sir?

Eno. 'Tis true.

Menas. Then is Cæsar, and he, for ever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Menas. I think, the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find, the band that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very stranger of their amity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.¹

Menas. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not he, that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again: then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Cæsar; and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is; he married but his occasion here.

Menas. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you aboard? I have a health for you.

Eno. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats in Egypt.

Menas. Come; let's away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. *On board Pompey's Galley, lying near Misenum. Music. Enter two or three Servants, with a Banquet.*²

1 Serv. Here they'll be, man: Some o' their plants³ are ill rooted already, the least wind i' the world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

1 Serv. They have made him drink alms drink.⁴

2 Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition,⁵ he cries out, no more; reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

1 Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

2 Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men's fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service, as a partizan⁶ I could not heave.

1 Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.⁷

A Sennet sounded. Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, POMPEY, LEPIDUS, AGRIPPA, MECENAS, ENOBARBUS, MENAS, with other Captains.

Ant. Thus do they, sir: [To CÆSAR.] They take the flow o' the Nile

By certain scales i' the pyramid; they know, By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth, Or foizon,⁸ follow: The higher Nilus swells, The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsman Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain, And shortly comes to harvest.⁹

Lep. You have strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun: so is your crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine.—A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll ne'er out.

Eno. Not till you have slept: I fear me, you'll be in, till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard, the Ptolemies' pyramids¹⁰ are very goodly things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Menas. Pompey, a word.

[Aside.]

Pom. Say in mine ear: What is't?

Menas. Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee, captain,

[Aside.]

And hear me speak a word.

Pom. Forbear me till anon.—

This wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o' thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself; and it is as broad as it hath breadth; it is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs: it lives by that which nourisheth it; and the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so. And the tears of it are wet.

Cæs. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Pom. [To MENAS aside.] Go, hang, sir, hang;

Tell me of that? away!

Do as I bid you.—Where's this cup I call'd for?

Menas. If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me, Rise from thy stool.

[Aside.]

Pom. I think, thou'rt mad. The matter?

[Rises, and walks aside.]

Menas. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith:

What's else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

7 'To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in it, is a sight as unseemly as the holes where the eyes should be, without the animating presence of the eye to fill them.' The sphere in which the eye moves is an expression Shakespeare has used more than once:—
'How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fied.'

Sonnet 119.

'Make thy two eyes like stars start from their spheres.'

Hamlet.

8 Foizon is plenty, abundance.

9 Shakespeare seems to have derived his information respecting the Nilometer from Pliny, b. v. c. ix. Holland's translation. Or from Leo's History of Africa, translated by John Pery, 1600.

10 Pyramids for pyramid was in common use formerly: from this word Shakespeare formed the plural pyramids, to mark the indistinct pronunciation of a man nearly intoxicated, whose tongue is now beginning 'to split what it speaks.' The usual ancient plural was pyramides.

1 Conversation is behaviour, manner of acting in common life. 'He useth no virtue or honest conversation. — Nec habet ullum cum virtute commercium.'—Baret.

2 A banquet here is a refection, similar to our dessert.

3 Plants, besides its common meaning, is used here for the foot, from the Latin. Thus in Chapman's version of the sixteenth Iliad:—

'Even to the low plants of his feete his forme was altered.' The French still use plante du pied for the sole of the foot.

4 A phrase (says Warburton) among good fellows, to signify that liquor of another's share which his companions drink to ease him. But it satirically alludes to Cæsar and Antony's admitting him into the triumvirate, in order to take off from themselves the load of envy.

5 Warburton explains this phrase as equivalent to one still in use, of 'Touching one in a sore place.'

6 A partizan was a weapon between a pike and a halberd; not being so long, it was made use of in mounting a breach, &c.

Ant. These quicksands, Lepidus,
Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world?
That's twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it, and,
Although thou think me poor, I am the man
Will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.
Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jove:
Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,¹
Is time, if thou wilt have't.

Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these competi-ors,²

Are in thy vessel: Let me cut the cable;
And, when we are put off, fall to their throats:
All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou should'st have done,
And not have spoke on't! In me, 'tis villany;
In thee, it had been good service. Thou must know,
'Tis not my profit that doos lead mine honour;
Mine honour, it. Repent, that e'er thy tongue
Hath so betray'd thine act: Being done unknown,
I should have found it afterwards well done;
But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. For this, [Aside.] Good Antony, your hand.
I'll never follow thy pall'd³ fortunes more,—
Who seeks, and will not take, when once 'tis
offer'd,
Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus.

Ant. Bear him ashore.—I'll pledge it for him,
Pompey.

Eno. Here's to thee, Menas.

Men. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill, till the cup be hid.

Eno. There's a strong fellow, Menas.

[Pointing to the Attendant who carries off LEPIDUS.]

Men. Why?

Eno. He bears
The third part of the world, man; See'st not?

Men. The third part then is drunk: 'Would it were all,

That it might go on wheels!

Eno. Drink thou; increase the reels.⁴

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it.—Strike the vessels,⁵ ho!
Here is to Cæsar.

Cæs. I could well forbear it.
It's monstrous labour when I wash my brain,
And its grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Cæs. Possess it, I'll make answer: but I had rather fast

From all, four days, than drink so much in one.

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor! [To ANTONY.]
Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals,
And celebrate our drink?

1 i. e. encloses and embraces.

2 i. e. confederates. See, in the present play, Act i.
Sc. 4.

3 Palled is vapid, past its time of excellence; palled wine is wine that has lost its sprightliness.

4 Difficulties have been made about this passage, in which I must confess I see none. Menas says, 'The third part of the world is drunk (meaning Lepidus, one of the triumvirs); would it were all so, that it might go on wheels, i. e. turn round or change.' To which Enobarbus replies, 'Drink thou; increase the reels,' i. e. increase its giddy course.

5 i. e. tap them, broach them. So in the last scene of Fletcher's Monsieur Thomas:—'Home, Launce, and strike a fresh piece of wine, the town's ours.' See Cotgrave in v. Tupper.

6 The half line omitted in this place may be supplied with words resembling those in Milton's Comus:—

'Come let us all take hands, and beat the ground,
Till, &c

Pom. Let's ha't, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let us all take hands;⁶
Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our sense
In soft and delicate Lethe..

Eno. All take hands.—

Make battery to our ears with the loud music;—
The while, I'll place you: Then the boy shall sing
The holding⁷ every man shall bear, as loud
As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. ENOBARBUS places them hand in hand.]

SONG.

*Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne:⁸
In thy vats our cares be drown'd;
With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd,
Cup us, till the world go round;
Cup us, till the world go round!*

Cæs. What would you more?—Pompey, good night. Good brother,
Let me request you off: our graver business
Frowns at this levity.—Gentle lords, let's part;
You see, we have burnt our cheeks: strong Eno-barbe

Is weaker than the wine; and mine own tongue
Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost Antick'd us all. What needs more words? Good night.—

Good Antony, your hand.

Pom. I'll try you o' the shore.

Ant. And shall, sir: give's your hand.

Pom. O, Antony,
You have my father's house,⁹—But what? we are
friends:

Come, down into the boat.

Eno. Take heed you fall not.

[Exeunt POMPEY, CÆSAR, ANTONY, and Attendants.]

Menas, I'll not on shore.

Men. No, to my cabin.—

These drums!—these trumpets, flutes! what!—

Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell

To these great fellows: Sound, and be hang'd, sound out.

[A Flourish of Trumpets, with Drums.]

Eno. Ho, says 'a!—There's my cap.

Men. Ho!—noble captain!
Come.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Plain in Syria. Enter VENTIDIUS, as after Conquest, with SILIUS, and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers; the dead Body of PACO-RUS borne before him.

Ven. Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck;¹⁰ and now

Pleas'd fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death

Make me revenger.—Bear the king's son's body

Before our army:—Thy Pacorus, Orodes,¹¹

Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Sil. Noble Ventidius,

Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,

7 The holding is the burden or under-song. Thus in The Serving Man's Comfort, 1593, 4to. 'Where a song is to be sung, the under-song or holding whereof
is—

'It is merrie in haul,

When beards wag all.'

8 Pink eyne are small eyes. 'Some have mighty vies and some be pinkyied. Quidam pergraudis sunt luminibus, quidam peti.' Horman's Vulgaria, 1519.
The flower called a pink is in French oeillet, or little eye. To pink and wink is to contract the eyes and peep out of the lids. Hence pinky for tipsy, from the peculiar expression of the eyes of persons in liquor. The epithet is therefore well appropriated to the god of wine.

9 See note 4 on the previous scene.

10 Struck alludes to darting. Thou, whose darts have often struck others, art struck now thyself.

11 Pacorus was the son of Orodes, king of Parthia.

The fugitive Parthians follow; spur through Media, Mesopotamia, and the shelters whither The routed fly: so thy grand captain Antony Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O, Silius, Silius, I have done enough: A lower place, note well, May make too great an act: For learn this, Silius; Better to leave undone, than by our deed Acquire too high a fame, when him we serve's away. Cæsar, and Antony, have ever won More in their officer, than person: Sossius, One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant, For quick accumulation of renown, Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favour. Who does it the wars more than his captain can, Becomes his captain's captain: and ambition, The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss, Than gain, which darkens him. I could do more to do Antonius good, But 'twould offend him; and in his offence Should my performance perish.

Sil. Thou hast, Ventidius, that Without the which a soldier, and his word, Grants scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to Antony?

Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name, That magical word of war, we have effected; How, with his banners, and his well-paid ranks, The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia We have jaded out of the field.

Sil. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposeth to Athens: whither with what haste The weight we must convey with us will permit, We shall appear before him.—On, there; pass along.

[Exeunt.]
SCENE II. Rome. An Antechamber in Cæsar's House. Enter AGRIPPA and ENOBARBUS, meeting.

Ag. What, are the brothers parted?

Eno. They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone;

The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps To part from Rome: Cæsar is sad; and Lepidus, Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled With the green-sickness.

Ag. 'Tis a noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: O, how he loves Cæsar!

Ag. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark Antony!

Eno. Cæsar? Why, he's the Jupiter of men.

Ag. What's Antony? the god of Jupiter.

Eno. Spake you of Cæsar? How? the nonpareil?

Ag. O, Antony! O, thou Arabian bird!¹

Eno. Would you praise Cæsar, say,—Cæsar;—go no further.

Ag. Indeed, he ply'd them both with excellent praises.

Eno. But he loves Cæsar best;—Yet he loves Antony: [cannot] Ho! hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho, his love To Antony.² But as for Cæsar, Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Ag. Both he loves. Eno. They are his shards,³ and he their beetle.

So,— [Trumpets.] This is to horse.—Adieu, noble Agrippa.

Ag. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.

Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, and OCTAVIA.

Ant. No further, sir.

Cæs. You take from me a great part of myself;⁴ Use me well in it.—Sister, prove such a wife As my thoughts make thee, and as my furthest band⁵

Shall pass on thy approval.—Most noble Antony, Let not the piece of virtue, which is set Betwixt us, as the cement of our love, To keep it builded,⁶ be the ram, to batter The fortress of it: for better might we Have lov'd without this mean, if on both parts This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended

In your distrust.

Cæs. I have said.

Ant. You shall not find, Though you be therein curious,⁷ the least cause For what you seem to fear: So, the gods keep you, And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends! We will here part.

Cæs. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well! The elements⁸ be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort! fare thee well.

Octa. My noble brother!—

Ant. The April's in her eyes: it is love's spring, And these the showers to bring it on.—Be cheerful.

Octa. Sir, look well to my husband's house; and—

Cæs. What, Octavia?

Octa. I'll tell you in your ear.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can Her heart inform her tongue: the swan's down feather,

That stands upon the swell at full of tide,

And neither way inclines.

Eno. Will Cæsar weep? [Aside to AGRIPPA.]

Ag. He has a cloud in's face.⁹

Eno. He were the worse for that, were he a horse; So is he, being a man.

Ag. Why, Enobarbus?

When Antony found Julius Cæsar dead,

He cried almost to roaring: and he wept

When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum;

What willingly he did confound,¹⁰ he wail'd: Believe it, till I weep!¹¹ too.

1 Grants for affords: 'Thou hast that, Ventidius, which if thou didst want, there would be no distinction between thee and thy sword. You would be both equally cutting and senseless.' This was wisdom, or knowledge of the world. Ventidius had told him why he did not pursue his advantages; and his friend, by this compliment, acknowledges them to be of weight.—Warburton. There is somewhat the same idea in Coriolanus:—'Who sensible outdares his senseless sword.'

2 The Phoenix. So again in Cymbeline:—'She is alone the Arabian bird, and I Have lost my wayer.'

3 This puerile arrangement of words was much affected in the age of Shakespeare, even by the first writers. Thus in Daniel's 11th Sonnet:—'Yet will I weep, vow, pray to cruel shee; Flint, frost, disdaine, wearers, melts, and yields we see.' And Sir Philip Sidney's Excellent Sonnet of a Nymph, printed in England's Helicon, is a tissue of this kind.

4 I. e. they are the wings that raise this heavy lumpish insect from the ground. So in Macbeth, 'The shard-borne beetle.'

5 In The Tempest, Prospero, in giving Miranda to Ferdinand, says:—'I have given you here a third of my own life.'

6 Band and bond were synonymous in Shakespeare's time.

7 'And ruin'd love, when it is built anew, Grows fairer than at first.'

8 I. e. scrupulous, particular. So in the Taming of the Shrew:—'For curious I cannot be with you.'

9 It is singular that this passage could by any means have been misunderstood. Octavia was going to sail with Antony from Rome to Athens, and her brother wishes that the elements may be kind to her; in other words, that she may have a prosperous voyage.

10 A horse is said to have a cloud in his face, when he has a dark-coloured spot in his forehead between his eyes. This gives him a sour look, and being supposed to indicate an ill temper, is of course looked upon as a great blemish. Burton has applied the phrase to the look of a female:—'Every lover admires his mistress, though she be very deformed of herself—thin, lean, chaly, face, have clouds in her face, be crooked, &c.—Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 524, ed. 1632.

11 To confound is to consume, to destroy. See Minshew's Dictionary, 1617, in voce.

12 Theobald reads, 'till I wept too' Mr. Steevens en-

7-11-11

Cæs. No, sweet Octavia,
You shall hear from me still; the time shall not Outgo my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, sir, come;
I'll wrestle with you, in my strength of love:
Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,
And give you to the gods.

Cæs. Adieu! be happy!
Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light
To thy fair way!

Cæs. Farewell, farewell! [Kisses OCTAVIA.
Ant. Farewell!

[Trumpets sound. Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?
Alex. Half afeard to come?
Cleo. Go to, go to:—Come hither, sir.

Enter a Messenger.
Alex. Good majesty,
Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you,
But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have: But how? when Antony is gone Through whom I might command it.—Come thou near.

Mess. Most gracious majesty,—
Cleo. Didst thou behold
Octavia?

Mess. Ay, dread queen.
Cleo. Where?
Mess. Madam, in Rome
I look'd her in the face; and saw her led Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?
Mess. She is not, madam.

Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrill-tongu'd or low?

Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is lowvoic'd.

Cleo. That's not so good; y' cannot like her long.
Char. Like her? O, Isis! 'tis impossible.

Cleo. I think so, Charmian: Dull of tongue, and dwarfish!

What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
If e'er thou look'dst on majesty.

Mess. She creeps;
Her motion and her station¹ are as one:
She shows a body rather than a life;
A statue, than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain?

Mess. Or I have no observance.
Char. Three in Egypt
Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing,
I do perceive't:—There's nothing in her yet:—
The fellow has good judgment.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guess at her years, I pr'ythee.

deavours to give a meaning to the passage as it now stands:—'Believe (says Enobarbus) that he wept over such an event, till you see me weeping on the same occasion, when I shall be obliged to you for putting such a construction on my tears, which in reality (like his,) will be tears of joy.' I must confess I prefer the emendation of Theobald to the explanation of Steevens.

Hamlet:—

'A station like the herald Mercury.'

² Cleopatra rejoices in this circumstance, as it sets Octavia on a level with herself, who was no virgin when she fell to the lot of Antony.

³ This is from the old writers on physiognomy. Thus in Hill's Pleasant History, &c. 1613:—'The head very round, to be forgetful and foolish.' Again:—'The head long, to be prudent and wary.' 'A low forehead,' &c.
p. 219.

⁴ To harry is to harass, to worry, to use roughly, to vex, or molest, from the old Norman-French harier of the same meaning. The word occurs frequently in our old writers. Thus in The Revengers' Tragedy, 1607:—

'He harry'd her amidst a nest of pandars.'

Mess. Madam,
She was a widow.

Cleo. Widow?—Charmian, hark.²

Mess. And I do think, she's thirty.

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is't long or round?

Mess. Round even to faultiness.

Cleo. For the most part too, they are foolish that are so.³

Her hair, what colour?

Mess. Brown, madam: And her forehead
As low as she would wish it.

Cleo. There is gold for thee.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill:—

I will employ thee back again: I find thee
Most fit for business: Go, make thee ready;
Our letters are prepar'd. [Exit Messenger]

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much,
That I so harry'd⁴ him. Why, methinks, by him,
This creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing, madam.

Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know.

Char. Hath he seen majesty? Isis else defend,
And serving you so long!

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, good Charmian:—

But 'tis no matter; thou shalt bring him to me
Where I will write: All may be well enough.

Char. I warrant you, madam. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Athens. A Room in Antony's
House. Enter ANTONY and OCTAVIA.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—
That were excusable, that, and thousands more
Of semblable import,—but he hath wag'd
New wars 'gainst Pompey: made his will, and read it
To public ear:

Spoke scantily of me; when perforce he could not
But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly
He vented them; most narrow measure lent me:
When the best hint was given him, he not took't,
Or did it from his teeth.⁵

Oct. O, my good lord,
Believe not all: or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,
If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
Praying for both parts: the good gods will mock me presently,

When I shall pray,⁶ O, bless my lord and husband!
Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
O, bless my brother! Husband win, win brother,
Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway
'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,
Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks Best to preserve it: If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself: better I were not yours,
Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested,
Yourself shall go between us: The mean time, lady,
I'll raise the preparation of a war
Shall stain⁷ your brother; Make your soonest haste;
So your desires are yours.

So Nash, in his Lenten Stuff:—'As if he were harrying and chasing his enemies.'

⁵ i.e. to appearance only, not seriously. Thus Dryden in his Wild Gallant:—'I am confident she is only angry from the teeth outward.' So Chapman, in his version of the fifteenth Iliad:—

'She laugh'd, but merely from her lips.'

And Fuller, in his Holies Warre, b. iv. c. 17:—'This bad breath, though it came but from the teeth of some, yet proceeded from the corrupt lungs of others.'

⁶ The situation and sentiments of Octavia resemble those of Lady Blanche in King John, Act iii. Sc. 1.

⁷ Mr. Boswell suggests that, perhaps, we should read,
'Shall stay your brother.' To stain is not here used for to shame or disgrace, as Johnson supposed; but for to eclipse, extinguish, throw into the shade, to put out; from the old French estindre. In this sense it is used in all the examples cited by Steevens:

'—here at hand approacheth one
Whose face will stain you all.'

Tottle's Miscellany, 1508.

Oct. Thanks to my lord.
The Jove of power make me most weak, most weak,
Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men
Should solder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,
Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal, that your love
Can equally move with them. Provide your going;
Choose your own company, and command what cost
Your heart has mind to. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter ENOBARBUS and EROS, meeting.

Eno. How now, friend Eros?

Eros. There's strange news come, sir.

Eno. What, man?

Eros. Cæsar and Lepidus have made wars upon Pompey.

Eno. This is old; What is the success?

Eros. Cæsar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry!¹ would not let him partake in the glory of the action: and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal,² seizes him: So the poor third is up, till death enlarge his confine.

Eno. Then, world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no more;³

And throw between them all the food thou hast,
They'll grind the one the other. Where's Antony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spurns

The rush that lies before him; cries, Fool, Lepidus!
And threatens the throat of that his officer,
That murder'd Pompey.

Eno. Our great navy's rigg'd.

Eros. For Italy, and Cæsar. More, Domitius;
My lord desires you presently: my news
I might have told hereafter.

Eno. 'Twill be naught;
But let it be.—Bring me to Antony.

Eros. Come, sir. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Rome. A Room in Cæsar's House.

Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, and MECÆNAS.

Cæs. Contemning Rome, he has done all this:
And more;

In Alexandria,—here's the manner of it,—
I' the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,⁴
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd: at the feet, sat
Cæsarion, whom they call my father's son;
And all the unlawful issue, that their lust
Since then hath made between them. Unto her
He gave the 'establishment of Egypt; made her
Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia,
Absolute queen.

Mec. This in the public eye?

Cæs. I' the common show-place, where they exercise.

His sons he there proclaim'd, The kings of kings:
Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia,
He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd
Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia; She
In the habiliments of the goddess Isis
That day appear'd; and oft before gave audience
As 'tis reported, so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus Inform'd.

¹ So Shore's wife's face made fowle Brownetta bluish.
² As pearly staynes pitch, or gold surmounts a rush.

Shore's Wife, by Churchyard, 1593.

³ Whose beauties staynes the faire Helen of Greece.

Churchyard's Charitie, 1593.

⁴ — the praise and yet the stain of all womankind.

Sidney's Arcadia.
¹ i.e. equal rank. In Hamlet, Horatio and Marcellus are styled by Bernardo 'the rivals' of his watch.

² Appeal here means accusation. Cæsar seized Lepidus without any other proof than Cæsar's accusation

³ No more does not signify no longer; but has the same meaning as if Shakespeare had written and no

Agr. Who, queasy with his insolence
Already, will their good thoughts call from him.

Cæs. The people know it: and have now receiv'd
His accusations.

Agr. Whom does he accuse?

Cæs. Cæsar; and that, having in Sicily
Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him
His part of the isle: then does he say, he lent me
Some shipping unrestor'd; lastly, he frets,
That Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Cæs. 'Tis done already, and the messenger gone.
I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel;
That he his high authority abus'd,
And did deserve his change; for what I have conquer'd,

I grant him part; but then, in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.

Cæs. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter OCTAVIA.

Oct. Hail, Cæsar, and my lord! hail, most dear
Cæsar!

Cæs. That ever I should call thee, cast-away!

Oct. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.

Cæs. Why have you stol'n upon us thus? You come not

Like Cæsar's sister: The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way,
Should have borne men; and expectation faint'd,
Longing for what it had not: nay, the dast
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,
Rais'd by your populous troops: But you are come
A market-maid to Rome: and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which, left unshown,
Is often left unlov'd: we should have met you
By sea and land: supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Oct. Good my lord,

To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free will. My lord, Mark Antony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted
My griev'd ear wishal; whereon, I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Cæs. Which soon he granted,
Being an obstruct 'twixen his lust and him.

Oct. Do not say so, my lord.

Cæs. I have eyes upon him,
And his affairs come to me on the wind.
Where is he now?

Oct. My lord, in Athens.

Cæs. No, my most wronged sister; Cleopatra Hath nodd'd him to her. He hath given his empire
Up to a whore; who now are levying⁴
The kings of the earth for war: He hath assembled
Bocchus, the king of Libya; Archelaus,
Of Cappadocia; Philadelphos, king
Of Paphlagonia; the Thracian king, Adallas;
King Malchus of Arabia; king of Pont;
Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, king
Of Comagene; Polemon and Amintas, more: 'Thou hast now a pair of chaps, and only a pair. Cæsar and Antony will make war on each other, though they have the world to prey on between them.'

The old copy reads would instead of world, and omits one line in the third line of this speech.

⁴ This is closely copied from the old translation of Plutarch.

⁵ The old copy reads, abstract. The alteration was made by Warburton.

⁶ That is, which two persons are now levying, &c
Upton observes, that there are some errors in the enumeration of the auxiliary kings: but it is probable that the poet did not care to be scrupulously accurate. He proposed to read:—

— Polemon and Amintas,
Of Lycæonia, and the king of Medæ, which obviates all impropriety.

The kings of Mede, and Lycaonia, with a
More larger list of sceptres.

Oct. Ah me, most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two friends,
That do afflict each other!

Cæs. Welcome hither;
Your letters did withhold our breaking forth;
Till we perceiv'd, both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart:
Be you not troubled with the time, which drives
O'er your content these strong necessities;
But let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome:
Nothing more dear to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the mark of thought: and the high gods,
To do you justice, make them ministers
Of us, and those that love you. Best of comfort;¹
And ever welcome to us.

Agr. Welcome, lady.

Mec. Welcome, dear madam.
Each heart in Rome does love and pity you:
Only the adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,²
That noises³ it against us.

Oct. Is it so, sir?

Cæs. Most certain. Sister, welcome. Pray you,
Be ever known to patience: My dearest sister!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Antony's Camp, near the Promontory of Actium. Enter CLEOPATRA and ENOBARBUS.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.

Eno. But why, why, why?

Cleo. Thou hast forespoke⁴ my being in these wars;

And say'st, it is not fit.

Eno. Well, is it, is it?

Cleo. Is't not⁵ denounc'd against us? Why should not we

Be there in person?

Eno. [Aside.] Well, I could reply;

If we should serve with horse and mares together,
The horse were merely⁶ lost; the mares would bear

A soldier, and his horse.

Cleo. What is't you say?

Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony;
Take from his heart, take from his brain, from his time,

What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for levity; and 'tis said in Rome,
That Photinus a eunuch, and your maids,
Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome; and their tongues rot,
That speak against us! A charge we bear 'till the war,
And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Eno. Nay, I have done:

Here comes the emperor.

¹ This elliptical phrase is merely an expression of endearment addressed to Octavia.—Thou best of comfort to thy loving brother.

² And gives his potent regiment to a trull.
Regiment is government, authority; he puts his power and his empire into the hands of a harlot. Regiment is used for regimen or government by most of our ancient writers. Thus Spenser, Fæerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10:—
'So when he had resigned his regiment.'

And in Lyly's Woman in the Moon, 1597:—

'Or Hecate in Pluto's regiment.'

³ Milton has used this uncommon verb in Paradise Regained, b. iv.:—

'—though noising loud,
And threatening high.'

⁴ To forespeak here is to speak against, to gainsay, to contradict; as to forbid is to order negatively. The word had, however, the meaning, anciently, of to charm or bewitch, like forbid in Macbeth.

⁵ The old copy reads, 'if not denounc'd,' &c. Steevens reads, 'Is't not? Denounce against us, why?' &c. The emendation I have adopted is more simple, and gives an equally clear meaning. Cleopatra means to Enter ANTONY and CANIDIUS.

Ant. Is't not strange, Canidius,
That from Tarentum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in⁷ Toryne?—You have heard on't, sweet?

Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd,
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becom'd the best of men,
To taunt at slackness.—Canidius, we
Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! What else?

Can. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that⁸ he dares us to't.

Eno. So hath my lord dar'd him to single fight.

Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia, Where Cæsar fought with Pompey: But these offers,

Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off
And so should you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann'd:
Your mariners are muleteers, reapers, people
Ingross'd by swift impress; in Cæsar's fleet
Are those, that often have 'gainst Pompey fought:
Their ships are yare;⁹ yours, heavy. No disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.

Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiiership you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego
The way which promises assurance; and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.

Cleo. I have sixty sails, Cæsar none better.

Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
And, with the rest full mann'd, from the head of Actium

Beat the approaching Cæsar. But if we fail,

Enter a Messenger.

We then can do't at land.—Thy business?

Mess. The news is true, my lord; he is descried;
Cæsar has taken Toryne.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'tis impossible;
Strange, that his power should be.¹⁰—Canidius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse: We'll to our ship;

Enter a Soldier.

Away, my Thetis!¹¹—How now, worthy soldier?

Sold. O, noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you misdoubt
This sword, and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians,

And the Phœnicians, go a ducking: we
Have used to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away.

[Exeunt ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, and ENOBARBUS.

say, 'Is not the war denounced against us? Why should not we then attend in person?' Malone explains the reading of the old copy thus:—'If there be no particular denunciation against us, why should we not be there in person?'

⁶ i. e. entirely, absolutely.

⁷ Take, subdue. This phrase occurs frequently in Shakspeare, and has been already explained.

⁸ i. e. cause that, or that is the cause.

⁹ Yare is quick, nimble, ready. So in The Tempest, Act v. Sc. 1:—'Our ship is tight and yare.' The word seems to have been much in use with sailors formerly. 'The lesser [ship] will come and go, leave and take, and is yare; whereas the greater is slow.'—Raleigh. 'Cæsar's ships were not built for pomp, high and great, &c.; but they were light of yarrage.'—North's Plutarch.
¹⁰ Strange that his forces should be there.

¹¹ Antony may address Cleopatra by the name of this sea-nymph, because she had just promised him assistance in his naval expedition; or perhaps in allusion to her voyage down the Cydnus, when she appeared, like Thetis, surrounded by the Nereids.

Sold. By Hercules, I think, I am i² the right.

Can. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action grows

Not in the power on't:¹ So our leader's led,
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?

Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justeus,
Publicola, and Cælius, are for sea:
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Cæsar's Carries² beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions,³ as Beguil'd all spies.

Can. Who's his lieutenant, hear you?

Sold. They say, one Taurus.

Can. Well I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The emperor calls Canidius.

Can. With news the time's with labour: and throes⁴ forth,
Each minute, some. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. A Plain near Actium. Enter
CÆSAR, TAURUS, Officers, and others.

Cæs. Taurus,—

Taur. My lord.

Cæs. Strike not by land; keep whole:
Provoke not battle, till we have done at sea.
Do not exceed the prescript of this scroll:
Our fortune lies upon this jump.⁵ [Exeunt.]

Enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on yon' side o' the hill,

In eye of Cæsar's battle; from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. [Exeunt.]

Enter CANIDIUS, marching with his Land Army one way over the Stage; and TAURUS, the Lieutenant of Cæsar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a Sea-fight. Alarum.—
Re-enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold
no longer:

The Antoniad,⁶ the Egyptian admiral,
With all their sixty, fly, and turn the rudder;
To see't, mine eyes are blasted.

Enter SCARUS.

Scar. Gods and goddesses,
All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion?

Scar. The greater cantle⁷ of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kiss'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?

Scar. On our side like the token'd⁸ pestilence,
Where death is sure. Yon ribaudred hag⁹ of Egypt,
Whom leprosy o'erthake! i¹⁰ the midst o' the fight,—
When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd,
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,—
The brize¹¹ upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies.

1 'His whole conduct in the war is not founded upon that which is his greatest strength, (namely his land force), but on the caprice of a woman, who wishes that he should fight by sea.

2 i. e. passes all belief. I should not have noticed this, but for Stevens's odd notion of its being a phrase from archery.

3 Detachments, separate bodies.

4 i. e. emits as in parturition: So in The Tempest—
'—proclaim a birth,
Which throes these much to yield.'

5 i. e. this hazard. Thus in Macbeth:—

'We'd jump the life to come.'

6 The Antoniad, Plutarch says, was the name of Cleopatra's ship.

7 A cantle is a portion, a scantling, a fragment: it also signified a corner, and a quarter-piece of any thing. It is from the old French, chantel, or eschantille.

8 The death of those visited by the plague was certain, when particular eruptions appeared on the skin; and these were called God's tokens.

Eno. That I beheld:

Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Endure a further view.

Scar. She once being loof'd,¹¹
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Claps on his sea-wing, and like a doting mallard,
Leaving the fight in height, flies after her:
I never saw an action of such shame;
Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before
Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!

Enter CANIDIUS.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well:
O, he has given example for our flight,
Most grossly, by his own.

Eno. Ay, are you thereabouts? Why then, good night

Indeed. [Aside.]

Can. Towards Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. 'Tis easy to't; and there I will attend

What further comes.

Can. To Cæsar will I render

My legions, and my horse; six kings already
Show me the way of yielding.

Eno. I'll yet follow
The wounded chance¹² of Antony, though my reason
Sits in the wind against me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY, and Attendants.

Ant. Hark, the land bids me tread no more upon't,
It is asham'd to bear me!—Friends, come hither.

I am so lated¹³ in the world, that I

Have lost my way for ever:—I have a ship

Laden with gold; take that, divide it; fly,

And make your peace with Cæsar.

Att. Fly! not we.

Ant. I have fled myself; and have instructed cowards

To run, and show their shoulders.—Friends, be gone;

I have myself resolv'd upon a course,
Which has no need of you; be gone:

My treasure's in the harbour, take it.—O,

I follow'd that I blush to look upon:

My very hairs do mutiny: for the white

Reprove the brown for rashness, and they them

For fear and doting.—Friends, be gone; you shall

Have letters from me to some friends, that will

Sweep your way for you.¹⁴ Pray you, look not sad,

Nor make replies of loathness: take the hint

Which my despair proclaims; let that be left

Which leaves itself: to the seaside straitway:

I will possess you of that ship and treasure.

Leave me, I pray, a little; 'pray you now:

Nay, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command,¹⁵

Therefore I pray you;—I'll see you by-and-by.

[Sits down.]

9 The old copy reads, 'ribaudred nag,' which was altered by Stevens and Malone into 'ribald-rid nag,' but quite unnecessarily. Ribaudred is obscene, indecent in words or acts. Thus Baret:—'A ribaudrous and filthie tongue; as obscenum et impudicum. Ribaudrie, villanis in actes or wordes, filthiness, uncleanness.' And in Horman's Vulgaria:—'Refrayne fro suche foule and rebaudry wordes.' Mr. Tyrwhitt saw that the context required we should read hag instead of nag, which was an easy typographical error.

10 The brize is the oestrus, or gadfly, so troublesome to cattle in the summer months.

11 To loof is to bring a ship close to the wind. This expression is in the old translation of Plutarch. It also frequently occurs in Hackluyt's Voyages.

12 'Wounded chance.' This phrase is nearly of the same import as 'broken fortunes.'

13 Belated, benighted. So in Macbeth:—

'Now spurs the lated traveller apace.'

14 Thus also in Hamlet:—

'—they must sweep my way,

And marshal me to knavery.'

15 'I entreat you to leave me, because I have lost all power to command your absence.'

Enter EROS, and CLEOPATRA, led by CHARMIAN and IRAS.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him;—Comfort him.

Irás. Do, most dear queen.

Char. Do! why, what else?

Cleo. Let me sit down. O, Juno.

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, sir?

Ant. O, fie, fie, fie.

Char. Madam,—

Irás. Madam; O, good empress!—

Eros. Sir, sir,—

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes;—He, at Philippi, kept His sword e'en like a dancer:¹ while I struck The lean and wrinkled Cassius: and 'twas I, That the mad Brutus² ended: he alone Dealt on lieutenant³, and no practice had In the brave squares of war; Yet now—No matter.

Cleo. Ah, stand by.

Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.

Irás. Go to him, madam, speak to him;

He is unqualified⁴ with very shame.

Cleo. Well then,—Sustain me:—Oh!

Eros. Most noble sir, arise; the queen approaches; Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her; but Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation;

A most unnable swerving.

Eros. Sir, the queen.

Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt? See, How I convey my shame out of thine eyes,⁵ By looking back on what I have left behind 'Sroy'd in dishonour.

Cleo. O, my lord, my lord!

Forgive my fearful sails! I little thought, You would have follow'd.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well, My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings, And thou should'st tow me after: O'er my spirit Thy full supremacy thou knew'st; and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods Command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon.

Ant. Now I must To the young man send humble treaties, dodge And palter in the shifts of lowliness; who With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleas'd, Making and marring fortunes. You did know, How much you were my conqueror; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. O, pardon, pardon.

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say; one of them rates⁶ All that is won and lost: Give me a kiss; Even this repays me.—We sent our schoolmaster, Is he come back?—Love, I am full of lead:—Some wine, within there, and our viands:—Fortune knows,

We scorn her most, when most she offers blows.

[Exeunt.]

1 The meaning appears to be, that Cæsar never offered to draw his sword, but kept it in the scabbard, like one who dances with a sword on, which was formerly the custom in England. It is alluded to in All's Well that Ends Well: Bertram, lamenting that he is kept from the wars, says:—

'I shall stay here the forehorse to a smock, Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry, Till honour be bought up, and no sword worn, But one to dance with.'

And in Titus Andronicus:—
'— our mother unadvised

Gave you a dancing rapier by your side.'

2 'Nothing can be more in character than for an infamous debauched tyrant to call the heroic love of one's country and public liberty, madness.'—Warburton.

3 'Dealt on lieutenantry' probably means only 'fought by proxy,' made war by his lieutenants, or on the strength of his lieutenants. In a former scene Ventidius says:—

'Cæsar and Antony have ever won More in their officer, than person.'

To 'deal on any thing' is an expression often used by old writers. In Plutarch's Life of Antony, Shakespeare SCENE X. Cæsar's Camp, in Egypt. Enter CÆSAR, DOLABELLA, THYREUS, and others.

Cæs. Let him appear that's come from Antony, Know you him?

Dol. Cæsar, 'tis his schoolmaster:⁸ An argument that he is pluck'd, when hither He sends so poor a pinion of his wing, Which had superfluous kings for messengers, Not many moons gone by.

Enter EUPHRONIUS.

Cæs. Approach and speak.

Eup. Such as I am, I come from Antony:

I was of late as petty to his ends, As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf To his grand sea.⁹

Cæs. Be it so; Declare thine office.

Eup. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and Requires to live in Egypt: which not granted, He lessens his requests; and to thee sues To let him breathe between the heavens and earth, A private man in Athens: This for him. Next Cleopatra does confess thy greatness; Submits her to thy might; and of thee craves The circle¹⁰ of the Ptolemies for her heirs, Now hazarded to thy grace.

Cæs. For Antony, I have no ears to his request. The queen Of audience, nor desire, shall fail: so she From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend,¹¹ Or take his life there: This if she perform, She shall not sue unheard. So to them both Eup. Fortune pursue thee!

Cæs. Bring him through the bands.

[Exit EUPHRONIUS.]

To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time: Despatch: From Antony win Cleopatra: promise,

[To THYREUS.]

And in our name, what she requires; add more, From thine invention, offers: women are not, In their best fortunes, strong; but want will perjure The ne'er-touch'd vestal:¹² Try thy cunning,

Thyreus;

Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Cæsar, I go,

Cæs. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw;¹³ And what thou think'st his very action speaks In every power that moves.

Thyr. Cæsar, I shall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XI. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Think, and die.¹⁴ found the following words:—'They were always more fortunate when they made warre by their lieutenants than by themselves.'

4 Unqualified seems to mean here unsoldiered, quality being used for profession by Shakespeare and his contemporaries. Steevens says, 'Perhaps unqualified only signifies unmanned in general, disarmed of his usual faculties.'

5 But is here used in its exceptive sense.

6 'How, by looking another way, I withdraw my ignominy from your sight.'

7 Values.

8 Euphronius, schoolmaster to Antony's children by Cleopatra.

9 'His grand sea' appears to mean the sea from which the dew-drop is exhaled. The poet may have considered the sea as the source of dews as well as rain. His we find frequently used for its.

10 The diadem, the crown.

11 Friend here means paramour.

12 'O, opportunity! thy guilt is great. Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath.'

Rape of Lucrece.

13 'Note how Antony conforms himself to this breach in his fortune.'

14 To think, or take thought, was anciently synonymous with to grieve. Thus in Julius Cæsar, Act ii. Sc. 1:—

'— all that he can do Is to himself; take thought, and die for Cæsar.'

Cleo. Is Antony, or we, in fault for this?

Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you fled From that great face of war, whose several ranges Frighted each other? why should he follow? The itch of his affection should not then Have nick'd his captainship; at such a point, When half to half the world oppos'd, he being The mered question:² 'Twas a shame no less Than was his loss, to course your flying flags, And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Pr'ythee, peace.

Enter ANTONY, with EUPHRONIUS.

Ant. Is this his answer?

Eup. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen shall then have courtesy, so she Will yield us up.

Eup. He says so.

Ant. Let her know it.—

To the boy Cæsar send this grizzled head, And he will fill thy wishes to the brim With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again; Tell him, he wears the rose Of youth upon him; from which the world should note

Something particular: his coin, ships, legions May be a coward's; whose ministers would prevail Under the service of a child, as soon As 't the command of Cæsar: I dare him therefore To lay his gay comparisons apart, And answer me declin'd,³ sword against sword, Ourselves alone; I'll write it; follow me.

[Exeunt ANTONY and EUPHRONIUS.]

Eno. Yes, like enough, high-battled Cæsar will Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to the show,⁴ Against a sword.—I see, men's judgments are A parcel⁵ of their fortunes; and things outward Do draw the inward quality after them, To suffer all alike. That he should dream, Knowing all measures, the full Cæsar will Answer his emptiness!—Cæsar, thou hast subdu'd His judgment too.

Enter an Attendant.

Au. A messenger from Cæsar.

Cleo. What, no more ceremony?—See, my women!

Against the blown rose may they stop their nose, That kneel'd unto the buds.—Admit him, sir.

Eno. Mine honesty, and I begin to square.⁶ [Aside.] The loyalty, well held to fools, does make Our faith more folly:—Yet he, that can endure To follow with allegiance a fallen lord, Does conquer him that did his master conquer, And earns a place i' the story.

So Viola 'pined in thought.' And in The Beggar's Bush, of Beaumont and Fletcher:—

'Can I not think away myself, and die?'

1 i. e. set the mark of folly upon it. So in the Comedy of Errors:—

'—and the while

His man with scissars nicks him like a fool.'

2 i. e. he being the object to which this great contention is limited, or by which it is bounded. So in Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 1:—

'—the king

That was and is the question of these wars.'

3 His gay comparisons may mean those circumstances of splendour and power in which he, when compared with me, so much exceeds me. 'I require of Cæsar not to depend on that superiority which the comparison of our different fortunes may exhibit, but to answer me man to man in this decline of my age and power.'

4 i. e. be exhibited, like conflicting gladiators, to the public gaze.

5 i. e. are of a piece with them.

6 To square is to quarrel. Enobarbus is deliberating upon desertion, and finding it is more prudent to forsake a fool, and more reputable to be faithful to him, makes no positive conclusion.

7 Thus the second folio. The first folio has, '—than he is Cæsar's,' which brings obscurity with it. We Enter THYREUS.

Cleo. Cæsar's will?

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends; say boldly.

Thyr. So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Cæsar has; Or needs not us. If Cæsar please, our master Will leap to be his friend: For us, you know, Whose he is, we are; and that's Cæsar's.

Thyr. So.—

Thus, then, thou most renown'd; Cæsar entreats, Not to consider in what case thou stand'st, Further than he is Cæsar.'

Cleo. Go on: Right royal.

Thyr. He knows that you embrace⁸ not Antony As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. O!

Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore, he Does pity, as constrained blemishes, Not as deserv'd.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows What is most right: Mine honour was not yielded, But conquer'd merely.

Eno. To be sure of that, [Aside.]

I will ask Antony.—Sir, sir, thou'rt so leaky, That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee.⁹ [Exit ENOBARBUS.]

Thyr. Shall I say to Cæsar

What you require of him? for he partly begs To be desir'd to give. It much would please him That of his fortunes you should make a staff To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits, To hear from me you had left Antony, And put yourself under his shroud, The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thyr. My name is Thyreus.

Cleo. Most kind messenger,

Say to great Cæsar this in disputation,¹⁰

I kiss his conquering hand: tell him, I am prompt

To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel:

Tell him, from his all-obeying¹¹ breath I hear

The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. 'Tis your noblest course.

Wisdom and fortune combating together,

If that the former dare but what it can,

No chance may shake it. Give me grace¹² to lay

My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Cæsar's father

Of, when he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,

Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,

As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders!—

What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One, that but performs have a clear meaning in the present reading: 'Cæsar entreats, that at the same time you consider your desperate fortunes, you would consider he is Cæsar: that is, generous and forgiving, able and willing to restore them.' I think with Malone that the previous speech, which is given to Enobarbus, was intended for Cleopatra.

8 Shakspeare probably wrote embrac'd.

9 So in The Tempest:—

'A rotten carcass of a boat—

—the very rats

Instinctively had quit it.'

10 Warburton suggests that we should read, 'in deputation,' i. e. 'as my deputy, say to great Cæsar this,' &c. Why the old punctuation of this line was altered in the modern editions, I am at a loss to imagine: the passage has been made obscure by printing it thus:

'Say to great Cæsar this, In disputation

I kiss his conquering hand.'

The following passage in King Henry IV. Part I. seems to support Warburton's emendation:—

'Of all the favourites that the absent king

In deputation left behind him here.'

11 i. e. breath which all obey. Obeying for obeyed; in other places we have delighted for delighting, guile for guiling, &c.

12 Grant me the favour.

The bidding of the fullest! man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Eno. You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach, there:—Ay, you kite;—Now, gods and devils!

Authority melts from me: Of late, when I cried, Ho!
Like boys unto a muss,² kings would start forth,
And cry, Your will? Have you no ears? I am

Enter Attendants.

Antony yet. Take hence this Jack, and whip him.

Eno. 'Tis better playing with a lion's whelp,
Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Moon and stars!
Whip him:—Were't twenty of the greatest tributaries

That do acknowledge Cæsar, should I find them
So saucy with the hand of she here (What's her
name,

Since she was Cleopatra?³)—Whip him, fellows,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy: Take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony,—

Ant. Tug him away: being whipp'd,
Bring him again:—This Jack of Cæsar's shall Bear us an errand to him.—

[Exeunt Attend. with THYREUS.]

You were half blasted ere I knew you:—Ha!

Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawful race,
And by a gem of women, to be abus'd
By one that looks on feeders.⁴

Cleo. Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a boggler ever:
But when we in our viciousness grow hard,
(O, misery on't!) the wise gods seal⁵ our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgments; make us
Adore our errors; laugh at us, while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. O, is it come to this?

Ant. I found you as a morsel, cold upon
Dead Cæsar's trencher: nay, you were a fragment
Of Cneius Pompey's; besides what hotter hours, Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously⁶ pick'd out:—For, I am sure,
Though you can guess what temperance should be,
You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,
And say, God quit you! be familiar with
My playfellow, your hand; this kingly seal,
And plighter of high hearts!—O, that I were
Upon the hill of Basan,⁷ to outroar
The horned herd! for I have savage cause;
And to proclaim it civilly, were like
A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank
For being yare⁸ about him.—Is he whipp'd?

Re-enter Attendants, with THYREUS.

1 Ant. Soundly, my lord.

1 The most complete and perfect. And in Othello:

'What a full fortune does the thick-lips owe.'

2 A muss is a scramble.

'—nor are they thrown

To make a muss among the gamesome suitors.'

Jonson's Magnetic Lady.

Dryden uses the word in the Prologue to Widow Ranter:

'Bauble and cap no sooner are thrown down,

But there's a muss of more than half the town.'

3 That is, since she ceased to be Cleopatra.

4 i.e. on menials. Servants are called eaters and feeders by several of our old dramatic writers. Morose, in the Silent Woman of Ben Jonson, says:—'Where are all my eaters, my mouths now? Bar up my doors, you varlets.' And in The Wits, by Sir W. Davenant:

'—tall eaters, in blue coats, sans number.'

Thus also in Fletcher's Nice Valour, Act iii. Sc. 1:—

'Servants he has, lusty tall feeders.'

* Have I (says Antony) abandoned Octavia, a gem of women, to be abus'd by a woman so base as to look on servants? We are indebted to Mr. Gifford for fully establishing this explanation, and showing that Steevens gave the true meaning of the passage, thereby overthrowing Johnson's misconception, and Malone's pertinacious support of it. See the works of Ben Jonson,
vol. iii. p. 405.

Ant. Cried he? and begg'd he pardon?

1 Ant. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent

Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou sorry

To follow Cæsar in his triumph, since

Thou hast been whipp'd for following him: henceforth,

The white hand of a lady fever thee,

Shake thou to look on't.—Get thee back to Cæsar,

Tell him thy entertainment: Look, thou say,

He makes me angry with him: for he seems

Proud and disdainful; harping on what I am;

Not what he knew I was: He makes me angry;

And at this time most easy 'tis to do't;

When my good stars, that were my former guides,

Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires

Into the abyss of hell. If he mislike

My speech, and what is done; tell him, he has

Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd bondman, whom

He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,

As he shall like, to quit⁹ me: Urge it thou:

Hence, with thy stripes, begone. [Exit THYREUS.

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, our terrene moon

Is now eclips'd; and it portends aloue

The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Cæsar, would you mingle eyes

With one that ties his points?¹⁰

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,

From my cold heart let heaven engender hail,

And poison it in the source; and the first stone

Drop in my neck: as it determines,¹¹ so

Dissolve my life! The next Cæsarion¹² smite!

Till, by degrees, the memory of my womb,

Together with my brave Egyptians all,

By the discarding of this pelleted storm,

Lie graveless; till the flies and gnats of Nile

Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cæsar sits down in Alexandria; where

I will oppose his fate. Our force by land

Hath nobly held; our sever'd navy too

Have knit again, and fleet,¹³ threat'ning most sealike.

Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou hear,

lady?

If from the field I shall return once more

To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;

I and my sword will earn our chronicle;

There is hope in it yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breath'd,

And fight maliciously: for when mine hours

Were nice¹⁴ and lucky, men did ransom lives

Of me for jests; but now, I'll set my teeth,

And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,

5 Close up. 6 Wantonly.

7 This is an allusion, however improper, to the Psalms

'An high hill as the hill of Basan.' The idea o the horned herd was also probably caught from the same source:—'Many oxen are come about me: fat bulls of Basan close me in on every side.' 'It is not without pity and indignation (says Johnson) that the reader of this great poet meets so often with this low jest, which is too much a favourite to be left out of either mirth or fury.'

8 i.e. ready, nimble, active.

9 To repay me this insult, to requite me.

10 i.e. with a menial attendant. The reader will doubtless remember that points were the laces with which our ancestors fastened their trunk-hose.

11 That is, as the halstone dissolves or wastes away,

In King Henry VI. Part II. :—

'Till his friend sickness hath determin'd me.'

12 Cleopatra's son by Julius Cæsar.

13 To fleet and to float were anciently synonymous.—

Thus Baret:—'To fleet above the water: flouter.' Steevens has adduced numerous examples from old writers

14 Nice is here equivalent to soft, tender, wanton, or luxurious.

'In softer and more fortunate hours.'

Let's have one other gaudy¹ night : call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowls ; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birthday :
I had thought, to have held it poor ; but, since my
lord

Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We'll yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.

Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them ; and to-night
I'll force

The wine peep through their scars.—Come on, my
queen :

There's sap in't yet.—The next time I do fight,
I'll make death love me ; for I will contend
Even with his pestilent scythe.²

[Exeunt ANT. CLEO. and Attendants.]

Eno. Now he'll out-stare the lightning.³ To be furious,

Is, to be frighted out of fear : and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge ;⁴ and I see still,
A diminution in our captain's brain
Restores his heart : When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek
Some way to leave him. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. *Cæsar's Camp at Alexandria. Enter CÆSAR, reading a Letter ; AGRIPPA, MÆCENAS,
and others.*

Cæs. He calls me boy ; and chides, as he had power

To beat me out of Egypt : my messenger
He hath whipp'd with rods ; dares me to personal combat,

Cæsar to Antony : Let the old ruffian know,
I have many other ways to die ;⁵ mean time,
Laugh at his challenge.

Mec. Cæsar must think,
When one so great begins to rage, he's hunted
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make boot⁶ of his distraction : Never anger
Made good guard for itself.

Cæs. Let our best heads
Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles
We mean to fight :—Within our files there are
Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it be done ;
And feast the army : we have store to do't,
And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony !
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. *Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and others.*

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius.

Eno.

No.

Ant. Why should he not ?

1 Feast days, in the colleges of either university, are called gaudy days, as they were formerly in the Inns of Court. 'From gaudium, (says Blount,) because, to say truth, they are days of joy, as bringing good cheer to the hungry students.'

2 This may have been caught from Harington's Ariosto, b. xii. :—

'Death goeth about the field, rejoicing mickle

To see a sword that so surpass'd his sickle.'

Death is armed with a weapon in Statius, Theb. i. 633 :—
'Mors fila sororum
Ense matit.'

3 Plutarch says of Antony, 'He used a manner of phrase in his speech called Asiatic, which carried the best grace at that time, and was much like to him in his manners and life ; for it was full of ostentation, foolish braverie, and vaine ambition.'—North's Translation.

4 i. e. the estridge falcon.

5 Upton would read :—

'He hath many other ways to die : mean time

I laugh at his challenge.'

This is certainly the sense of Plutarch, and given so in modern translations ; but Shakspeare was misled by the ambiguity of the old one :—'Antony sent again to challenge Cæsar to fight him : Cæsar answered, that he had many other ways to die than so.'

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better
fortune,

He is twenty men to one.

Ant.

To-morrow, soldier,
By sea and land I'll fight : or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
Shall make it live again. Woo't thou fight well ?

Eno. I'll strike ; and cry, *Take all.*⁷

Ant.

Well said ; come on.—
Call forth my household servants ; let's to-night

Enter Servants.

Be bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest ;—so hast thou ;—
And thou,—and thou,—and thou :—you have serv'd me well,

And kings have been your fellows.

Cleo.

What means this ?
Eno. 'Tis one of those odd tricks, which sorrow shoots

[Aside.]

Out of the mind.

Ant.

And thou art honest too.

I wish, I could be made so many men ;

And all of you clapp'd up together in
An Antony ; that I might do you service,
So good as you have done.

Serv.

The gods forbid !

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-night :
Scant not my cups ; and make as much of me,
As when mine empire was your fellow too,
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo.

What does he mean ?

Eno. To make his followers weep.

Ant.

Tend me to-night ;

May be, it is the period of your duty :

Haply, you shall not see me more ; or if,

A mangled shadow :⁸ perchance, to-morrow

You'll serve another master. I look on you,

As one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends,

I turn you not away ; but, like a master

Married to your good service, stay till death :

Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,

And the gods yield⁹ you for't !

Eno.

What mean you, sir,

To give them this discomfort ? Look, they weep ;

And I, an ass, am onion-ey'd ;¹⁰ for shame,

Transform us not to women.

Ant.

Ho, ho, ho !¹¹

Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus !

Grace grow where those drops fall !¹² My hearty

friends,

You take me in too dolorous a senso :

I spake to you for your comfort : did desire you

To burn this night with torches : Know, my hearts,

I hope well of to-morrow ; and will lead you,

Where rather I'll expect victorious life,

Than death and honour. Let's to supper ; come,

And drown consideration. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. Before the Palace. Enter

Two Soldiers, to their Guard.

I Sold. Brother, good night : to-morrow is the day.

6 i. e. take advantage of.

7 Let the survivor take all ; no composition ; victory or death. So in King Lear :—

So in King Lear :—

And bids what will, take all.'

8 'Or if you see me more, you will see a mangled shadow, only the external form of what I was.' The thought is, as usual, taken from North's translation of Plutarch.

9 i. e. 'God reward you.'

10 We have a similar allusion in Act i. Sc. 2 :—'The tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow.'

11 Steevens thinks that this exclamation of Antony's means stop or desist, desiring his followers to cease weeping. Ho ! was an interjection, frequently used as a command to desist or leave off. Mr. Boswell says,

'These words may have been intended to express an hysterical laugh, in the same way as Cleopatra exclaims, in Act i. Sc. 5 :—

Ha ! ha !

Give me to drink mandragora.'

12 'Here did she drop a tear ; here, in this place,

I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace.'

King Richard II.

2 Sold. It will determine one way : fare you well.
Heard you of nothing strange about the streets ?

1 Sold. Nothing : What news ?

2 Sold. Belike, 'tis but a rumour :
Good night to you.

1 Sold. Well, sir, good night.

Enter Two other Soldiers.

2 Sold. Soldiers,
Have careful watch.

3 Sold. And you : Good night, good night.

[The first Two place themselves at their Posts.

4 Sold. Here we : [They take their Posts.] and if to-morrow

Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope

Our landmen will stand up.

3 Sold. 'Tis a brave army,
And full of purpose.

[Music of Hautboys under the Stage.

4 Sold. Peace, what noise ?

1 Sold. List, list !

2 Sold. Hark !

1 Sold. Music ! 'the air.

3 Sold. Under the earth.

4 Sold. It signs ! well,

Does't not ?

3 Sold. No.

1 Sold. Peace, I say. What should this mean ?

2 Sold. 'Tis the god Hercules, whom Antony lov'd,

Now leaves him.?

1 Sold. Walk ; let's see if other watchmen
Do hear what we do. [They advance to another Post.

2 Sold. How now, masters ?

3 Sold. How now ?

How now ? do you hear this ?

[Several speaking together.

1 Sold. Ay ; Is't not strange ?

3 Sold. Do you hear, masters ? do you hear ?

1 Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quarter ;
Let's see how't will give off.

Sold. [Several speaking.] Content : 'Tis strange.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA ; CHARMIAN and others attending.

Ant. Eros ! mine armour, Eros !

Cleo. Sleep a little.

Ant. No, my chuck.—Eros, come ; mine armour, Eros !

Enter Eros, with Armour.

Come, good fellow, put thine iron on :—

If fortune be not ours to-day, it is Because we brave her.—Come.

Cleo. Nay, I'll help too.

What's this for ?

Ant. Ah, let be, let be ! thou art
The armourer of my heart :—False, false ; this,
this.

Cleo. Sooth, la, I'll help : Thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well :

We shall thrive now.—Seest thou, my good fellow ?
Go, put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly, sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled well ?

Ant. Rarely, rarely :

He that unbuckles this, till we do please

To doff't for our repose, shall hear a storm.—

Thou fumblest, Eros ; and my queen's a squire

1 i. e. it bodes well.

2 This is from the old translation of Plutarch :—
'Within a little of midnight, when all the clife was quiet, full of feare, and sorrowe, thinking what would be the issue and end of this warre, it is saide that sodainely they heard a marvellous sweete harmonie of sundry sortes of instruments of musicke, with the cry of a multitude of people as they had bene dauncinge, and had song as they use in Bacchus feastes, with mov-inges and turnings after the manner of the satyres : and it seemed that this daunce went through the city unto the gate that opened to the enemies, and that all the troupe that made this noise they heard went out of the More tight⁴ at this, than thou : Despatch.—O love,

That thou could'st see my wars to-day, and knew'st
The royal occupation ; thou should'st see

Enter an Officer, armed.

A workman in't.—Good morrow to thee ; welcome :
Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike charge.
To business that we love, we rise betime,
And go to it with delight.

1 Off. A thousand, sir,
Early though it be, have on their riveted trim,⁵
And at the port expect you.

[Shout. Trumpets. Flourish.

Enter other Officers, and Soldiers.

2 Off. The morn is fair.—Good morrow, general.

All. Good morrow, general.

Ant. 'Tis well blown, lads.

This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes.—
So, so ; come, give me that : this way ; well said.
Fare thee well, dame, whate'er becomes of me :
This is a soldier's kiss ; rebukable, [Kisses her.
And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
On more mechanic compliment ; I'll leave thee
Now, like a man of steel.—You, that will fight,
Follow me close ; I'll bring you to't.—Adieu.

[Exeunt ANTONY, EROS, Officers, and Soldiers.

Char. Please you, retire to your chamber ?

Cleo. Lead me,
He goes forth gallantly. That he and Cæsar might Determine this great war in single fight :

Then, Antony,—But now,—Well, on. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Antony's Camp near Alexandria.
Trumpets sound. Enter ANTONY and EROS ; a Soldier meeting them.

Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony !

Ant. 'Would, thou and those thy scars had once
prevail'd

To make me fight at land !

Sold. Had'st thou done so,
The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Follow'd thy heels.

Ant. Who's gone this morning ?

Sold. Who ?

One ever near thee : Call for Enobarbus,
He shall not hear thee ; or from Cæsar's camp
Say, I am none of thine.

Ant. What say'st thou ?

Sold. Sir,

He is with Cæsar.

Eros. Sir, his chests and treasure
He has not with him.

Ant. Is he gone ?

Sold. Most certain.

Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after ; do it ;
Detain no jot, I charge thee : write to him
(I will subscribe) gentle adieus, and greetings :
Say, that I wish he never find more cause
To change a master.—O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men :—Despatch :—Enobarbus !
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI. Cæsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Flourish. Enter CÆSAR with AGRIPPA, ENO-
BARBUS, and others.

Cæs. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight ;
Our will is, Antony be took alive ;
Make it so known.

Agr. Cæsar, I shall.

[Exit AGRIPPA.

city at that gate. Now such as in reason sought the interpretation of this wonder, thought that it was the god unto whom Antonius bare singular devotion to counterfeate and resemble him, that did't forsake them.'

3 That is, 'quickly, sir.'

4 Tight is handy, adroit. See A The Merry Wives of Windsor :—' Bear you these letters tightly.' A tight lass is a handy one.

5 So in King Henry V. :—

'The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up'

Cæs. The time of universal peace is near :
Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd world
Shall bear the olive freely.¹

Enter a Messenger.

Mess.

Antony

Is come into the field.

Cæs.

Go, charge Agrippa,
Plant those 'that have revolted in the van,
That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself. [Exeunt CÆSAR and his Train.]

Eno. Alexas did revolt ; and went to Jewry,
On affairs of Antony ; there did persuade Great Herod to incline himself to Cæsar,
And leave his master Antony : for this pains,
Cæsar hath hang'd him. Canidius, and the rest
That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill,
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Cæsar's.

Sold.

Enobarbus, Antony

Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with
His bounty overplus : The messenger
Came on my guard ; and at thy tent is now,
Unloading of his mules.

Eno. I give it you.

Sold.

Mock not, Enobarbus.

I tell you true : Best you sa'd the bringer
Out of the host ; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done't myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove. [Exit Soldier.]

Eno. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most. O, Antony,
Thou mine of bounty, how would'st thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude Thou dost so crown with gold ! This blows² my heart :

If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrike thought : but thought will do't, I feel.
I fight against thee !—No : I will go seek
Some ditch, wherein to die ; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.]

SCENE VII. Field of Battle between the Camps.
Alarum. Drums and Trumpets. Enter AGRIPPA,
and others.

Agg. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far ;
Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression³
Exceeds what he expected. [Exeunt.]

Alarum. Enter ANTONY and SCARUS, wounded.

Scar. O, my brave emperor, this is fought indeed !
Had we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heads.

Ant.

Thou' bleed'st apace.

Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.

Ant.

They do retire.

Scar. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes ;⁴ I have yet
Room for six scotches more.

Enter EROS.

Eros. They are beaten, sir ; and our advantage serves
For a fair victory.

¹ The meaning is that the world shall then enjoy the blessings of peace undisturbed. The following passages illustrate this passage :—

'Come the three corners of the world in arms,

And we shall shock them.' King John.

'There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd,

But peace puts forth her olive every where.'

King Henry VI. Part II. Act iv. Sc. 4.

² 'This generosity (says Enobarbus) swells my heart, so that it will quickly break, if thought break it not.'
Blown is used for puffed or swelled in the last scene :—

'—on her breast

There is a vent of blood, and something blown.'

And in Lear :—

'No blown ambition doth our arms excite.'

Thought here also signifies grief. See Act iii. Sc. 2.

³ 'Our oppression' means the force by which we are oppressed or overpowered.

Scar. Let us score their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind ;
'Tis sport to maul a runner.

Ant.

I will reward thee
Once for thy sprightly comfort, and tenfold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar.

I'll halt after. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. Under the Walls of Alexandria.— Alarum. Enter ANTONY, marching ; SCARUS, and Forces.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp ; Run one before,
And let the queen know of our guests.⁵—Tomorrow,

Before the sun shall see us, we'll spill the blood
That has to-day escap'd. I thank you all ;
For doughty-handed are you : and have fought
Not as you served the cause, but as it had been
Each man's like mine ; you have shown all Hector's.
Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats ; whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds, and kiss
The honour'd gashes whole.—Give me thy hand ;
[To SCARUS.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, attended.

To this great fairy⁶ I'll commend thy acts, Make her thanks bless thee.—O, thou day o' the
world,

Chain mine arm'd neck ; leap thou, attire and all,
Through proof of harness⁷ to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo.

Lord of lords !

O, infinite virtue ! com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare⁸ uncaught ?

Ant.

My nightingale,

We have beat them to their beds. What, girl ?
though gray

Do something mingle with our younger brown ; yet have we

A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get goal for goal of youth.⁹ Behold this man ;
Commend unto his lips thy favouring hand ;—
Kiss it, my warrior :—He hath fought to-day,
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo.

I'll give thee, friend,
An armour all of gold : it was a king's.

Ant. He has deserv'd it : were it carbuncled
Like holy Phœbus' car.—Give me thy hand ;
Through Alexandria make a jolly march ;
Bear our hack'd targets like the men that owe them :¹⁰
Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear ;
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines :¹¹
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together,

Applauding our approach. [Exeunt.]

⁴ The hole in a bench, ad levandum alvum. Thus in Cecil's Secret Correspondence, published by Lord Hailes, 1766 :—'And beside, until a man be sure that this embryo is likely to receive life, I will leave it like an abort in a bench-hole.'

⁵ Antony, after his success, intends to bring his officers to sup with Cleopatra, and orders notice to be given her of their coming.

⁶ Fairy, in former times, did not signify only a diminutive imaginary being, but an enchanter ; in which sense it is used here.

⁷ i. e. armour of proof. Harnois. Fr. ; armese, Ital.

⁸ i. e. the war. So in the 116th Psalm :—'The snares of death compassed me round about.' Thus also Statius :—

'—circum undique lethi

Vallaverè plagæ.'

⁹ At all plays of barriers the boundary is called a goal ; to win a goal is to be superior in a contest of activity.

¹⁰ 'With spirit and exultation, such as becomes the brave warriors that own them.'

¹¹ Tabourines were small drums.'

SCENE IX. Cæsar's Camp. Sentinels on their Post. Enter ENOBARBUS.

1 Sold. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard! The night
Is shiny; and, they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour i' the morn.

2 Sold. This last day was
A shrewd one to us.

Eno. O, bear me witness, night —
3 Sold. What man is this?

2 Sold. Stand close, and list him.
Eno. Be witness to me, O, thou blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did Before thy face repent! —

1 Sold. Enobarbus!
3 Sold. Peace;

Hark further.

Eno. O, sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The poisonous damp of night disponge² upon me;
That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me: Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;³
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,
And finish all foul thoughts. O, Antony,
Nobler than my revolt is infamous.
Forgive me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive:
O, Antony! O, Antony!

[Dies.

2 Sold. Let's speak
To him.

1 Sold. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks
May concern Cæsar.

3 Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.

1 Sold. Swoons rather; for so bad a prayer as his
Was never yet for sleep.

2 Sold. Go we to him.

3 Sold. Awake, awake, sir; speak to us.

2 Sold. Hear you, sir?

1 Sold. The hand of death hath raught⁴ him.

Hark, the drums [Drums afar off.
Demurely⁵ wake the sleepers. Let us bear him
To the court of guard; he is of note: our hour
Is fully out.

3 Sold. Come on, then;
He may recover yet. [Exeunt with the Body.

SCENE X. Between the two Camps. Enter ANTONY and SCARUS, with Forces, marching.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea;
We please them not by land.

Scar. For both, my lord.

Ant. I would, they'd fight i' the fire, or in the air;

1 The court of guard is the guard-room, the place where the guard musters. The phrase is used again in Othello.

2 Discharge, as a sponge when squeezed discharges the moisture it had imbibed.

3 'It is painful to find the gloomy dignity of this noble scene destroyed by the intrusion of a conceit so far-fetched and unaffecting.'—Johnson.

Steevens has justly observed, that Shakspeare, in most of his conceits, is kept in countenance by his contemporaries. We have something similar in Daniel's 118th Sonnet, ed. 1594:—

'Still must I whet my young desires abated,
Upon the flint of such a heart rebelling.'

4 Raught is the ancient preterite of the verb to reach.

5 Demurely for solemnly.

6 Some words appear to have been accidentally omitted in the old copy, which Malone has supplied by the phrase, 'Let's seek a spot.' Rowe supplied the omission by the words, 'Further on.'

7 'Where we may but discover their numbers, and see their motions.'

8 But, in its exceptive sense, for be out, i. e. without. Steevens has adduced a passage from the MS. Romance of Guillaume de Palerne, in the Library of King's Coll. Cambridge, in which the orthography almost explains the word:—

'I sayle now in the see as schip bouste mast,
Boute anker, or ore, or any semlych sayle.'

9 The old copy reads, auguries. Augurs, the plural of augur, was anciently spelled augures, which was

We'd fight there too. But this it is; Our foot
Upon the hill adjoining to the city,
Shall stay with us: order for sea is given;
They have put forth the haven: Let's seek a spot,⁶
Where there appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour. [Exeunt

Enter CÆSAR, and his Forces, marching.

Cæs. But⁷ being charg'd, we will be still by land,
Which, as I take't, we shall; for his best force
Is forth to man his galleys. To the vales,
And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.

Re-enter ANTONY and SCARUS.

Ant. Yet they're not join'd: Where yonder pine does stand,

I shall discover all: I'll bring thee word
Straight, how 'tis like to go. [Exit.

Scar. Swallows have built
In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augures⁹ Say, they know not,—they cannot tell;—look grimly,

And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant, and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear,
Of what he has, and has not.

Alarm afar off, as at a Sea-fight. Re-enter ANTONY.

Ant. All is lost;
This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me:
My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder
They cast their caps up, and carouse together
Like friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whore!¹⁰ 'tis thou

Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart
Makes only wars on thee.—Bid them all fly;
For when I am reveng'd upon my charm,
I have done all:—Bid them all fly, begone.

[Exit SCARUS.

O, sun, thy uprise shall I see no more:
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands.—All come to this?—The hearts
That spaniel'd¹¹ me at heels, to whom I gave Their wishes, to discandy, melt their sweets
On blossoming Cæsar; and this pine is bark'd,
That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am:
O, this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm¹² Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them
home;
Whose bosom was my crownet,¹³ my chief end,
Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose,¹⁴
Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss.—
What, Eros, Eros!

should read here, and not augurers, improperly substituted by Malone.

10 Cleopatra first belonged to Julius Cæsar, then to Antony, and now, as Antony supposes, to Augustus.

11 The old editions read, spaniel'd. Spaniel'd is the happy emendation of Sir Thomas Hanmer. In A Midsummer Night's Dream, Helena says to Demetrius:—

'I am your spaniel,—only give me leave,
Unworthy as I am, to follow you.'

12 'This grave charm' probably means this deadly or destructive peace of witchcraft. In this sense the epithet grave is often used by Chapman in his translation of Homer. Thus in the nineteenth book:—

'—but not far hence the fatal minutes are
Of thy grave ruin.'

It seems to be employed in the sense of the Latin word gravis.

13 'That which I looked to as the reward or crown of my endeavours.' The allusion is to finis coronat opus. In All's Well that Ends Well we have:—'Still the fine's the crown.'

14 The allusion is to the game of fast and loose, or pricking at the bell or girdle, still practised by juggling cheats at fairs, and which was practised by the gipsies in Shakspeare's time, as appears in an Epigram of Thomas Freeman's, in his collection, called 'Run and a great Cast,' 1614, which is printed in the Variorum Shakspeare, together with Sir John Hawkins's description of the game. See also Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft, 1584, p. 336.

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt.

Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love?

Ant. Vanish; or I shall give thee thy deserving,
And blemish Cæsar's triumph. Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians:
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex: most monster-like, be shown
For poor'st diminutives, for doits;¹ and let Patient Octavia plough thy visage up With her prepared nails. [Exit CLEO.] 'Tis well
thou'rt gone,

If it be well to live: But better 'twere
Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho!—
The shirt of Nessus is upon me: Teach me,
Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage:
Let me lodge Lichas² on the horns o' the moon;
And with those hands, that grasp'd the heaviest club,

Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die;
To the young Roman boy she hath sold me, and I fall

Under this plot: she dies for't.—Eros, ho! [Exit.

SCENE XI. Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.
Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Help me, my women! O, he is more mad
Than Telamon³ for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so emboss'd.⁴

Char. To the monument;
There lock yourself, and send him word you are
dead.

The soul and body rive not more in parting,⁵
Than greatness going off.

Cleo. To the monument:—
Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself;
Say, that the last I spoke was, Antony,
And word it, prythee, piteously: Hence,
Mardian; and bring me how he takes my death.—
To the monument. [Exit.

SCENE XII. The same. Another Room. Enter
ANTONY and EROS.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?

Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometime, we see a cloud that's dragonish;⁶
A vapour, sometime, like a bear, or lion,
A tower'd citadel, a pendent rock,
A forked mountain or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air: Thou hast seen these signs;

They are black vespers' pageants.⁷

Eros. Ay, my lord.

Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought,

The rack dislimns,⁸ and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord.

Ant. My good knave,⁹ Eros, now thy captain is Even such a body: here I am Antony;
Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
I made these wars for Egypt; and the queen,—
Whose heart, I thought, I had, for she had mine;
Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto't
A million more, now lost,—she, Eros, has Pack'd cards¹⁰ with Cæsar, and false play'd my glory
Unto an enemy's triumph.—
Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us
Ourselves to end ourselves.—O, thy vile lady.

Enter MARDIAN.

She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony;
My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled
With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy eunuch; peace;
She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once;
And that she has discharg'd: What thou would'st do.
Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake
Was Antony! most noble Antony!

Then in the midst a tearing groan did break

The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips: she render'd life,

Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead, then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Unarm, Eros; the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep:—That thou depart'st hence safe,

Does pay thy labour richly; Go.—Off, pluck off;—
[Exit MARDIAN.]

The sevenfold shield of Ajax cannot keep

The battery from my heart.¹¹ O, cleave my sides!

Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,¹²

Crack thy frail case!—Apace, Eros, apace.—

No more a soldier:—Bruised pieces, go;

You have been nobly borne.—From me awhile.—
[Exit EROS.]

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and

Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now

All length is torture:¹³ Since the torch is out,

Lie down, and stray no further: Now all labour

Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles

Itself with strength: Seal, then,¹⁴ and all is done.—

Eros!—I come, my queen:—Eros!—Stay for me:

Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand,

And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze:

or unicorn; but if they be curiously look'd into, there is nothing but cloth, and sticks, and ayre.¹⁵

8 i. e. 'the fleeting away of the clouds destroys the picture.'

9 Knave was familiarly used for servant. Thus in A

Mery Geste of Robyn Hoode:—

'I shall thee lende lytle John my man,

For he shall be thy knave.'

But it had already begun to have no favourable signification when Baret published his Alvearie, in 1573.

10 'To pack the cards' was to put them together in an unfair manner. It is often used metaphorically, for contriving together to deceive another. The poet meant to say, that Cleopatra, by collusion, played the great game they were engaged in falsely, so as to sacrifice

Antony's fame to that of his enemy. There is an equivocal between trump and triumph. The game of trump (trionphe, Fr.) was then popular; it was a rude prototype of whist.

11 'The battery from my heart' means 'the battery proceeding from my heart, which is strong enough to break through the sevenfold shield of Ajax; I wish it were strong enough to cleave my sides and destroy me.'

12 i. e. the thing that contains thee.

13 Stevens thinks that the poet wrote life, and not length. But length may signify extension or protraction of life.

14 A passage in King Henry V. explains this:—

'And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd
A testament of noble-ending love.'

1 i. e. for the smallest pieces of money. The old copy reads, 'for doits;' and, at Mr. Tyrwhitt's suggestion, Stevens reads, 'to doits.'

2 Shakspeare was probably indebted to Golding's translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, b. ix. for the story of Lichas.

3 i. e. than Ajax Telamon for the armour of Achilles, the most valuable part of which was the shield. The boar of Thessaly was the boar killed by Meleager.

4 When a hunted animal is so hard run that it foams at the mouth, it is said to be emboss'd.

5 '— It is a sufferance, panging
As soul and body's severing.'

King Henry VIII.

6 'Like to a mass of clouds, that now seem like
An elephant, and straightway like an ox,
And then a mouse.' Chapman's Mons. D'Olive.

'— like empty clouds,
In which our faulty apprehensions forge
The forms of dragons, lions, elephants,
When they hold no proportion.'

Bussy D'Ambois.

7 The beauty both of the expression and the allusion is lost, unless we recollect the frequency and the nature of these shows in Shakspeare's age. The following apposite passage from a sermon, by Bishop Hall, is cited by Mr. Boswell:—'I fear some of you are like the pageants of your great solemnities, wherein there is a show of a solid body, whether of a lion, or elephant,

Dido and her Æneas' shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours.—Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter EROS.

EROS. What would my lord?

ANT. Since Cleopatra died,
I liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword
Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back
With ships made cities, condemn myself to lack
The courage of a woman; less noble mind¹
Than she, which, by her death, our Cæsar tells,
I am conqueror of myself. Thou art sworn, Eros,
That, when the exigent should come, (which now
Is come, indeed,) when I should see behind me
The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command,
Thou then would'st kill me: do't; the time is come:
Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Cæsar thou defeat'st.
Put colour in thy cheek.

EROS. The gods withhold me!
Shall I do that, which all the Parthian darts,
Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

ANT. Eros,
Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy master thus with pleach'd² arms, bending down
His corrigible³ neck, his face subdued
To penetrative shame; whilst the wheel'd seat
Of fortunate Cæsar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensu'd?⁴

EROS. I would not see't.

ANT. Come, then; for with a wound I must be cur'd.

Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn
Most useful for thy country.

EROS. O, sir, pardon me.

ANT. When I did make thee free, swor'st thou not then

To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;
Or thy precedent services are all

But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

EROS. Turn from me then that noble countenance,
Wherein the worship⁵ of the whole world lies.

ANT. Lo thee. [Turning from him.]

EROS. My sword is drawn.

ANT. Then let it do at once
The thing why thou hast drawn it.

EROS. My dear master,
My captain and my emperor! let me say,
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

ANT. 'Tis said, man;—and farewell.

EROS. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike now?

ANT. Now, Eros.

EROS. Why, there, then:—[Falls on his Sword.]
Thus do I escape the sorrow

Of Antony's death. [Dies.]

ANT. Thrice nobler than myself!
Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what I should, and thou could'st not. My queen and Eros
Have, by their brave instruction, got upon me
A nobleness in record: But I will be
A bridegroom in my death,⁷ and run into't
As to a lover's bed. Come, then; and, Eros, Thy master dies thy scholar; to do thus

[Falling on his Sword.]
I learn'd of thee. How! not dead? not dead?—
The guard!—ho!—O, despatch me.

¹ Warburton remarks that Dido and Æneas were not likely to be found thus lovingly associated, 'where souls do couch on flowers.' Either the poet forgot Virgil's celebrated description in the sixth book of the Æneid, or confounded Æneas with Sichæus inadvertently.

² 'Less noble mind' must be accepted as if it was written less nobly minded. The termination bly is often written ble by old writers, and is frequently to be found so in Shakspeare. To mind or purpose is a verb extensively used in former times. We have it in the Third Part of King Henry VI.—

'Belike she minds to play the amazon.'

And in another place:—

'But if you mind to hold your true obedience,'
So Baret:—'I am fully purposed, *mind*ed, or determined so to do.' The passage in North's Plutarch, which Shakspeare copied, runs thus:—'I am sorrie

Enter DERCEAS and Guard.

1 Guard. What's the noise?
ANT. I have done my work ill, friends; O, make an end

Of what I have begun.

2 Guard. The star is fallen.

1 Guard. And time is at his period.

ALL. Alas, and wo!

ANT. Let him that loves me, strike me dead.

1 Guard. Not I.

2 Guard. Nor I.

3 Guard. Nor any one. [Exeunt Guard.]

DER. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly.

This sword but shewn to Cæsar, with this tidings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter DIOMEDES.

DIO. Where's Antony?

DER. There, Diomed, there.

DIO. Lives he?

Wilt thou not answer, man? [Exit DERCEAS.]

ANT. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me

Sufficing strokes for death.

DIO. Most absolute lord,

My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.

ANT. When did she send thee?

DIO. Now, my lord.

ANT. Where is she?

DIO. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear

Of what hath come to pass: for when she saw
(Which never shall be found) you did suspect
She hath dispos'd⁸ with Cæsar, and that your rage Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was
dead;

But, fearing, since, how it might work, hath sent Me to proclaim the truth; and I am come,
I dread, too late. [pr'ythee.]

ANT. Too late, good Diomed:—Call my guard, I

DIO. What, ho! the emperor's guard! The guard, what, ho!

Come, your lord calls.

Enter some of the Guard.

ANT. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra bides;

'Tis the last service that I shall command you.

1 Guard. Wo, wo are we, sir, you may not live to wear

All your true followers out.

ALL. Most heavy day!

ANT. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fate

To grace it with your sorrows: bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it,
Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up:
I have led you oft; carry me now, good friends,
And have my thanks for all.

[Exeunt bearing ANTONY]

SCENE XIII. The same. A Monument. Enter above, CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. O, Charmian, I will never go from hence.

Char. Be comforted, dear madam.

that having been so great a captain and emperor, I am indeed condemn'd to be judg'd of lesse corage and noble minde than a woman.

3 i. e. arms folded in each other.

4 Corrigible for corrected, and afterwards penetrative for penetrating. So Virgil has 'penetrabile frigus' for 'penetrans frigus,' in his Georgics.

5 'Branded with baseness the poor wretch that fol lowed.'

6 i. e. the honour, the dignity.

7 This thought occurs in Measure for Measure:—

'I will encounter darkness as a bride,

And hug it in my arms.'

8 i. e. arranged with him, agreed with him. The word is used in this sense in Troilus and Cressida, Act
ii. Sc. 3:—

'Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss.

He doth rely on none,
But carries on the stream of his dispose Without observance or respect of any.'

Cleo. No, I will not :
All strange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we despise ; our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great

Enter DIOMEDES.

As that which makes it.—How now ? is he dead ?

Dio. His death's upon him, but not dead.
Look out o' the other side your monument,
His guard have brought him thither.

Enter ANTONY, borne by the Guard.

Cleo. O, thou sun,
Burn the great sphere thou mov'st in !—darkling
stand

The varying shore o' the world. O, Antony, Antony, Antony !

Help, Charmian ; help, Iras, help : help, friends
Below, let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace :
Not Cæsar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,
But Antony's hath triumph'd on itself.

Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony
Should conquer Antony ; but wo 'tis so !

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying ; only
I here importune death a while, until
Of many thousand kisses the poor last
I lay upon thy lips.

Cleo. I dare not, dear,
(Dear my lord, pardon,) I dare not,
Lest I be taken :² not the imperious show
Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar ever shall Be brooch'd³ with me ; if knife, drugs, serpents,
have

Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe :
Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion,⁴ shall acquire no honour
Demuring upon me.—But come, come, Antony,—
Help me, my women,—we must draw thee up ;—
Assist, good friends.

Ant. O, quick, or I am gone.
Cleo. Here's sport, indeed ?⁵—how heavy weighs
my lord !

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight : Had I great Juno's power,
The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,— Wishers were ever fools ;—O, come, come, come ;
[They draw ANTONY up.]

And welcome, welcome ! die, where thou hast liv'd :
Quicken⁶ with kissing ; had my lips that power,
Thus would I wear them out.

All. A heavy sight !

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying :
Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.

Cleo. No, let me speak ; and let me rail so high,
That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel,⁷ Provok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word, sweet queen :
Of Cæsar seek your honour with your safety.—O !

Cleo. They do not go together.

1 It should be remembered that, according to the old philosophy, the sun was accounted a planet, and thought to be whirled round the earth by the motion of a solid sphere in which it was fixed. Supposing this consumed, the sun must wander in endless space, and the earth be involved in endless night.

2 Cleopatra means that she dare not come down out of the monument to Antony. Ritson proposed to read :—

(Dear my lord, pardon) I dare not come down.
3 Brooch'd here must mean ornamented, adorned.
Any ornamental jewel was called a brooch :—' Honour's a good brooch to wear in a man's hat at all times.'—Ben Jonson's Poetaster.

And love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.
King Richard II. Act ii. Sc. 5.

4 'Sedate determination ; silent coolness of resolution.'

5 Cleopatra by these words seems to contrast the melancholy task in which they are now engaged with their former sports.

6 I e. revive by my kiss. To quicken, according to Bart, is 'to make livelie and lustie ; to make strong and sound, to refresh'

Ant. Gentle, hear me :

None about Cæsar trust, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I'll trust ;
None about Cæsar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at : but please your thoughts,
In feeding them with those my former fortunes
Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince o' the world,
The noblest : and do now not basely die,
Nor cowardly ; put off my helmet to
My countryman, a Roman, by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now, my spirit is going ;
I can no more.

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't die ? [Dies.]

Hast thou no care of me ? shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is
No better than a sty ?—O, see, my women,
The crown o' the earth doth melt :—My lord !—
O, wither'd is the garland of the war,
The soldier's pole is fallen ;⁸ young boys and girls,
Are level now with men : the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable

Beneath the visiting moon.⁹ [She faints.]

Char. O, quietness, lady !

Iras. She is dead, too, our sovereign.

Char. Lady,——

Char. Madam,——

Iras. O madam, madam, madam !

Empress ! Royal Egypt !

Char. Peace, peace, Iras.

Cleo. No more, but e'en a woman ;¹⁰ and commanded

By such poor passion as the maid that milks
And does the meanest chares.¹¹—It were for me
To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods ;
To tell them that this world did equal theirs,
Till they had stolen our jewel. All's but naught ;
Patience is sottish ; and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad : Then is it sin,
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to us ?—How do you, women ?
What, what ? good cheer ! Why, how now, Char-mian ?

My noble girls !—Ah, women, women ! look,
Our lamp is spent, it's out :—Good sirs, take heart :
[To the Guard below.]

We'll bury him : and then, what's brave, what's noble,

Let's do it after the high Roman fashion,
And make death proud to take us. Come away :
This case of that huge spirit now is cold.

Ah women, women ! come ; we have no friend
But resolution and the briefest end.

[Exeunt ; those above bearing off ANTONY's Body.]

7 'Let us sit and mock the good housewife
Fortune from her wheel,' &c.

As You Like It.
8 That is, their standard or rallying point is thrown down. Marlowe concludes his Fauaus with a similar image :—

'Cut is the branch that might have grown full straight,
And burn'd is Apollo's laurel bough.'

9 '—From this instant
There's nothing serious in mortality :
All is but toys ; renown and grace is dead ;
The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag on.'

Macbeth.
10 Iras has just said, 'Royal Egypt, Empress !' Cleopatra completes the sentence, (without taking notice of the intervening words of Charmian,) Empress 'no more ;
but e'en a woman,' now on a level with the meanest of my sex. The old copy reads 'but in a woman.' Dr.
Johnson made the correction.

11 I e. c. task-work. 'She, like a good wife, is teaching her servants sundry chares.'—Heywood's Brazen Age, 1613.

'And at my crummed messe of milke, each night from maid or dame
To do their chares as they supposed,' &c.

Warner's Albion's England.

Thus in Act v. Sc. 2, Cleopatra says :—
'When thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee leave
To play till doomeday'

ACT V.

SCENE I. Cæsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, DOLABELLA, MECENAS, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, and others.

Cæs. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate,¹ tell him, he mocks us by
The pauses that he makes.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit DOLABELLA.]

Enter DERCETAS, with the Sword of ANTONY.

Cæs. Wherefore is that? and what art thou that dar'st

Appear thus to us?²

Der. I am call'd Dercetas;
Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy
Best to be serv'd: whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master; and I wore my life,
To spend upon his haters: If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him
I'll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is't thou say'st?

Der. I say, O, Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make

A greater crack: The round world should have shook Lions into civil streets,³

And citizens to their dens:—The death of Antony
Is not a single doom; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Der. He is dead, Cæsar;
Not by a public minister of justice,
Nor by a hired knife; but that self hand,
Which writ his honour in the acts it did,
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
Spilt the heart.—This is his sword,
I robb'd his wound of it; behold it stain'd
With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad, friends? To
The gods rebuke me, but it is tidings
To wash the eyes of kings.⁴

Agr. And strange it is,
That nature must compel us to lament
Our most persisted deeds.

Mec. His taints and honours
Waged⁵ equal with him.

Agr. A rarer spirit never Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious mirror's set before
him,

He needs must see himself.

Cæs. O, Antony!
I have follow'd thee to this;—But we do lance⁶

¹ Frustrate for frustrated was the language of Shakespeare's time; and we find contaminate for contaminated, consummate for consummated, &c. Thus in The Tempest:—

— and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search by land.

The two last words in this line, us by, are not in the old copy, in which something seems omitted, and these words, which suit the context well, were supplied by Malone, who has justified his selection of them by instances of similar phraseology in other passages of these plays.

² I. e. with a drawn and bloody sword in thy hand.

³ The passage is thus arranged in the old copy:—

'The breaking of so great a thing should make
A greater crack: the round world
Should have shook lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens.'

The second line is evidently defective, some word or words being omitted at the end, as in a former instance. What is lost may be supplied by conjecture, thus:—

'— The round world convulsive.'

Johnson thought that there was a line lost: and Steevens proposed to read:—

'A greater crack than this: The ruin'd world,' &c. I know not with whom the present arrangement of the text originated, but I do not think it judicious. Malone thought that the passage might have stood originally thus:—

'— The round world should have shook,
Thrown hungry lions into civil streets,' &c.

Diseases in our bodies: I must perforce

Have shown to thee such a declining day,
Or look on thine; we could not stall together
In the whole world: But yet let me lament,
With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,
That thou, my brother, my competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,
The arm of mine own body, and the heart
Where mine his⁷ thoughts did kindle—that our stars
Unreconcilable, should divide
Our equalness to this.⁸—Hear me, good friends,—
But I will tell you at some meetier season;

Enter a Messenger.

The business of this man looks out of him,
We'll hear him what he says.—Whence are you?
Mess. A poor Egyptian yet.⁹ The queen, my mistress,

Confin'd in all she has, her monument,
Of thy intents desires instruction;
That she preparedly may frame herself
To the way she's forced to.

Cæs. Bid her have good heart;
She soon shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honourable¹⁰ and how kindly we Determine for her: for Cæsar cannot live
To be ungentle.

Mess. So the gods preserve thee! [Exit.]

Cæs. Come hither, Proculeius; Go, and say,
We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts
The quality of her passion shall require;
Lest in her greatness, by some mortal stroke
She do defeat us: for her life in Rome
Would be eternal in our triumph.¹¹ Go,
And, with your speediest, bring us what she says,
And how you find of her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit PROCULEIUS.]

Cæs. Gallus, you go along.—Where's Dolabella,
That should Proculeius?

Agr. Mec. Dolabella! [Exit GALLUS.]

Cæs. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he's employed; he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent; where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war;
How calm and gentle I proceeded still
In all my writings: Go with me, and see
What I can show in this. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Alexandria. A Room in the Monument. Enter CLEOPATRA,¹² CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life: 'Tis paltry to be Cæsar;

⁴ 'May the gods rebuke me if this be not tidings to make kings weep.' But again in its exceptive sense.

⁵ Waged here must mean to be opposed, as equal stakes in a wager; unless we suppose that weighed is meant. The second folio reads tray.

⁶ Launch, the word in the old copy, is only the obsolete spelling of lance.

⁷ His for its.

⁸ That is, should have made us, in our equality of fortune, disagree to a pitch like this, that one of us must die.

⁹ I. e. 'yet an Egyptian, or subject of the queen of Egypt, though soon to become a subject of Rome.'

¹⁰ I have before observed that the termination ble was anciently often used for gly. This Malone calls using adjectives adverbially, or using substantives adjectively, as the case may be. I doubt whether it be any thing more than the laxity of old orthography. We have honourable for honourably again in Julius Cæsar:—

'Young man, thou could'st not die more honourable.'

¹¹ 'If I send her in triumph, to Rome, her memory and my glory will be eternal.' Thus in The Scourge of Venus, 1614:—

'If some foule-swelling ebou cloud would fall
For her to hide herself eternal in.'

¹² The poet here has attempted to exhibit at once the outside and the inside of a building. It would be difficult to represent this scene on the stage in any other way than making Cleopatra and her attendants speak all their speeches, till the queen is seized within the monument.

Not being fortune, he's but fortune's knave,¹
A minister of her will; And it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung;
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.²

Enter, to the Gates of the Monument, PROCULEIUS, GALLUS, and Soldiers.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the queen of Egypt;
And bids thee study on what fair demands
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. [Within.] What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. [Within.]

Antony

Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceiv'd,
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him,
That majesty, to keep decorum, must
No less beg than a kingdom: if he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son,
He gives me so much of mine own, as I³
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer;

You are fallen into a princely hand, fear nothing;
Make your full reference freely to my lord,
Who is so full of grace, that it flows over
On all that need: Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency; and you shall find
A conqueror, that will pray in aid⁴ for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. [Within.]

Pray you, tell him

I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got.⁵ I hourly learn
A doctrine of obedience; and would gladly
Look him i' the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady.

Have comfort; for, I know, your plight is pitied
Of him that caus'd it.

Gal. You see how easily she may be surpris'd;

[Here PROCULEIUS, and two of the Guard, ascend the Monument by a Ladder placed against a Window, and having descended, come behind CLEOPATRA. Some of the Guard unbar and open the Gates.⁶

Guard her till Cæsar come.

[To PROCULEIUS and the Guard. Exit GALLUS.

Iras. Royal queen!

1 Servant.

2 Voluntary death (says Cleopatra) is an act which bolts up change; it produces a state—

'Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.'

Which has no longer need of the gross and terrene sustenance, in the use of which Cæsar and the beggar are on a level. It has been already said in this play, that——our dungy earth

Feeds man as beast.'

'The Æthiopian king (in Herodotus, b. iii.) upon hearing a description of the nature of wheat, replied, that he was not at all surprised if men, who eat nothing but dung, did not attain a longer life.'

3 Mason would change as I, to and I; but I have shown in another place that as was used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries for that.

4 Praying in aid is a term used for a petition made in a court of justice for the calling in of help from another that hath an interest in the cause in question.

5 By these words Cleopatra means—'In yielding to him I only give him that honour which he himself achieved.' A kindred idea seems to occur in The Tempest :—

'Then as my gift, and thy own acquisition,
Worthily purchased, take thou my daughter.'

6 There is no stage direction in the old copy, that which is now inserted is formed on the old translation of Plutarch:—'Proculeius came to the gates, that were very thicke and strong, and earely barred; but yet there were some cranes through the which her voyce might he heard, and so they without understood that Cleopatra demanded the kingdom of Egypt for her sonnes; and that Proculeius answered her, that she should be of good cheere, and not be affrayed to refer all unto Cæsar.
After he had viewed the place very well, he came and Char. O, Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen!—

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a Dagger.
Hold, worthy lady, hold:
[Seizes and disarms her.]

Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Reliev'd, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death too,
That rids our dogs of languish?

Pro. Cleopatra,

Do not abuse my master's bounty, by
The undoing of yourself: let the world see
His nobleness well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death?
Come hither, come! come, come, and take a queen
Worth many babes and beggars!

Pro. O, temperance, lady!

Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir,
(If idle talk will once be necessary;)
I'll not sleep neither: This mortal house I'll ruin,
Do Cæsar what he can. Know, sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up,
And show me to the shouting varletry
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt
Be gentle grave to me! rather on Nilus' mud
Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flies Blow me into abhorring! rather make
My country's high pyramides⁸ my gibbet,
And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend
These thoughts of horror further than you shall Find cause in Cæsar.

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done thy master Cæsar knows,
And he hath sent for thee: for the queen,
I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella,
It shall content me best: be gentle to her.—
To Cæsar I will speak what you shall please

[To CLEOPATRA.]

If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die.
[Exit PROCULEIUS, and Soldiers]

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of me?
Cleo. I cannot tell.

reported her answer unto Cæsar: who immediately sent Gallus to speak once againe with her, and bad him purposely hold her with talk, whilst Proculeius did set up a ladder against that high windowe, by the which Antonius was tressed up, and came down into the monument with two of his men, hard by the gate, where Cleopatra stood to hear what Gallus said unto her. One of her women shrieked out, O poore Cleopatra, thou art taken. Then when she sawe Proculeius behind her, as she came from the gate, she thought to have stabbed herself with a short dagger she wore of purpose by her side. But Proculeius came sodainly upon her, and taking her by both the hands, said unto her, Cleopatra, first thou shalt doe thyselfe greates wrong, and secondly unto Cæsar, to deprive him of the occasion and opportunitie openlie to shew his vantage and mercie, and to give his enemies cause to accuse the most courteous and noble prince that ever was, and to appeach him as though he were a cruel and mercilesse man that were not to be trusted. So even as he spake the word he tooke her dagger from her, and shooke her clothes for fear of any poison hid aboute her. The speech given to Gallus here is given by mistake to Proculeius in the old copy.

7 It should be remembered that once is used as once for all by Shakespeare. I take the meaning of this line, which is evidently parenthetical, to be, 'Once for all, if idle talk be necessary about my purposes.' Johnson has shown that will be is often used in conversation without relation to the future. I have placed this line in a parenthesis, by which the sense of the passage is now rendered sufficiently clear, without having recourse to supplementary words, as Malone and Risdon proposed.

8 Pyramides is so written and used as a quadrisyllable by Sandys and by Drayton.

Dol. Assuredly, you know me.

Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard, or known. You laugh, when boys, or women, tell their dreams; Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, madam.

Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor Antony; O, such another sleep, that I might see But such another man!

Dol. If it might please you,—

Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck

A sun, and moon; which kept their course, and lighted

The little O, the earth.¹

Dol. Most sovereign creature,—

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean:² his rear'd arm Crested the world:³ his voice was propertyed As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends; But when he meant to quail and shake the orb, He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty, There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas, That grow the more by reaping: His delights Were dolphin-like: they show'd his back above The element they liv'd in: In his livery Walk'd crowns, and crownets; realms and islands were

As plates⁴ dropp'd from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Think you, there was, or might be, such a man

As this I dream'd of?

Dol. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods. But, if there be, or ever were one such, It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stuff To vie⁵ strange forms with fancy; yet, to imagine An Antony, were nature's piece⁶ 'gainst fancy, Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam: Your loss is as yourself, great; and you bear it As answering to the weight: 'Would, I might never O'ertake pursu'd success, but I do feel, By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.

Know you, what Cæsar means to do with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir,—

Dol. Though he be honourable,—

Cleo. He'll lead me then in triumph?

Dol. Madam, he will;

I know it.

Within. Make way there!—Cæsar!

Enter CÆSAR, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, MÆCENAS, SELEUCUS, and Attendants.

Cæs. Which is the queen Of Egypt?

Dol. 'Tis the emperor, madam.

[CLEOPATRA kneels. Arise,

Cæs.

You shall not kneel:—

I pray you, rise; rise, Egypt.

¹ Shakspeare uses O for an orb or circle. Thus in King Henry V. :—

'— can we cram

Within this wooden O the very casques.'

² So in Julius Cæsar :—

'Why, man, he doth baskride the world

Like a Colossus.'

³ Dr. Percy thinks that 'this is an allusion to some of the old crests in heraldry, where a raised arm on a wreath was mounted on the helmet.' To crest is to surmount.

⁴ Plates means silver money :—

'What's the price of this slave, 200 crowns?

Belike he has some new trick for a purse,

And if he has, he's worth 300 plates.'

In heraldry, the roundlets in an escutcheon, if or, or yellow, are called besants; if argent, or white, plates, which are round flat pieces of silver money, perhaps without any stamp or impress. It is remarkable after all that the commentators have said against Ben Jonson,

Cleo. Sir, the gods

Will have it thus; my master and my lord I must obey.

Cæs. Take to you no hard thoughts:

The record of what injuries you did us, Though written in our flesh, we shall remember As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world

I cannot project⁶ mine own cause so well To make it clear; but do confess, I have Been laden with like frailties, which before Have often sham'd our sex.

Cæs. Cleopatra, know,

We will extenuate rather than enforce:

If you apply yourself to our intents, (Which towards you are most gentle,) you shall find

A benefit in this change; but if you seek To lay on me a cruelty, by taking Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself Of my good purposes, and put your children To that destruction which I'll guard them from, If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may, through all the world: 'tis yours: and we

Your 'scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Here, my good lord.

Cæs. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.⁷

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,

I am possess'd of: 'tis exactly valued;

Not petty things admitted.—Where's Seleucus?

Sel. Here, madam.

Cleo. This is my treasurer; let him speak, my lord,

Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd

To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam,

I had rather see⁸ my lips, than, to my peril,

Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back?

Sel. Enough to purchase what you have made known.

Cæs. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra! I approve Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Cæsar! O, behold

How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours; And, should we shift estates, yours would be mine.

The ingratitude of this Seleucus does

Even make me wild:—O, slave, of no more trust Than love that's hir'd!—What, goest thou back; thou shalt

Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes, Though they had wings: Slave, soulless villain, dog! O, rarely base!⁹

Cæs. Good queen, let us entreat you.

Cleo. O, Cæsar, what a wounding shame is this: That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,

Doing the honour of thy lordliness

To one so meek, that mine own servant should

Parcel the sum of my disgraces by

Steevens should have expunged a note that appeared in his edition of 1778, in which he cites the following beautiful passage from Ben Jonson's New Inn, on the subject of liberality :—

'He gave me first my breeding, I acknowledge:

Then shower'd his bounties on me, like the hours

That open-handed sit upon the clouds,

And press the liberality of heaven

Down to the laps of thankful men.'

⁵ To vie here has its metaphorical sense of to contend in rivalry.

⁶ To project is to delineate, to shape, to form. So in

Look About You, a Comedy, 1600 :—

'But quite dislike the project of your sute.'

⁷ Cæsar afterwards says :—

'For we intend so to dispose you, as

Yourself shall give us counsel.'

⁸ Close up my lips as effectually as the eyes of a hawk are closed. To see⁸ hawks was the technical term for sewing up their eyes.

⁹ I. e. base in an uncommon degree.

Addition of his envy!¹ Say, good Cæsar,
That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,
Immement toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern² friends withal: and say,
Some nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia, and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation; must I be unfolded
With³ one that I have bred? The gods! It smites me
Beneath the fall I have. Pr'ythee, go hence;

[To SELEUCUS.]

Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits
Through the ashes of my chance.⁴—Wert thou a
man,
Thou would'st have mercy on me.

Cæs. Forbear, Seleucus.
[Exit SELEUCUS.]

Cleo. Be it known that we, the greatest, are misthought
For things that others do; and, when we fall,
We answer others' merits⁵ in our name,
Are therefore to be pitied.

Cæs. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd,

Put we i' the roll of conquest: still be it yours,
Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe,
Cæsar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd;
Make not your thoughts your prisons:⁶ no, dear
queen,

For we intend so to dispose you, as Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep:
Our care and pity is so much upon you,
That we remain your friend; And so adieu.

Cleo. My master, and my lord!

Cæs. Not so: Adieu.
[Exit CÆSAR, and his Train.]

Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not
Be noble to myself: but hark thee, Charmian.

[Whispers CHARMIAN.]
Iras. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,
And we are for the dark.

Cleo. Hie thee again:
I have spoke already, and it is provided;
Go, put it to the haste.

Char. Madam, I will.

Re-enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Where is the queen?

Char. Behold, sir. [Exit CHARMIAN.]

Cleo. Dolabella?

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command,
Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Cæsar through Syria
Intends his journey; and, within three days,
You with your children will he send before:
Make your best use of this: I have perform'd
Your pleasure, and my promise.

1 'That this fellow should add one more parcel or item to the sum of my disgraces, namely, his own malice.'

2 i. e. common, ordinary.

3 With is here used with the power of by.

4 i. e. fortune. 'Begone, or I shall exert that royal spirit which I had in my prosperity, in spite of the imbecility of my present weak condition.' Chaucer has a similar image in his Canterbury Tales, v. 3190:—

'Yet in our ashen cold is fire yreken.'

5 i. e. we answer for that which others have merited by their transgressions.

6 'Be not a prisoner in imagination, when in reality you are free.'

7 i. e. the lively or quick-witted comedians.

8 It has been already observed that the parts of females were played by boys on our ancient stage. Nash, in his Pierce Penniless, makes it a subject of exultation that 'our players are not as the players beyond sea, that have whores and common courtesans to play women's parts.' To obviate the impropriety of men representing women, T. Goff, in his Tragedy of the Raging Turk, 1631, has no female character.

9 Absurd here means unmeet, unfitting, unreason-able.

10 Sirrah was not anciently an appellation either

Cleo. Dolabella,
I shall remain your debtor.

Dol.

I your servant.

Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Cæsar.

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks. [Exit DOL.] Now
Iras, what think'st thou?

Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shall be shown
In Rome, as well as I: mechanic slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view; in their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be unclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

Iras.

The gods forbid!

Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain, Iras: Saucy lictors
Will catch at us, like strumpets; and scald rhymers
Ballad us out o' tune: the quick¹ comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy² my greatness
I' the posture of a whore.

Iras.

O, the good gods!

Cleo. Nay, that is certain.

Iras. I'll never see it; for, I am sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo.

Why, that's the way

To fool their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd³ intents.—Now, Charmian?—

Enter CHARMIAN.

Show me, my women, like a queen;—Go fetch
My best attires;—I am again for Cydnus,
To meet Mark Antony:—Sirrah,⁴ Iras, go.—
Now, noble Charmian, we'll despatch, indeed:
And, when thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee
leave

To play till doomsday.—Bring our crown and all:
Wherefore's this noise?

[Exit IRAS. A Noise within.]

Enter one of the Guard.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow,
That will not be denied your highness' presence;
He brings you figs.

Cleo. Let him come in. How¹ poor an instrument
[Exit Guard.]

May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's plac'd, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foot
I am marble-constant: now the fleeting² moon
No planet is of mine.

Re-enter Guard, with a Clown, bringing a Basket.

Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him. [Exit Guard.]

Hast thou the pretty worm³ of Nilus there,
That kills and pains not?

Clown. Truly I have him; but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal; those, that do die of it, do seldom or never recover.

reproachful or injurious; being applied, with a sort of playful kindness, to children, friends, and servants, and what may seem more extraordinary, as in the present case, to women. It is nothing more than the exclamation, Sir ha! and we sometimes find it in its primitive form, 'A syr a, there said you wel.'—Confutation of Nicholas Shaxton, 1546. The Heus tu of Plautus is rendered by an old translator, Ha Sirra. In Beaumont and Fletcher's Knight of Malta, one gentlewoman says to another, 'Sirrah, why dost thou not marry?'

11 The first folio has 'What poor an instrument!'

12 Fleeting, or flying, is changeable, inconstant:—

'More variant than is the fitting hune.'

Walter's Guistard and Siemond, 1597.

I am now (says Cleopatra) 'whole as the marble, founded as the rock,' and no longer inconstant and changeable, as woman often is.

13 Worm is used by our old writers to signify a serpent. The word is pure Saxon, and is still used in the north in the same sense. We have it still in the blind-worm and slow-worm. Shakespeare uses it several times.—The notion of a serpent that caused death without pain was an ancient fable, and is here adopted with propriety. The worm of Nile was the asp of the ancients, which Dr. Shaw says is wholly unknown to us.

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have died on't?

Clown. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday: a very honest woman, but something given to lie; as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty: how she died of the biting of it, what pain she felt.—Truly, she makes a very good report o' the worm: But he that will believe all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do.¹ But this is most fallible, the worm's an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence; farewell.

Clown. I wish you all joy of the worm.

Cleo. Farewell. [Clown sets down the Basket.]

Clown. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind.²

Cleo. Ay, ay; farewell.

Clown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted, but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care; it shall be heeded.

Clown. Very good: give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Clown. You must not think I am so simple, but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whoreson devils do the gods great harm in their women; for in every ten that they make, the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone; farewell.

Clown. Yes, forsooth; I wish you joy of the worm. [Exit.]

Re-enter IRAS, with a Robe, Crown, &c.

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown; I have immortal longings in me.³ Now no more

The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip:—Yare, yare,⁴ good Iras; quick.—Methinks, I hear Antony call; I see him rouse himself

To praise my noble act; I hear him mock The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men To excuse their after wrath: Husband, I come: Now to that name my courage prove my title! I am fire, and air; my other elements I give to baser life.⁵—So,—have you done? Come, then, and take the last warmth of my lips. Farewell, kind Charmian;—Iras, long farewell.

[Kisses them. IRAS falls and dies.]

Have I the aspic in my lips? Dost fall?⁶ If thou and nature can so gently part, The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch, Which hurts, and is desir'd. Dost thou lie still? If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world It is not worth leave-taking.

Char. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain; that I may say,
The gods themselves do weep!

Cleo. This proves me base: If she first meet the curled Antony, He'll make demand of her; and spend that kiss, Which is my heaven to have. Come, thou mortal wretch,

[To the Asp, which she applies to her Breast.]
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsicate Of life at once untie; poor venomous fool, Be angry, and despatch. O, could'st thou speak! That I might hear thee call great Cæsar, ass Unpolicied!⁷

Char. O, eastern star!

Cleo. Peace, peace!

1 Warburton observes that 'Shakspeare's clowns are always jokers, and deal in sly satire'; but he would have all and half change places. I think with Steevens that the confusion was designed to heighten the humour of the clown's speech.

2 i. e. act according to his nature.

3 From hence probably Addison in Cato:—

'This longing after immortality.'

4 i. e. be nimble, be ready. See Act iii. Sc. 5.

5 Thus in King Henry V.:—'He is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him.'

6 Iras must be supposed to have applied an asp to her

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,
That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char.

O, break! O, break!

Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle,—
O, Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too;—

[Applying another Asp to her Arm.]
What should I stay?—[Falls on a bed, and dies.]

Char. In this wild world?—So, fare thee well,—
Now boast thee, death! in thy possession lies
A lass unparallel'd.—Downy windows, close;⁸
And golden Phœbus never be beheld
Of eyes again so royal? Your crown's awry;
I'll mend it, and then play.⁹

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?

Char. Speak softly, wake her not.

1 Guard. Cæsar hath sent—

Char. Too slow a messenger.

[Applies the Asp.]

O, come; apace, despatch; I partly feel thee.

1 Guard. Approach, ho! All's not well: Cæsar's beguil'd.

2 Guard. There's Dolabella sent from Cæsar:—
call him.

1 Guard. What work is here?—Charmian, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess Descended of so many royal kings.

Ah, soldier! [Dies.]

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. How goes it here?

2 Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cæsar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this: Thyself art coming
To see perform'd the dreaded act, which thou
So sought'st to hinder.

Within. A way there! a way for Cæsar!

Enter CÆSAR, and Attendants.

Dol. O, sir, you are too sure an augurer;
That you did fear, is done.

Cæs. Bravest at the last:
She levell'd at our purposes, and, being royal,
Took her own way.—The manner of their deaths?
I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them?

1 Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her figs;

This was his basket.

Cæs. Poison'd, then.

1 Guard.

O, Cæsar,

This Charmian lived but now; she stood, and spake:

I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress; tremblingly she stood,
And on the sudden dropp'd.

Cæs. O, noble weakness!

If they had swallow'd poison, 'twould appear
By external swelling: but she looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace.

Dol. Here, on her breast,

There is a vent of blood, and something blown:¹⁰
The like is on her arm.

1 Guard. This is an aspic's trail: and these fig-leaves

Have slime upon them, such as the aspic leaves
Upon the caves of Nile.

Cæs. Most probable,
That so she died; for her physician tells me, arm while her mistress was settling her dress, to account for her falling so soon.

7 i. e. an ass without more wit or policy than to leave the means of death within my reach, and thereby defeat his own purpose.

8 Charmian may be supposed to close Cleopatra's eyes, the first melancholy office performed after death.

9 Charmian remembers the words uttered to her by her beloved mistress just before:—

'—when thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee
leave

To play till doomsday.'

10 i. e. swelled, puffed.

She hath pursu'd conclusions¹ infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed;
And bear her women from the monument:—
She shall be buried by her Antony:
No grave upon the earth shall clip in it
A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story is No less in pity, than his glory, which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,
In solemn show, attend this funeral;
And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
High order in this great solemnity. [Exeunt.]

1 To pursue conclusions is to try experiments. So in Hamlet:—

‘ — like the famous ape
To try conclusions ’

THIS play keeps curiosity always busy, and the passions always interested. The continual hurry of the action, the variety of incidents, and the quick succession of one personage to another, call the mind forward without intermission from the first act to the last. But the power of delighting is derived principally from the frequent changes of the scene; for, except the feminine arts, some of which are too low, which distinguish Cleopatra, no character is very strongly discriminated. Upon, who did not easily miss what he desired to find, has discovered that the language of Antony is, with great skill and learning, made pompous and superb, according to his real practice. But I think his diction not distinguishable from that of others: The most tumid speech in the play is that which Cæsar makes to Octavia.

The events, of which the principal are described according to history, are produced without any art of connection or care of disposition. JOHNSON.

CYMBELINE.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE general scheme of the plot of Cymbeline is formed on the ninth novel of the second day in the Decamerone of Boccaccio. It appears from the preface of the old translation of the Decamerone, printed in folio in 1620, that many of the novels had before received an English dress, and had been printed separately. A deformed and interpolated imitation of the novel in question was printed at Antwerp, by John Dusborowghe, as early as 1518, under the following title: ‘ This matter treateth of a merchautes wife that afterwarde wente lyke a man and became a greate lord, and was called Frederike of Jennen afterwarde.’ It exhibits the material features of its original, though the names of the characters are changed, their sentiments debased, and their conduct rendered still more improbable than in the scenes of Cymbeline. A book was published in London in 1603, called ‘ Westward for Smelts, or the Waterman’s Fare of mad merry western Wenches, whose Tongues albeit like Bell-clappers they never leave ringing, yet their Tales are sweet, and will much content you.’ Written by Kitt of Kingstone.¹ It was again printed in 1620. To the second tale in this work Shakespeare seems to have been indebted for the circumstances in his plot of Imogen’s wandering about after Pisanio has left her in the forest; her being almost famished; and being taken at a subsequent period into the service of the Roman general as a page. But time may yet bring to light some other modification of the story, which will prove more exactly conformable to the plot of the play.

Malone supposes Cymbeline to have been written in the year 1609. The king, from whom the play takes its title, began his reign, according to Holinshed, in the nineteenth year of the reign of Augustus Cæsar; and the play commences in or about the twenty-fourth year of Cymbeline’s reign, which was the forty-second year of the reign of Augustus, and the sixteenth of the Christian era: notwithstanding which, Shakespeare has peopled Rome with modern Italians; Philario, Iachimo, &c. Cymbeline is said to have reigned thirty-five years, leaving at his death two sons, Guiderius and Arviragus. Tenantius (who is mentioned in the first scene) was the father of Cymbeline, and nephew of Cassibelan, being the younger son of his elder brother Lud, king of the southern part of Britain, he agreed to pay an annual tribute to Rome. After his death, Tenantius, Lud’s younger son, was established on the throne, of which he and his elder brother Androgeus, who fled to Rome, had been unjustly deprived by their uncle. According to some authorities, Tenantius quietly paid the tribute stipulated by Cassibelan; according to others, he refused to pay it, and warred with the Romans. Shakespeare supposes the latter to be the truth. Holinshed, who furnished our poet with these facts, furnished him also with the name of Sicilius, who was admitted king of Britain, A. M. 3659.

Schlegel pronounces Cymbeline to be ‘ one of Shakespeare’s most wonderful compositions,’ in which the poet ‘ has contrived to blend together into one harmonious whole, the social manners of the latest times with heroic deeds, and even with appearances of the gods. In the character of Imogen not a feature of female excellence is forgotten; her chaste tenderness, her softness, and her virgin pride, her boundless resignation, and her magnanimity towards her mistaken husband, by whom she is unjustly persecuted; her adventures in disguise, her apparent death, and her recovery, form altogether a picture equally tender and affecting.

‘ The two princes, Guiderius and Arviragus, both educated in the wilds, form a noble contrast to Miranda and Perdita. In these two young men, to whom the chase has given vigour and hardihood, but who are unacquainted with their high destination, and have always been kept far from human society, we are enchanted by a native heroism which leads them to anticipate and to dream of deeds of valour, till an occasion is offered which they are irresistibly impelled to embrace. When Imogen comes in disguise to their cave; when Guiderius and Arviragus form an impassioned friendship, with all the innocence of childhood, for the tender boy, (in whom they neither suspect a female nor their own sister;) when on returning from the chase they find her dead, sing her to the ground, and cover the grave with flowers:—these scenes might give a new life for poetry to the most deadened imagination.’

‘ The wise and virtuous Belarius, who after living long as a hermit, again becomes a hero, is a venerable figure; the dexterous dissimulation and quick presence of mind of the Italian Iachimo is quite suitable to the bold treachery he plays; Cymbeline, the father of Imogen, and even her husband Posthumus, during the first half of the piece, are somewhat sacrificed, but this could not be otherwise; the false and wicked queen is merely an instrument of the plot; she and her stupid son Cloten, whose rude arrogance is portrayed with much humour, are got rid of by merited punishment before the conclusion.’

Steevens objects to the character of Cloten in a note on the fourth act of the play, observing that ‘ he is represented at once as brave and dastardly, civil and brutish, sagacious and foolish, without that subtlety of distinction, and those shades of gradation between sense and folly, virtue and vice, which constitute the excellence of such mixed characters as Polonius in Hamlet, and the Nurse in Romeo and Juliet.’ It should, however, be observed, that Imogen has justly defined him ‘ that irregular devil Cloten;’ and Miss Seward, in one of her Letters, assures us that singular as the character of Cloten may appear, it is the exact prototype of a being she once knew. ‘ The unmeaning frown of the countenance; the shuffling gait; the burst of voice; the bustling insignificance; the fever and ague fits of valour; the froward techiness; the unprincipled malice; and what is most curious, those occasional gleams of good sense, amidst the floating clouds of folly which generally darkened and confused the man’s brain; and which, in the character of Cloten, we are apt to impute to a violation of unity in character, but in the some time Captain C——— I saw the portrait of Cloten was not out of nature.’

In the development of the plot of this play the poet has displayed such consummate skill, and such minute attention to the satisfaction of the most anxious and scrupulous spectator, as to afford a complete refutation of Johnson’s assertion, that Shakespeare usually hurries over the conclusion of his pieces.

There is little conclusive evidence to ascertain the date of the composition of this play; but Malone places it in the year 1609. Dr. Drake, after Chalmers, has ascribed it to the year 1605.

SCENE, sometimes in Britain; sometimes in Italy.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Britain. The Garden behind Cymbeline's Palace. Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gentleman.

YOU do not meet a man but frowns: our bloods
 No more obey the heavens, than our courtiers,
 Still seem, as does the king's.¹

2 Gent. But what's the matter?

1 Gent. His daughter, and the heir of his kingdom, whom

He purpos'd to his wife's sole son, (a widow
 That late he married,) hath refus'd herself
 Unto a poor but worthy gentleman: She's wedded;
 Her husband banish'd; she imprison'd: all
 Is outward sorrow; though, I think, the king
 Be touch'd at very heart.

2 Gent. None but the king?

1 Gent. He that hath lost her, too: so is the queen,

That most desir'd the match: But not a courtier,
 Although they wear their faces to the bent
 Of the king's looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they scowl at.

2 Gent. And why so?

1 Gent. He that hath miss'd the princess, is a thing

Too bad for bad report: and he that hath her,
 (I mean, that married her,—alack, good man!—
 And therefore banish'd,) is a creature such
 As, to seek through the regions of the earth
 For one his like, there would be something failing
 In him that should compare. I do not think,
 So fair an outward, and such stuff within Endows a man but he.

2 Gent. You speak him far.²

1 Gent. I do extend him, sir, within himself;
 Crush him together, rather than unfold
 His measure duly.³

2 Gent. What's his name, and birth?

1 Gent. I cannot delve him to the root: His father

Was call'd Sicilius, who did join his honour⁴
 Against the Romans, with Cassibelan;
 But had his titles by Tenantius,⁵ whom
 He serv'd with glory and admir'd success:
 So gain'd the sur-addition, Leonatus:

¹ 'Our bloods [i.e. our dispositions or temperaments] are not more regulated by the heavens, by every skyey influence, than our courtiers are by the disposition of the king: when he frowns, every man frowns.' Blood is used in old phraseology for disposition or temperament. So in King Lear:—

'— Were it my tyness

To let these hands obey my blood.'

² I.e. you praise him extensively.

³ 'My eulogium, however extended it may seem, is short of his real excellence; it is rather abbreviated than expanded.' Perhaps this passage will be best illustrated by the following lines in Troilus and Cressida, Act iii. Sc. 3:—

'— no man is the lord of any thing,

Till he communicate his parts to others:

Nor doth he of himself know them for aught,

Till he behold them form'd in the applause

Where they are extended.' [i.e. displayed at length.]

And had, besides this gentleman in question,
 Two other sons, who, in the wars o' the time,
 Died with their swords in hand; for which their father,

(Then old and fond of issue,) took such sorrow,
 That he quit being; and his gentle lady,
 Big of this gentleman, our theme, deceas'd
 As he was born. The king, he takes the babe
 To his protection; calls him Posthumus;
 Breeds him, and makes him of his bedchamber:
 Puts him to all the learnings that his time
 Could make him the receiver of; which he took,
 As we do air, fast as 'twas minister'd; and
 In his spring became a harvest: Liv'd in court
 (Which rare it is to do) most prais'd, most lov'd:⁴
 A sample to the youngest; to the more mature
 A glass that feated⁵ them; and to the graver,
 A child that guided dotards; to his mistress,⁶
 From whom he now is banish'd,—her own price
 Proclaims how she esteem'd him and his virtue;
 By her election may be truly read,
 What kind of man he is.

2 Gent. I honour him
 Even out of your report. But, pray you, tell me,
 Is she sole child to the king?

1 Gent. His only child.
 He had two sons (if this be worth your hearing, Mark it,) the eldest of them at three years old,
 If the swathing clothes the other, from their nursery
 Were stolen: and to this hour, no guess in knowledge

Which way they went.

2 Gent. How long is this ago?

1 Gent. Some twenty years.

2 Gent. That a king's children should be so convey'd!

So slackly guarded! And the search so slow,
 That could not trace them!

1 Gent. Howso'er 'tis strange,
 Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at,
 Yet is it true, sir.

2 Gent. I do well believe you.

1 Gent. We must forbear: Here comes the queen and princess. [Exit.

SCENE II. The same. Enter the Queen, POSTHUMUS, and IMOGEN.

Queen. No, be assur'd, you shall not find me,
 daughter,
 After the slander of most step-mothers,

4 I do not (says Steevens) understand what can be meant by 'joining his honour against, &c. with, &c. Perhaps Shakspeare wrote:—

'— did join his banner.'

In the last scene of the play Cymbeline proposes that 'a Roman and a British ensign should wave together.'

5 The father of Cymbeline.

6 'This encomium (says Johnson) is highly artful. To be at once in any great degree loved and praised is truly rare.'

7 Feate is well-fashioned, proper, trim, handsome well compact. Concinnus. Thus in Horman's Vulgar, 1519:—'He would see himself in a glasse, that a. thing were feet.' Feature was also used for fashion or proportion. The verb to feate was probably formed by Shakspeare himself.

8 'To his mistress,' means as to his mistress.

Evil-eyed unto you: you are my prisoner, but
Your gaoler shall deliver you the keys
That lock up your restraint. For you, Posthumus,
So soon as I can win the offended king,
I will be known your advocate: marry, yet
The fire of rage is in him; and 'twere good,
You lean'd unto his sentence, with what patience
Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness,
I will from hence to-day.

Queen. You know the peril:—
I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections: though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

[Exit Queen.
O,
Imo. Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds!—My dearest husband,

I something fear my father's wrath; but nothing (Always reserv'd my holy duty),¹ what
His rage can do on me: You must be gone;
And I shall here abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes: not comforted to live,
But that there is this jewel in the world,
That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress!
O, lady, weep no more; lest I give cause
To be suspected of more tenderness
Than doth become a man! I will remain
The loyal'st husband that did e'er plight troth.
My residence in Rome at one Philario's;
Who to my father was a friend, to me
Known but by letter: thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall.

Re-enter Queen.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you:
If the king come, I shall incur I know not
How much of his displeasure:—Yet I'll move him
[Aside.

To walk this way: I never do him wrong,
But he does buy my injuries, to be friends:
Pays dear for my offences.² [Exit.

Post. Should we be taking leave
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The loathness to depart would grow: Adieu!

Imo. Nay, stay a little:
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Look here, love;
This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart;
But keep it till you woo another wife,
When Imogen is dead.

Post. How! how! another?
You gentle gods, give me but this I have,
And send up³ my embracements from a next
With bonds of death!—Remain, remain thou here [Putting on the Ring.

While sense⁴ can keep it on! And sweetest, fairest,
As I my poor self did exchange for you,

To your so infinite loss; so, in our trifles
I still win of you: For my sake, wear this;
It is a manacle of love; I'll place it
Upon this fairest prisoner.

[Putting a Bracelet on her Arm.
Imo. O, the gods!
When shall we see again?

Enter CYMBELINE and Lords.

Post. Alack, the king!
Cym. Thou basest thing, avoid! hence, from my sight!

If, after this command, thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou diest: Away!
Thou art poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you!
And bless the good remainders of the court!
I am gone. [Exit.

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death
More sharp than this is.

Cym. O, disloyal thing,
That should'st repair⁵ my youth; thou heapest
A year's age on me!⁶

Imo. I beseech you, sir,
Harm not yourself with your vexation: I
Am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Cym. Past grace? obedience?
Imo. Past hope, and in despair; that way, past
grace.

Cym. That might'st have had the sole son of my queen!

Imo. O, bless'd, that I might not! I chose an eagle,

And did avoid a puttock.⁷

Cym. Thou took'st a beggar; would'st have made my throne

A seat for baseness.

Imo. No; I rather added
A lustre to it.

Cym. O, thou vile one!

Imo. Sir,
It is your fault that I have lov'd Posthumus;
You bred him as my playfellow; and he is
A man, worth any woman: overbuys me
Almost the sum he pays.⁸

Cym. What!—art thou mad?

Imo. Almost, sir: Heaven restore me!—Would

I were
A neat-herd's daughter! and my Leonatus
Our neighbour shepherd's son!

Re-enter Queen.

Cym. Thou foolish thing!—
They were again together: you have done

[To the Queen
Not after our command. Away with her,
And pen her up.

Queen. 'Beseech your patience:—Peace,
Dear lady daughter, peace; Sweet sovereign,

'To repair (according to Baret) is to restore to the first state, to renew.' So in All's Well that Ends
Well:—

'—— it much repairs me
To talk of your good father.'

6 Sir Thomas Hammer reads:—

'——thou heapest many
A year's age on me!'

Some such emendation seems necessary.

7 'A touch more rare' is 'a more exquisite feeling, a superior sensation.' So in The Tempest:—

'Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions.'

And in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak to us.'

A passage in King Lear will illustrate Imogen's meaning:—

'—— where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt.'

8 A puttock is a mean degenerate species of hawk, too worthless to deserve training.

9 'My worth is not half equal to his'

1 'I say I do not fear my father, so far as I may say it without breach of duty.'

2 'He gives me a valuable consideration to new kindness, (purchasing, as it were, the wrong I have done him), in order to renew our amity, and make us friends
again.'

3 Shakespeare poetically calls the cere-cloths, in which the dead are wrapped, the bonds of death. There was no distinction in ancient orthography between seare, to dry, to wither; and seare, to dress or cover with wax.
Cere-cloth is most frequently spelled seare-cloth. In Hamlet we have:—

'Why, thy canonized bones hearsed in death
Have burst their cements.'

4 i. e. while I have sensation to retain it. There can be no doubt that it refers to the ring, and it is equally obvious that thee would have been more proper. Whether this error is to be laid to the poet's charge or to that of careless printing, it would not be easy to decide.
Malone, however, has shown that there are many passages in these plays of equally loose construction.

5 i. e. renovate my youth, make me young again

Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some comfort
Out of your best advice.¹

Cym. Nay, let her languish
A drop of blood a day; and, being aged,
Die of this folly!² [Exit.]

Enter PISANIO.

Queen. Fie!—you must give way:
Here is your servant.—How now, sir? What news?

Pis. My lord, your son drew on my master.

Queen. Ha!
No harm, I trust, is done?

Pis. There might have been,
But that my master rather play'd than fought,
And had no help of anger: they were parted
By gentlemen at hand.

Queen. I am very glad on't.

Imo. Your son's my father's friend: he takes his part.—

To draw upon an exile!—O brave sir!—
I would they were in Afric both together;
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back.—Why came you from your master?

Pis. On his command: He would not suffer me
To bring him to the haven: left these notes
Of what commands I should be subject to,
When it pleas'd you to employ me.

Queen. This hath been
Your faithful servant: I dare lay mine honour,
He will remain so.

Pis. I humbly thank your highness.

Queen. Pray, walk a while.

Imo. About some half hour hence,
I pray you, speak with me: you shall, at least,
Go see my lord aboard: for this time, leave me.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A public Place. Enter CLOTEN, and two Lords.

1 Lord. Sir, I would advise you to take a shirt;
the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice: Where air comes out, air comes in:
there's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.

Clo. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it—
Have I hurt him?

2 Lord. No, faith; not so much as his patience.
[Aside.]

1 Lord. Hurt him? his body's a passable carcass, if he be not hurt: it is a thoroughfare for steel if it be not hurt.

2 Lord. His steel was in debt; it went o' the backside the town. [Aside.]

Clo. The villain would not stand me.

2 Lord. No; but he fled forward still, toward your face. [Aside.]

1 Lord. Stand you! you have land enough of your own: but he added to your having; gave you some ground.

2 Lord. As many inches as you have oceans:
Puppies! [Aside.]

Clo. I would, they had not come between us.

2 Lord. So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground. [Aside.]

Clo. And that she should love this fellow, and refuse me!

2 Lord. If it be a sin to make a true election, she is damned. [Aside.]

1 Advice is consideration, reflection. Thus in Measure for Measure :—

'But did repent me after more advice.'

2 This is a bitter form of malediction, almost congenial to that in Othello :—

'—may his pernicious soul
Rot half a grain a day.'

3 'Her beauty and her sense are not equal.' To understand the force of this idea, it should be remembered that anciently almost every sign had a motto, or some attempt at a witticism underneath. In a subsequent scene Iachimo, speaking of Imogen, says :—

'All of her that is out of door, most rich!
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird.'

1 Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: She's a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.³

2 Lord. She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. [Aside.]

Clo. Come, I'll to my chamber: 'Would there had been some hurt done!

2 Lord. I wish not so; unless it had been the fall of an ass, which is no great hurt. [Aside.]

Clo. You'll go with us?

1 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

Clo. Nay, come, let's go together.

2 Lord. Well, my lord. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. *A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.
Enter IMOGEN and PISANIO.*

Imo. I would thou grew'st unto the shores o' the haven,

And question'dst every sail: if he should write,
And I not have it, 'twere a paper lost

As offer'd mercy is.⁴ What was the last
That he spake to thee?

Pis. 'Twas, His queen, his queen!

Imo. Then wav'd his handkerchief?

Pis. And kiss'd it, madam

Imo. Senseless linen! happier therein than I!—
And that was all?

Pis. No, madam; for so long

As he could make me with this eye or ear⁵
Distinguish him from others, he did keep

The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of his mind

Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship.

Imo. Thou should'st have made him
As little as a crow, or less,⁶ ere left

To after-eye him.

Pis. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would have broke mine eye-strings;
crack'd them, but

To look upon him; till the diminution
Of space⁷ had pointed him sharp as my needle:

Nay, follow'd him, till he had melted from
The smallness of a gnat to air; and then

Have turn'd mine eye, and wept.—But, good Pi-sanio,

When shall we hear from him?

Pis. Be assur'd, madam,
With his next vantage.⁸

Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him,
How I would think on him, at certain hours,
Such thoughts, and such; or I could make him swear

The shes of Italy should not betray
Mine interest, and his honour; or have charg'd him,

At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight,
To encounter me with orisons, for then

I am in heaven for him:⁹ or ere I could Give him that parting kiss, which I had set

Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,

Shakes all our buds from growing.¹⁰

Enter a Lady.

Lady. The queen, madam,
Desires your highness' company.

4 'Its loss would be as fatal as the loss of intended mercy to a condemned criminal.' A thought resembling this occurs in All's Well that Ends Well :—

'Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried.'

5 The old copy reads, 'his eye or ear.'

6 This comparison may be illustrated by the following in King Lear :—

'—the croaks and choughs that wing the midway air,

Seem scarce so gross as beetles.'

7 The diminution of space is the diminution of which space is the cause.

8 Opportunity.

9 I. e. 'to meet me with reciprocal prayer, for then my solicitations ascend to heaven on his behalf.'

10 I. e. our buds of love, likened to the buds of flowers.
So in Romeo and Juliet :—

'This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.'

Imo. Those things I bid you do, get them despatch'd.—

I will attend the queen.

Pis. Madam, I shall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Rome. An Apartment in Philario's House. Enter PHILARIO, IACHIMO, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.¹

Iach. Believe it, sir: I have seen him in Britain; he was then of a crescent note, expected to prove so worthy, as since he hath been allowed the name of; but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration; though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items.

Phi. You speak of him when he was less furnished, than now he is, with that which makes² him both without and within.

French. I have seen him in France: we had very many there, could behold the sun with as firm eyes as he.

Iach. This matter of marrying his king's daughter, (wherein he must be weighed rather by her value, than his own,) words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.³

French. And then his banishment:—

Iach. Ay, and the approbation of those, that weep this lamentable divorce, under her colours, are wonderfully to extend⁴ him; be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy battery might lay flat, for taking a beggar without more⁵ quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourn with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Phi. His father and I were soldiers together; to whom I have been often bound for no less than my life:—

Enter POSTHUMUS.

Here comes the Briton: Let him be so entertained amongst you, as suits, with gentlemen of your knowing, to a stranger of his quality.—I beseech you all, be better known to this gentleman; whom I commend to you, as a noble friend of mine: How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

French. Sir, we have known together in Orleans. Post. Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay, and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o'er-rate my poor kindness: I was glad I did atone⁶ my countryman and you; it had been pity, you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose, as then each bore, upon importance⁷ of so slight and trivial a nature.

Post. By your pardon, sir, I was then a young traveller: rather shunn'd to go even with what I heard, than in my every action to be guided by others' experiences:⁸ but, upon my mended judgment, (if I offend not to say it is mended,) my quarrel was not altogether slight.

French. 'Faith, yes, to be put to the arbitrement of swords; and by such two, that would, by all likelihood, have confounded⁹ one the other, or have fallen both.

Iach. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference?

¹ This enumeration of persons is from the old copy; but Myneker and the Dons are mute characters.

² i. e. accomplishes him.

³ 'Words him—a great deal from the matter,' makes the description of him very distant from the truth.

⁴ i. e. to magnify his good qualities. See Act i. Sc. 1.

⁵ The old copy reads, less. The poet has in other places entangled himself with the force of this word in construction. Thus in the Winter's Tale:—

'—I never heard yet

That any of these bolder vices wanted

Less impudence to gainsay what they did,

Than to perform it first.'

⁶ i. e. reconcile.

⁷ Importance is importance.

⁸ 'Rather studied to avoid conducting himself by the opinions of others, than to be guided by their experience.'

French. Safely, I think: 'twas a contention in public, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses: This gentleman at that time vouching, (and upon warrant of bloody affirmation,) his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant-qualified, and less attemptable, than any the rarest of our ladies in France.

Iach. That lady is not now living; or this gentleman's opinion, by this, worn out.

Post. She holds her virtue still, and I my mind.

Iach. You must not so far prefer her 'fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.¹⁰

Iach. As fair, and as good, (a kind of hand-in-hand comparison,) had been something too fair, and too good, for any lady in Britany. If she went before others I have seen, as that diamond of yours out-lustres many I have beheld, I could not but believe¹¹ she excelled many: but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her, as I rated her: so do I my stone.

Iach. What do you esteem it at?

Post. More than the world enjoys.

Iach. Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outpriz'd by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold, or given; if there were wealth enough for the purchase, or merit for the gift: the other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Iach. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which, by their graces, I will keep.

Iach. You may wear her in title yours: but, you know, strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds. Your ring may be stolen, too: so, of your brace of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual: a cunning thief, or a that-way accomplished courtier, would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier, to convince¹² the honour of my mistress; if, in the holding or loss of that, you term her frail. I do nothing doubt, you have store of thieves; notwithstanding I fear not my ring.

Phi. Let us leave here, gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy signior, I thank him, makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.

Iach. With five times so much conversation, I should get round of your fair mistress: make her go back, even to the yielding; had I admittance, and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Iach. I dare, thereon, pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, o'er-values it something. But I make my wager rather against your confidence, than her reputation: and, to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it against any lady in the world.

⁹ i. e. destroyed. So in Antony and Cleopatra, Act iii. Sc. 2:—

'What willingly he did confound he wail'd.'

¹⁰ Friend and lover were formerly synonymous. Posthumus means to bestow the most exalted praise on Imogen, a praise the more valuable as it was the result of reason, not of amorous dotage. I make my avowal, says he, in the character of her adorer, not of her possessor. I speak of her as a being I reverence, not as a beauty I enjoy. I rather profess to describe her with the devotion of a worshipper, than the rapture of a lover. This sense of the word also appears in a subsequent remark of Iachimo:—

'You are a friend, and therein the wiser.'

i. e. you are a lover, and therefore show your wisdom in opposing all experiments that may bring your lady's chastity into question.

¹¹ The old copy reads, 'I could not believe she excell'd many.' Mr. Heath proposed to read, 'I could but believe,' &c. The emendation in the text is Malone's.

¹² i. e. overcomes.

Post. You are a great deal abused¹ in too bold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you're worthy of, by your attempt.

Iach. What's that?

Post. A repulse: Though your attempt, as you call it, deserves more; a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this: it came in too suddenly; let it die as it was born, and, I pray, you, be better acquainted.

Iach. 'Would I had put my estate, and my neighbour's, on the approbation² of what I have spoke.

Post. What lady would you choose to assail?

Iach. Yours; whom in constancy, you think, stands so safe: I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where your lady is, with no more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of hers, which you imagine so reserved.

Post. I will wage against your gold, gold to it: my ring I hold dear as my finger; 'tis part of it.

Iach. You are a friend,³ and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at a million a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting: But, I see, you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bear a graver purpose, I hope.

Iach. I am the master of my speeches;⁴ and would undergo what's spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you?—I shall but lend my diamond till your return:—Let there be covenants drawn between us: My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match; here's my ring.

Phi. I will have it no lay.

Iach. By the gods, it is one: If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are yours; so is your diamond too. If I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in, she your jewel, this your jewel, and my gold are yours:—provided, I have your commendation, for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles betwixt us:—only, thus far you shall answer. If you make your voyage upon her, and give me directly to understand you have prevailed, I am no further your enemy, she is not worth our debate; if she remain unseduced, (you not making it appear otherwise,) for your ill opinion, and the assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword.

Iach. Your hand; a covenant: We will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain; lest the bargain should catch cold, and starve: I will fetch my gold, and have our two wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed. [Exeunt POST. and IACH.]

French. Will this hold, think you?

Phi. Signior Iachimo will not from it. Pray, let us follow 'em. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Britain. A Room in Cymbeline's Palace. Enter Queen, Ladies, and CORNELIUS.

Queen. Whiles yet the dew's on ground, gather those flowers;
Make haste: Who has the note of them?

1 i. e. deceived.

2 The Moor's abused by some most villanous knave.
Othello.

3 I. e. proof

—how many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.
King Henry V.

4 See note 10 in the preceding page.

5 'I know what I have said; I said no more than I meant.'

6 Conclusions are experiments. 'I commend (says Walton) an angler that trieth conclusions, and improves his art.'

7 'This thought would probably have been more amplified, had our author lived to be shocked with such

1 Lady. I, madam.

Queen. Despatch.—— [Exeunt Ladies.]
Now, master doctor; have you brought those drugs?
Cor. Pleaseth your highness, ay: here they are, madam: [Presenting a small Box.]

But I beseech your grace, (without offence;
My conscience bids me ask;) wherefore you have Commanded of me these most poisonous compounds, Which are the movers of a languishing death;
But, though slow, deadly?

Queen.

I do wonder, doctor,
Thou ask'st me such a question: Have I not been Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? distil? preserve? yea, so, That our great king himself doth woo me oft For my confections? Having thus far proceeded, (Unless thou think'st me devilish,) is't not meet That I did amplify my judgment in Other conclusions? I will try the forces Of these thy compounds on such creatures as We count not worth the hanging, (but none human,) To try the vigour of them, and apply Allayments to their act; and by them gather Their several virtues, and effects.

Cor.

Your highness, Shall from this practice but make hard your heart: Besides, the seeing these effects will be Both noisome and infectious.

Queen.

O, content thee.—

Enter PISANIO.

Here comes a flattering rascal; upon him [Aside. Will I first work: he's for his master, And enemy to my son.—How now, Pisanio?— Doctor, your service for this time is ended; Take your own way.

Cor.

I do suspect you, madam; But you shall do no harm. [Aside.]

Queen.

Hark thee, a word.—

[To PISANIO.]
Cor. [Aside.] I do not like her.' She doth think she has

Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit, And will not trust one of her malice with A drug of such damn'd nature: Those, she has Will stupefy and dull the sense awhile: Which first, perchance, she'll prove on cats, and dogs;

Then afterward up higher: but there is No danger in what show of death it makes, More than the locking up the spirits a time, To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd With a most false effect; and I the truer, So to be false with her.

Queen.

No further service, doctor, Until I send for thee.

Cor.

I humbly take my leave. [Exit.]

Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think, in time

She will not quench;⁸ and let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Do thou work; When thou shalt bring me word, she loves my son, I'll tell thee, on the instant, thou art then As great as is thy master: greater; for His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name Is at last gasp: Return he cannot, nor Continue where he is; to shift his being,⁹ Is to exchange one misery with another; experiments as have been published in later times, by a race of men who have practised tortures without pity, and related them without shame, and are yet suffered to erect their heads among human beings.

'Cape saxa manu, cape robora, pastor.'

Johnson.

7 This soliloquy is pronounced by Johnson to be 'very inartificial, and that Cornelius makes a long speech to tell himself what himself knows.' The great critic forgot that it was intended for the instruction of the audience, to relieve their anxiety at mischievous ingredients being left in the hands of the Queen. It is no less useful to prepare us for the return of Imogen to life.

8 i. e. grow cool

9 To change his abode

And every day, that comes, comes to decay
A day's work in him: What shalt thou expect,
To be dependor on a thing that leans?

Who cannot be new built; nor has no friends,
[The Queen drops a Box: PISANIO takes it up.

So much as but to prop him?—Thou tak'st up
Thou know'st not what; but take it for thy labour:
It is a thing I made, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial:—Nay, I pr'ythee, take it;
It is an earnest of a further good
That I mean to thee. Tell thy mistress how
The case stands with her; do't, as from thyself.
Think what a chance thou changest on;² but think
Thou hast thy mistress still; to boot, my son,
Who shall take notice of thee; I'll move the king
To any shape of thy preferment, such
As thou'lt desire; and then myself, I chiefly,
That set thee on to this desert, am bound
To load thy merit richly. Call my women; Think on my words. [Exit PISA.]—A sly and constant knave;

Not to be shak'd: the agent for his master;
And the remembrancer of her, to hold
The hand fast to her lord.—I have given him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of liegers³ for her sweet; and which she, after,
Except she bend her humour, shall be assur'd

Re-enter PISANIO, and Ladies.

To taste of too.—So, so;—well done, well done:
The violets, cowslips, and the primroses,
Bear to my closet:—Fare thee well, Pisanio;
Think on my words. [Exit Queen and Ladies.

Pis. And shall do:⁴
But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll choke myself: there's all I'll do for you. [Exit.

SCENE VII. Another Room in the same. Enter IMOGEN.

Imo. A father cruel, and a step-dame false;
A foolish suitor to a wedded lady,
That hath her husband banish'd;—O, that husband!
My supreme crown of grief! and those repeated
Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stolen,
As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable
Is the desire that's glorious:⁵ Blessed be those,
How mean so'er, that have their honest wills,
Which seasons comfort.—Who may this be? Fie!

Enter PISANIO and IACHIMO.

Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome;
Comes from my lord with letters.

Iach. Change you, madam?
The worthy Leonatus is in safety,
And greets your highness dearly. [Presents a letter.

Imo. Thanks, good sir:
You are kindly welcome.

Iach. All of her, that is out of door, most rich!
[Aside.

If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird; and I
Have lost the wager. Boldness be my friend.
Arm me, audacity, from head to foot!
Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight;
Rather, directly fly.

Imo. [Reads.]—He is one of the noblest natures, whose kindnesses I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust.
LEONATUS.

So far I read aloud:
But even the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by the rest, and takes it thankfully.—
You are as welcome, worthy sir, as I
Have words to bid you; and shall find it so,
In all that I can do.

Iach. Thanks, fairest lady.—
What! are men mad? Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich crop
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above, and the twinn'd stones
Upon the number'd beach?⁶ and can we not Partition make with spectacles so precious 'Twixt fair and foul?

Imo. What makes your admiration?
Iach. It cannot be i' the eye; for apes and monkeys
'Twixt two such shes, would chatter this way, and Contemn with mows⁷ the other: Nor i' the judgment;
For idiots, in this case of favour, would
Be wisely definite: Nor i' the appetite;
Sluttish, to such neat excellence oppos'd,
Should make desire vomit emptiness,
Not so allur'd to feed.⁸

Imo. What is the matter, trow?
Iach. The cloyed will,
(That satiate yet unsatisfied desire,
That tub both fill'd and running,) ravening first
The lamb, longs after for the garbage.

Imo. What, dear sir,
Thus raps you? Are you well?
Iach. Thanks, madam; well:—Beseech you, sir, desire [To PISANIO.

My man's abode where I did leave him: he
Is strange and peevish.⁹

Pis. I was going, sir,
To give him welcome. [Exit PISANIO.

Imo. Continues well my lord? His health, beseech you?

Iach. Well, madam.
Imo. Is he dispos'd to mirth? I hope, he is.

Iach. Exceeding pleasant; none a stranger there
So merry and so gamesome: he is call'd
The Briton reveller.

Imo. When he was here,
He did incline to sadness; and oft-times
Not knowing why.

Iach. I never saw him sad.
There is a Frenchman his companion, one,
An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves

1 That inclines towards its fall.

2 'Think with what a fair prospect of mending your fortunes you now change your present service.' It has been proposed to read:—

'Think what a chance thou chancest on.'
And,

'Think what a change thou chancest on.'
But there seems to be no necessity for alteration.

3 A lieger ambassador is one that resides in a foreign court to promote his master's interest. So in Measure for Measure:—

'Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting lieger.'

4 Some words, which rendered this sentence less abrupt, and perfected the metre of it, appear to have been omitted in the old copies.

5 Imogen's sentiment appears to be, 'Had I been stolen by thieves in my infancy, I had been happy. But how pregnant with misery is that station which is called glorious, and so much desired. Happier far are those, how mean so'er their condition, that have their honest wills; it is this which seasons comfort,' (i. e. tempers it, or makes it more pleasant and acceptable.) See Hamlet, Act i. Sc 3:—'My blessing season this in you.'

6 The old copy reads, trust. The emendation was suggested by Mason; is defended by Steevens; and, of course, opposed by Malone.

7 We must either believe that the poet by 'number'd beach' means 'numerous beach,' or else that he wrote
'th' unnumber'd beach;' which, indeed, seems most probable.

8 To mow or moe, is to make mouths.

9 Iachimo, in his counterfeited rapture, has shown how the eyes and the judgment would determine in favour of Imogen, comparing her with the supposititious present mistress of Posthumus, he proceeds to say, that appetite too would give the same suffrage. Desire (says he) when it approached sluttish, and considered it in comparison with such neat excellence, would feel the convulsions of disgust, though, being unfed, it had no object.

10 i. e. he is a foreigner and foolish, or silly. Iachimo says again at the latter end of this scene:—

'And I am something curious, being strange
To have them in safe stowage.'

Here also strange means a stranger or foreigner.

A Gallian girl at home : he furnaces¹
The thick sighs from him ; whiles the jolly Briton, (Your lord, I mean,) laughs from's free lungs, cries, O !

*Can my sides hold, to think, that man,—who knows
By history, report, or his own proof,
What woman is, yea, what she cannot choose
But must be,—will his free hours languish for Assured bondage ?*

Imo. Will my lord say so ?

Iach. Ay, madam ; with his eyes in flood with laughter.

It is a recreation to be by,
And hear him mock the Frenchman : But, heavens know,
Some men are much to blame.

Imo. Not he, I hope.

Iach. Not he : But yet heaven's bounty towards him might

Be us'd more thankfully. In himself, 'tis much ;²
In you,—which I count his, beyond all talents,— Whilst I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pity too.

Imo. What do you pity, sir

Iach. Two creatures, heartily.

Imo. Am I one, sir ?
You look on me ; What wreck discern you in me,
Deserves your pity ?

Iach. Lamentable ! What !
To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
P' the dungeon by a snuff ?

Imo. I pray you, sir,
Deliver with more openness your answers
To my demands. Why do you pity me ?

Iach. That others do,
I was about to say, enjoy your——But
It is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to speak on't.

Imo. You do seem to know
Something of me, or what concerns me ; 'Pray you (Since doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Than to be sure they do : For certainties
Either are past remedies ; or, timely knowing,³
The remedy then born,) discover to me
What both you spur and stop.⁴

Iach. Had I this cheek
To bathe my lips upon ; this hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch, would force the feeler's soul
To the oath of loyalty ; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it only here : should I, (damnd then,) Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol ; join gripes with hands Made hard with hourly falsehood,⁵ (falsehood, as
With labour ;) then lie peeping in an eye,
Base and unlustrous as the smoky light
That's fed with stinking tallow ; it were fit,
That all the plagues of hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Imo. My lord, I fear,
Has forgot Britain.

Iach. And himself. Not I,
Inclin'd to this intelligence, pronounce

1 We have the same expression in Chapman's preface to his translation of the Shield of Homer, 1598 :—
'Furnaceth the universal sighs and complaints of this transposed world,' And in As You Like It :

'Sighing like furnace, with a woful ballad,'
2 'If he merely regarded his own character, without any consideration of his wife, his conduct would be unpardonable.'

3 It seems probable that knowing is here an error of the press for known.

4 'The information which you seem to press forward and yet withhold.' The allusion is to horsemanship. So in Sidney's Arcadia :—'She was like a horse desirous to runne, and miserably spurred, but so short-reined, as he cannot stirre forward.'

5 Hard with falsehood is hard by being often griped with frequent change of hands.

6 Empyre is a word signifying sovereign command, now obsolete. Shakspeare uses it in King Richard III. :—

'Your right of birth, your empyre your own.'

The beggary of his change ; but 'tis your graces
That, from my mutest conscience, to my tongue,
Charms this report out.

Imo.

O, dearest soul ! your cause doth strike my heart

With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,⁶
Would make the great'st king double ! to be partner'd

With tomboys,⁷ hir'd with that self-exhibition
Which your own coffers yield ! with diseases'd ventures,

That play with all infirmities for gold,
Which rottenness can lend nature ! such boil'd stuff,⁸

As well might poison poison ! Be reveng'd ;
Or she, that bore you, was no queen, and you
Recoil from your great stock.

Imo.

Revend'g !
How should I be reveng'd ? If this be true,
(As I have such a heart, that both mine ears Must not in haste abuse,) if it be true,
How should I be reveng'd ?

Iach.

Should he make me
Live like Diana's priest, betwixt cold sheets ;
While he is vaulting variable ramps,
In your despite, upon your purse ? Revenge it.
I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure ;
More noble than that runagate to your bed ;
And will continue fast to your affection,
Still close, as sure.

Imo.

What ho, Pisanio !

Iach. Let me my service tender on your lips.

Imo. Away !—I do condemn mine ears, that have
So long attended thee.—If thou wert honourable,
Thou would'st have told this tale for virtue, not
For such an end thou seek'st ; as base, as strange.
Thou wrong'st a gentleman, who is as far
From thy report, as thou from honour ; and Solicit'st here a lady, that disdains
Thee and the devil alike. What ho, Pisanio !—
The king my father shall be made acquainted
Of thy assault : if he shall think it fit,
A saucy stranger, in his court, to mart
As in a Romish⁹ stew, and to expound
His beastly mind to us ; he hath a court
He little cares for, and a daughter whom
He not respects at all.—What ho, Pisanio !

Iach.

O, happy Leonatus ! I may say ;
The credit, that thy lady hath of thee,
Deserves thy trust ; and thy most perfect goodness
Her assur'd credit !—Blessed live you long !
A lady to the worthiest sir, that ever
Country call'd his ! and you his mistress, only
For the most worthiest fit ! Give me your pardon.
I have spoke this, to know if your affiance
Were deeply rooted ; and shall make your lord,
That which he is, new o'er ; And he is one
The truest manner'd ; such a holy witch,
That he enchants societies unto him :¹⁰
Half all men's hearts are his.

Imo.

You make amends.

7 We still call a forward or rude hoyden a tomboy. But our ancestors seem to have used the term for a wanton.

'What humorous tomboys be these ?—
The only gallant Messalinas of our age.'

Lady Alimony.

8 This allusion has been already explained. See Timon of Athens, Act ii. Sc. 3.

9 Romish for Roman was the phraseology of Shakspeare's age. Thus in Claudius Tiberius Nero, 1607 :—
'In the loathsome Romish steves, Draught, in his translation of the first epistle of the second book of Horace, 1567, has—

'The Romish people wise in this, in this point only just.'

And in other places we have the 'Romish cirque,' &c.

10 '—he did in the general bosom reign
Of young and old, and sexes both enchanted—
Consents bewitch'd, ere he desire, have granted

Iach. He sits 'mongst men, like a descended god :¹ He hath a kind of honour sets him off, More than a mortal seeming. Be not angry, Most mighty princess, that I have adventur'd To try your taking of a false report ; which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment In the election of a sir so rare.

Which, you know, cannot err : The love I bear him Made me to fan you thus ; but the gods made you, Unlike all others, chaffless. Pray your pardon.

Imo. All's well, sir : Take my power ;² the court for yours.

Iach. My humble thanks. I had almost forgot To entreat your grace but in a small request, And yet of moment too, for it concerns Your lord ; myself, and other noble friends, Are partners in the business.

Imo. Pray, what is't ?

Iach. Some dozen Romans of us, and your lord, ('The best feather of our wing,³) have mingled sums, To buy a present for the emperor ; Which I, the factor for the rest, have done In France : 'Tis plate, of rare device ; and jewels, Of rich and exquisite form ; their values great ; And I am something curious, being strange,⁴ To have them in safe stowage ; May it please you To take them in protection ?

Imo. Willingly ;

And pawn mine honour for their safety : since My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them In my bed-chamber.

Iach. They are in a trunk, Attended by my men : I will make bold To send them to you, only for this night ; I must abroad to-morrow.

Imo. O, no, no.

Iach. Yes, I beseech ; or I shall short my word, By length'ning my return. From Gallia I cross'd the seas on purpose, and on promise To see your grace.

Imo. I thank you for your pains ; But not away to-morrow ?

Iach. O, I must, madam : Therefore, I shall beseech you, if you please To greet your lord with writing, do't to-night : I have outstood my time ; which is material To the tender of our present.

Imo. I will write.

Send your trunk to me ; it shall safe be kept, And truly yielded you : You are very welcome.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Court before Cymbeline's Palace.—
Enter CLOTEN, and two Lords.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck ! when I kissed the jack upon an upcast,⁴ to be hit away ! I had a hundred pound on't : And then a whoreson jackanapes must take me up for swearing ; as if I borrowed nine oaths of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

1 Lord. What got he by that ? You have broke his pate with your bowl.

2 Lord. If his wit had been like him that broke it, it would have ran all out. [Aside.]

Clo. When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths : Ha ?

2 Lord. No, my lord ; nor [Aside] crop the ears of them.

¹ So in Chapman's version of the twenty-third book of the Odyssey :—

— as he were

A god descended from the starry sphere.²

And in Hamlet :—

— a station like the herald Mercury

New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.³

² ' You are so great you would faine march in fieldes, That world should judge you feathers of one wing.'⁴

Churchyard's Warning to Wanderers, 1693.

³ See note 10, p. 314, ante.

⁴ He is describing his fate at bowls. The jack is the Clo. Whoreson dog !—I give him satisfaction ? Would, he had been one of my rank !

2 Lord. To have smelt like a fool.⁵ [Aside.]

Clo. I am not more vexed at any thing in the earth,—A pox on't ! I had rather not be so noble as I am ; they dare not fight with me, because of the queen my mother : every jack-slave hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

2 Lord. You are a cock and capon too ; and you crow, cock, with your comb on.⁶ [Aside.]

Clo. Sayest thou ?

1 Lord. It is not fit, your lordship should undertake every companion⁷ that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that : but it is fit, I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2 Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

1 Lord. Did you hear of a stranger, that's come to court to-night ?

Clo. A stranger ! and I know not on't !

2 Lord. He's a strange fellow himself, and knows it not. [Aside.]

1 Lord. There's an Italian come ; and, 'tis thought, one of Leonatus' friends.

Clo. Leonatus ! a banished rascal ; and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger ?

1 Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit, I went to look upon him ? Is there no derogation in't ?

1 Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

2 Lord. You are a fool granted ; therefore your issues being foolish, do not derogate. [Aside.]

Clo. Come, I'll go see this Italian : What I have lost to-day at bowls, I'll win to-night of him. Come, go.

2 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

[Exeunt CLOTEN and first Lord.]

That such a crafty devil as is his mother Should yield the world this ass ! a woman, that Bears all down with her brain ; and this her son Cannot take two from twenty for his heart, And leave eighteen. Alas, poor princess, Thou divine Imogen, what thou endur'st ! Betwixt a father by thy step-dame govern'd ; A mother hourly coining plots ; a wooer, More hateful than the foul expulsion is Of thy dear husband, than that horrid act Of the divorce he'd make ! The heavens hold firm The walls of thy dear honour ; keep unshak'd That temple, thy fair mind ; that thou may'st stand, To enjoy thy banish'd lord, and this great land !

[Exit.]

SCENE II. A Bedchamber ; in one part of it a Trunk. IMOGEN reading in her Bed ; a Lady attending.

Imo. Who's there ? my woman Helen ?

Lady. Please you, madam.

Imo. What hour is it ?

Lady. Almost midnight, madam.

Imo. I have read three hours, then ; mine eyes are weak :—

Fold down the leaf where I have left : To bed : Take not away the taper, leave it burning ;

And if thou canst awake by four o' the clock,

I prythee, call me. Sleep hath seiz'd me wholly.

[Exit Lady.]

To your protection I commend me, gods !

small bowl at which the others are aimed : he who is nearest to it wins. 'To kiss the jack' is a state of great advantage. The expression is of frequent occurrence in the old comedies. The jack is also called the mistress.

⁵ The same quibble has occurred in As You Like It, Act I. Sc. 2 :—

'Touch. Nay, if I kept not my rank.

Ros. Thou loost thy old smelt.'

⁶ That is, in other words, you are a carcass.

⁷ The use of companion was the same as of fellow now. It was a word of contempt.

From faeries, and the tempters of the night,
Guard me, beseech ye!

[Sleeps. IACHIMO, from the Trunk.]

Iach. The crickets sing, and man's o'erlabour'd sense

Repairs itself by rest: Our Tarquin thus
Did softly press the rushes,¹ ere he waken'd
The chastity he wounded.—Cytherea,
How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! fresh lily!
And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!
But kiss; one kiss!—Rubies unparagon'd,
How dearly they do't!—'Tis her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus:² The flame o' the taper
Bows toward her; and would underpeep her lids,
To see the enclosed lights, now canopied
Under these windows:³ White and azure, lac'd
With blue of heaven's own tinct.⁴—But my design?
To note the chamber:—I will write all down:—
Such, and such, pictures:—There the window is:—
Such

The adornment of her bed:—The arras, figures, Why, such, and such:—And the contents o' the story,—

Ay, but some natural notes about her body,
Above ten thousand meaner moveables
Would testify, to enrich mine inventory:
O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her!
And be her sense but as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying!—Come off, come off;—
[Taking off her Bracelet.]

As slippery, as the Gordian knot was hard!—
'Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. On her left breast
A mole cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
In the bottom of a cowslip: Here's a voucher,
Stronger than ever law could make: this secret
Will force him think I have pick'd the lock, and ta'en
The treasure of her honour. No more.—To what end?

Why should I write this down, that's riveted,
Screw'd to my memory? She hath been reading late
The tale of Tereus;⁵ here the leaf's turn'd down,
Where Philomel gave up;—I have enough:
To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night!⁶—that dawning

May bare the raven's eye: I lodge in fear;
Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here.

[Clock strikes.]

One, two, three,—Time, time!

[Goes into the Trunk. The Scene closes.]

SCENE III. An Ante-Chamber adjoining Imogen's Apartment. Enter CLOTEN and Lords.

1 Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turn'd up ace.

Clo. It would make any man cold to lose.

1 Lord. But not every man patient, after the noble temper of your lordship; You are most hot, and furious, when you win.

1 It was anciently the custom to strew chambers with rushes. This passage may serve as a comment on the 'vanishing strides' of Tarquin, in Macbeth, as it shows that Shakspeare meant 'softly stealing strides'

2 '—no lips did seem so fair

In his conceit; through which he thinks doth flee
So sweet a breath that doth perfume the air.'

Pygmalion's Image, by Marston, 1598.

3 That is, her eyelids. So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'Thy eyes' windows fall

Like death when he shuts up the day of life.'

4 Warburton wished to read:—

'—White with azure lac'd,

The blue of heaven's own tinct.'

But there is no necessity for change. It is an exact description of the eyelid of a fair beauty, which is white tinged with blue, and laced with veins of darker blue.
By azure our ancestors understood not a dark blue, but a light glaucous colour, a tinct or effusion of a blue colour.

5 Tereus and Progne is the second tale in A Petite Palace of Petite his Pleasure, 4to 1676. The story is related in Ovid, Metam. l. vi.; and by Gower in his Confessio Amantis, b. v. fol. 113, b.

6 The task of drawing the chariot of Night was as-

Clo. Winning would put any man into courage:
If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough: It's almost morning, is't not?

1 Lord. Day, my lord.

Clo. I would this music would come: I am advised to give her music o' mornings; they say, it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on; tune: If you can penetrate her with your fingering, so; we'll try with tongue, too. if none will do, let her remain; but I'll never give o'er.
First, a very excellent good-conceited thing; after,
a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,—and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,⁷

And Phœbus 'gins arise,

His steeds to water at those springs

On chalic'd⁸ flowers that lies;

And winking Mary-buds begin

To ope their golden eyes;

With every thing that pretty bin:

My lady sweet, arise;

Arise, arise.

So, get you gone: If this penetrate, I will consider your music the better:⁹ if it do not, it is a vice in her ears, which horse-hairs, and cat-guts, nor the voice of unpaved eunuch to boot, can never amend.

[Exit Musicians.]

Enter CYMBELINE and Queen.

2 Lord. Here comes the king.

Clo. I am glad, I was up so late; for, that's the reason I was up so early: He cannot choose but take this service I have done, fatherly.—Good morrow to your majesty, and to my gracious mother.

Cym. Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?

Will she not forth?

Clo. I have assailed her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The exile of her minion is too new;
She hath not yet forgot him: some more time
Must wear the print of his remembrance out,
And then she's yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king;

Who lets go by no vantages, that may Prefer you to his daughter: Frame yourself
To orderly solicits; and be friended

With aptness of the season:¹⁰ make denials

Increase your services: so seem, as if

You were inspir'd to do those duties which

You tender to her; that you in all obey her,

Save when command to your dismissal tends,

And therein you are senseless.

Clo. Senseless? not so.

signed to dragons, on account of their supposed watchfulness. Milton mentions 'the dragon yoke of night' in Il Penseroso; and in his Comus:—

'—the dragon womb

Of Stygian darkness.'

Again, in Obitum Præsulis Eliensis:—

'—sub pedibus deam

Vidi triformem, dum coëcebat suos

Frænis dracones aureis.'

It may be remarked that the whole tribe of serpents sleep with their eyes open, and therefore appear to exert a constant vigilance.

7 The same hyperbole occurs in Milton's Paradise

Lost, book v.—

'—ye birds

That singing up to heaven's gate ascend.'

And in Shakspeare's 29th Sonnet:—

'Like to the lark at break of day arising

From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate.'

8 The morning dries up the dew which lies in the cups of flowers called calices, or chalices. The marigold is one of those flowers which closes itself up at sunset.

'—the day is waxen olde,

And 'gins to shut up with the marigold.'

Bræne; Britania's Pastorals.

9 i.e. I will pay you more amply for it.

10 'With solicitations not only proper but well timed.'

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. So like you, sir, ambassadors from Rome;
The one is Caius Lucius.

Cym. A worthy fellow,
Albeit he comes on angry purpose now;
But that's no fault of his: We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself his goodness forespent on us
We must extend our notice.—Our dear son,
When you have given good morning to your mistress,
Attend the queen, and us; we shall have need
To employ you towards this Roman.—Come, our queen.

[Exeunt Cym. Queen, Lords, and Mess.]

Clo. If she be up, I'll speak with her; if not,
Let her lie still, and dream.—By your leave, ho!—

[Knocks.]

I know her women are about her; What
If I do line one of their hands? 'Tis gold Which buys admittance; oft it doth; yea, and makes

Diana's rangers false² themselves, yield up
Their deer to the stand of the stealer; and 'tis gold Which makes the true man kill'd, and saves the thief;

Nay, sometime, hangs both thief and true man:
What

Can it not do, and undo? I will make
One of her women lawyer to me; for
I yet not understand the case myself.
By your leave.

[Knocks.]

Enter a Lady.

Lady. Who's there, that knocks?

Clo. A gentleman.

Lady. No more?

Clo. Yes, and a gentlewoman's son.

Lady. That's more
Than some, whose tailors are as dear as yours,
Can justly boast of: What's your lordship's pleasure?

Clo. Your lady's person: Is she ready?

Lady. Ay,
To keep her chamber.

Clo. There's gold for you: sell me your good report.

Lady. How! my good name? or to report of you
What I shall think is good?—The princess—

Enter Imogen.

Clo. Good morrow, fairest sister: Your sweet
hand.

Imo. Good morrow, sir: You lay out too much pains

For purchasing but trouble: the thanks I give,
Is telling you that I am poor of thanks,
And scarce can spare them.

Clo. Still, I swear, I love you.

Imo. If you but said so, 'twere as deep with me:
If you swear still, your recompense is still
That I regard it not.

Clo. This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say I yield, being silent,

I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: 't' faith,
I shall unfold equal discourtesy
To your best kindness; one of your great knowing
Should learn, being taught, forbearance.³

Clo. To leave you in your madness, 'twere my sin:
I will not.

¹ That is, we must extend towards himself our notice of his goodness heretofore shown to us. Shakespeare has many similar ellipses. Thus in Julius Cæsar:—

'Thine honourable metal may be wrought
From what it is dispos'd [to].'

See the next Scene, note 5.

² False is not here an adjective, but a verb. Thus in Tamurlaine, Part II.:—

'And make him false his faith unto the king.'
Shakespeare has one form of the verb to false in The Comedy of Errors, Act ii. Sc. 2:—'Nay, not sure in a thing falsing.'

³ i. e. 'a man of your knowledge, being taught forbearance, should learn it.'

⁴ This, as Cloten very well understands it, is a covert

Imo. Fools are not mad folks.⁴

Clo.

Do you call me fool?

Imo. As I am mad, I do:

If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad;
That cures us both. I am much sorry, sir
You put me to forget a lady's manners,
By being so verbal:⁵ and learn now, for all,
That I, which know my heart, do here pronounce,
By the very truth of it, I care not for you;
And am so near the lack of charity,
(To accuse myself,) I hate you: which I had rather
You felt, than make't my boast.

Clo.

You sin against

Obedience, which you owe your father. For
The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
(One, bred of alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps of the court,) it is no contract, none:
And though it be allow'd in meaner parties,
(Yet who, than he, more mean?) to knit their souls,
(On whom there is no more dependency
But brats and beggary,) in self-figur'd knot;⁶
Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by
The consequence o' the crown; and must not soil
The precious note of it with a base slave,
A hiding⁷ for a livery, a squire's cloth,
A pantler, not so eminent.

Imo.

Profane fellow!

Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more,
But what thou art, besides, thou wert too base
To be his groom: thou wert dignified enough,
Even to the point of envy, if 'twere made,
Comparative for your virtues,⁸ to be styl'd
The under-hangman of his kingdom; and hated
For being preferr'd so well.

Clo.

The south-fog rot him!

Imo. He never can meet more mischance than come
To be but nam'd of thee. His meanest garment,
That ever hath but clipp'd his body, is dearer,
In my respect, than all the hairs above thee,
Were they all made such men.—How now, Pisanio?

Enter PISANIO.

Clo. His garment? Now, the devil—

Imo. To Dorothy my woman hie thee presently:—

Clo. His garment?

Imo.

I am sprighted⁹ with a fool,
Frighted, and anger'd worse:—Go, bid my woman
Search for a jewel, that too casually
Hath left mine arm; it was thy master's: 'shrow me,
If I would lose it for a revenue
Of any king's in Europe. I do think
I saw't this morning: Confident I am,
Last night 'twas on mine arm; I kiss'd it:
I hope, it be not gone, to tell my lord
That I kiss ought but he.

Pis.

'Twill not be lost.

Imo. I hope so: go, and search. [Exit Pis.]

Clo.

You have abus'd me:—

His meanest garment?

Imo.

Ay; I said so, sir.

If you will make't an action, call witness to't.

Clo. I will inform your father.

Imo.

Your mother too:
She's my good lady;¹⁰ and will conceive, I hope,
But the worst of me. So I leave you, sir,
To the worst of discontent. [Exit.] mode of calling him a fool. The meaning implied is this: 'If I am mad, as you tell me, I am what you can never be.' 'Fools are not mad folks.'

⁵ i. e. so verbose, so full of talk.

⁶ In knots of their own tying.

⁷ A low fellow only fit to wear a livery.

⁸ If you were to be dignified only in comparison to your virtues, the under-hangman's place is too good for
you.

Johnson says, that 'the rudeness of Cloten is not much undermatched' in that of Imogen; but he forgets the provocation her gentle spirit undergoes by this persecution of Cloten's addresses, and the abuse bestowed upon the idol of her soul.

⁹ i. e. haunted by a fool as by a spirit.

¹⁰ This is said ironically. 'My good lady' is equivalent to 'my good friend.'

Clo. I'll be reveng'd:—

His meanest garment?—Well.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Rome. An Apartment in Philario's House. Enter POSTHUMUS and PHILARIO.

Post. Fear it not, sir: I would, I were so sure To win the king, as I am bold, her honour Will remain hers.

Phi. What means do you make to him?

Post. Not any; but abide the change of time; Quake in the present winter's state, and wish That warmer days would come: in these fear'd hopes, I barely gratify your love; they failing, I must die much your debtor.

Phi. Your very goodness, and your company, O'erpays all I can do. By this, your king Hath heard of great Augustus: Caius Lucius Will do his commission thoroughly: And, I think, He'll grant the tribute, send the arrearsages, Or¹ look upon our Romans, whose remembrance Is yet fresh in their grief.

Post. I do believe, (Statist² though I am none, nor like to be,) That this will prove a war; and you shall hear The legions now in Gallia, sooner landed In our not-fearing Britain, than have tidings Of any penny tribute paid. Our countrymen Are men more order'd, than when Julius Cæsar Smil'd at their lack of skill, but found their courage Worthy his frowning at: Their discipline, (Now mingled with their courages,) will make known

To their approvers,³ they are people, such That mend upon the world.

Enter IACHIMO.

Phi. See! Iachimo?

Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by land: And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails, To make your vessel nimble.

Phi. Welcome, sir.

Post. I hope the briefness of your answer made The speediness of your return.

Iach. Your lady Is one of the fairest that I have look'd upon.

Post. And, therewithal, the best; or let her beauty Look through a casement to allure false hearts, And be false with them.

Iach. Here are letters for you.

Post. Their tenor good, I trust.

Iach. 'Tis very like.

Phi. Was Caius Lucius in the Britain court, When you were there?⁴

Iach. He was expected then, But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet.— Sparkles this stone as it was wont? or is't not Too dull for your good wearing?

Iach. If I have lost it, I should have lost the worth of it in gold. I'll make a journey twice as far to enjoy

A second night of such sweet shortness, which Was mine in Britain; for the ring is won.

Post. The stone's too hard to come by.

Iach. Not a whit, Your lady being so easy.

Post. Make not, sir, Your loss your sport: I hope, you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good sir, we must, If you keep covenant: Had I not brought The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant We were to question further: but I now Profess myself the winner of her honour, Together with your ring; and not the wronger Of her, or you, having proceeded but By both your wills.

Post. If you can make't apparent That you have tasted her in bed, my hand, And ring is yours: if not, the foul opinion You had of her pure honour, gains, or loses, Your sword, or mine; or masterless leaves both To who shall find them.

Iach. Sir, my circumstances, Being so near the truth, as I will make them, Must first induce you to believe: whose strength I will confirm with oath; which, I doubt not, You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find You need it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her bed-chamber (Where, I confess, I slept not; but, profess, Had that was well worth watching,⁵) It was hang'd With tapestry of silk and silver; the story, Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman, And Cydnus swell'd above the banks, or for The press of boats, or pride: a piece of work So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive In workmanship, and value: which, I wonder'd, Could be so rarely and exactly wrought, Since the true life on't was—

Post. This is true; And this you might have heard of here, by me, Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars Must justify my knowledge.

Post. So they must, Or do your honour injury.

Iach. The chimney Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece, Chaste Dian, bathing: never saw I figures So likely to report themselves: the cutter Was as another nature, dumb; outwent her, Motion and breath left out.

Post. This is a thing, Which you might from relation likewise reap; Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The roof o' the chamber With golden cherubins is fretted.⁶ Her andirons (I had forgot them,) were two winking Cupids Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely Depending on their brands.⁷

² i. e. statesman.

³ That is, 'to those who try them.' The old copy, by a common typographical error in the preceding line, has wingled instead of mingled, which odd reading Steevens seemed inclined to adopt, and explains it, 'their discipline borrowing wings from their courage.'

⁴ This speech is given to Posthumus in the old copy; but Posthumus was employed in reading his letters, and was too much interested in the end of Iachimo's journey to put an indifferent question of this nature. It was transferred to Philario at the suggestion of Steevens.

⁵ i. e. 'that which was well worth watching or lying awake [for].' See the preceding scene.

⁶ Mason proposes to read:—

'Such the true life on't was.'

It is a typographical error easily made: and the emendation deserves a place in the text.

⁷ Johnson observes, that 'Iachimo's language is such as a skilful villain would naturally use; a mixture of airy triumph and serious deposition. His gayety shows his seriousness to be without anxiety, and his seriousness proves his gayety to be without art.'

⁷ i. e. so near speech. A speaking picture is a common figurative mode of expression. The meaning of the latter part of the sentence is: 'The sculptor was as nature dumb; he gave every thing that nature gives but breath and motion. In breath is included speech.'

⁸ Steevens says, 'this tawdry image occurs in King Henry VIII:—

— their dwarfish pages were

As cherubins all gilt.'

By the very mention of cherubins his indignation is moved. 'The sole recommendation of this Gothic idea, (says he,) which is critically repeated by modern artists, seems to be, that it occupies but little room on canvass or marble; for chubby unmeaning faces, with ducks' wings tucked under them, are all the circumstances that enter into such infantine and absurd representations of the choirs of heaven.'

⁹ It is well known that the andirons of our ancestors were sometimes costly pieces of furniture; the standards were often, as in this instance, of silver, and representing some terminal figure or device; the transverse or horizontal pieces, upon which the wood was supported, were what Shakspeare here calls the brands, properly

Post. This is her honour!—

Let it be granted, you have seen all this (and praise
Be given to your remembrance,) the description
Of what is in her chamber, nothing saves
The wager you have laid.

Iach.

Then, if you can,

[Pulling out the Bracelet.]

Be pale; I beg but leave to air this jewel: See!—
And now 'tis up again: it must be married
To that your diamond; I'll keep them.

Post.

Jove!—

Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her?

Iach.

Sir (I thank her,) that:

She stripp'd it from her arm; I see her yet;
Her pretty action did outsell her gift,
And yet enrich'd it too: She gave it me, and said,
She priz'd it once.

Post.

May be, she pluck'd it off,

To send it me.

Iach.

She writes so to you? doth she?

Post. O, no, no, no; 'tis true. Here, take this too;

[Gives the Ring.]

It is a basilisk unto mine eye,
Kills me to look on't:—Let there be no honour,
Where there is beauty; truth, where semblance;
love,

Where there's another man: The vows of women
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Than they are to their virtues: which is nothing:—
O, above measure false!

Phi.

Have patience, sir,

And take your ring again; 'tis not yet won:
It may be probable, she lost it; or,
Who knows if one of her women, being corrupted,
Hath stolen it from her.

Post.

Very true;

And so, I hope, he came by't;—Back my ring;—
Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this; for this was stolen.

Iach.

By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.

Post. Hark you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears.
'Tis true;—nay, keep the ring—'tis true: I am sure,

She would not lose it: her attendants are All sworn² and honourable:—They iuduc'd to steal it!

And by a stranger?—No, he hath enjoy'd her.
The cognizance³ of her incontinency
Is this,—she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly.—

There, take thy hire: and all the fiends of hell
Divide themselves between you!

Phi.

Sir, be patient:

This is not strong enough to be believ'd
Of one persuaded well of—

Post.

Never talk on't;

She hath been colted by him.

Iach.

If you seek

For further satisfying, under her breast
(Worthy the pressing,) lies a mole, right proud
Of that most delicate lodging: By my life,
I kiss'd it: and it gave me present hunger
To feed again, though full. You do remember
This stain upon her?

brandirens. Upon these the Cupids which formed the standards nicely depended, seemed to stand on one foot.
1 The meaning seems to be, 'If you ever can be pale—be pale now with jealousy.'

² Pale jealousy, child of insatiate love.'

Not, as Johnson says, 'forbear to flush your cheek with rage.' Mr. Boswell's conjecture that it meant, 'If you can control your temper, if you can restrain yourself within bounds,' is surely inadmissible.

2 It was anciently the custom for the servants of great families (as it is now for the servants of the king) to take an oath of fidelity on their entrance into office. See Percy's Northumberland Household Book, p. 49.

3 The badge, the token, the visible proof. So in King
Henry IV. Part I.:

'As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate.'

4 I. e. avert his wrath from himself, prevent him from injuring himself in his rage.

Post. Ay, and it doth confirm Another stain, as big as hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.

Iach.

Will you hear more?

Post. Spare your arithmetic; never count the turns;

Once, and a million!

Iach.

I'll be sworn,—

Post.

No swearing.

If you will swear you have not done't, you lie;
And I will kill thee, if thou dost deny
Thou hast made me cuckold.

Iach.

I will deny nothing.

Post. O, that I had her here, to tear her limb-meal!

I will go there, and do't; if the court; before

Her father:—I'll do something—

Phi.

Quite besides

The government of patience!—You have won:
Let's follow him, and pervert⁴ the present wrath
He hath against himself.

Iach.

With all my heart.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The same. Another Room in the same. Enter POSTHUMUS.

Post. Is there no way for men to be, but women Must be half-workers? We are bastards all;
And that most venerable man, which I Did call my father, was I know not where
When I was stamp'd; Some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit: Yet my mother seem'd
The Dian of that time: so doth my wife
The nonpareil of this.—O, vengeance, vengeance!
Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me, oft, forbearance: did it with
A pudency so rosy, the sweet view on't Might well have warm'd old Saturn; that I thought her

As chaste as unsunn'd snow;—O, all the devils!—
This yellow Iachimo, in an hour,—was't not?—
Or less,—at first: Perchance he spoke not; but,
Like a full-acorn'd boar, a German one,
Cry'd, oh! and mounted: found no opposition
But what he look'd for should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
The woman's part in me! For there's no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirm
It is the woman's part: Be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, hers; deceiving, hers;
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
Nice longings, slanders, mutability,
All faults that may be nam'd, nay, that hell knows,
Why, hers, in part, or all; but, rather, all:
For ev'n to vice

They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that. I'll write against them,
Detest them, curse them: Yet 'tis greater skill
In a true hate, to pray they have their will:
The very devils cannot plague them better.' [Exit.]

5 Milton was probably indebted to this speech for one of the sentiments which he has imputed to Adam, Par Lost, b. x.:—

—O, why did God,
Creator wise, that peopled highest heaven
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature, and not fill the world at once
With men, as angels, without feminine,
Or find some other way to generate Mankind?

See Rhodomonte's invective against women in the Or lando Furioso; and above all a speech which Euripides has put into the mouth of Hippolytus, in the tragedy of that name.

6 We have the same image in Measure for Measure:—
'Their saucy sweetness, that do coin heaven's image
In stamps that are forbid.'

See Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Part III. Sect. 3.

than in this world to grant him his own foolish wishes'

Sir T. More's Comfort against Tribulation

ACT III.

SCENE I. Britain. A Room of State in Cymbeline's Palace. Enter CYMBELINE, Queen, CLOTEN, and Lords, at one door; and at another, CAIUS LUCIUS, and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Cæsar with us?

Luc. When Julius Cæsar, (whose remembrance yet Lives in men's eyes; and will to ears, and tongues, Be theme, and hearing ever,) was in this Britain, And conquer'd it, Cassibelan, thine uncle (Famous in Cæsar's praises, no whit less Than in his feats deserving it,) for him, And his succession, granted Rome a tribute, Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee lately Is left untender'd.

Queen. And, to kill the marvel, Shall be so ever.

Clo. There be many Cæsars, Ere such another Julius. Britain is A world by itself; and we will nothing pay, For wearing our own noses.

Queen. That opportunity, Which then they had to take from us, to resume We have again.—Remember, sir, my liege, The kings your ancestors; together with The natural bravery of your isle; which stands As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in With rocks unscalable, and roaring waters; With sands, that will not bear your enemies' boats, But suck them up to the top-mast. A kind of conquest

Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag Of came, and saw, and overcame; with shame, (The first that ever touch'd him,) he was carried From off our coast, twice beaten; and his shipping, (Poor ignorant baubles!) on our terrible seas, Like egg-shells mov'd upon their surges, crack'd As easily 'gainst our rocks: for joy whereof, The fam'd Cassibelan, who was once at point, (O, giglot! fortune!) to master Cæsar's sword, Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright, And Britons strut with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid: Our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and, as I said, there is no more such Cæsars: other of them may have crook'd noses: but, to owe such straight arms, none.

Cym. Son, let your mother end.

Clo. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard as Cassibelan; I do not say, I am one; but I have a hand.—Why tribute? why should we pay tribute? If Cæsar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know, Till the injurious Romans did extort This tribute from us, we were free: Cæsar's ambition

(Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch The sides of the world,) against all colour,² here Did put the yoke upon us; which to shake off,

¹ 'O, false and inconstant fortune!' A giglot was a strumpet. So in Measure for Measure:—'Away with those giglots too.' And in Hamlet:—

'Out, out, thou strumpet fortune!'

The poet has transferred to Cassibelan an adventure which happened to his brother Nennius. See Holinshed, book iii. ch. xiii. 'The same historie also maketh mention of Nennius, brother to Cassibelan, who in fight happened to get Cæsar's sword fastened in his shield, by a blow which Cæsar stroke at him. But Nennius died, within 15 daies after the battel, of the hurt received at Cæsar's hand; although after he was hurt he slew Labienus, one of the Roman tribunes.'

² i. e. without any pretence of right.

³ Some few hints for this part of the play are taken from Holinshed.

⁴ i. e. at the extremity of defiance. So in Helyas Knight of the Swanee bk l. no date:—'Here is my

Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon Ourselves to be. We do say then to Cæsar, Our ancestor was that Mulmutius, which Ordain'd our laws; whose use the sword of Cæsar. Hath too much mangled; whose repair, and franchise,

Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed, (Though Rome be therefore angry;) Mulmutius made our laws,

Who was the first of Britain, which did put His brows within a golden crown, and call'd Himself a king.

Luc. I am sorry, Cymbeline, That I am to pronounce Augustus Cæsar (Cæsar, that hath more kings his servants, than Thyself domestic officers,) thine enemy: Receive it from me, then:—War, and confusion, In Cæsar's name pronounce I 'gainst thee: look For fury not to be resisted:—Thus defied, I thank thee for myself.

Cym. Thou art welcome, Caius. Thy Cæsar knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him;³ of him I gather'd honour; Which he, to seek of me again, perforce, Behoves me keep at utterance;⁴ I am perfect, That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for Their liberties, are now in arms: a precedent Which, not to read, would show the Britons cold: So Cæsar shall not find them.

Luc. Let proof speak.

Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make pastime with us a day, or two, longer: If you seek us afterwards in other terms, you shall find us in our salt-water girdle: if you beat us out of it, it is yours; if you fall in the adventure, our crows shall fare the better for you; and there's an end.

Luc. So, sir.

Cym. I know your master's pleasure, and he mine:

All the remain is, welcome. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Another Room in the same. Enter PISANIO.

Pis. How! of adultery? Wherefore write you not What monster's her accuser?—Leonatus!

O, master! what a strange infection Is fallen into thy ear? What false Italian (As poisonous tongu'd, as handed,) hath prevail'd On thy too ready hearing?—Disloyal? No: She's punish'd for her truth; and undergoes, More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults As would take in⁶ some virtue.—O, my master Thy mind to her is now as low, as were Thy fortunes.—How! that I should murder her?

Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I Have made to thy command?—I, her?—her blood? If it be so to do good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How look I, That I should seem to lack humanity, So much as this fact comes to? Do't: The letter [Reading.]

*That I have sent her, by her own command Shall give thee opportunity:*⁸—O, damn'd paper! Black as the ink that's on thee! Senseless bauble, gage to sustain it to the utterance, and befight it to the death?

⁵ Well informed.

⁶ To take in is to conquer. So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'—— cut the Ionian seas

And take in Tomyne.'

⁷ Thy mind compared to hers is now as low as thy condition was compared to hers. According to modern notions of grammatical construction, it should be 'thy mind to hers.'

⁸ The words here read by Pisanio from his master's letter (as it is afterwards given in prose) are not found there, though the substance of them is contained in it. Malone thinks this a proof that Shakspeare had no view to the publication of his pieces—the inaccuracy would hardly be detected by the ear of the spectator, though it could hardly escape an attentive reader

Art thou a feodary¹ for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without? Lo, here she comes.

Enter IMOGEN.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.²

Imo. How now, Pisanio?

Pis. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.

Imo. Who? thy lord? that is my lord? Leonatus?

O, learn'd indeed were that astronomer,
That knew the stars, as I his characters;
He'd lay the future open.—You good gods,
Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
Of my lord's health, of his content,—yet not,
That we two are asunder, let that grieve him,—
(Some griefs are med'cinable;) that is one of them,
For it doth physic love;—of his content,
All but in that!—Good wax, thy leave:—Bless'd be,
You bees, that make these locks of counsel! Lovers,
And men in dangerous bonds, pray not alike;
Though forfeiters you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables.—Good news, gods!
[Reads.]

Justice, and your father's wrath, should he take me in his dominion, could not be so cruel to me as you, O the dearest of creatures, would not even renew me with your eyes. Take notice, that I am in Cambria, at Milford-Haven. What your own love will, out of this, advise you, follow. So, he wishes you all happiness, that remains loyal to his vow, and your, increasing in love. LEONATUS POSTHUMUS.

O, for a horse with wings!—Hear'st thou, Pisanio?
He is at Milford Haven: Read, and tell me
How far 'tis thither. If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day?—Then, true Pisanio,
(Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord; who long'st—
O, let me 'bate,—but not like me;—yet long'st,—
But in a fainter kind:—O, not like me;
For mine's beyond beyond³) say, and speak thick;⁴
(Love's counsellor should fill the bores of hearing,
To the smothering of the sense,) how far it is
To this same blessed Milford: And, by the way,
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as
To inherit such a haven: But, first of all,
How we may steal from hence; and, for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going,
And our return, to excuse:—but first, how got
hence:

Why should excuse be born or e'er begot!⁵
We'll talk of that hereafter. Pr'ythee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour?

1 l. e. a subordinate agent, as a vassal to his chief. A feodary, however, meant also 'a prime agent, or steward, who received aids, reliefs, suits of service, &c. due to any lord.'—Glossographia Anglicana Nova, 1719. Yet after all, it may be doubted whether Shakspere does not use it to signify a confederate or accomplice, as he does feodary in The Winter's Tale, Act ii. Sc. 1:—

'More, she's a traitor, and Camillo is A feodary with her.'

2 l. e. I am unpractised in the arts of murder. So in King Henry IV. Part I.:

'O, I am ignorance itself in this.'

3 As is here used for that. See Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2. The word not in the next line, being accidentally omitted in the old copy, was supplied by Malone.

4 We should now write 'yours, increasing in love,' Your is to be joined in construction with Leonatus Posthumus, and not with increasing; the latter is a participle present, and not a noun.

5 l. e. her longing is further than beyond; beyond any thing that desire can be said to be beyond.

6 l. e. 'speak quick.'

7 That is 'in consequence of our going hence and returning back.' So in Coriolanus, Act ii. Sc. 1:—

'He cannot temperately pursue his honour
From where he should begin and end.'

8 l. e. before the act is done for which excuse will be necessary.

9 This practice was, perhaps, not much less prevalent in Shakspere's time than it is at present. Fynes Morison, speaking of his brother's putting out money

Pis. One score, 'twixt sun and sun,
Madam, 's enough for you; and too much too.

Imo. Why, one that rode to his execution, man, Could never go so slow: I have heard of riding wagers.⁶

Where horses have been nimbler than the sands
That run i' the clock's behalf:⁷—But this is foolery:—

Go, bid my woman feign a sickness, say
She'll home to her father: and provide me, presently,

A riding suit; no costlier than would fit
A franklin's⁸ housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best⁹ consider.
Imo. I see before me, man, nor here, nor here,
Nor what ensues; but have a fog in them,
That I cannot look through.¹⁰ Away, I pr'ythee;
Do as I bid thee: There's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way. [Exit.]

SCENE III. Wales. A mountainous Country, with a Cave. Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRIUS.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such Whose roof's as low as ours! Stoop, boys: This gate

Instructs you how to adore the heavens; and bows
you

To a morning's holy office: The gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet¹¹ through.
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good morrow to the sun—Hail, thou fair heaven!
We house i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Gui.

Hail, heaven!

Arv.

Hail, heaven!

Bel. Now, for our mountain sport: Up to yon hill,
Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats. Consider,

When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place which lessens, and sets off.
And you may then revolve what tales I have told
you,

Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:
This service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd:¹² To apprehend thus,
Draws us a profit from all things we see:
And often to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded¹³ beetle in a safer hold
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O, this life
Is nobler, than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a brabe;¹⁴

to be paid with interest on his return from Jerusalem (or, as we should now speak, travelling thither for a wager,) defends it as an honest means of gaining the charges of his journey, especially when 'no means lords, and lords' sonnes, and gentlemen in our court, put out money upon a horse-race under themselves, yea, upon a journey afoote.'

10 It may be necessary to apprise the reader that the sand of an hour-glass used to measure time is meant. The figurative meaning is, swifter than the flight of time.

11 A franklin is a yeoman.

12 That is 'you'd best consider.'

13 'I see neither on this side nor on that, nor behind me; but find a fog in each of those quarters that my eye cannot pierce. The way to Milford is alone clear and open: Let us therefore instantly set forward.' By 'what ensues,' Imogen means what will be the consequence of the step I am going to take.

14 Strut, walk proudly. So in Twelfth Night, 'How he jets under his advanced plumes.' The idea of a giant was, among the readers of romances, who were almost all the readers of those times, always confounded with that of a Saracen.

15 'In any service done, the advantage rises not from the act, but from the allowance (l. e. approval) of it.'

16 l. e. scaly-winged beetle. See Antony and Cleopatra, Act iii. Sc. 2. The epithet full-winged, applied to the eagle, sufficiently marks the contrast of the poet's imagery; for whilst the bird can soar beyond the reach of human eye, the insect can but just rise above the surface of the earth, and that at the close of day.

17 The old copy reads brabe; the uncommon word brabe not being familiar to the compositor. A brabe is a contemptuous or proud look, word, or gesture; quasi, a brave.

Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk :
Such gain the cap of him, that makes him fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd ; no life to ours.¹

Gui. Out of your proof you speak : we, poor unfedg'd,
Have never wing'd from view o' the nest ; nor know
not

What air's from home. Haply, this life is best,
If quiet life be best ; sweeter to you,
That have a sharper known : well corresponding
With your stiff age ; but, unto us, it is
A cell of ignorance ; travelling a-bed ;
A prison for a debtor, that not dares
To stride a limit.²

Arr. What should we speak of,³
When we are old as you ? when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how,
In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away ? We have seen nothing :
We are beastly ; subtle as the fox, for prey ;
Like warlike as the wolf, for what we eat :
Our valour is, to chase what flies ; our cage
We make a quire, as doth the prison bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak !⁴
Did you but know the city's usuries,
And felt them knowingly : the art o' the court,
As hard to leave, as keep ; whose top to climb
Is certain falling, or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling : the toil of the war,
A pain than only seems to seek out danger
I' the name of fame, and honour ; which dies i' the search ;

And hath as oft a slanderous epitaph,
As record of fair act ; nay, many times,
Doth ill deserve by doing well ; what's worse,
Must court'sy at the censure :—O, boys, this story
The world may read in me : My body's mark'd
With Roman swords : and my report was once
First with the best of note : Cymbeline lov'd me ;
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off : Then was I as a tree,
Whose boughs did bend with fruit : but in one
night,

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather.⁵

Gui. Uncertain favour !
Bel. My fault being nothing, (as I have told you oft,)

But that two villains, whose false oaths prevail'd
Before my perfect honour, swore to Cymbeline,
I was confederate with the Romans : so,
Follow'd my banishment ; and, this twenty years,
This rock, and these demesnes, have been my
world :

Where I have liv'd at honest freedom ; paid
More pious debts to heaven, than in all
The fore-end of my time.—But, up to the mountains ;
This is not hunters' language :—He, that strikes
The venison first, shall be the lord o' the feast ;
To him the other two shall minister ;
And we will fear no poison, which attends

In place of greater state.⁶ I'll meet you in the valleys. [Exeunt GUI. and ARR.]

How hard it is, to hide the sparks of nature !
These boys know little, they are sons to the king ;
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive.
They think, they are mine : and, though train'd up thus meanly

I' the cave, wherein they bow, their thoughts do hit
The roofs of palaces ; and nature prompts them,
In simple and low things, to prince it, much
Beyond the trick of others. This Polydore,
The heir of Cymbeline and Britain, whom
The king his father call'd Guiderius,—Jove !
When on my three-foot stool I sit, and tell
The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out Into my story : say,—Thus mine enemy fell ;
And thus I set my foot on his neck ; even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats,
Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture
That acts my words. The younger brother, Cadwal, (Once Arviragus,) in as like a figure,
Strikes life into my speech, and shows much more
His own conceiving. Hark ! the game is rous'd !—
O, Cymbeline ! heaven, and my conscience, knows,
Thou didst unjustly banish me : whereon,
At three, and two years old, I stole these babes ;⁷
Thinking to bar thee of succession, as Thou ref'st me of my lands. Euriphile, Thou wast their nurse ; they took thee for their mother,

And every day do honour to her grave.⁸
Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call'd,
They take for natural father. The game is up.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Near Milford Haven. Enter PISANIO and IMOGEN.

Imo. Thou told'st me, when we came from horse,
the place

Was near at hand : Ne'er long'd my mother so
To see me first, as I have now :—Pisanio ! Man !
Where is Posthumus ?⁹ What is in thy mind,
That makes thee stare thus ? Wherefore breaks that sigh

From the inward of thee ? One, but painted thus,
Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd
Beyond self-explication : Put thyself
Into a haviour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my staid senses. What's the matter ?
Why tender'st thou that paper to me, with
A look untender ? If it be summer news,
Smile to't before : if winterly, thou need'st
But keep that countenance still.—My husband's hand !

That drug-damn'd Italy hath out-craft'd him ;
And he's at some hard point.—Speak, man ; thy
tongue

May take off some extremity, which to read
Would be even mortal to me.

Pis. Please you, read ;
And you shall find me, wretched man, a thing
The most disdain'd of fortune.

Imo. [Reads.] *Thy mistress, Pisanio, hath play'd
the strumpet in my bed ; the testimonies whereof lie bleeding in me. I speak not out of weak surmises ;*

has done to the young princes, whom he has robbed of a kingdom, only to rob their father of heirs. The latter part of this soliloquy is very inartificial, there being no particular reason why Belarius should now tell to him self what he could not know better by telling it.—John son.

⁸ I. e. to the grave of Euriphile ; or to the grave of their mother, as they supposed it to be. The grammatical construction requires that the poet should have written 'to thy grave ;' but we have frequent instances of this change of persons, not only in Shakespeare, but in all the writings of his age.

⁹ The true pronunciation of Greek and Latin names was not much regarded by the writers of Shakespeare's age. The poet has, however, differed from himself, and given the true pronunciation when the name first occurs, and in one other place :—

'To his protection ; call him Posthumus.'
'Struck the maintop ! O, Posthumus ! alas !

² To stride a limit is to overpass his bound.

³ This dread of an old age unsupplied with matter for discourse and meditation, is a sentiment natural and noble. No state can be more destitute than that of him, who, when the delights of sense forsake him, has no pleasures of the mind.—Johnson.

⁴ Otway seems to have taken many hints for the conversation which passes between Acato and his sons from the scene before us.

⁵ Thus in Timon of Athens :—

'That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves
Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush
Fallen from their boughs, and left me, open, bare,
For every storm that blows.'

⁶ — nulla aconita, bibuntur

Ficilibus ; tunc illa time, cum pocula sumes
Gemmata, et lato Setinum ardebit in auro.³

Sub.

⁷ Shakespeare seems to intend Belarius for a good character, yet he makes him forget the injury which he from proof as strong as my grief, and as certain as I expect my revenge. That part, thou, Pisanio, must act for me, if thy faith be not tainted with the breach of hers. Let thine own hands take away her life: I shall give thee opportunities at Milford Haven: she hath my letter for the purpose; Where, if thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my sword? the paper
Hath cut her throat already.—No, 'tis slander; Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose
tongue

Outvenoms all the worms¹ of Nile; whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states,² Maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave
'This viperous slander enters.—What cheer, madam?

Imo. False to his bed! What is it, to be false?
To lie in watch there, and to think on him?
To weep 'twixt clock and clock? if sleep charge
nature,
To break it with a fearful dream of him,
And cry myself awake? that's false to his bed?
Is it?

Pis. Alas, good lady!

Imo. I false? Thy conscience witness:—Iachimo,
Thou didst accuse him of incontinency;
Thou then look'dst like a villain; now, methinks,
Thy favour's good enough.—Some jay of Italy,
Whose mother was her painting,³ hath betray'd
him:

Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion;
And, for I am richer than to hang by the walls,⁴
I must be ripp'd:—to pieces with me!—O,
Men's vows are women's traitors! All good seeming,
By thy revolt, O, husband, shall be thought
Put on for villany; not born, where't grows;
But worn, a bait for ladies.

Pis. Good madam, hear me.

Imo. True honest men being heard, like false
Æneas,
Were, in his time, thought false: and Sinon's weeping

Did scandal many a holy tear: took pity
From most true wretchedness: So, thou, Posthumus,

Wilt lay the heaven on all proper men;⁵
Goodly, and gallant, shall be false and perjur'd,
From thy great fail.—Come, fellow, be thou honest:
Do thou thy master's bidding: when thou seest
him,

¹ It has already been observed that worm was the general name for all the serpent kind. See Antony and Cleopatra, Act v. Sc. 2

² I. e. persons of the highest rank.

³ Putta, in Italian, signifies both a jay and a whore. We have the word again in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—'Teach him to know turtles from jays.' Some jay of Italy, whose mother was her painting, i. e. made by art; the creature not of nature, but of painting. In this sense painting may be said to be her mother. Steevens met with a similar phrase in some old play:—'A parcel of concealed feather-caps, whose fathers were their garments.'

⁴ That is, to be hung up as useless among the neglected contents of a wardrobe. So in Measure for Measure:—

'That have, like unscour'd armour, hung by the wall.' Clothes were not formerly, as at present, made of slight materials, were not kept in drawers, or given away as soon as lapse of time or change of fashion had impaired their value. On the contrary, they were hung up on wooden pegs, in a room appropriated to the sole purpose of receiving them; and though such cast off things as were composed of rich substances were occasionally ripped for domestic uses, articles of inferior quality were suffered to hang by the walls till age and moths had destroyed what pride would not permit to be worn by servants or poor relations:—

'Comitem horridulum trita donare lacerna,' seems not to have been customary among our ancestors. When Queen Elizabeth died, she was found to have left

A little witness my obedience: Look!
I draw the sword myself: take it; and hit
The innocent mansion of my love, my heart:
Fear not: 'tis empty of all things, but grief:
Thy master is not there; who was, indeed,
The riches of it; Do his bidding; strike.
Thou may'st be valiant in a better cause;
But now thou seem'st a coward.

Pis. Hence, vile instrument!
Thou shalt not damn my hand.

Imo. Why, I must die;
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No servant of thy master's: Against self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine,
That cravens my weak hand.⁶ Come, here's my
heart;

Something's afore't: Soft, soft; we'll no defence;
Obedient as the scabbard.—What is here?
The scriptures⁷ of the loyal Leonatus,
All turn'd to heresy? Away, away,
Corrupters of my faith! you shall no more
Be stomachers to my heart! Thus may poor fools Believe false teachers: Though those that are betray'd

Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor
Stands in worse case of woe.
And thou, Posthumus, thou that didst set up
My disobedience 'gainst the king my father,
And make me put into contempt the suits
Of princely fellows,⁸ shalt hereafter find
It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rareness: and I grieve myself
To think, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her
That now thou tir'st⁹ on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me.—Prythee, despatch:
The lamb entreats the butcher: Where's thy knife?
Thou art too slow to do thy master's bidding,
When I desire it too.

Pis. O, gracious lady,
Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink.

Imo. Do't, and to bed then.
Pis. I'll wake mine eyeballs blind first.¹⁰

Imo. Wherefore then
Didst undertake it? Why hast thou abus'd
So many miles with a pretence? this place?
Mine action, and thine own? our horses' labour?
The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court,
For my being absent; whereunto I never Purpose return? Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent,¹¹ when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
The elected deer before thee?

above three thousand dresses behind her. Steevens once saw one of these repositories at an ancient mansion in Suffolk, which (thanks to a succession of old maids!) had been preserved with superstitious reverence for almost a century and a half.

⁵ 'Wilt lay the heaven on all proper men.'

The heaven is, in Scripture phraseology, 'the whole wickedness of our sinful nature.' See I Corinthians, v. 6, 7, 8. 'Thy failure, Posthumus, will lay falsehood to the charge of men without guile: make all suspected.'

⁶ 'That makes me afraid to put an end to my own life.' Hamlet exclaims:—

'O, that the everlasting had not fix'd
His canon 'gainst self-slaughter.'

⁷ Shakspeare here means Leonatus's letters, but there is an opposition intended between scripture, in its common signification, and heresy.

⁸ Fellows for equals; of those of the same princely rank with myself.

⁹ '—when thou shalt be disedg'd by her
That now thou tir'st on.'

It is probable that the first, as well as the last, of these metaphorical expressions is from falconry. A bird of prey may be said to be disedged when the keenness of its appetite is taken away by tiring, or feeding, upon some object given to it for that purpose. Thus in Hamlet:—

'Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning to take off mine edge.'

¹⁰ Blind, which is not in the old copy, was supplied by Hamner.

¹¹ To have thy bow unbent, alluding to a hunter. So

Pis. But to win time
To close so bad employment : in the which I have consider'd of a course ; Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Imo. Talk thy tongue weary ; speak :
I have heard, I am a strumpet : and mine ear,
Therein false struck, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent to bottom that. But speak.

Pis. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.

Imo. Most like ;
Bringing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so, neither :
But if I were as wise as honest, then
My purpose would prove well. It cannot be,
But that my master is abus'd :
Some villain, ay, and singular in his art
Hath done you both this cursed injury.

Imo. Some Roman courtesan.

Pis. No, on my life
I'll give but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody sign of it ; for 'tis commanded
I should do so : You shall be miss'd at court,
And that will well confirm it.

Imo. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while ? Where bide ? How live ?
Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my husband ?

Pis. If you'll back to the court,—

Imo. No court, no father ; nor no more ado
With that harsh, noble, simple, nothing :¹
That Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege.

Pis. If not at court,
Then not in Britain must you bide.

Imo. Where then ?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines ?² Day, night,
Are they not but in Britain ? I' the world's volume
Our Britain seems as of it, but not in it ;
In a great pool, a swan's nest ; Pr'ythee, think There's livers out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad
You think of other place. The ambassador
Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford Haven
To-morrow : Now, if you could wear a mind
Dark as your fortune is ;³ and but disguise
That, which, to appear itself, must not yet be,
But by self-danger ; you should tread a course Pretty, and full of view :⁴ yea, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus : so nigh, at least,
That though his actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your ear,
As truly as he moves.

Imo. O, for such means !
Though peril to my modesty, not death on't,
I would adventure.

in one of Shakespeare's poems in The Passionate Pilgrim, 1599 :—

¹ When as thine eye hath chose the dame

And stalk'd the deer that thou shouldst strike.

² This line requires some word of two syllables to complete the measure. Steevens proposed to read ;—

³ 'With that harsh, noble, simple, nothing, Cloten ;
That Cloten,' &c.

⁴ The poet may have had in his mind a passage in Livy's Euphues, which he has imitated in King Richard II.

⁵ To wear a dark mind is to carry a mind impenetrable to the search of others. Darkness, applied to the mind, is secrecy ; applied to the fortune, is obscurity. The next lines are obscure. 'You must (says Pisanio) disguise that greatness which, to appear hereafter in its proper form, cannot yet appear without great danger to itself.'

⁶ Full of view appears to mean of ample prospect, affording a complete view of circumstances which it is your interest to know. Thus in Pericles, 'Full of face' appears to signify 'amply beautiful' ; and Duncan assures Banquo that he will labour to make him 'full of growing,' i. e. of 'ample growth.'

⁷ So in King Henry IV. Part I

⁸ 'A weasel' hath not such a deal of spleen

As you are toss'd with.

This character of the weasel is not mentioned by naturalists. Weasels were formerly, it appears, kept in

Pis. Well, then, here's the point :

You must forget to be a woman ; change
Command into obedience ; fear and niceness,
(The handmaids of all women, or, more truly,
Woman its pretty self.) into a waggish courage ;
Ready in gibes, quick-answer'd, saucy, and
As quarrelous as the weasel :⁵ nay, you must Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,
Exposing it, (but, O, the harder heart !
Alack no remedy !) to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Titan⁶ and forget
Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Juno angry.

Imo. Nay, be brief :

I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like one,
Fore-thinking this, I have already fit
('Tis in my cloak-bag) doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them : Would you, in their serving,
And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season, fore noble Lucius
Present yourself, desire his service, tell him Wherein you are happy, (which you'll make him

know,
If that his head have ear in music,) doubtless,
With joy he will embrace you ; for he's honourable,
And, doubting that, most holy. Your means abroad
You have me,⁸ rich ; and I will never fail
Beginning, nor supplement.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The gods will diet me with.⁹ Pr'ythee, away :
There's more to be consider'd ; but we'll even¹⁰
All that good time will give us : This attempt
I am soldier to,¹¹ and will abide it with
A prince's courage. Away, I pr'ythee.

Pis. Well, madam, we must take a short farewell .
Lest, being miss'd, I be suspected of
Your carriage from the court. My noble mistress,
Here is a box ; I had it from the queen
What's in't is precious ; if you are sick at sea,
Or stomach-quail'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper.—To some shade,
And fit you to your manhood :—May the gods
Direct you to the best !

Imo. Amen : I thank thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.— Enter CYMBELINE, Queen, CLOTEN, LUCIUS, and Lords.

Cym. Thus far ; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal sir.
My emperor hath wrote ; I must from hence ;
And am right sorry, that I must report ye
My master's enemy.

houses instead of cats, for the purpose of killing vermin. Phædrus notices this their feline office in the first and fourth fables of his fourth book. The poet, no doubt, speaks from observation ; while a youth he would have frequent opportunities to ascertain their disposition. Perhaps this note requires the apology which Steevens has affixed to it :—' Rivola hæc fortassis cupiunt et nimis leve esse videantur sed curiositas nihil recusat.'—Vopiscus in Vita Aureliani, c. x.

⁶ Thus in Othello :—

⁷ 'The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets.'

So in Sidney's Arcadia, lib. iii. 'And beautiful might have been if they had not suffered greedy Phæbus over often and hard to kiss them.'

⁸ i. e. wherein you are accomplished.

⁹ 'As for your subsistence abroad, you may rely on me.'

¹⁰ Steevens has a note on this passage no less disgusting than absurd, making the pure Imogen allude to the spare regimen prescribed in some diseases. The interpretation was at once gross and erroneous. When Iago talks of dieting his revenge, he certainly does not mean putting it on a spare diet. This, and a note on a former passage of this play by Mr. Whalley, which could only have been the offspring of impure imaginations, were justly stigmatized and degraded by the late Mr. Baskwell, at the suggestion of Mr. Douce.

¹¹ We'll make our work even with our time ; we'll do what time will allow.

¹² I. e. equal to, or have ability for it.

Cym. Our subjects, sir,
Will not endure his yoke : and for ourself
To show less sovereignty than they, must needs
Appear unkinglike.

Luc. So, sir, I desire of you
A conduct over land, to Milford Haven.—
Madam, all joy befall your grace, and you !¹

Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office :
The due of honour in no point omit :—
So, farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord.
Clo. Receive it friendly : but from this time forth
I wear it as your enemy.

Luc. Sir, the event
Is yet to name the winner ; Fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my lords,

Till he have cross'd the Severn.—Happiness !

[Exeunt LUCIUS, and LORDS.]
Queen. He goes hence frowning : but it honours us,
That we have given him cause.

Clo. 'Tis all the better ;
Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor
How it goes here. It fits us, therefore, ripely,
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness :
The powers that he already hath in Gallia
Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves
His war for Britain.

Queen. 'Tis not sleepy business ;
But must be look'd to speedily, and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus,
Hath made us forward. But, my gentle queen,
Where is our daughter ? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us, hath tender'd
The duty of the day : She looks us like
A thing more made of malice, than of duty :
We have noted it.—Call her before us ; for
We have been too slight in sunderance.

[Exit an Attendant.]
Queen. Royal sir,
Since the exile of Posthumus, most retir'd
Hath her life been ; the cure whereof, my lord,
'Tis time must do. 'Beseech your majesty,
Forbear sharp speeches to her : she's a lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are strokes,
And strokes death to her.

Re-enter an Attendant.

Cym. Where is she, sir ? How Can her contempt be answer'd ?

Attendant. Please you, sir,
Her chambers are all lock'd ; and there's no answer
That will be given to loud'st of noise we make.

Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit her,
She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close ;
Where'to constrain'd by her infirmity,
She should that duty leave unpaid to you,
Which daily she was bound to proffer : this
She wish'd me to make known ; but our great court
Made me to blame in memory.

Cym. Her doors lock'd ?
Not seen of late ? Grant, heavens, that which I Fear'd prove false !

[Exit.]
Queen. Son, I say, follow the king.
Clo. That man of hers, Pisanio, her old servant,
I have not seen these two days.

Queen. Go, look after.—
[Exit CLOTEN.]

Pisanio, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus !—
He hath a drug of mine : I pray, his absence
Proceed by swallowing that ; for he believes
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone ? Haply, despair hath seized her ;

Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her desir'd Posthumus : Gone she is
To death, or to dishonour ; and my end
Can make good use of either : She being down,
I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter CLOTEN.

How now, my son ?

Clo. 'Tis certain, she is fled ;
Go in, and cheer the king ; he rages ; none
Dare come about him.

Queen. All the better ; May
This night forestall him of the coming day !²

[Exit QUEEN.]
Clo. I love and hate her ; for she's fair and royal ;
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite
Than lady, ladies, woman ;³ from every one
The best she hath, and she, of all compounded, Outsells them all : I love her therefore ; But,
Disdaining me, and throwing favours on
The low Posthumus, slanders so her judgment,
That what's else rare, is chok'd ; and, in that point,
I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed,
To be reveng'd upon her. For, when fools

Enter PISANIO.

Shall—Who is here ? What ! are you packing, sirrah ?

Come hither : Ah, you precious pander ! Villain,
Where is thy lady ? In a word ; or else
Thou art straightway with the fiends.

Pis. O, good my lord !
Clo. Where is thy lady ? or, by Jupiter
I will not ask again. Close villain,
I'll have this secret from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus ?
From whose so many weights of baseness cannot
A dram of worth be drawn.

Pis. Alas, my lord,
How can she be with him ? When was she miss'd ?
He is in Rome.

Clo. Where is she, sir ? Come nearer ;
No further halting : satisfy me home,
What is become of her ?

Pis. O, my all-worthy lord !
Clo. All-worthy villain !

Discover where thy mistress is, at once,
At the next word,—No more of worthy lord,— Speak, or thy silence on the instant is Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pis. Then, sir,
This paper is the history of my knowledge
Touching her flight.

[Presenting a Letter.]
Clo. Let's see't :—I will pursue her
Even to Augustus' throne.

Pis. Or this, or perish.⁴
She's far enough ; and what he learns by this, } Aside.
May prove his travel, not her danger.

Clo. Humph !
Pis. I'll write to my lord she's dead. O, Imogen,
Safe may'st thou wander, safe return again !

[Aside.]

Clo. Sirrah, is this letter true ?

Pis. Sir, as I think.

Clo. It is Posthumus' hand ; I know't.—Sirrah, if thou would'st not be a villain, but do me true service ; undergo those employments, wherein I should have cause to use thee, with a serious industry,—that is, what villany soe'er I bid thee do, to perform it directly and truly,—I would think thee an honest man : thou should'st neither want my means for thy relief, nor my voice for thy preferment.

Pis. Well, my good lord.

Clo. Wilt thou serve me ? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the bare fortune

4 Than any lady, than all ladies, than all woman-kind. There is a similar passage in All's Well that Ends Well, Act II. Sc. 3 :—

'To any count ; to all counts ; to what is man.'
5 By these words it is probable Pisanio means 'I must either practise this deceit upon Cloten or perish by his fury.' Dr. Johnson thought the words should be said to Cloten.

1 We should apparently read 'his grace and you,' or 'your grace and yours.'

2 Fear must be pronounced as a disyllable to complete the measure.

3 I. e. may his grief this night prevent him from ever seeing another day, by anticipated and premature destruction. Thus in Milton's Comus :—

'Perhaps forestalling ought prevented them.'

of that beggar Posthumus, thou canst not in the course of gratitude but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serve me?

Pis. Sir, I will.

Clo. Give me thy hand, here's my purse. Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?

Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodging, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress.

Clo. The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither; let it be thy first service; go.

Pis. I shall, my lord.

[Exit.]

Clo. Meet thee at Milford Haven:—I forgot to ask him one thing; I'll remember't anon:—Even there, thou villain, Posthumus, will I kill thee.—I would these garments were come. She said upon a time, (the bitterness of it I now belch from my heart,) that she held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that suit upon my back, will I ravish her: First kill him, and in her eyes; there shall she see my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body,—and when my lust hath dined, (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the clothes that she so praised,) to the court I'll knock her back, foot her home again. She hath despised me rejoicingly, and I'll be merry in my revenge.

Re-enter PISANIO, with the Clothes.

Be those the garments?

Pis. Ay, my noble lord.

Clo. How long is't since she went to Milford Haven?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet.

Clo. Bring this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee: the third is, that thou shalt be a voluntary mute to my design. Be but duteous, and true preferment shall tender itself to thee.—My revenge is now at Milford; 'Would, I had wings to follow it!—Come, and be true.

[Exit.]

Pis. Thou bidd'st me to my loss: for, true to thee, Were to prove false, which I will never be, To him that is most true.—To Milford go, And find not her whom thou pursu'st. Flow, flow, You heavenly blessings, on her! This fool's speed Be cross'd with slowness; labour be his meed!

[Exit.]

SCENE VI. Before the Cave of Belarius. Enter IMOGEN, in Boy's Clothes.

Imo. I see, a man's life is a tedious one: I have tir'd myself; and for two nights together Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick, But that my resolution helps me.—Milford, When from the mountain-top Pisanio show'd thee, Thou wast within a ken: O, Jove! I think, Foundations fly the wretched:² such, I mean, Where they should be reliev'd. Two beggars told me,

I could not miss my way: Will poor folks lie, That have afflictions on them; knowing 'tis A punishment, or trial? Yes; no wonder, When rich ones scarce tell true: To lapse in fulness Is sorer,³ than to lie for need; and falsehood

1 Pisanio, notwithstanding his master's letter commanding the murder of Imogen, considers him as true, supposing, as he has already said to her, that Posthumus was abused by some villain equally an enemy to them both.

2 Thus in the fifth Æneid:—

'Italian sequitur fugientem.'

3 i.e. is a greater or heavier crime.

4 Civil is here civilized, as opposed to savage, wild, rude, or uncivilized. 'If any one dwell here.'

5 A woodman in its common acceptance, as here, signifies a hunter. So in The Rape of Lucrece:—

'He is no woodman that doth bend his bow

Against a poor unseasonable doe.'

6 i.e. our compact.

7 Restie, which Stevens unwarrantably changed to

Is worse in kings, than beggars.—My dear lord! Thou art one of the false ones: Now I think on thee. My hunger's gone; but even before, I was At point to sink for food.—But what is this? Here is a path to it: 'Tis some savage hold: I were best not call; I dare not call; yet famine, Ere clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it valiant. Plenty, and peace, breeds cowards; hardness ever Of hardness is mother.—Ho! who's here? If any thing that's civil,⁴ speak; if savage, Take, or lend.—Ho!—No answer? then I'll enter. Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy But fear the sword like me, he'll scarcely look on't. Such a foe, good heavens! [She goes into the Cave.]

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. You, Polydore, have prov'd best woodman,⁵ and

Are master of the feast: Cadwal, and I, Will play the cook and servant; 'tis our match. The sweat of industry would dry, and die, But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs Will make what's homely, savoury: Weariness Can snore upon the flint, when restie⁶ sloth Finds the down pillow hard.—Now, peace be here, Poor house, that keep'st thyself!

Gui.

I am thoroughly weary.

Arv. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite.

Gui. There is cold meat i' the cave; we'll browse on that,

Whilst what we have kill'd be cook'd.

Bel.

Stay; come not in:

[Looking in.]

But that it eats our victuals, I should think

Here were a fairy.

Gui.

What's the matter, sir?

Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not, An earthly paragon!—Behold divineness No elder than a boy!

Enter IMOGEN.

Imo. Good masters, harm me not: Before I enter'd here, I call'd: and thought To have begg'd, or bought, what I have took: Good troth, I have stolen nought; nor would not, though I had found Gold strew'd i' the floor.⁸ Here's money for my meat:

I would have left it on the board, so soon

As I had made my meal; and parted

With prayers for the provider.

Gui.

Money, youth?

Arv. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt:

As 'tis no better reckon'd, but of those

Who worship dirty gods.

Imo.

I see, you are angry:

Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should

Have died, had I not made it.

Bel.

Whither bound?

Imo. To Milford Haven.

Bel.

What is your name?

Imo. Fidele, sir: I have a kinsman, who Is bound for Italy; he embark'd at Milford; To whom being going, almost spent with hunger, I am fallen in⁹ this offence.

Bel.

Pr'ythee, fair youth,

Think us no churls; nor measure our good minds

By this rude place we live in. Well encounter'd!

restie, signifies here dull, heavy, as it is explained in Bullokar's Expositor, 1616. So Milton uses it in his Eiconoclastes, sec. 24, 'The master is too resty, or too rich, to say his own prayers, or to bless his own table.' What between Malone's 'resty, runk, mouldy,' and Stevens's 'restive, stubborn, refractory,' the reader is misled and the passage left unexplained; or what is worse, explained erroneously in all the variorum editions.

8 Hammer altered this to 'o'the floor,' but unnecessarily—in was frequently used for on in Shakespeare's time, as in the Lord's Prayer, 'Thy will be done in earth.'

9 In for into, as in Othello:—

'Fallen in the practice of a cursed slave'

'Tis almost night: you shall have better cheer Ere you depart; and thanks, to stay and eat it.— Boys, bid him welcome.

Gui. Were you a woman, youth, I should woo hard, but be your groom.—In honesty, I bid for you, as I'd buy.

Arv. I'll make't my comfort, He is a man; I'll love him as my brother:— And such a welcome as I'd give to him, After long absence, such is yours:—Most welcome! Be sprightly, for you fall 'mongst friends.

Imo. 'Mongst friends, If brothers!—'Would, it had been so, } that they }
Had been my father's sons! then had my } Aside.
prize! }
Been less; and so more equal ballasting }
To thee, Posthumus. }

Bel. He wrings² at some distress.

Gui. 'Would, I could free't!

Arv. Or I; whate'er it be, What pain it cost, what danger! Gods!

Bel. Hark, boys. [Whispering.]

Imo. Great men, That had a court no bigger than this cave, That did attend themselves, and had the virtue Which their own conscience sea'd them, (laying by That nothing gift of differing³ multitudes,) Could not out-peer these twain. Pardon me, gods! I'd change my sex to be companion with them, Since Leonatus false.⁴

Bel. It shall be so: Boys, we'll go dress our hunt.—Fair youth, come in: Discourse is heavy, fasting; when we have sup'd, We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story, So far as thou wilt speak it.

Gui. Pray draw near.

Arv. The night to the owl, the morn to the lark, less welcome.

Imo. Thanks, sir.

Arv. I pray, draw near. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Rome. Enter Two Senators and Tribunes.

1 Sen. This is the tenor of the emperor's writ; That since the common men are now in action 'Gainst the Pannonians and Dalmatians; And that the legions now in Gallia are Full weak to undertake our wars against The fallen off Britons; that we do incite The gentry to this business: He creates Lucius pro-consul: and to you, the tribunes, For this immediate levy, he commands His absolute commission.⁵ Long live Cæsar!

Tri. Is Lucius general of the forces?

2 Sen. Ay.

Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?

1 Sen. With those legions Which I have spoke of, whereunto your levy Must be suppliant: The words of your commission Will tie you to the numbers, and the time Of their despatch.

Tri. We will discharge our duty. [Exeunt.]

1 I have elsewhere observed that prize, prise, and price were confounded, or used indiscriminately by our ancestors. Indeed it is not now uncommon at this day, as Malone observes, to hear persons above the vulgar confound the words, and talk of high-priz'd and low-priz'd goods. Prize here is evidently used for value, estimation. The reader who wishes to see how the words were formerly confounded, may consult Barct's Alvearie, in v. price.

2 To wring is to writhe. So in Much Ado about Nothing, Act v. Sc. 1:—

'To those that wring under the load of sorrow.'

3 Differing multitudes are varying or wavering multitudes. So in the Induction to the Second Part of King Henry VI.:—

'The still discordant wavering multitude.'

4 Malone says, 'As Shakspeare has used in other places Menelaus' tent, and thy mistress' ear for 'Menelaus tent' and 'thy mistress's ear': it is probable

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The Forest, near the Cave. Enter CLOTEN.

Clo. I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have mapped it truly. How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistress, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather, (saving reverence of the word,) for 'tis said, a woman's fitness comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman. I dare speak it to myself, (for it is not vain-glory for a man and his glass to confer; in his own chamber, I mean,) the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less young, more strong, not beneath him in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in birth, alike conversant in general services, and more remarkable in single oppositions: yet this imperseverant thing loves him in my despite. What mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which now is growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour be off; thy mistress enforced; thy garments cut to pieces before thy face:⁶ and all this done, spurn her home to her father: who may, haply, be a little angry for my so rough usage: but my mother, having power of his testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse is tied up safe: On, sword, and to a sore purpose! Fortune, put them into my hand! This is the very description of their meeting-place: and the fellow dares not deceive me. [Exit.]

SCENE II. Before the Cave. Enter, from the Cave, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, and IMOGEN.

Bel. You are not well: [To IMOGEN.] remain here in the cave:

We'll come to you after hunting.

Arv. Brother, stay here: [To IMOGEN.]

Are we not brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be; But clay and clay differs in dignity, Whose dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Gui. Go you to hunting. I'll abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not; yet I am not well:

But not so citizen a wanton, as To seem to die, ere sick: So please you leave me; Stick to your journal course: the breach of custom Is breach of all.⁷ I am ill; but your being by me Cannot amend me: Society is no comfort To one not sociable: I'm not very sick, Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me here: I'll rob none but myself; and let me die, Stealing so poorly.

Gui. I love thee; I have spoke it: How much the quantity, the weight as much, As I do love my father.

Bel. What? how? how?

Arv. If it be sin to say so, sir, I yoke me that he used 'since Leonatus' false' for 'since Leonatus is false.' Steevens doubts this, and says that the poet may have written 'Since Leonate is false,' as he calls Enobarbus, Enobarbe; and Prospero, Prosper, in other places.

5 He commands the commission to be given you. So, we say, I ordered the materials to the workmen.

6 I. e. cause.

7 'In single combat.' So in King Henry IV. Part I. Act I. Sc. 3:—

'In single opposition, hand to hand, He did confound the best part of an hour In changing hardiment with great Glendower.'

An opposite, in the language of Shakspeare's age, was the common phrase for an antagonist.

Imperseverant probably means no more than perseverant, like imbosomed, impassioned, immasked.

8 Warburton thought we should read, 'before her face.' Malone says, that Shakspeare may have intentionally given this absurd and brutal language to Cloten. The Clown in The Winter's Tale says, 'if thou't see a thing to talk of after thou art dead.'

9 'Keep your daily course uninterrupted; if the stated plan of life is once broken, nothing follows but confusion.' Johnson.

In my good brother's fault: I know not why I love this youth; and I have heard you say, Love's reason's without reason; the bier at door, And a demand who is't shall die, I'd say, My father, not this youth.

Bel. O, noble strain! [Aside. O, worthiness of nature! breed of greatness! Cowards father cowards, and base things sire base: Nature hath meal, and bran; contempt, and grace. I am not their father: yet who this should be, Doth miracle itself, lov'd before me.— 'Tis the ninth hour o' the morn.

Arv. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish ye sport.

Arv. You health.—So please you, sir,

Imo. [Aside.] These are kind creatures. Gods, what lies I have heard!

Our courtiers say, all's savage, but at court: Experience, O, thou disprov'st report!

The imperious¹ seas breed monsters; for the dish, Poor tributary rivers as sweet fish.

I am sick still; heart-sick:—Pisanio, I'll now taste of thy drug.

Gui. I could not stir him; He said, he was gentle,² but unfortunate; Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arv. Thus did he answer me: yet said, hereafter I might know more.

Bel. To the field, to the field:— We'll leave you for this time; go in, and rest.

Arv. We'll not be long away.

Bel. Pray, be not sick, For you must be our housewife.

Imo. Well, or ill, I am bound to you.

Bel. And shalt be ever.

[Exit IMOGEN. This youth, howe'er distress'd, appears, he hath had Good ancestors.

Arv. How angel-like he sings!

Gui. But his neat cookery! He cut our roots in characters;

And sauc'd our broths, as Juno had been sick, And he her dieter.

Arv. Nobly he yokes A smiling with a sigh; as if the sigh Was that it was, for not being such a smile; The smile mocking the sigh, that it would fly From so divine a temple, to commix With winds that sailors rail at.

Gui. I do note, That grief and patience, rooted in him both, Mingle their spurs³ together.

Arv. Grow, patience! And let the stinking elder, grief, untwine His perishing root, with the increasing vine!⁴

Bel. It is great morning.⁵ Come; away.—Who's there?

Enter CLOTEN.

Clot. I cannot find those runagates; that villain Hath mock'd me: I am faint.

Bel. Those runagates! Means he not us? I partly know him; 'tis Cloten, the son o' the queen. I fear some ambush. I saw him not these many years, and yet I know 'tis he:—We are held as outlaws:—Hence.

¹ Here again Malone asserts that 'imperious was used by Shakspeare for imperial.' This is absurd enough when we look at the context: what has imperial to do with seas? Imperious has here its usual meaning of proud, haughty. See Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. Sc. 3.

² 'I could not move him to tell his story.' Gentle is of a gentle race or rank, well born.

³ Spurs are the longest and largest leading roots of trees. We have the word again in The Tempest:—

—The strong bas'd promontory
Have I made shake, and by the spurs
Pluck'd up the pine and cedar.

⁴ How much difficulty has been made to appear in this simple figurative passage! which to me appears sufficiently intelligible without a note. 'Let patience grow, and let the stinking elder, grief, untwine his

Gui. He is but one: You and my brother search What companies are near: pray you away; Let me alone with him.

[Exeunt BELARIUS and ARVIRAGUS.

Clot. Soft! What are you That fly me thus? some villain mountaineers? I have heard of such. What slave art thou?

Gui. A thing More slavish did I ne'er, than answering A slave, without a knock.⁶

Clot. Thou art a robber, A law-breaker, a villain: Yield thee, thief.

Gui. To who? to thee? What art thou? Have not I

An arm as big as thine? a heart as big? Thy words, I grant, are bigger; for I wear not My dagger in my mouth.⁷ Say, what thou art; Why I should yield to thee?

Clot. Thou villain base, Know'st me not by my clothes?

Gui. No, nor thy tailor, rascal, Who is thy grandfather; he made those clothes, Which, as it seems, make thee.⁸

Clot. Thou precious varlet, My tailor made them not.

Gui. Hence, then, and thank The man that gave them thee. Thou art some fool; I am loath to beat thee.

Clot. Thou injurious thief, Hear but my name, and tremble.

Gui. What's thy name?

Clot. Cloten, thou villain.

Gui. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name, I cannot tremble at it; were't toad, or adder, spider, 'Twould move me sooner.

Clot. To thy further fear, Nay, to thy mere confusion, thou shalt know I'm son to the queen.

Gui. I'm sorry for't; not seeming So worthy as thy birth.

Clot. Art not afraid?

Gui. Those that I reverence, those I fear; the wise:

At fools I laugh, not fear them.

Clot. Die the death: When I have slain thee with my proper hand, I'll follow those that even now fled hence, And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads: Yield, rustic mountaineer. [Exeunt, fighting.

Enter BELARIUS and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. No company's abroad.

Arv. None in the world: You did mistake him, sure.

Bel. I cannot tell: Long is it since I saw him, But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice, And burst of speaking, were as his: I am absolute, 'Twas very Cloten.

Arv. In this place we left them: I wish my brother make good time with him, You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarce made up, I mean, to man, he had not apprehension Of roaring terrors; for defect of judgment Is oft the cure⁹ of fear: But see, thy brother.

perishing root from those of the increasing vine, patience.¹ I have already observed, that with, from, and by, are almost always convertible words.

⁵ The same phrase occurs in Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. Sc. 3. It is a Gallicism:—'Il est grand matin.'

⁶ i. e. than answering that abusive word slave.

⁷ So in Solymau and Perseda, 1599:—

'I fight not with my tongue; is this my oratrix.'

Macduff says to Macbeth:—

—I have no words; My voice is in my sword.

⁸ See a note on a similar passage in a former scene, p. 324, Act iii. Sc. 4.

⁹ The old copy reads, 'Is oft the cause of fear;' but this cannot be right: Belarius is assigning a reason for Cloten's fool-hardy desperation, not accounting for his cowardice. The emendation adopted is Hanmer's.

Re-enter GUIDERIUS, with CLOTEN's Head.

Gui. This Cloten was a fool: an empty purse,
There was no money in't: not Hercules
Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had none:
Yet, I not doing this, the fool had borne
My head, as I do his.

Bel. What hast thou done?

Gui. I am perfect,¹ what: cut off one Cloten's head;

Son to the queen, after his own report;
Who call'd me traitor, mountaineer; and swore,
With his own single hand he'd take us in;²
Displace our heads, where, (thank the gods!) they grow,
And set them on Lud's town.

Bel. We are all undone.

Gui. Why, worthy father, what have we to lose,
But that he swore to take, our lives? The law
Protects not us: Then why should we be tender
To let an arrogant piece of flesh threat us;
Play judge, and executioner, all himself;
For³ we do fear the law? What company
Discover you abroad?

Bel. No single soul
Can we set eye on, but, in all safe reason, [mour⁴
He must have some attendants. Though his huwas nothing but mutation; ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have rav'd,
To bring him here alone: Although, perhaps,
It may be heard at court, that such as we
Cave here, hunt here, are outlaws, and in time
May make some stronger head: the which he hearing,

(As it is like him,) might break out, and swear
He'd fetch us in; yet is't not probable
To come alone, either he so undertaking,
Or they so suffering: then on good ground we fear,
If we do fear this body hath a tail
More perilous than the head.

Arv. Let ordinance
Come as the gods foresay it: howso'er,
My brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no mind
To hunt this day: the boy Fidele's sickness
Did make my way long forth.⁵

Gui. With his own sword,
Which he did wave against my throat, I have ta'en
His head from him: I'll throw't into the creek
Behind our rock; and let it to the sea,
And tell the fishes, he's the queen's son, Cloten:
That's all I reck. [Exit.

Bel. I fear, 'twill be reveng'd:
'Would, Polydore, thou had'st not done't! though valour
Becomes thee well enough.

Arv. 'Would, I had done't,
So the revenge alone pursued me!—Polydore,
I love thee brotherly; but envy much,
Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would,
revenges, [through,
That possible strength might meet,⁶ would seek us
And put us to our answer.

¹ I am well informed what.

² i.e. conquer, subdue us.

³ For again in the sense of cause. See note on Act
lv. Sc. 1.

⁴ The old copy reads, 'his honour.' The emendation is Theobald's. Malone has shown that the words honour and humour have been erroneously printed for each other in other passages of the old editions.

⁵ Fidele's sickness made my walk forth from the cave tedious. So in King Richard III.—
'—our crosses on the way
Have made it tedious,' &c.

⁶ Such pursuit of vengeance as fell within any possibility of opposition.

⁷ To restore Fidele to the bloom of health, to recall the colour into his cheeks, I would let out the blood of a whole parish, or any number of such fellows as Cloten. A parish is a common phrase for a great number.

⁸ Heaven give you joy, sweet master Palatine.

⁹ And to you, sir, a whole parish of children.

The Wits, by Davenant, p. 222.

Bel. Well, 'tis done:—

We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger
Where there's no profit. I prythee, to our rock;
You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay
Till hasty Polydore return, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arv. Poor sick Fidele!
I'll willingly to him: To gain his colour,
I'd let a parish of such Clotens blood,⁸
And praise myself for charity. [Exit.

Bel. O, thou goddess,
Thou divine Nature, how thyself thou blazon'st
In these two princely boys! They are as gentle
As zephyrs, blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head; and yet as rough,
Their royal blood enchain'd, as the rud'st wind,
That by the top doth take the mountain pine,
And make him stoop to the vale. 'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To royalty unlearn'd: honour untaught;
Civility not seen from other; valour,
That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop
As if it had been sow'd! Yet still it's strange
What Cloten's being here to us portends;
Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter GUIDERIUS.

Gui. Where's my brother?
I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream,
In embassy to his mother; his body's hostage
For his return. [Solemn music.

Bel. My ingenious instrument!
Hark, Polydore, it sounds! But what occasion
Hath Cadwal now to give it motion! Hark!

Gui. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.

Gui. What does he mean? since death of my dear'st mother
It did not speak before. All solemn things Should answer solemn accidents. The matter?
Triumphs for nothing, and lamenting toys.⁹
Is jollity for apes, and grief for boys;
Is Cadwal mad?

Re-enter ARVIRAGUS, bearing IMOGEN, as dead, in his arms.

Bel. Look, here he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his arms,
Of what we blame him for!

Arv. The bird is dead,
That we have made so much on. I had rather
Have skip'd from sixteen years of age to sixty,
To have turn'd my leaping time into a crutch,
Than have seen this.

Gui. O, sweetest, fairest lily!
My brother wears thee not the one half so well.
As when thou grew'st thyself.

Bel. O, melancholy!
Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? find
The ooze, to show what coast thy sluggish crave¹⁰
Might easiliest harbour in?—Thou blessed thing!
Jove knows what man thou might'st have made,¹¹
but I,¹⁰

Thou diedst, a most rare boy, of melancholy!—
How found you him?

Arv. Stark,¹¹ as you see:

⁸ Toys are trifles.

⁹ A crave was a small vessel of burthen, sometimes spelled cræer, crayer, and even craye. The old copy reads, erroneously, '—thy sluggish care.' The emendation was suggested by Symson in a note on The Captain of Beaumont and Fletcher:—
'—let him venture

In some decayed crave of his own.
¹⁰ We should most probably read, 'but ah.' Ay is always printed ah! in the first folio, and other books of the time. Hence, perhaps, I, which was used for the affirmative particle ay, crept into the text. 'Heaven knows (says Belarius) what a man thou wouldst have been hadst thou lived; but, alas! thou didst of melancholy, while yet only a most accomplished boy.'

¹¹ Stark means entirely cold and stiff.

¹² And many a nobleman lies stark—
Under the hoofs of vaulting enemies.

King Henry IV Part I

Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled slumber,
Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at: his right cheek
Reposing on a cushion.

Gui. Where?

Arv. O' the floor;
His arms thus leagu'd: I thought, he slept: and put
My clouted brogues¹ from off my feet, whose rude-
ness

Answer'd my steps too loud.

Gui. Why, he but sleeps:²
If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed;
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.³

Arv. With fairest flowers,
Whilst summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave: Thou shalt not lack
The flower, that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor
The azur'd harebell, like thy veins; no, nor
The leaf of eglantine, whom not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath: the ruddock⁴ would,
With charitable bill (O, bill, sore-shaming
Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument!) bring thee all this;
Yea, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are none,
To winter-ground⁵ thy corse.

Gui. Pr'ythee, have done;
And do not play in wench-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration what
Is now due debt.—To the grave.

Arv. Say, where shall's lay him?

Gui. By good Euriphile, our mother.

Arv. Be't so:
And let us, Polydore, though now our voices
Have got the mannish crack, sing him to the ground,
As once our mother; use like note, and words,
Save that Euriphile must be Fidele.

Gui. Cadwal,
I cannot sing; I'll weep, and word it with thee:
For notes of sorrow, out of tune, are worse
Than priests and fanes that lie.

Arv. We'll speak it then.

Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicine the less:⁶ for Cloten

¹ Clouted brogues are coarse wooden shoes, strengthened with clout or hob-nails. In some parts of England thin plates of iron, called clouts, are fixed to the shoes of rustics.

² I cannot forbear (says Steevens) to introduce a passage somewhat like this from Webster's White Devil, or Vittoria Corombona [1612,] on account of its singular beauty:—

Oh, thou soft natural death! thou art joint twin
To sweetest slumber: I no rough-bearded comet
Stares on thy mild departure: the dull owl
Beats not against thy casement: the hoarse wolf
Scents not thy carrion:—pity winds thy corse,
While horror waits on princes!

³ Steevens imputes great violence to this change of person, and would read, 'come to him;' but there is no impropriety in Guiderius's sudden address to the body itself. It might, indeed, be ascribed to our author's careless manner, of which an instance like the present occurs at the beginning of the next act, where Posthumus says,

— you married ones,
If each of you would take this course, how many
Must murder wives much better than themselves, Douce.

⁴ The ruddock is the red-breast.

⁵ To winter-ground appears to mean to dress or decorate thy corse with 'furred moss,' for a winter covering, when there are no flowers to strew it with. In Cornucopia, or Divers Secrets, &c. by Thomas Johnson, 4to, 1596, sig. E. it is said, 'The robin red-breast, if he finds a man or woman dead, will cover all his face with moss; and some think that if the body should remain unburied that he would cover the whole body also.' The reader will remember the pathetic old ballad of the Children in the Wood.

⁶ So in a former passage of this play:

— a touch more rare
Subdues all pangs and fears.
And in King Lear :—

— Where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt.

Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys:
And, though he came our enemy, remember,
He was paid⁷ for that: Though mean and mighty, rotting

Together, have one dust; yet reverence,⁸
(That angel of the world,) doth make distinction Of place 'tween high and low. Our foe was princely;
And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet bury him as a prince.

Gui. Pray you, fetch him hither.
Thersites' body is as good as Ajax,
When neither are alive.

Arv. If you'll go fetch him,
We'll say our song the whilst.—Brother, begin.

[Exit BELARIUS.
Gui. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the east;

My father hath a reason for't.

Arv. 'Tis true.

Gui. Come on, then, and remove him.

Arv. So,—begin.

SONG.

Gui. Fear no more the heat o' the sun,⁹
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Arv. Fear no more the frown o' the great,
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe, and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak:
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.¹⁰

Gui. Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Arv. Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone;
Gui. Fear not slander, censure rash;
Arv. Thou hast finish'd joy and moan:
Both. All lovers young, all lovers must Consign¹¹ to thee, and come to dust.

Gui. No exorciser¹² harm thee!

Arv. Nor no witchcraft charm thee!

Gui. Ghost unlaid forbear thee!

Arv. Nothing ill come near thee!

Both. Quiet consummation¹³ have;
And renowned be thy grave!¹⁴

⁷ i. e. punished. Falstaff, after having been beaten, when in the dress of an old woman, says, 'I pay'd nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.'

⁸ Reverence, or due regard to subordination, is the power that keeps peace and order in the world.

⁹ This is the topic of consolation that nature dictates to all men on these occasions.

¹¹ 'To consign to thee' is to 'seal the same contract with thee;' i. e. add their names to the upon the register of death. So in Romeo and Juliet :—

— seal
A dateless bargain to engrossing death.

¹² It has already been observed that exorciser anciently signified a person who could raise spirits, not one who lays them.

¹³ Consummation is used in the same sense in King Edward III. 1596 :—

'My soul will yield this castle of my flesh,
This mingled tribute, with all willingness,
To darkness, consummation, dust, and worms.'

Milton, in his Epitaph on the Marchioness of Winchester, is indebted to the passage before us:—

'Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quiet ever have.'

¹⁴ 'For the obsequies of Fidele (says Dr. Johnson) a song was written by my unhappy friend, Mr. William Collins of Chichester, a man of uncommon learning and abilities. I shall give it a place at the end, in honour of his memory.'

Re-enter BELARIUS, with the Body of CLOTEN.

Gui. We have done our obsequies: Come lay him down.

Bel. Here's a few flowers, but about midnight, more:

The herbs, that have on them cold dew o' the night,

Are strewings fit't for graves.—Upon their faces:!

You were as flowers, now wither'd: even so

These herb'lets shall, which we upon you strow.—

Come on, away: apart upon our knees.

The ground, that gave them first, has them again;

Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.

[Exeunt BEL. GUI. and ARV.]

Imo. [Awaking.] Yes, sir, to Milford Haven;

Which is the way?—

I thank you.—By yon bush?—Pray, how far thither?

'Ods pittikins!¹—can it be six miles yet?

I have gone all night:—Faith, I'll lay down and sleep.

But, soft! no bedfellow:—O, gods and goddesses!

[Seeing the Body.]

These flowers are like the pleasures of the world;

This bloody man, the care on't.—I hope, I dream;

For, so, I thought I was a cave-keeper,

And cook to honest creatures: But 'tis not so;

'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,

Which the brain makes of fumes. Our very eyes

Are sometimes like our judgments, blind. Good faith,

I tremble still with fear: But if there be

Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity

As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it!

The dream's here still; even when I wake, it is Without me, as within me; not imagin'd, felt.

A headless man!—The garments of Posthumus!

I know the shape of his leg; this is his hand;

His foot Mercurial; his Martial thigh;

The brawns of Hercules: but his Jovial² face—

Murder in heaven?—How?—'Tis gone.—Pisanio,

All curses madd'd Hecuba gave the Greeks,

And mine to boot, be darted on thee! Thou,

Conspir'd with that irregular³ devil, Cloten,

Hast here cut off my lord.—To write, and read,

Be henceforth treacherous!—Damn'd Pisanio

Hath with his forged letters,—damn'd Pisanio—

From this most bravest vessel of the world

Struck the main-top!—O, Posthumus! alas,

Where is thy head? where's that? Ah me! where's that?

Pisanio might have kill'd thee at the heart,

And left this head on.⁴—How should this be?

Pisanio?

'Tis he, and Cloten: malice and lucre in them

Have laid this woe here. O, 'tis pregnant, pregnant!⁵

The drug he gave me, which, he said, was precious

And cordial to me, have I not found it

Murderous to the senses? That confirms it home:

This is Pisanio's deed, and Cloten's! O!—

Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood, prince of Sienna. He was not aware that Sienna was a republic, or possibly did not heed it.

8 It was no common dream, but sent from the very gods, or the gods themselves.

9 Fast for fasted, as we have in another place of this play list for lifted. In King John we have heat for heated, waft for wasted, &c. Similar phraseology will be found in the Bible, Mark, l. 31; John, xlii. 19;

Exodus, xii. 8, &c.

10 Milton has availed himself of this epithet in Co

mus:—

—Thus I hurl

My dazzling spells into the spungy air.¹

11 Who has altered this picture, so as to make it other wise than nature did it? Olivia, speaking of her own beauty as of a picture, asks Viola if 'it is not well done?' 12 Shakespeare was indebted for his modern names

(which sometimes are mixed with ancient ones), as well as for his anachronisms, to the fashionable novels of his time. Steevens cites some amusing instances from a Petite Palace of Petite his Pleasure, 1676. But the absurdity was not confined to novels: the drama would afford numerous examples.

That we the horriders may seem to those
Which chance to find us: O, my lord, my lord!

Enter LUCIUS, a Captain, and other Officers, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them the legions garrison'd in Gallia,
After your will, have cross'd the sea; attending
You here at Milford Haven, with your ships:
They are here in readiness.

Luc. But what from Rome?

Cap. The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners,
And gentlemen of Italy; most willing spirits,
That promise noble service; and they come
Under the conduct of bold Iachimo, Sienna's brother.

Luc. When expect you them?

Cap. With the next benefit o' the wind.

Luc. This forwardness
Makes our hopes fair. Command, our present numbers

Be muster'd; bid the captains look to't.—Now, sir,
What have you dream'd, of late, of this war's purpose?

Sooth. Last night the very gods show'd me vision:

(I fast,⁸ and pray'd, for their intelligence.) Thus:—
I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spungy⁹ south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends
Unless my sins abuse my divination,
Success to the Roman host.

Luc. Dream often so,
And never false.—Soft, ho! what trunk is here,
Without his top? The ruin speaks, that sometime
It was a worthy building.—How! a page!—
Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead, rather:
For nature doth abhor to make his bed
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.—
Let's see the boy's face.

Cap. He is alive, my lord.

Luc. He'll then instruct us of this body.—Young
one,
Inform us of thy fortunes: for it seems,
They crave to be demanded: Who is this,
Thou mak'st thy bloody pillow? Or who was he,
That, otherwise than noble nature did,¹¹
Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy interest
In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?

Imo. I am nothing: or if not,
Nothing to be were better. This was my master,
A very valiant Briton, and a good,
That here by mountaineers lies slain:—Alas!
There are no more such masters: I may wander
From east to occident, cry out for service,
Try many, all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.

Luc. 'Lack, good youth
Thou mov'st no less with thy complaining, than Thy master in bleeding: Say his name, good friend.
Imo. Richard du Champ.¹² If I do lie, and do

1 Malone observes, that 'Shakspeare did not recollect when he wrote these words, that there was but one face on which the flowers could be strewed.' It is one of the poet's lapses of thought, and will countenance the passage remarked upon in Act iv. Sc. 1.

2 This diminutive adjunction is derived from God's pity, by the addition of kin. In this manner we have also 'Ods bodikins.'

3 'Jovial face' here signifies such a face as belongs to Jove. The epithet is frequently so used in the old dramatic writers; particularly Heywood:—

'—Alcides here will stand

To plague you all with his high Jovial hand.'

The Silver Age.

4 Irregular must mean lawless, licentious, out of rule. The word has not hitherto been met with elsewhere: but in Reinolds's God's Revenge against Adultery, ed. 1671, p. 121, we have 'irregulated lust.'

5 This is another of the poet's lapses, unless we attribute the error to the old printers, and read, 'thy head on.' We must understand by 'this head,' the head of Posthumus; the head that did belong to this body.

6 i. e. 'tis a ready, apposite conclusion.

7 Shakspeare appears to have meant brother to the

No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope

They'll pardon it. Say you, sir?

Luc.

Thy name?

Imo.

Fidele, sir.

Luc. Thou dost approve thyself the very same: Thy name well fits thy faith; thy faith, thy name. Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say, Thou shalt be so well master'd; but, be sure, No less belov'd. The Roman emperor's letters, Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner Than thine own worth prefer thee: Go with me.

Imo. I'll follow, sir. But first, an't please the gods, I'll hide my master from the flies, as deep As these poor pickaxes¹ can dig; and when With wild wood-leaves and weeds I have strew'd his grave,

And on it said a century of prayers, Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep, and sigh; And, leaving so his service, follow you, So please you entertain me.

Luc.

Ay, good youth;

And rather father thee, than master thee.—

My friends,

The boy hath taught us manly duties: Let us Find out the prettiest daisied plot we can, And make him with our pikes and partizans A grave: Come, arm him.—Boy, he is preferr'd By thee to us; and he shall be interr'd, As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes: Some falls are means the happier to arise.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter CYMBELINE, Lords, and PISANIO.

Cym. Again; and bring me word, how 'tis with her.

A fever with the absence of her son:

A madness, of which her life's in danger:—

Heavens, How deeply you at once do touch me! Imogen, The great part of my comfort, gone: my queen Upon a desperate bed; and in a time When fearful wars point at me, her son gone, So needful for this present: It strikes me, past The hope of comfort.—But for thee, fellow, Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seem so ignorant, we'll enforce it from thee By a sharp torture.

Pis. Sir, my life is yours, I humbly set it at your will: But, for my mistress, I nothing know where she remains, why gone, Nor when she purposes return. 'Beseech your highness, Hold me your loyal servant.

I Lord.

Good my liege,

The day that she was missing, he was here:

I dare be bound he's true, and shall perform

All parts of his subjection loyally.

For Cloten,—

There wants no diligence in seeking him, And will,² no doubt, be found.

² That is 'take him up in your arms.' So in Fletcher's Two Noble Kinsmen:—

—Arm you prize,
I know you will not lose her.'

The prize was Emilia.

³ Perhaps we should read, 'he'll no doubt be found.' But this omission of the personal pronoun was by no means uncommon in Shakespeare's age. There are several other instances in these plays, especially in King Henry VIII.: take one example:—

—which if granted,

As he made semblance of his duty, would Have put his knife into him.'

See Lear, Act II. Sc. 4.

⁴ 'My suspicion is yet undetermined; if I do not condemn you, I likewise have not acquitted you.' We now say, the cause is depending.

⁵ i. e. confounded by a variety of business.

⁶ 'Your forces are able to face such an army as we fear the enemy will bring against us.'

⁷ Sir Thomas Hamner reads, 'I've had no letter.'

Cym. The time's troublesome:

We'll ship you for a season; but our jealousy

[To PISANIO.]

Does yet depend.⁴

I Lord.

So please your majesty,

The Roman legions, all from Gallia drawn,

Are landed on your coast; with a supply

Of Roman gentlemen, by the senate sent.

Cym. Now for the counsel of my son, and queen!—

I am amaz'd with matter.⁵

I Lord.

Good my liege,

Your preparation can affront⁶ no less

Than what you hear of: come more, for more you're ready:

The want is, but to put those powers in motion, That long to move.

Cym.

I thank you: Let's withdraw,

And meet the time, as it seeks us. We fear not

What can from Italy annoy us; but

We grieve at chances here.—Away. [Exeunt.]

Pis. I heard no letter⁷ from my master, since

I wrote him, Imogen was slain: 'Tis strange:

Nor hear I from my mistress, who did promise

To yield me often tidings; Neither know I

What is betid to Cloten; but remain

Perplex'd in all. The heavens still must work:

Wherein I am false, I am honest; not true, to be true.

These present wars shall find I love my country,

Even to the note⁸ o' the king, or I'll fall in them.

All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd:

Fortune brings in some boats, that are not steer'd.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Before the Cave. Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Gai. The noise is round about us.

Bel.

Let us from it.

Arv. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to lock it From action and adventure?

Gai.

Nay, what hope

Have we in hiding us? this way, the Romans

Must, or for Britons slay us; or receive us

For barbarous and unnatural revolts,⁹

During their use, and slay us after.

Bel.

Sons,

We'll higher to the mountains; there secure us.

To the king's party there's no going; newness

Of Cloten's death (we being not known, not muster'd

Among the bands) may drive us to a render¹⁰

Where we have liv'd; and so extort from us

That which we've done, whose answer would be death

Drawn on with torture.

Gai.

This is, sir, a doubt,

In such a time, nothing becoming you,

Nor satisfying us.

Arv.

It is not likely,

That when they hear the Roman horses neigh,

Behold their quarter'd fires,¹¹ have both their eyes

And ears so cloy'd importantly as now,

That they will waste their time upon our note,

To know from whence we are.

But perhaps 'no letter' is here used to signify 'no tidings,' not a syllable of reply.

⁸ 'I will so distinguish myself, the king shall remark my valour.'

⁹ i. e. revolters. As in King John:—

'Lead me to the revolts of England here.'

¹⁰ 'An account of our place of abode.' This dialogue is a just representation of the superfluous caution of an old man.

Render is used in a similar sense in a future scene of this play:—

'My boon is, that this gentleman may render

Of whom he had this ring.'

¹¹ i. e. the fires in the respective quarters of the Roman army. Their beacon or watch fires. So in King Henry V.:—

'Fire answers fire: and through their paly flames

Each battle sees the other's umber'd face.'

SCENE III. Another Part of the Field. Enter POSTHUMUS and a British Lord.

Lord. Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?

Post. I did:

Though you, it seems, come from the fiers.

Lord. I did.

Post. No blame be to you, sir; for all was lost, But that the heavens fought: The king himself Of his wings destitute,¹ the army broken, And but the backs of Britons seen, all flying Through a strait lane; the enemy full-hearted, Lolling the tongue with slaughtering, having work More plentiful than tools to do't, struck down Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling Merely through fear; that the strait pass was damm'd

With dead men, hurt behind, and cowards living To die with lengthen'd shame.

Lord. Where was this lane?

Post. Close by the battle, ditch'd, and wall'd with turf;

Which gave advantage to an ancient soldier,— An honest one, I warrant; who deserv'd So long a breeding, as his white beard came to, In doing this for his country;—athwart the lane, He, with two striplings, (lads more like to run The country base,² than to commit such slaughter; With faces fit for masks, or rather fairer Than those for preservation cas'd, or shame,³) Made good the passage; cry'd to those that fled, Our Britain's hearts die flying, not our men: To darkness fleet, souls that fly backwards! Stand! Or we are Romans, and will give you that Like beasts, which you shun beastly; and may save, But to look back in frown: stand, stand.—These three, Three thousand confident, in act as many, (For three performers are the file, when all The rest do nothing,) with this word, stand, stand, Accommodated by the place, more charming, With their own nobleness, (which would have turn'd A distaff to a lance,) gilded pale looks, Part, shame, part, spirit renew'd; that some, turn'd coward

But by example, (O, a sin in war, Damn'd in the first beginners!) gan to look The way that they did, and to grin like lions Upon the pikes o' the hunters. Then began A stop i' the chaser, a retire; anon, A rout, confusion thick: Forthwith they fly Chickens, the way which they stoop'd eagles; slaves,

The strides they victors made: and now our cowards, (Like fragments in hard voyages,) became The life o' the need; having found the back-door open

Of the unguarded hearts, Heavens, how they wound! Some, slain before; some, dying; some, their friends

O'erborne i' the former wave: ten, chas'd by one, Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty: Those, that would die or ere resist, are grown The mortal bugs⁴ o' the field.

Lord. This was strange chance: A narrow lane! an old man, and two boys!

Post. Nay, not wonder at it: You are made Rather to wonder at the things you hear,

1 The stopping of the Roman army by three persons is an allusion to the story of the Hays, as related by Holinshed in his History of Scotland, p. 155; upon which Milton once intended to have formed a drama. Shakspeare was evidently acquainted with it:—'Hale beholding the king, with the most part of the nobles fighting with great valiance in the middle-ward, now destitute of the wings,' &c.

2 A country game called prison bars, vulgarly prison-base.

3 Shame, for modesty, or shamefacedness.

4 i. e. terrors, bugbears. See King Henry VI. Part III. Act v. Sc. 2.

⁵ For Warwick was a bug that fear'd us all.

⁶ Alluding to the common superstition of charms being powerful enough to keep men unhurt in battle.

Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon't, And vent it for a mockery? Here is one: Two boys, an old man twice a boy, a lane, Preserve'd the Britons, was the Romans' bane.

Lord. Nay, be not angry, sir.

Post. 'Lack, to what end?

Who dares not stand his foe, I'll be his friend:

For if he'll do, as he is made to do,

I know, he'll quickly fly my friendship too.

You have put me into rhyme.

Lord. Farewell, you are angry. [Exit.]

Post. Still going?—This is a lord! O, noble misery!

To be i' the field, and ask, what news, of me!

To-day, how many would have given their honours

To have sav'd their carcasses? took heel to do't,

And yet died too? I, in mine own wo charm'd,⁵

Could not find death, where I did hear him groan;

Nor feel him, where he struck: Being an ugly monster,

'Tis strange, he hides him in fresh cups, soft beds,

Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we

That draw his knives i' the war.—Well, I will find him:

For being now a favourer to the Roman,

No more a Briton, I have resum'd again

The part I came in: Fight I will no more,

But yield me to the veriest hind, that shall

Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Here made by the Roman; great the answer⁶ be

Britons must take; For me, my ransom's death;

On either side I come to spend my breath;

Which neither here I'll keep, nor bear again,

But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter Two British Captains, and Soldiers.

1 Cap. Great Jupiter be prais'd! Lucius is taken:

'Tis thought, the old man and his sons were angels.

2 Cap. There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,

That gave the affront⁷ with them.

1 Cap. So 'tis reported:

But none of them can be found.—Stand! who is there?

Post. A Roman;

Who had not now been drooping here, if seconds

Had answer'd him.

2 Cap. Lay hands on him; a dog!

A leg of Rome shall not return to tell

What crows have peck'd them here. He brags his service

As if he were of note: bring him to the king.

Enter CYMBELINE, attended: BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, PISANIO, and Roman Captives. The Captains present POSTHUMUS to CYMBELINE, who delivers him over to a Gaoler: after which, all go out.

SCENE IV. A Prison. Enter POSTHUMUS, and Two Gaolers.

1 Gaol. You shall not now be stolen, you have locks upon you;⁸

So graze, as you find pasture.

2 Gaol. Ay, or a stomach. [Exeunt Gaolers.]

Post. Most welcome, bondage! for thou art a way,

I think, to liberty: Yet am I better

Than one that's sick o' the gout: since he had rather

Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd

By the sure physician, death; who is the key

6 i. e. retaliation. As in a former scene:—

'That which we've done, whose answer would be death.'

7 Silly is simple or rustic. Thus in the novel of Bocaccio, on which this play is formed:—'The servant, who had no great good will to kill her, very easily grew pitiful, took off her upper garment, and gave her a poore ragged doublet, a silly chaperone.'

8 i. e. the encounter.

9 This stage direction for 'inexplicable dumb show' is probably an interpolation by the players. Shakspeare has expressed his contempt for such mummery in Hamlet.

10 The wit of the Gaoler alludes to the custom of putting a lock on a horse's leg when he is turned out to pasture.

To unbar these locks. My conscience! thou art fetter'd
More than my shanks, and wrists: You good gods, give me
The penitent instrument, to pick that bolt,
Then, free for ever! Is't enough, I am sorry?
So children temporal fathers do appease;
Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent?
I cannot do it better than in gyves,
Desir'd, more than constrain'd: to satisfy,
If of my freedom 'tis the main part, take
No stricter render of me, than my all.¹
I know, you are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again
On their abatement; that's not my desire:
For Imogen's dear life, take mine; and though
'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life; you coin'd it:
'Tween man and man, they weigh not every stamp;
Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake:
You rather mine, being yours: and so, great powers,
If you will take this audit, take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds.² O, Imogen!
I'll speak to thee in silence. [He sleeps.]

*Solemn Music.*³ Enter, as an Apparition, SICILIUS LEONATUS, Father to POSTHUMUS, an old Man, attired like a Warrior; leading in his hand an ancient Matron, his Wife, and Mother to POSTHU-MUS, with Music before them. Then, after other Music, follow the Two young Leonati, Brothers to POSTHUMUS, with wounds, as they died in the Wars.
They circle POSTHUMUS round, as he lies sleeping.

Sici. No more, thou thunder master, show,
Thy spite on mortal flies:
With Mars fall out, with Juno chide,
That thy adulteries

Rates and revenges.
Hath my poor boy done aught but well,
Whose face I never saw?
I died, whilst in the womb he stay'd
Attending Nature's law.
Whose father then, (as men report,
Thou orphans' father art,)
Thou should'st have been, and shielded him
From this earth-vexing smart.

Moth. Lucina lent not me her aid,
But took me in my throes;
That from me was Posthumus rip'd,
Came crying 'mongst his foes,
A thing of pity!

Sici. Great nature, like his ancestry
Moulded the stuff so fair,
That he deserv'd the praise o' the world,
As great Sicilius' heir.

I Bro. When once he was mature for man,
In Britain where was he
That could stand up his parallel;
Or fruitful object be

In eye of Imogen, that best
Could deem his dignity?

Moth. With marriage wherefore was he mock'd,
To be exil'd and thrown
From Leonati's seat, and cast

¹ This passage is very obscure, and I must say with Malone, that I think it is so rendered either by the omission of a line, or some other corruption of the text. I have no faith in Malone's explanation: that which Steevens offers is not much more satisfactory; but I have nothing better to offer. 'Posthumus questions whether contrition be sufficient atonement for guilt. Then to satisfy the offended gods, he desires them to take no more than his present all, that is, his life, if it is the main part, the chief point, or principal condition of his freedom, i. e. of his freedom from future punishment.'

² So in Macbeth:—

'Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond
That keeps me pale.'

There is an equivocation between the legal instrument and bonds of steel; a little out of its place in a passage of pathetic exclamation.

³ This Scene is supposed not to be Shakespeare's, but foisted in by the players for mere show. The great poet, who has conducted his fifth Act with such matchless

From her his dearest one,

Sweet Imogen?

Sici. Why did you suffer Iachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his nobler heart and brain
With needless jealousy:
And to become the geck⁴ and scorn
O' the other's villany?

2 Bro. For this, from stiller seats we came,
Our parents, and us twain,
That, striking in our country's cause,
Fell bravely, and were slain;
Our fealty, and Tenantius' right,
With honour to maintain.

1 Bro. Like hardiment Posthumus hath
To Cymbeline perform'd:

Then Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why has thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due;
Being all to dolours turn'd?

Sici. Thy crystal window ope; look out;
No longer exercise,
Upon a valiant race, thy harsh
And potent injuries:

Moth. Since, Jupiter, our son is good,
Take off his miseries.

Sici. Peep through thy marble mansion, help:
Or we poor ghosts will cry
To the shining synod of the rest,
Against thy deity.

2 Bro. Help, Jupiter; or we appeal,
And from thy justice fly.

JUPITER descends in Thunder and Lightning, sitting upon an Eagle: he throws a Thunder-bolt. The Ghosts fall on their knees.

Jup. No more, you petty spirits of region low,
Offend our hearing; hush! How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt, you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts?
Poor shadows of Elysium, hence; and rest
Upon your never withering banks of flowers.

Be not with mortal accidents oppress;
No care of yours it is, you know, 'tis ours.
Whom best I love, I cross; to make my gift,
The more delay'd, delighted.⁵ Be content;
Your low-laid son our god-head will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his trials well are spent.
Our Jovial star reign'd at his birth, and in
Our temple was he married.—Rise, and fade!

He shall be lord of lady Imogen,
And happier much by his affliction made.
This tablet lay upon his breast; wherein
Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine;
And so, away: no further with your din
Express impatience, lest you stir up mine.—

Mount, eagle, to my palace crystalline. [Ascends.]
Sici. He came in thunder; his celestial breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy eagle

Stoop'd, as to foot us:⁶ his ascension is
More sweet than our bless'd fields; his royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloy's his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd.

All. Thanks, Jupiter!
Sici. The marble pavement cloyes, he is enter'd skill, could never have designed the vision to be twice described by Posthumus, had this contemptible nonsense been previously delivered on the stage. It appears that the players indulged themselves sometimes in unwarrantable liberties of the same kind. Nashe, in his Leicester's State, 1590, assures us, that in a play of his, called the Isle of Dogs, four acts, without his consent, or the least guess of his drift or scope, were supplied by the players. See the Prolegomena to Malone's Shakespeare, vol. ii.; article Shakespeare, Ford, and Jonson.

His radiant roof:—Away! and, to be blest,
Let us with care perform his great behest.

[Ghosts vanish.
Post. [Waking.] Sleep, thou hast been a grand-sire, and begot

A father to me: and thou hast created
A mother and two brothers: But (O, scorn!)
Gone! they went hence so soon as they were born.
And so I am awake.—Poor wretches that depend
On greatness' favour, dream as I have done;
Wake, and find nothing.—But, alas, I swerve:
Many dream not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favours; so am I,
That have this golden chance, and know not why.
What fairies haunt this ground? A book? O, rare
one!

Be not, as is our fangled¹ world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers: let thy effects
So follow, to be most unlike our courtiers,
As a good promise.

[Reads.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be topped branches, which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow; then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty.

'Tis still a dream; or else such stuff as madmen
Tongue, and brain not: either both, or nothing:
Or senseless speaking, or a speaking such
As sense cannot untie. Be what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which
I'll keep, if but for sympathy.

Re-enter Gaolers.

Gaol. Come, sir, are you ready for death?

Post. Over-roasted rather: ready long ago.

Gaol. Hanging is the word, sir; if you be ready for that, you are well cooked.

Post. So, if I prove a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot.

Gaol. A heavy reckoning for you, sir: But the comfort is, you shall be called to no more payments, fear no more tavern bills; which are often the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for the want of meat, depart reeling with too much drink; sorry that you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid² too much; purse and brain both empty: the brain the heavier for being too light, the purse too light, being drawn of heaviness:
O! of this contradiction you shall now be quit.—O, the charity of a penny cord! it sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debtor and creditor but it; of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge:—Your neck, sir, is pen, book, and counters; so the acquittance follows.

Post. I am merrier to die, than thou art to live.

Gaol. Indeed, sir, he that sleeps feels not the tooth-ache: But a man that were to sleep your sleep, and a hangman to help him to bed, I think he would change places with his officer; for, look you, sir, you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes, indeed, do I, fellow.

Gaol. Your death has eyes in's head, then; I have not seen him so pictured: you must either be ¹ I.e. trifling. Hence new-fangled, still in use for new toys or trifles.

² Paid, here means subdued or overcome by the liquor.

³ I.e. hazard.

⁴ Pron here signifies ready, prompt. As in Measure for Measure, Act I. Sc. 3.

There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men.

Thus also in Lucan's Pharsalia, translated by Sir Arthur Gorges, b. vi.—

For use of war so prone and fit.

And in Wilfride Holme's poem, entitled The Fall and Evil Success of Rebellion, &c. 1537:—

directed by some that take upon them to know; or take upon yourself that, which I am sure you do not know; or jump³ the after-inquiry on your own peril: and how you shall speed in your journey's end, I think you'll never return to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct them the way I am going, but such as wink, and will not use them.

Gaol. What an infinite mock is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes, to see the way of blindness! I am sure, hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Knock off his manacles; bring your prisoner to the king.

Post. Thou bringest good news;—I am called to be made free.

Gaol. I'll be hanged then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer than a gaoler; no bolts for the dead.

[Exeunt POSTHUMUS and Messenger.

Gaol. Unless a man would marry a gallow, and beget young gibbets, I never saw one so prone.⁴
Yet, on my conscience, there are verier knaves desire to live, for all he be a Roman: and there be some of them too, that die against their wills; so should I, if I were one. I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowes! I speak against my present profit, but my wish hath a preferment in't.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.⁵ *Cymbeline's Tent. Enter CYMBE-
LINE, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, PI-SANTIO, Lords, Officers, and Attendants.*

Cym. Stand by my side, you whom the gods have made

Preservers of my throne. Wo is my heart,
That the poor soldier that so richly fought,
Whose rags sham'd gilded arms, whose naked breast
Stepp'd before targe of proof, cannot be found:
He shall be happy that can find him if
Our grace can make him so.

Bel. I never saw

Such noble fury in so poor a thing;
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But beggary and poor looks.

Cym.

No tidings of him?

Pis. He hath been search'd among the dead and living,
But no trace of him.

Cym.

To my grief, I am

The heir of his reward; which I will add
To you, the liver, heart, and brain of Britain,
[To BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARV.
By whom, I grant, she lives; 'Tis now the time
To ask of whence you are:—report it.

Bel.

Sir,

In Cambria we are born, and gentlemen:
Further to boast, were neither true nor modest,
Unless I add, we are honest.

Cym.

Bow your knees!

Arise, my knights o' the battle:⁶ I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates.

Enter CORNELIUS and Ladies.

There's business in these faces.⁷—Why so sadly
Greet you our victory? you look like Romans,
And not o' the court of Britain.

Cor.

Hail, great king!

⁵ In the scene before us, all the surviving characters are assembled; and at the expense of whatever incongruity the former events may have been produced, perhaps little can be discovered on this occasion to offend the most scrupulous advocate for regularity; and as little is found wanting to satisfy the spectator by a catastrophe which is luridate without confusion, and not more rich in ornament than nature. — Steevens.

⁶ Thus in Stowe's Chronicle, p. 164, edit. 1615:—
'Philip of France made Arthur Plantagenet Knight of the Field.'

⁷ So in Macbeth:—

'The business of this man looks out of him.'

To sour your happiness, I must report
The queen is dead.

Cym. Whom worse than a physician
Would this report become? But I consider,
By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too!—How ended she?

Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life;
Which, being cruel to the world, concluded
Most cruel to herself. What she confess'd,
I will report, so please you: These her women
Can trip me, if I err: who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Pr'ythee, say.

Cor. First, she confess'd she never lov'd you;
only

Affected greatness got by you, not you:
Married your royalty, was wife to your place;
Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this:
And, but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand² to love

With such integrity, she did confess
Was as a scorpion to her sight; whose life,
But that her flight prevented it, she had Ta'en off by poison.

Cym. O, most delicate fiend!
Who is't can read a woman?—Is there more?

Cor. More, sir, and worse. She did confess,
she had

For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and, ling'ring,
By inches waste you: In which time she purpos'd,
By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to O'ercome you with her show: yes, and in time
(When she had fitted you with her craft,) to work
Her son into the adoption of the crown.

But failing of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shameless desperate; open'd, in despite
Of heaven and men, her purposes; repented
The evils she hatch'd were not effected; so Despairing, died.

Cym. Heard you all this, her women?

Lady. We did, so please your highness.

Cym. Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for she was beautiful;
Mine ears, that heard her flattery; nor my heart,
That thought her like her seeming; it had been vicious,

To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter!

That it was folly in me, thou may'st say,

And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter LUCIUS, IACHIMO, the Soothsayer, and other Roman Prisoners, guarded: POSTHUMUS behind, and IMOGEN.

Thou comest not, Caius, now for tribute; that
The Britons have raz'd out, though with the loss
Of many a bold one; whose kinsmen have made
suit,

That their good souls may be appeas'd with slaughter
Of you their captives, which ourself have granted;
So, think of your estate.

Luc. Consider, sir, the chance of war: the day
Was yours by accident; had it gone with us,
We should not, when the blood was cool, have threaten'd

Our prisoners with the sword. But since the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call'd ransom, let it come: sufficeth,
A Roman with a Roman's heart can suffer:
Augustus lives to think on't: And so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will entreat; My boy, a Briton born,
Let him be ransom'd: never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true,
So feat,³ so nurse-like: let his virtue join

With my request, which, I'll make bold, your highness

Cannot deny; he hath done no Briton harm,
Though he have serv'd a Roman: save him, sir,
And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely seen him:
His favour⁴ is familiar to me.—

Boy, thou hast look'd thyself into my grace,
And art mine own.—I know not why, nor wherefore,
To say live, boy: ne'er thank thy master; live:
And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty, and thy state, I'll give it;
Yea, though thou do demand a prisoner,
The noblest ta'en.

Imo. I humbly thank your highness.

Luc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad;
And yet, I know, thou wilt.

Imo. No, no: alack,
There's other work in hand: I see a thing
Bitter to me as death: your life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself.

Luc. The boy disdains me,
He leaves me, scorns me: Briefly die their joys,
That place them on the truth of girls and boys.
Why stands he so perplex'd?

Cym. What would'st thou, boy?
I love thee more and more; think more and more What's best to ask. Know'st him thou look'st on?
speak,

Wilt have him live? Is he thy kin? thy friend?

Imo. He is a Roman; no more kin to me,
Than I to your highness; who, being born your vassal,
Am something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore ey'st him so?

Imo. I'll tell you, sir, in private, if you please
To give me hearing.

Cym. Ay, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention. What's thy name?

Imo. Fidele, sir.

Cym. Thou art my good youth, my page;
I'll be thy master: Walk with me; speak freely.

[CYMBELINE and IMOGEN converse apart.]

Bel. Is not this boy reviv'd from death?

Arr. One sand another
Not more resembles: That sweet rosy lad,
Who died, and was Fidele:—What think you?

Gai. The same dead thing alive.

Bel. Peace, peace! see further; he eyes us not;
forbear;

Creatures may be alike: were't he, I am sure
He would have spoke to us.

Gai. But we saw him dead.

Bel. Be silent; let's see further.

Pis. It is my mistress: [Aside.
Since she is living, let the time run on,
To good, or bad.

[CYMBELINE and IMOGEN come forward.]

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side;
Make thy demand aloud.—Sir, [To IACH.] step
you forth;

Give answer to this boy, and do it freely;

Or, by our greatness, and the grace of it,

Which is our honour, bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falsehood.—On, speak to

him.

Imo. My boon is, that this gentleman may render
Of whom he had this ring.

Post. What's that to him?

Cym. That diamond upon your finger, say,
How came it yours?

Iach. Thou'lt torture me to leave unspoken that
Which, to be spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How! me?

Iach. I am glad to be constrain'd to utter that which

¹ This observation has already occurred in the Funeral Song, p. 332:—

'The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.'

² 'To bear in hand' is 'to delude by false appearances.'

³ Feat is ready, dexterous. ⁴ Countenance.

⁵ 'I know not what should induce me to say, live, boy.' The word nor was inserted by Rowe.

Torments me to conceal. By villany
I got this ring; 'twas Leonatus' jewel; Whom thou didst banish; and (which more may grieve thee,
As it doth me,) a nobler sir ne'er liv'd
'Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou hear more, my lord?

Cym. All that belongs to this.

Iach. That paragon, thy daughter,—
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits
Quail¹ to remember,—Give me leave; I faint.

Cym. My daughter! what of her? Renew thy strength:

I had rather thou should'st live while nature will,
Than die ere I hear more: strive man and speak.

Iach. Upon a time (unhappy was the clock
That struck the hour!) it was in Rome (accurs'd
The mansion where!) 'twas at a feast, (O 'would
Our viands had been poison'd! or, at least,
Those which I heav'd to head!) the good Post-
humus,

(What should I say? he was too good to be
Where ill men were; and was the best of all Amongst the rar'st of good ones,) sitting sadly,
Hearing us praise our loves of Italy
For beauty that made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak: for feature,² laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva,
Postures beyond brief nature; for condition,
A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for; besides, that hook of wiving,
Fairness which strikes the eye;—

Cym. I stand on fire:
Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soon I shall,
Unless thou would'st grieve quickly.—This Post-
humus

(Most like a noble lord in love, and one
That had a royal lover,) took his hint;
And, not dispraising whom we prais'd (therein
He was as calm as virtue,) he began His mistress' picture; which by his tongue being made,

And then a mind put in't, either our brags
Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description
Prov'd us unspeaking sots.

Cym. Nay, nay, to the purpose.

Iach. Your daughter's chastity—there it begins.
He spake of her as Dian had hot dreams,
And she alone were cold: Whereat, I, wretch!
Made scruple of his praise; and wager'd with him
Pieces of gold, 'gainst this which then he wore
Upon his honour'd finger, to attain
In suit the place of his bed, and win this ring
By hers and mine adultery: he, true knight,
No lessor of her honour confident
Than I did truly find her, stakes this ring;
And would so, had it been a carbuncle
Of Phœbus' wheel; and might so safely, had it
Been all the worth of his car.⁴ Away to Britain
Post I in this design: Well may you, sir,
Remember me at court, where I was taught
Of your chaste daughter the wide difference
'Twixt amorous and villanous. Being thus quenched
Of hope, not longing, mine Italian brain
'Gan in your duller Britain operate
Most vilely; for my vantage, excellent;
And to be brief, my practice so prevail'd,
That I return'd with similar proof enough
To make the noble Leonatus mad,
By wounding his belief in her renown
With tokens thus, and thus; averring notes⁵
Of chamber-hanging, pictures, this her bracelet,
(O, cunning, how I got it!) nay, some marks

Of secret on her person, that he could not
But think her bond of chastity quite crack'd,
I having ta'en the forfeit. Whereupon,
Methinks, I see him now,—

Post.

Ay, so thou dost,
[Coming forward.]

Italian fiend!—Ah me, most credulous fool,
Egregious murderer, thief, any thing
That's due to all the villains past, in being,
To come!—O, give me cord, or knife, or poison;
Some upright justicer!⁶ Thou, king, send out
For tortures ingenious: it is I
That all the abhorred things o' the earth amend
By being worse than they. I am Posthumus,
That kill'd thy daughter:—villain like, I lie;
That caus'd a lesser villain than myself
A sacrilegious thief, to do't:—the temple
Of virtue was she; yea, and she herself.⁷
Spit, and throw stones, cast mire upon me, set
The dogs o' the street to bay me: every villain
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus; and
Be villany less than 'twas!—O, Imogen!
My queen, my life, my wife! O, Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen!

Imo.

Peace, my lord; hear, hear—

Post. Shall's have a play of this? Thou scornful page,

There lie thy part.

[Striking her; she falls.]

Pis. O, gentlemen, help, help,
Mine, and your mistress:—O, my lord Posthumus!
You ne'er kill'd Imogen till now:—Help, help!—
Mine honour'd lady!

Cym. Does the world go round?

Post. How comes these staggers⁸ on me?

Pis. Wake, my mistress!

Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me

To death with mortal joy.

Pis. How fares my mistress?

Imo. O, get thee from my sight;
Thou gav'st me poison: dangerous fellow, hence!
Breathe not where princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen!

Pis. Lady,
The gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gave you was not thought by me
A precious thing; I had it from the queen.

Cym. New matter still?

Imo. It poison'd me.

Cor. O, gods!

I left out one thing which the queen confess'd,
Which must approve thee honest: If Pisanio
Have, said she, given his mistress that confection
Which I gave him for a cordial, she is serv'd
As I would serve a rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius?

Cor. The queen, sir, very oft importun'd me
To temper⁹ poisons for her; still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge, only
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs
Of no esteem: I, dreading that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would cease
The present power of life: but, in short time,
All offices of nature should again
Do their due functions.—Have you ta'en of it?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. My boys,

There was our error.

Gui. This is sure, Fidele.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded lady from
you?

Think, that you are upon a rock; and now
Throw me again.¹⁰ [Embracing him.]

Shakspeare has the word thrice in King Lear. And Warner, in his Albion's England, 1602, b. x. ch. 45:—
'Precelling his progenitors, a justicer upright.'

⁷ 'Not only the temple of virtue, but virtue herself.'

⁸ i. e. this wild and delirious perturbation. It is still common to say 'it stagger'd me,' when we have been moved by any sudden emotion of surprise.

⁹ Mix, compound.

¹⁰ Imogen comes up to Posthumus as soon as she knows that the error is cleared up; and, hanging fondly

¹ To quail is to faint, or sink into dejection.

² Feature is hers used for proportion.

³ As for as if. So in The Winter's Tale:—

'—he utters them as he had eaten ballads.'

⁴ 'He had deserved it, were it carbuncled
Like Phœbus' car.' Antony and Cleopatra.

⁵ i. e. such marks of the chamber and pictures, as averred or confirmed my report.

⁶ Justicer was anciently used instead of justice.—

Post. Hang there like fruit, my soul,
Till the tree die!

Cym. How now, my flesh, my child?
What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me?

Imo. Your blessing, sir,
[Kneeling.]

Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye
not;

You had a motive for't. [To GUI. and ARV.]

Cym. My tears that fall,
Prove holy water on thee! Imogen,
Thy mother's dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't, my lord.

Cym. O, she was naught: and 'long of her it was,
That we meet here so strangely: But her son
Is gone, we know not how, nor where.

Pis. My lord,

Now fear is from me, I'll speak troth. Lord Cloten,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn; foam'd at the mouth, and swore,

If I discover'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death: By accident,
I had a feigned letter of my master's
Then in my pocket; which directed him
To seek her on the mountains near to Milford;
Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments,
Which he inforc'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, and with oath to violate
My lady's honour: what became of him,
I further know not.

Gui. Let me end the story:

I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the gods forefend!

I would not thy good deeds should from my lips
Pluck a hard sentence: prythee, valiant youth,
Deny't again.

Gui. I have spoke it, and I did it.

Cym. He was a prince.

Gui. A most uncivil one: The wrongs he did me
Were nothing princelike; for he did provoke me
With language that would make me spurn the sea,
If it could roar so to me; I cut off his head;
And am right glad, he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorry for thee:

By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law: Thou art dead.

Imo. That headless man

I thought had been my lord.

Cym. Bind the offender,

And take him from our presence.

Bel. Stay, sir king:

This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyself; and hath
More of thee merited than a band of Clotens
Had ever scar for.—Let his arms alone;

[To the Guard.]

They were not born for bondage.

Cym. Why, old soldier,

Wilt thou undo the worth thou art unpaid for,
By tasting of our wrath? How of descent
As good as we?

on him, says, not as upbraiding him, but with kindness and good humour, 'How could you treat your wife thus?' in that endearing tone which most readers, who are fathers and husbands, will understand, who will add poor to wife. She then adds, Now you know who I am, suppose we were on the edge of a precipice, and throw me from you; meaning, in the same endearing irony, to say, I am sure it is as impossible for you to be intentionally unkind to me, as it is for you to kill me. Perhaps some very wise persons may smile at part of this note; but however much black-letter books may be necessary to elucidate some parts of Shakspeare, there are others which require some acquaintance with those familiar pages of the book of Nature:

'Which learning may not understand,
And wisdom may disdain to hear.' Pyc.

1 The consequence is taken for the whole action; by tasting is by forcing us to make thee to taste.

2 As there is no reason to imagine that Belarius had assumed the appearance of being older than he really

Arv. In that he spake too far.

Cym. And thou shalt die for't.

Bel. We will die all three:

But I will prove, that two of us are as good
As I have given out him.—My sons, I must,
For mine own part, unfold a dangerous speech,
Though, haply, well for you.

Arv. Your danger is Ours.

Gui. And our good his.

Bel. Have at it, then.—
By leave;—Thou hadst, great king, a subject, who Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him? he is
A banish'd traitor.

Bel. He it is, that hath Assun'd this age: a banish'd man;
I know not how, a traitor.

Cym. Take him hence;
The whole world shall not save him.

Bel. Not too hot,
First pay me for the nursing of thy sons;
And let it be confiscate all so soon
As I have receiv'd it.

Cym. Nursing of my sons?

Bel. I am too blunt and saucy: Here's my knee;
Ere I arise, I will prefer my sons;
Then, spare not the old father. Mighty sir,
These two young gentlemen, that call me father,
And think they are my sons, are none of mine;
They are the issue of your loins, my liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How! my issue?

Bel. So sure as you your father's. I, old Morgan,
Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd:
Your pleasure was my mere offence, my punishment

Itself, and all my treason; that I suffer'd,
Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes
(For such, and so they are) these twenty year
Have I train'd up: those arts they have, as I Could put into them; my breeding was, sir, as Your highness knows. Their nurse, Euriphile,
Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children
Upon my banishment: I mov'd her to't;
Having receiv'd the punishment before,
For that which I did then: Beaten for loyalty
Excited me to treason: Their dear loss,
The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shap'd
Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious sir,
Here are your sons again; and I must lose
Two of the sweet'st companions in the world:—
The benedictions of these covering heavens
Fall on their heads like dew! for they are worthy
To inlay heaven with stars.⁴

Cym. Thou weep'st, and speak'st
The service, that you three have done, is more
Unlike than this thou tell'st: I lost my children;
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A pair of worthier sons.

Bel. Be pleas'd a while.—

This gentleman, whom I call Polydore,
Most worthy prince, as yours, is true Guiderius;
This gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus,
Your younger princely son; he, sir, was lapp'd
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand was, it must have a reference to the different appearance which he now makes in comparison with that when Cymbeline last saw him.

3 The old copy reads 'neere offence;' the emendation is by Mr. Tyrwhitt. Belarius means to say 'My crime, my punishment, and all the treason that I committed, originated in, and were founded on, your caprice only.'

4 'Take him and cut him into little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,' &c.
Romeo and Juliet.

5 'Thy tears give testimony to the sincerity of thy relation; and I have the less reason to be incredulous, because the actions which you have done within my knowledge are more incredible than the story which you relate.' The king reasons very justly—Johnson.

Of his queen mother, which, for more probation,
I can with ease produce.

Cym. Guiderius had
Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star:
It was a mark of wonder.

Bel. This is he;
Who hath upon him still that natural stamp;
It was wise nature's end in the donation,
To be his evidence now.

Cym. O, what am I
A mother to the birth of three? Ne'er mother
Rejoic'd deliverance more:—Bless'd may you be,
That after this strange starting from your orbs,
You may reign in them now!—O, Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a kingdom.

Imo. No, my lord;
I have got two worlds by't.—O, my gentle brother,
Have we thus met? O, never say hereafter,
But I am truest speaker: you call'd me brother,
When I was but your sister; I you brothers,
When you were so indeed.

Cym. Did you e'er meet?
Imo. Ay, my good lord.

Gui. And at first meeting lov'd;
Continued so, until we thought he died.

Cor. By the queen's dram she swallow'd.

Cym. O, rare instinct!
When shall I hear all through? This fierce¹ abridg-
ment

Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in.²—Where? how liv'd
you?

And when came you to serve our Roman captive?
How parted with your brothers? how first met
them?

Why fled you from the court? and whither? These,
And your three motives³ to the battle, with
I know not how much more, should be demanded;
And all the other by-dependencies,
From chance to chance; but nor the time, nor
place,

Will serve our long intergatories.⁴ See,
Posthumus anchors upon Imogen;
And she, like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting
Each object with a joy; the counterchange
Is severally in all. Let's quit this ground,
And smoke the temple with our sacrifices.—
Thou art my brother; So we'll hold thee ever.

[To BELARIUS.
Imo. You are my father too; and did relieve me,
To see this gracious season.

Cym. All o'erjoy'd
Save these in bonds; let them be joyful too,
For they shall taste our comfort.

Imo. My good master,
I will yet do you service.

Luc. Happy be you!
Cym. The forlorn soldier, that so nobly fought,
He would have well becom'd this place, and grac'd
The thankings of a king.

Post. I am, sir,
The soldier that did company these three
In poor beseeching: 'twas a fitment for

The purpose I then follow'd;—That I was he, Speak, Iachimo; I had you down, and might Have made you finish.

Iach. I am down again: [Kneeling
But now my heavy conscience sinks my knee,
As then your force did. Take that life, 'beseech
you,

Which I so often owe: but, your ring first
And here the bracelet of the truest princess,
That ever swore her faith.

Post. Kneel not to me;
The power that I have on you, is to spare you;
The malice towards you, to forgive you: Live,
And deal with others better.

Cym. Nobly doom'd:
We'll learn our freeness of a son-in-law;
Pardon's the word to all.

Arv. You help us, sir,
As you did mean indeed to be our brother;
Joy'd are we, that you are.

Post. Your servant, princes.—Good my lord of Rome,

Call forth your soothsayer: As I slept, methought,
Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back,
Appear'd to me, with other spritely shows⁵
Of mine own kindred: when I wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection⁶ of it; let him show
His skill in the construction.

Luc. Philarmonus,— Sooth. Here, my good lord.

Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Sooth. [Reads.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be lopp'd branches, which, being dead many years shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow; then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty.

Thou, Leonatus, art the lion's whelp;
The fit and apt construction of thy name,
Being Leo-natus, doth import so much:
The piece of tender air, thy virtuous daughter,
[To CYMBELINE.

Which we call mollis aer; and mollis aer
We term it mulier: which mulier I divine,
Is this most constant wife: who, even now,
Answering the letter of the oracle,
Unknown to you, unsought, were clipp'd about
With this most tender air.

Cym. This hath some seeming.
Sooth. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline,
Personates thee; and thy lopp'd branches point
Thy two sons forth: who, by Belarius stolen,
For many years thought dead, are now reviv'd,
To the majestic cedar join'd; whose issue
Promises Britain peace and plenty.

Cym. Well,
My peace we will begin:—And, Caius Lucius,
Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar,
And to the Roman empire; promising
To pay our wonted tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked queen;
Whom heavens, in justice (both on her and hers,)
Have laid most heavy hand.⁸

So the Queen in Hamlet says:—

'— Her speech is nothing,
Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection.'

Whose containing means the contents of which.

⁷ It should apparently be, 'By peace we will begin.
The Soothsayer says, that the label promised to Britain
'peace and plenty.' To which Cymbeline replies, 'We will begin with peace, to fulfil the prophecy.'

⁸ I. e. have laid most heavy hand on. Many such elliptical passages are found in Shakspeare. Thus in The Rape of Lucrece:—

'Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on whom he looks [on] gainst law and duty.'
So in The Winter's Tale:—

'— The queen is spotless
In that which you accuse her [of].'

² I. e. which ought to be rendered distinct by an ample narrative.

³ 'Your three motives' means 'the motives of you three.' So in Romeo and Juliet, 'both our remedies means 'the remedy for us both.'

⁴ Intergatories was frequently used for interrogatories, and consequently as a word of only five syllables. In The Merchant of Venice, near the end, it is also thus used:—

'And charge us there upon intergatories.'

⁵ Spritely shows are groups of sprites, ghostly appearances.

⁶ A collection is a corollary, a consequence deduced from premises. So in Davies's poem on The Immortality of the Soul:—

'When she from sundry arts one skill doth draw;
Gath'ring from divers sights one act of war;

From many cases like one rule of law:

These her collections, not the senses are.'

South. The fingers of the powers above do tune
The harmony of this peace. The vision
Which I made known to Lucius, ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd: For the Roman eagle,
From south to west on wing soaring aloft,
Lessen'd herself, and in the beams o' the sun
So vanish'd: which foreshow'd our princely eagle,
The imperial Caesar, should again unite
His favour with the radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines here in the west.

Cym. Laud we the gods;
And let our crooked smokes climb to their nostrils
From our bless'd altars! Publish we this peace
To all our subjects. Set we forward: Let
A Roman and a British ensign wave
Friendly together: so through Lud's town march:
And in the temple of great Jupiter
Our peace we'll ratify: seal it with feasts.—
Set on there:—Never was a war did cease,
Ere bloody hands were wash'd, with such a peace.

[Exeunt.]

THIS play has many just sentiments, some natural dialogues, and some pleasing scenes, but they are obtained at the expense of much incongruity. To remark the folly of the fiction, the absurdity of the conduct, the confusion of the names and manners of different times, and the impossibility of the events in any system of life, were to waste criticism upon unresisting imbecility, upon faults too evident for detection, and too gross for aggravation.* JOHNSON.

* Johnson's remark on the gross incongruity of names, and manners in this play is just, but it was the common error of the age; in The Wife for a Month, of Beaumont and Fletcher, we have Frederick and Alphonso among a host of Greek names, not to mention the firing of a pistol by Demetrius Poliorcetes in The Humorous Lieutenant.—Pyc.

It is hardly necessary to point out the extreme injus-

Shall kindly lend his little aid,
With hoary moss, and gather'd flowers,
To deck the ground where thou art laid.*

tice of the unfounded severity of Johnson's animadversions upon this exquisite drama. The antidote will be found in the reader's appeal to his own feelings after reiterated perusal. It is with satisfaction I refer to the more just and discriminative opinion of a foreign critic, to whom every lover of Shakspeare is deeply indebted, cited in the preliminary remarks. S. W. S.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

ON what principle the editors of the first complete edition of Shakspeare's works admitted this play into their volume, cannot now be ascertained. The most probable reason that can be assigned is, that he wrote a few lines in it, or gave some assistance to the author in revising it, or in some way or other aided in bringing it forward on the stage. The tradition mentioned by Ravenscroft, in the time of King James II., warrants us in making one or other of these suppositions. 'I have been told (says he, in his preface to an alteration of this play, published in 1687,) by some anciently conversant with the stage, that it was not originally his, but brought by a private author to be acted, and he only gave some master touches to one or two of the principal parts.'

'A booke, entitled A Noble Roman Historie of Titus Andronicus,' was entered at Stationers' Hall, by John Danter, Feb. 6, 1593-4. This was undoubtedly the play, as it was printed in that year (according to Langbaine, who alone appears to have seen the first edition,) and acted by the servants of the Earls of Pembroke, Derby, and Sussex. It is observable that in the entry no author's name is mentioned, and that the play was originally performed by the same company of comedians who exhibited the old drama, entitled The Contention of the Houses of Yorke and Lancaster, The old Taming of a Shrew, and Marlowe's King Edward II.; by whom not one of Shakspeare's plays is said to have been performed.

From Ben Jonson's Induction to Bartholomew Fair, 1614, we learn that Andronicus had been exhibited twenty-five or thirty years before; that is, according to the lowest computation, in 1559; or, taking a middle period, which is perhaps more just, in 1587.

'To enter into a long disquisition to prove this piece not to have been written by Shakspeare would be an idle waste of time. To those who are not conversant with his writings, if particular passages were examined, more words would be necessary than the subject is worth; those who are well acquainted with his works cannot entertain a doubt on the question. I will, however, mention one mode by which it may be easily ascertained. Let the reader only peruse a few lines of Appius and Virginia, Titus and Lucius, and the Battle of Alcazar, Jeronimo, Sellmus Emperor of the Turks, The Wounds of Civil War, The Wars of Cyrus, Locrine, Arden of Feversham, King Edward II., The Spanish Tragedy, Solyman and Perseda, King Lear, the old King John, or any other of the pieces that were exhibited before the time of Shakspeare, and he will at once perceive that Titus Andronicus was coined in the same mint.

'The testimony of Meres, [who attributes it to Shakspeare in his Palladis Tamia, or the Second Part of Wits Common Wealth, 1598,] remains to be considered. His enumerating this among Shakspeare's plays may be accounted for in the same way in which we may account for its being printed by his fellow comedians in the first folio edition of his works. Meres was, in 1598, when his book first appeared, intimately connected with Drayton, and probably acquainted with some of the dramatic poets of the time, from some or other of whom he might have heard that Shakspeare interested himself about this tragedy, or had written a few lines for the author. The internal evidence furnished by the piece itself, and proving it not to have been the production of Shakspeare, greatly outweighs any single testimony on the other side. Meres might have been misinformed, or inconsiderately have given credit to the rumour of the day. In short, the high antiquity of the piece, its entry on the Stationers' books, and being afterwards printed without the name of Shakspeare, its being performed by the servants of Lord Pembroke, &c.; the stately march of the versification, the whole colour of the composition, its resemblance to several of our most ancient dramas, the dissimilitude of the style from our author's undoubted plays, and the tradition mentioned by Ravenscroft when some of his contemporaries had not long been dead (for Lowin and Taylor, two of his fellow comedians, were alive a few years before the Restoration, and Sir Wm. Davenant did not die till April, 1669;) all these circumstances combined, prove with irresistible force that the play of Titus Andronicus has been erroneously ascribed to Shakspeare.—Malone.

Mr. Malone, in the preceding note, has expressed his opinion that Shakspeare may have written a few lines in this play, or given some assistance to the author in revising it. Upon no other ground than this has it any claim to a place among our poet's dramas: Those passages in which he supposed the hand of Shakspeare may be traced, he marked with inverted commas. This system of seizing upon every line possessed of merit, as belonging of right to our great dramatist, is scarcely doing justice to his contemporaries; and resembles one of the arguments which Theobald has used in his preface to The Double Falsehood:—"My partiality for Shakspeare makes me wish that every thing which is good or pleasing in our tongue had been owing to his pen." Many of the writers of that day were men of high poetical talent; and many individual speeches are found in plays, which, as plays, are of no value, which would not have been in any way unworthy of Shakspeare himself; of whom, Dr. Johnson has observed, that "his real power is not shown in the splendour of particular passages, but by the progress of the fable and the tenour of his dialogue; and that he that tries to recommend him by select quotations will succeed like the pedant in Hierocles, who, when he offered his house to sale, carried a brick in his pocket as a specimen." Dr. Ferriar has ascribed Titus Andronicus to Kyd, and placed it on a level with Lo crine; but it appears to be much more in the style of Marlowe. His fondness for accumulating horrors upon other occasions, will account for the sanguinary character of this play; and it would not, I think, be difficult to show by extracts from his other performances, that there is not a line in it which he was not fully capable of writing.—Boswell.

The author, whoever he was, might have borrowed the story, &c. from an old ballad which is entered in the books of the Stationers' Company immediately after the play to John Danter, Feb. 6, 1593: and again entered to Tho. Pavier, April 19, 1602. The reader will find it in Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. i. Painter, in his Palace of Pleasure, tom. ii. speaks of the story of Titus as well known, and particularly mentions the cruelty of Tamora. And there is an allusion to it in A Knack to Know a Knave, 1594.

I have given the reader a specimen (in the notes) of the changes made in this play by Ravenscroft; and may add, that when the Empress stabs her child, he has supplied the Moor with the following lines:—

"She has undone me, ev'n in mine own art,
Outdone me in murder, kill'd her own child;
Give it me, I'll eat it."

'It rarely happens that a dramatic piece is altered with the same spirit that it was written; but Titus Andronicus has undoubtedly fallen into the hands of one whose feelings and imagination were congenial with those of the author.

'It was evidently the work of one who was acquainted with Greek and Roman literature. It is likewise deficient in such internal marks as distinguish the tragedies of Shakspeare from those of other writers; I mean that it presents no struggles to introduce the vein of humour so constantly interwoven with the business of his serious dramas. It can neither boast of his striking excellencies, nor of his acknowledged defects; for it offers not a single interesting situation, a natural character, or a string of quibbles, from first to last. That Shakspeare should have written without commanding our attention, moving our passions, or sporting with words, appears to me as improbable as that he should have studiously avoided dissyllable and trisyllable terminations in this play and in no other.

'Let it be likewise remembered that this piece was not published with the name of Shakspeare till after his death. The quartos [of 1600] and 1611 are anonymous.

'Could the use of particular terms, employed in no other of his pieces, be admitted as an argument that he was not its author, more than one of these might be found; among which is palliant for robe, a Latinism, which I have not met with elsewhere in any English writer, whether ancient or modern; though it must have originated from the mint of a scholar. I may add, that Titus Andronicus will be found on examination to contain a greater number of classical allusions, &c. than are scattered over all the rest of the performances on which the seal of Shakspeare is indubitably fixed.—Not to write any more about and about this suspected thing, let me observe, that the glitter of a few passages in it has, perhaps, misled the judgment of those who ought to have known that both sentiment and description are more easily produced than the interesting fabric of a tragedy. Without these advantages many plays have succeeded; and many have failed, in which they have been dealt about with lavish profusion. It does not follow that he who can carve a frieze with minuteness, elegance, and ease, has a conception equal to the extent, propriety, and grandeur of a temple.

'Whatever were the motives of Heming and Condell for admitting this tragedy among those of Shakspeare, all it has gained by their favour is, to be delivered down to posterity with repeated remarks of contempt—a Thersites babbling among heroes, and introduced only to be derided.'—Steevens.

SCENE I. Rome. Before the Capitol. The Tomb of the Andronici appearing; the Tribunes and Senators aloft, as in the Senate. Enter, below, SATURNINUS and his Followers, on one side; and BASSIANUS and his Followers on the other; with Drum and Colours.

Saturninus.

Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms;

And, countrymen, my loving followers,
Plead my successive title¹ with your swords:
I am his first-born son, that was the last
That wore the imperial diadem of Rome;
Then let my father's honours live in me,
Nor wrong mine age² with this indignity.

1 I e. my title to the succession. 'The empire being elective and not successive, the emperors in being made profit of their own times.'—Raleigh.

Bas. Romans,—friends, followers, favourers of my right,—

If ever Bassianus, Cæsar's son,
Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome,
Keep then this passage to the Capitol;
And suffer not dishonour to approach
The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate,
To justice, continence, and nobility:
But let desert in pure election shine;
And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS aloft, with the Crown.

Mar. Princes that strive by factions, and by friends,

Ambitiously for rule and empery,—
Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand
A special party, have, by common voice,
In election for the Roman empery,
Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius,
For many good and great deserts to Rome;
A nobler man, a braver warrior,
Lives not this day within the city walls:
He by the senate is accited¹ home,
From weary wars against the barbarous Goths;
That, with his sons, a terror to our foes,
Hath yok'd a nation strong, train'd up in arms.
Ten years are spent, since first he undertook
This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms
Our enemies' pride: Five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
In coffins from the field;
And now at last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms.
Let us entreat,—By honour of his name,
Whom, worthily, you would have now succeed,
And in the Capitol and senate's right,
Whom you pretend to honour and adore,—
That you withdraw you, and abate your strength;
Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should,
Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!

Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
In thy uprightness and integrity,
And so I love and honour thee and thine,
Thy nobler brother Titus, and his sons,
And her to whom my thoughts are humbled all,
Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends;
And to my fortunes, and the people's favour,
Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exeunt the Followers of BASSIANUS.]

Sat. Friends that have been thus forward in my right,

I thank you all, and here dismiss you all;
And to the love and favour of my country
Commit myself, my person, and the cause.

[Exeunt the Followers of SATURNINUS.]

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
As I am confident and kind to thee.—
Open the gates, and let me in.

Bas. Tribunes! and me, a poor competitor.

[SAT. and BAS. go into the Capitol, and exeunt with Senators, MARCUS, &c.]

SCENE II. The same. Enter a Captain, and others.

Cap. Romans, make way; the good Andronicus,
Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honour and with fortune is return'd,
From where he circumscribed with his sword,
And brought to yoke the enemies of Rome.

Flourish of Trumpets, &c. Enter MUTIUS and MARTIUS; after them two Men bearing a Coffin covered with black; then QUINTUS and LUCIUS. After them, TITUS ANDRONICUS; and then TA-

MORA, with ALARBUS, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, AARON, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and People following. The Bearers set down the Coffin, and TITUS speaks.

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!

Lo, as the bark that hath discharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-salute his country with his tears;
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.—
Thou great defender of this Capitol,²
Stand gracious to the rights that we intend!—
Romans, of five and twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that king Priam had,
Behold the poor remains alive, and dead!
These, that survive, let Rome reward with love;
These that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors:
Here Goths have given me leave to sheath my sword.

Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?—
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

[The Tomb is opened.]

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!
O, sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more?

Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,
That we may hew his limbs, and, on a pile,
Ad manes fratrum sacrifice his flesh,
Before this earthly³ prison of their bones;
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.⁴

Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survives,
The eldest son of this distressed queen. [queror,

Tam. Stay, Roman brethren!—Gracious con-
Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion⁵ for her son:
And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O, think my son to be as dear to me.
Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs, and return,
Captive to thee, and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause?
O! if to fight for king and commonweal
Were piety in thine, it is in these.

Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood:
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods?

Draw near them then in being merciful:
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge;

Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born son.

Tit. Patient⁶ yourself, madam, and pardon me.
These are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld
Alive, and dead; and for their brethren slain,
Religiously they ask a sacrifice:

To this your son is mark'd; and die he must,
To appease their groaning shadows that are gone.

Luc. Away with him! and make a fire straight;
And with our swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbs, till they be clean consum'd.

[Exeunt LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS, with ALARBUS.

Tam. O, cruel, irreligious piety!

Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?

Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious Rome.

Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening look.

Then, madam, stand resolv'd; but hope withal,
The selfsame gods, that arm'd the queer of Troy

³ Earthly. Ed 1600.

With opportunity of sharp revenge
Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,¹
May favour Tamora, the queen of Goths,
(When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen,) To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MURTIUS, with their Swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd
Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd,
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky.
Remaineth nought, but to inter our brethren,
And with loud 'larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their souls.

[Trumpets sounded, and the Coffins laid in the Tomb.]

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons;
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in rest,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps!
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned grudges; here are no storms,
No noise, but silence and eternal sleep:

Enter LAVINIA.

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons!

Lav. In peace and honour live Lord Titus long:
My noble lord and father, live in fame!

Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears
I render, for my brethren's obsequies:
And at thy feet I kneel with tears of joy
Shed on the earth, for thy return to Rome:
O, bless me here with thy victorious hand,
Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome, thou hast thus lovingly reserv'd
The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!—
Lavinia, live; outlive thy father's days,
And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!²

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, SATURNINUS, BASIANUS, and others.

Mar. Long live Lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome!

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus.

Mar. And welcome, nephews, from successful wars,

You that survive, and you that sleep in fame.
Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,
That in your country's service drew your swords:
But safer triumph is this funeral pomp,
That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness,³
And triumphs over chance, in honour's bed.—

Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune, and their trust,
This palliant⁴ of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire,
With these our late deceased emperor's sons:

Be candidatus then, and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits,
Than his, that shakes for age and feebleness:
What? should I don⁵ this robe, and trouble you?
Be chosen with proclamations to-day;

To-morrow, yield up rule resign my life,
And set abroad new business for you all?
Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And buried one and twenty valiant sons,
Knighted in field, slain manfully in arms,
In right and service of their noble country:
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world:
Upright he held it, lords, that held it last.

¹ Theobald says that we should read, 'in her tent,' i. e. in the tent where she and the other Trojan women were kept; for thither Hecuba by a wile had decoyed Polymnestor, in order to perpetrate her revenge. Steevens objects to Theobald's conclusion, that the writer gleaned this circumstance from the Hecuba of Euripides, and says, 'he may have been misled by the passage in Ovid—"vadtat artificem;" and therefore took it for granted she found him in his tent.' Yet on an-

Mar. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the empery.

Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?—

Tit. Patience, Prince Saturnine.

Sat. Romans, do me right;—

Patricians, draw your swords, and sheath them not Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor:—
Andronicus, 'would thou wert shipp'd to hell
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

Tit. Content thee, prince; I will restore to thee
The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves.

Bas. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,
But honour thee, and will do till I die;
My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,
I will most thankful be: and thanks, to men
Of noble minds, is honourable meed.

Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes here,
I ask your voices, and your suffrages;
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Titib. To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you: and this suit I make,
That you create your emperor's eldest son,
Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope,
Reflect on Rome, as Titan's rays on earth,
And ripen justice in this commonweal:
Then if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say,—Long live our emperor!

Mar. With voices and applause of every sort,
Patricians, and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus, Rome's great emperor;
And say,—Long live our emperor Saturnine!

[A long Flourish.]

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done
To us in our election this day,

I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness:
And, for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name, and honourable family,

Lavinia will I make my empress,
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse:
Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and, in this match,
I hold me highly honour'd of your grace:
And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,—
King and commander of our commonweal,
The wide world's emperor,—do I consecrate
My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners;
Presents well worthy Rome's imperial lord:
Receive them, then, the tribute that I owe,
Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,
Rome shall record; and, when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor;

[To TAMORA.]

To him, that for your honour and your state,

Will use you nobly, and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew.—
Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance;
Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer,

Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome:
Princely shall be thy usage every way.

Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes: Madam, he comforts you, other occasion he observes, that the writer has a plain allusion to the Ajax of Sophocles, of which no translation was extant in the time of Shakespeare.

² To 'outlive an eternal date' is, though, not philosophical, yet poetical sense. He wishes that her life may be longer than his, and her praise longer than fame.

³ The maxim alluded to is, that no man can be pronounced happy before his death.

⁴ A robe.

⁵ I. e. do on, put it on.

Can make you greater than the queen of Goths.—
Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?

Lav. Not I, my lord; sith true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia.—Romans, let us go:
Ransomless here we set our prisoners free:

Proclaim our honours, lords, with trump and drum.
Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.

[Seizing LAVINIA.]
Tit. How, sir? Are you in earnest then, my lord?

Bas. Ay, noble Titus; and resolv'd withal
To do myself this reason and this right.

[The Emperor courts TAMORA in dumb show.
Mar. Sum cuique is our Roman justice:

This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Traitors, avaunt! Where is the emperor's guard?

Treason, my lord; Lavinia is surpris'd.

Sat. Surpris'd! By whom?

Bas. By him that justly may
Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.

[Exeunt MARCUS and BASSANIUS, with LAVINIA.]

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exeunt LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.]

Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.

Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What, villain boy!

Bar'r at me my way in Rome! [Tit. kills MUT.]

Mut. Help, Lucius, help.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust; and, more than so,
In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine:

My sons would never so dishonour me:

Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will: but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawful promis'd love. [Exit.]

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of the stock:

I'll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once;

Thee never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,

Confederates all thus to dishonour me.

Was there none else in Rome to make a stale of,

But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,

Agree these deeds with that foul brag of thine,

That said'st, I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O, monatrous! what reproachful words are these?

Sat. But go thy ways; go, give that changing piece

To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;

One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,

To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Goths,—

That, like the stately Phœbe 'mongst her nymphs,

Dost overshadow the gallant'st days of Rome,—

If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,

Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,

And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?

And here I swear by all the Roman gods,—

1 It was a pity to part a couple who seem to have corresponded in disposition so exactly as Saturninus and Lavinia. Saturninus, who has just promised to espouse her, already wishes he were to choose again; and she who was engaged to Bassianus (whom she afterward marries) expresses no reluctance when her father gives her to Saturninus. Her subsequent raillery to Tamora is of so coarse a nature, that if her tongue had been all she was condemned to lose, perhaps the author (whoever he was) might have escaped censure on the score of poetic justice.—Steevens.

2 A state here signifies a stalking-horse. To make a state of any one seems to have meant 'to make them an object of mockery.'

Sith priest and holy water are so near,
And tapers burn so bright, and every thing
In readiness for Hymeneus stand,—
I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place
I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I
swear,

If Saturnine advance the queen of Goths,
She will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon:—Lords, accompany

Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,

Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine,

Whose wisdom hath her iltortune conquered:

There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

[*Exeunt SATURNINUS, and his Followers; TA-
MORA, and her Sons; AARON and Goths.*]

Tit. I am not bid'd to wait upon this bride;—

Titus, when wert thou wont to walk alone,

Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Mar. O, Titus, see, O, see, what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,—

Nor thou, nor these confederates in the deed

That hath dishonour'd all our family;

Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial, as becomes;

Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb.

This monument five hundred years hath stood,

Which I have sumptuously re-edified:

Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors,

Repose in fame, none basely slain in brawls:—

Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Mar. My lord, this is impiety in you:

My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him;

He must be buried with his brethren.

Quin. Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall! What villain was it spoke that word?

Quin. He that would vouch't in any place but here.

Tit. What, would you bury him in my despite?

Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee

To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,

And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast wounded:

My foes I do repute you every one;

So trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Mart. He is not with himself: let us withdraw.

Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.

[MARCUS and the Sons of TITUS kneel.]

Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead.

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature speak.

Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

Mar. Renowned Titus, more than half my soul,—

Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us all,—

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter

His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,

That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.

Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous.

The Greeks, upon advice, did bury Ajax

That slew himself; and wise Laertes' son

Did graciously plead for his funerals.³

3 To ruffle was to be tumultuous and turbulent. Thus Baret:—'A trouble or ruffling in the common-weale procolla.'

4 I. e. invited.

5 'He is not with himself.' This is much the same sort of phrase as he is beside himself, a genuine English idiom.

6 This passage alone would sufficiently convince me that the play before us was the work of one who was conversant with the Greek tragedies in their original language. We have here a plain allusion to the Ajax of Sophocles, of which no translation was extant in the

Let not young Mutius, then, that was thy joy,
Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise :—
The dismal'st day is this, that e'er I saw,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome !—
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

[MUTIUS is put into the Tomb.]

Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends,

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb !—

All. No man shed tears for noble Mutius ;
He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.

Mar. My lord,—to step out of these dreary dumps,—

How comes it, that the subtle queen of Goths
Is of a sudden thus advanc'd in Rome ?

Tit. I know not, Marcus ; but, I know, it is ;
Whether by device, or no, the heavens can tell :

Is she not then beholden to the man

That brought her for this high good turn so far ?

Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

Flourish. Re-enter, at one side, SATURNINUS, attended ; TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, and AARON : at the other, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA,
and others.

Sat. So, Bassianus, you have play'd your prize ;²
God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride.

Bas. And you of yours, my lord : I say no more,
Nor wish no less ; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,
Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.

Bas. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own,
My true betrothed love, and now my wife ?

But let the laws of Rome determine all ;

Meanwhile, I am possess'd of that is mine.

Sat. 'Tis good, sir ; You are very short with us ;
But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.

Bas. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life.

Only this much I give your grace to know,
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,

This noble gentleman, Lord Titus here,

Is in opinion, and in honour wrong'd ;

That, in the rescue of Lavinia,

With his own hand did slay his youngest son,

In zeal to you, and highly mov'd to wrath

To be controll'd in that he frankly gave :

Receive him then to favour, Saturnine ;

That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,

A father, and a friend, to thee, and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds ;

'Tis thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me :

Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,

How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine !

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora

Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,

Then hear me speak indifferently for all ;

And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What ! madam ! be dishonour'd openly,

And basely put it up without revenge ?

Tam. Not so, my lord ; The gods of Rome fore-fend,

I should be author to dishonour you !

But, on mine honour, dare I undertake

For good Lord Titus' innocence in all

Whose fury, not dissembled, speaks his griefs :

Then, at my suit, look graciously on him :

Lose not so noble a friend on vain suppose.

Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.

My lord, be rul'd by me, be won at last,

Dissemble all your griefs and discontents :

You are but newly planted in your throne ;

Least then the people, and patricians too, } Aside.

time of Shakspeare. In that piece Agamemnon consents at last to allow Ajax the rites of sepulture, and Ulysses is the pleader whose arguments prevail in favour of his remains.—Steevens.

I This is evidently a translation of the distich of Ennius :—

'Nemo me lacrimis decorat : nec funera fletu
Fasch quur ? volito vivu' per ora virum.'

Upon a just survey, take Titus' part
And so supplant us for ingratitude,
(Which Rome reputes to be a heinous sin,)
Yield at entreats, and then let me alone :
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family,
The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sued for my dear son's life ;
And make them know, what 'tis to make a
queen

Kneel in the streets, and beg for grace in vain.

Come, come, sweet emperor,—Come, Andronicus,
Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart
That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise ; my empress hath prevail'd,

Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord :

These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,

A Roman now adopted happily,

And must advise the emperor for his good.

This day all quarrels die, Andronicus ;—

And let it be mine honour, good my lord,

That I have reconcil'd your friends and you.—

For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass'd

My word and promise to the emperor,

That you will be more mild and tractable.—

And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia ;

By my advice, all humbled on your knees,

You shall ask pardon of his majesty.

Luc. We do ; and vow to heaven, and to his highness,

That, what we did, was mildly, as we might,

Tend'ring our sister's honour, and our own.

Mar. That on mine honour here I do protest.

Sat. Away, and talk not ; trouble us no more.—

Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be

friends :

The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace ;

I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.

Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's here,

And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,

I do remit these young men's heinous faults.

Stand up.

Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,

I found a friend ; and sure as death I swore,

I would not part a bachelor from the priest.

Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,

You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends :

This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.

Tit. To-morrow, an I please your majesty,

To hunt the panther and the hart with me,

With horn and hound, we'll give your grace bon jour.

Sat. Be it so, Titus, and gramercy too. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.³SCENE I. Rome. Before the Palace. Enter

AARON.

Aar. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,

Safe out of fortune's shot : and sits aloft,

Secure of thunder's crack, or lightning's flash ;

Advanc'd above pale envy's threat'ning reach.

As when the golden sun salutes the morn,

And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,

Gallops the zodiac in his glistering coach,

And overlooks the highest-peering hills ;

So Tamora.—

Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait,

And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.

Then, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts

To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,

And mount her pitch ; whom thou in triumph long

Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains ;

And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes,

² To play a prize was a technical term in the ancient fencing schools.

³ In the quarto of 1600 the stage direction is 'Sound trumpets, manet Moore.' In the quarto of 1611 the direction is 'Manet Aaron,' and he is before made to enter with Tamora, though he says nothing. This scene ought to continue the first act.—Johnson.

Than is Prometheus tied to Caucasus.
 Away with slavish weeds, and servile thoughts!
 I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
 To wait upon this new-made emperess.
 To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,
 This goddess, this Semiramis;—this nymph,
 This siren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine,
 And see his shipwreck, and his commonweal's.
 Holloa! what storm is this?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS, braving.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge,

And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd;
 And may, for aught thou know'st, affected be.

Chi. Demetrius, thou dost overween in all:
 And so in this, to bear me down with braves.
 'Tis not the difference of a year, or two,
 Makes me less gracious, thee more fortunate:
 I am as able, and as fit, as thou,
 To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace;
 And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
 And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.

Aar. Clubs, clubs! these lovers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvis'd,
 Gave you a dancing-rapier¹ by your side,
 Are you so desperate grown, to threaten your friends?
 Go to; have your lath glued within your sheath
 Till you know better how to handle it.

Chi. Meanwhile, sir, with the little skill I have,
 Full well shalt thou perceive how much I dare.

Dem. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave? [They draw.]

Aar. Why, how now, lords?
 So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
 And maintain such a quarrel openly?
 Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge;
 I would not for a million of gold,
 The cause were known to them it most concerns:
 Nor would your noble mother, for much more,
 Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.
 For shame, put up.

Dem. Not I: till I have sheath'd
 My rapier in his bosom, and, withal,
 Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat,
 That he hath breath'd in my dishonour here.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd and full resolv'd,— Foul-spoken coward! that thunder'st with thy tongue,²

And with thy weapon nothing dar'st perform.

Aar. Away, I say.—
 Now by the gods, that warlike Goths adore,
 This petty brabble will undo us all.—
 Why, lords,—and think you not how dangerous
 It is to jut upon a prince's right?
 What, is Lavinia then become so loose,
 Or Bassianus so degenerate,
 That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd,
 Without controlment, justice, or revenge?
 Young lords, beware!—an should the empress know
 This discord's ground, the music would not please.

1 This was the usual outcry for assistance, when any riot in the street happened.

2 It appears that a light kind of sword, more for show than use, was worn by gentlemen, even when daucing, in the reign of Elizabeth. So in All's Well that Ends Well—

—no sword worn
 But one to dance with.

And Greene in his Quip for an Upstart Courtier:—“One of them carrying his cutting sword of choller the other his dancing-rapier of delight.”

3 This phrase appears to have been adopted from Virgil, Æneid xl. 383:—

“Prolinde tonu eloquio, solitum tibi—”

4 Chiron appears to mean, ‘that, had he a thousand lives, such was his love for Lavinia, he would propose to venture them all to achieve her.’ Thus in the Taming of the Shrew:—

“Tranio, I burn, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio, If I achieve not this young modest girl.”

5 These two lines occur, with very little variation, in the First Part of King Henry VI.:—

“*She's a beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
 She is a woman, therefore to be won.*”

Chi. I care not, I, knew she and all the world;
 I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:

Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in Rome
 How furious and impatient they be,
 And cannot brook competitors in love?
 I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
 By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths
 Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love.⁴

Aar. To achieve her!—How?

Dem. Why mak'st thou it so strange?
 She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;
 She is a woman, therefore may be won;
 She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd.
 What, man! more water glideth by the mill⁵
 Than wots the miller of; and easy it is
 Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know:
 Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother,
 Better than he have yet worn Vulcan's badge.

Aar. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may.

Dem. Then why should he despair, that knows to court it

With words, fair looks, and liberality?

What, hast thou not full often struck a doe,
 And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?⁶

Aar. Why, then, it seems, some certain snatch, or so,

Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd.

Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aar. Would, you had hit it too;
 Then should not we be tir'd with this ado.

Why, hark ye, hark ye,—And are you such fools,
 To square⁷ for this? Would it offend you then
 That both should speed?

Chi. Ffaith, not me.

Dem. Nor me,
 So I were one.

Aar. For shame, be friends; and join for that you jar.

‘Tis policy and stratagem must do

That you affect; and so must you resolve;
 That what you cannot, as you would, achieve,
 You must perforce accomplish as you may.

Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaste
 Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.

A speedier course than lingering languishment
 Must we pursue, and I have found the path.

My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;

There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:

The forest walks are wide and spacious;

And many unfrequented plots there are,

Fitted by kind⁸ for rape and villany:

Single you thither then this dainty doe,

And strike her home by force, if not by words:

This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.

Come, come, our empress, with her sacred⁹ wit,

To villany and vengeance consecrate,

Will we acquaint with all that we intend;

This circumstance has given rise to a conjecture that the author of the present play was also the writer of the original King Henry VI. Ritson says that he ‘should take Kyd to have been the author of Titus Andronicus, because he seems to delight in murders and scraps of Latin, though it must be confessed that in the first of those good qualities Marlowe's Jew of Malta may fairly dispute precedence with the Spanish Tragedy.’

6 There is a Scottish proverb, ‘Mickle water goes by the miller when he sleeps.’ Non omnen molitor quæ fluit unda videt. The subsequent line is also a northern proverb, ‘It is safe taking a shive of a cut loaf.’

7 Mr. Holt is willing to infer that Titus Andronicus was one of Shakespeare's early performances, because the stratagems of the profession traditionally given to his youth seem here to have been fresh in the writer's mind. But when we consider how common allusions to sports of the field are in all the writers of that age there seems to be no real ground for the conclusion.

8 Quarrel.

9 By nature.

10 Sacred here signifies accursed; a Latinism.

And she shall file our engines with advice,¹
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, of ears :
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and dull ;
There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your
turns :

There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's eye,
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit fas aut nefas, till I find the stream

To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,
*Per Styga, per manes vehor.*² [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.³ A Forest near Rome. A Lodge seen at a distance. Horns, and cry of Hounds heard.
Enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with Hunters, &c.
MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray,
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green :
Uncouple here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And rouse the prince ; and ring a hunter's peal,
That all the court may echo with the noise.
Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To tend the emperor's person carefully :
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Horns wind a Peal. Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, and Attendants.

Tit. Many good morrows to your majesty ;—
Madam, to you as many and as good !—

I promised your grace a hunter's peal.

Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lords,
Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.

Bas. Lavinia, how say you ?

Lav.

I say, no ;

I have been broad awake two hours and more.

Sat. Come on, then, horse and chariots let us have,

And to our sport :—Madam, now shall ye see
Our Roman hunting.— [To TAMORA.]

Mar. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory top.

Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game

Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound,

But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A desert Part of the Forest. Enter
AARON, with a Bag of Gold.

Lar. He, that had wit, would think that I had none,

To bury so much gold under a tree,

And never after to inherit it.

Let him, that thinks of me so abjectly,

Know, that this gold must coin a stratagem ;

Which, cunningly effected, will beget

A very excellent piece of villany ;

And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,

[Hides the Gold.]

That have their alms out of the empress' chest.⁴

Enter TAMORA.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,⁵

¹ The allusion is to the operation of the file, which, by giving smoothness, facilitates the motion of the parts of an engine or piece of machinery.

² These scraps of Latin are taken, though not exactly, from some of Seneca's tragedies.

³ The division of this play into acts, which was first made in the folio of 1623, is improper. There is here an interval of action, and here the second act ought to have begun.—Johnson.

⁴ I. e. possess.

⁵ This is obscure. It seems to mean only, that they

When every thing doth make a gleeful boast ?

The birds chant melody on every bush ;

The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun

The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,

And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground :

Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,

And—whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds,

Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,

As if a double hunt were heard at once,—

Let us sit down and mark their yelling noise

And—after conflict, such as was suppos'd

The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy'd,

When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,

And certain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,—

We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,

Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber ;

Whiles hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,

Be unto us, as is a nurse's song

Of lullaby, to bring her babe asleep.

Aar. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,

Saturn is dominator over mine :

What signifies my deadly standing eye,

My silence, and my cloudy melancholy ?

My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls

Even as an adder, when she doth unroll

To do some fatal execution ?

No, madam, these are no venereal signs ;

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand

Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.

Hark, Tamora,—the empress of my soul,

Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee,

This is the day of doom for Bassianus ;

His Philomel⁶ must lose her tongue to-day

Thy sons make pillage of her chastity,

And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.

Seest thou this letter ? take it up, I pray thee,

And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll :—

Now question me no more, we are espied ;

Here comes a parcel⁷ of our hopeful booty,

Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life !

Aar. No more, great empress, Bassianus comes

Be cross with him ; and I'll go fetch thy sons

To back thy quarrels, whatsoever they be. [Exit.]

Enter BASSIANUS and LAVINIA.

Bas. Who have we here ? Rome's royal empress

Unfurnish'd of her well-beseeming troop ?

Or is it Dian, habited like her ;

Who hath abandoned her holy groves,

To see the general hunting in this forest ?

Tam. Saucy controller of our private steps !

Had I the power, that, some say, Dian had,

Thy temples should be planted presently

With horns, as was Actæon's ; and the hounds

Should drive upon thy new transformed limbs,

Unmannerly intruder as thou art !

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,

'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in horning ;

And to be doubted, that your Moor and you

Are singled forth to try experiments :

Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-day !

'Tis pity, they should take him for a stag.

Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian⁸

Doth make your honour of his body's hue,

Spotted, detested, and abominable.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train

Dismounted from your snow-white goodly steed

And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,

Accompanied but with a barbarous Moor,

If foul desire had not conducted you ?

who are to come at this gold of the empress are to suffer by it.—Johnson.

⁶ Malone remarks, that there is much poetical beauty in this speech of Tamora ; he thinks it the only part of the play which resembles the style of Shakspeare.

⁷ See Ovid's Metamorphoses, book vi.

⁸ I. e. a part.

⁹ Swarth is dusky. The Moor is called Cimmerian from the affinity of blackness to darkness.

Lav. And, being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness.—I pray you, let us hence,
And let her 'joy her raven-colour'd love;
This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Bas. The king, my brother, shall have note of this.

Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long!¹

Good king! to be so mightily abus'd!

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother,

Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?

These two have 'tic'd me hither to this place,
A barren detested vale, you see, it is:

The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe.

Here never shines the sun,² here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven.

And, when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,

A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,³

Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,

Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.⁴
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,

But straight they told me, they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew;

And leave me to this miserable death.

And then they call'd me, foul adulteress,

Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms

That ever ear did hear to such effect.

And, had you not by wondrous fortune come,

This vengeance on me had they executed:

Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,

Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

[Stabs BASSIANUS.

Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength.
[Stabbing him likewise.

Lav. Ay come, Semiramis,⁵—nay, barbarous Tamora!

For no name fits thy nature but thy own!

Tam. Give me thy poniard; you shall know, my boys,

Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Dem. Stay, madam, here is more belongs to her;
First, strath the corn, then after burn the straw:

This minion stood upon her chastity,

Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty,

And with that painted hope⁶ braves your mightiness:

And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch.

Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,

And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when you have the honey you desire,

Let not this wasp outlive, us both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam; we will make that sure.—

Come, mistress, now perforce, we will enjoy

That nice-preserved honesty of yours.

Lav. O, Tamora! thou bear'st a woman's face,—

Tam. I will not hear her speak; away with her.

Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but a word.

Dem. Listen, fair madam: Let it be your glory
To see her tears: but be your heart to them,
As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.

¹ He had yet been married but one night. The true reading may be 'made her,' i. e. Tamora.

² Rowe seems to have thought on this passage in his 'ane Shore'—

'This is the house where the sun never dawns,
The bird of night sits screaming o'er its roof,

Grim spectres sweep along the horrid gloom,
And nought is heard but wailings and lamentings.'

³ Hedgehogs.

Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach the dam?

O, do not learn her wrath; she taught it thee:
The milk, thou suck'dst from her, did turn to marble;

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny.—
Yet every mother breeds not sons alike;

Do thou entreat her show a woman pity.

[To CHIRON.

Chi. What! would'st thou have me prove myself a bastard?

Lav. 'Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark:
Yet I have heard, (O, could I find it now!)

The lion mov'd with pity, did endure

To have his princely paws par'd all away.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children,

The whilst their own birds famish in their nests:

O, be to me, though thy hard heart say no,

Nothing so kind, but something pitiful!

Tam. I know not what it means; away with her.

Lav. O, let me teach thee: for my father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee,

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.

Tam. Had thou in person ne'er offended me,

Even for his sake am I pitiless:—

Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain,

To save your brother from the sacrifice;

But fierce Andronicus would not relent.

Therefore away with her, and use her as you will,

The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.

Lav. O, Tamora, be call'd a gentle queen,

And with thine own hands kill me in this place:

For 'tis not life, that I have begg'd so long;

Poor I was slain, when Bassianus died.

Tam. What begg'st thou, then? fond woman, let me go.

Lav. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,

That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:

O, keep me from their worse than killing lust,

And tumble me into some loathsome pit;

Where never man's eye may behold my body:

Do this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee:

No, let them satisfy their lust on thee.

Dem. Away, for thou hast staid us here too long.

Lav. No grace? no womanhood? Ah, beastly creature!

The blot and enemy to our general name!

Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth:—Bring thou her husband:
[Dragging off LAVINIA.

This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him.
[Exeunt.

Tam. Farewell, my sons; see that you make her sure:

Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed,

Till all the Andronici be made away.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,

And let my spleenful sons this trull deflower. [Exit.

SCENE IV. The same. Enter AARON with QUINTUS and MARTIUS.

Aar. Come on, my lords; the better foot before:
Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit,

Where I esp'd the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, what'er it bodes.

Mart. And mine, I promise you; were't not for shame,

Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.

[MARTIUS falls into the Pit.

⁴ This is said in fabulous physiology of those that hear the groan of the mandrake when torn up. The same thought, and almost the same expression, occur in Romeo and Juliet.

⁵ The propriety of this address will be best understood by consulting Pliny's Nat. Hist. ch. 42. The incontinence of Semiramis has been already alluded to in the Induction to The Taming of the Shrew, Sc. II.

⁶ Painted hope is only specious hope, or ground of confidence more plausible than solid. Steevens thought that the word hope was interpolated, the sense being complete and the line more harmonious without it.

Quin. What, art thou fallen? What subtle hole is this,
Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briars;
Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood,
As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers?
A very fatal place it seems to me:—

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?
Mart. O, brother, with the dismall'st object hurt
That ever eye, with sight, made heart lament.

Aar. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find them here:

That he thereby may give a likely guess,
How these were they that made away his brother.

[Exit AARON.]

Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out
From this unhallow'd and blood-stained hole?

Quin. I am surprised with an uncouth fear:
A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.

Mart. To prove thou hast a true divining heart,
Aaron and thou look down into this den,
And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart

Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise:
O, tell me how it is; for ne'er till now
Was I a child, to fear I know not what.

Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed here,
All on a heap like to a slaughter'd lamb,
In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.

Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,¹
Which, like a taper in some monument,
Doth shine upon the dead man's earthy cheeks,

And shows the ragged entrails of this pit:
So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,
When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.
O, brother, help me with thy fainting hand,—
If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—
Out of this fell devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Cocyus' misty mouth.

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee out;

Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,
I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.

I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.

Quin. Thy hand once more; I will not loose again,

Till thou art here aloft, or I below:
Thou canst not come to me, I come to thee.

[Falls in.]

Enter SATURNINUS and AARON.

Sat. Along with me:—I'll see what hole is here.
And what he is, that now is leap'd into it.
Say, who art thou, that lately didst descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus;
Brought hither in a most unlucky hour,
To find thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead? I know, thou dost but jest:
He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;
'Tis not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive,
But, out alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter TAMORA, with Attendants; TITUS ANDRONICUS, and LUCIUS.

Tam. Where is my lord, the king?
Sat. Here, Tamora; though griev'd with killing grief.

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound;

Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ.

[Giving a Letter.]

The complot of this timeless² tragedy;
And wonder greatly, that man's face can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. [Reads.] *An if we miss to meet him hand
somerly,—*

*Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 'tis, we mean,—
Do thou so much as dig the grave for him;*

*Thou know'st our meaning: Look for thy reward
Among the nettles at the elder tree,*

*Which overshades the mouth of that same pit,
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.*

*Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends.
O, Tamora! was ever heard the like?*

*This is the pit, and this the elder tree
Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out*

That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.
[Showing it.]

Sat. Two of thy whelps, [To Tit.] fell curse of bloody kind,

Have here bereft my brother of his life:—
Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison;

There let them bide, until we have devis'd
Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What, are they in this pit? O, wondrous thing!

How easily murder is discovered!

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee
I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed,

That this fell fault of my accursed sons,
Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them,—

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see, it is apparent.—
Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.

Tit. I did, my lord: yet let me be their bail:
For by my father's reverend tomb, I vow,

They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bail them: see, thou follow
me.

Some bring the murder'd body, some the murderers:
Let them not speak a word, the guilt is plain;

For, by my soul, were they worse dead than death,
That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king;
Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come: stay not to talk with them. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE V. The same. Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, with LAVINIA, ravished; her Hands cut off, and Tongue cut out.

Dem. So now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak,
Who 'twas that cut thy tongue and ravish'd thee.

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning
so:

And, if thy stumps will let thee, play the scribe.

Dem. See how with signs and tokens she can scowl.

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands.

Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash:

And so let's leave her to her silent walks.

Chi. An 'twere my case, I should go hang myself.

Dem. If thou hadst hands to help thee knit the cord.

[Exeunt DEMETRIUS and CHIRON.]

¹ Is that admired mighty stone,
The carbuncle that's named;

Which from it such a flaming light
And radiance ejecteth,
That in the very darkest night
The eye to it directeth.

² i. e. untimely So in King Richard II.:—
'The bloody office of his timeless end.'

¹ Old naturalists assert that there is a gem called a carbuncle, which emits not reflected but native light. Boyle believed in the reality of its existence. It is often alluded to in ancient fable. Thus in the Gesta Romanorum:—'He farther beheld and saw a carbuncle that lighted all the house.' And Drayton in The Muse's Elysium:—

Enter MARCUS.

Mar. Who's this,—my niece, that flies away so fast?

Cousin, a word; Where is your husband?—
If I do dream, would all my wealth would wake me!

If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!—
Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches? those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep
in;

And might not gain so great a happiness,
As half thy love? Why dost not speak to me?—
Alas, a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy rosed lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath.
But, sure, some Tereus hath deflow'r'd thee;
And, lest thou should'st detect him, cut thy tongue.
Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame!
And notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—
Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan's face,
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.
Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 'tis so?
O, that I knew thy heart; and knew the beast,
That I might rail at him to ease my mind!
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.
Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind;
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
A craftier Tereus, cousin, hast thou met,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That could have better sew'd than Philomel.
O, had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them;
He would not then have touch'd them for his life:
Or, had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made,
He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep,
As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.
Come, let us go, and make thy father blind:
For such a sight will blind a father's eye:
One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
What will who'e months of tears thy father's eyes?
Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee;
O, could our mourning ease thy misery! [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Rome. A Street. Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of Justice, with MARTIUS and QUINTUS, bound, passing on to the Place of Execution; TITUS going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!
For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd;
And for these bitter tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought!
For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honour's lofty bed.
For these, good tribunes, in the dust I write

[Throwing himself on the Ground.]

My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears.
Let my tears stanch the earth's dry appetite;
My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

[Exeunt Senators, Tribunes, &c. with the Prisoners.]

¹ If this be a dream, I would give all my possessions to be delivered from it by waking.

² The old copies read, 'two ancient rimes.' The emendation is by Sir T. Hanmer.

O earth, I will befriend thee more with rain,
That shall distil, from these two ancient urns,²
Than youthful April shall with all his showers;
In summer's drought, I'll drop upon thee still;
In winter, with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter LUCIUS, with his Sword drawn.

O, reverend tribunes! gentle aged men!
Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;
And let me say that never wept before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O, noble father, you lament in vain;
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead:
Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did mark,
They would not pity me; yet plead I must,
All bootless unto them.

Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones;
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they're better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale:
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet

Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me;
And, were they but attired in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.
A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than stones:

A stone is silent, and offendeth not;
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death.
But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn?

Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death:
For which attempt, the judges have pronounc'd
My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O, happy man! they have befriended thee.
Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive,
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey,
But me and mine: How happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banish'd?

But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Enter MARCUS and LAVINIA

Mar. Titus, prepare thy aged eyes to weep;
Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break!
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it, then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ah me! this object kills me!

Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her:—

Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight!
What fool hath added water to the sea?

Or brought a faggot to bright burning Troy?
My grief was at the height before thou cam'st,

And now, like Nilus, it disdaineth bounds.—

Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too;

For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain,

And they have nurs'd this wo, in feeding life;

In bootless prayer have they been held up,

And they have serv'd me to effectless use;

Now, all the service I require of them

Is, that the one will help to cut the other.—

'Tis well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands;

For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?

Mar. O, that delightful engine of her thoughts,³

That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,

Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage:

Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung

Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear!

Luc. O, say thou for her, who hath done this deed?

³ This piece furnishes scarce any resemblances to Shakespeare's works; this one expression, however, is found in his Venus and Adonis :—

Once more the engine of her thoughts began.

Mar. O, thus I found her, straying in the park,
Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer,
That hath receiv'd some unrecuring wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he, that wounded her,
Hath hurt me more, than had he kill'd me dead:
For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea;
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.

This way to death my wretched sons are gone;
Here stands my other son, a banish'd man;
And here, my brother, weeping at my woes;
But that, which gives my soul the greatest spurn,
Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.—
Had I but seen thy picture in this plight,
It would have madd'd me; What shall I do
Now I behold thy lively body so?

Thou hast no hands, to wipe away thy tears;
Nor tongue, to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:
Thy husband he is dead: and, for his death,
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this:—
Look, Marcus! ah, son Lucius, look on her:
When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears
Stood on her cheeks; as doth the honey dew
Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.

Mar. Perchance, she weeps because they kill'd her husband:

Perchance, because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,
Because the law hath ta'en revenge on them.—
No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.—
Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips;
Or make some sign how I may do thee ease:
Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain
Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks
How they are stain'd? like meadows, yet not dry
With miry slime left on them by a flood?

And in the fountain shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness,
And make a brine pit with our bitter tears?
Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows
Pass the remainder of our hateful days?
What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues,
Plot some device of further misery,
To make us wonder'd at in time to come.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for, at your grief,

See, how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Mar. Patience, dear niece;—good Titus, dry thine eyes.

Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine,
For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.

Luc. Ah, my Lavinia, I will wipe thy cheeks.

Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs:
Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee;
His napkin with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
O, what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo¹ is from bliss!

Enter AARON.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor
Sends thee this word,—That, if thou love thy sons,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the king: he, for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sons alive;
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O, gracious emperor! O, gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?

With all my heart, I'll send the emperor
My hand:

Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Luc. Stay, father; for that noble hand of thine,
That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn:
My youth can better spare my blood than you;
And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended
Rome,

And rear'd aloft the bloody battleaxe,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle?²

O, none of both but are of high desert:
My hand hath been both idle; let it serve
To ransom my two nephews from their death;
Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come agree, whose hand shall go along,

For fear they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall go.

Luc. By heaven, it shall not go.

Tit. Sirs, strive no more; such wither'd herbs as these

Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son,
Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Mar. And, for our father's sake, and mother's,
Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you; I will spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Mar. But I will use the axe.

[Exit LUCIUS and MARCUS.]

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both;
Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,
And never, whilst I live, deceive men so:—
But I'll deceive you in another sort, [Aside.
And that you'll say, ere half an hour can pass.

[He cuts off TITUS'S Hand.]

Enter LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Tit. Now, stay your strife: what shall be, is despatch'd.—

Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand:
Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers; bid him bury it;
More hath it merited, that let it have.
As for my sons, say, I account of them
As jewels purchas'd at an easy price;
And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Aar. I go, Andronicus: and for thy hand,
Look by-and-by to have thy sons with thee:—
Their heads, I mean.—O, how this villany [Aside.
Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it!
Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,
Aaron will have his soul black like his face. [Exit.

Tit. O, here I lift this one hand up to heaven,
And bow this feeble ruin to the earth:
If any power pities wretched tears,
To that I call:—What, wilt thou kneel with me?

[To LAVINIA.]

Do then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear our prayers;

Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,
And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds,
When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Mar. O! brother, speak with possibilities,
And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?
Then be my passions bottomless with them.

Mar. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,
Then into limits could I bind my woes:
When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth o'er flow?

If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad,
Threat'ning the welkin with his big-swoln face?
And wilt thou have a reason for this coil?

¹ The Limbus patrum, as it was called, is a place that the schoolmen supposed to be in the neighbourhood of hell, where the souls of the patriarchs were detained, and those good men who died before our Saviour's resurrection. Milton gives the name of Limbo to his Paradise of Fools.

² It appears from Grose on Ancient Armour, that a castle was a kind of close helmet, probably so named from casquetel, old French.

I am the sea; hark, how her sighs do blow.
She is the weeping welkin, I the earth:
Then must my sea be moved with her sighs;
Then must my earth with her continual tears
Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd:
For why? my bowels cannot hide her woes,
But like a drunkard must I vomit them.
Then give me leave; for losers will have leave
To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger, with two Heads and a Hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid
For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor.
Here are the heads of thy two noble sons;
And here's thy hand, in scorn to thee sent back;
Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd:
That wo is me to think upon thy woes,
More than remembrance of my father's death.

[Exit.]

Mar. Now let hot Ætna cool in Sicily,
And be my heart an ever-burning hell!
These miseries are more than may be borne!
To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal,
But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound,

And yet detested life not shrink thereat!
That ever death should let life bear his name,
Where life hath no more interest but to breathe!

[LAVINIA kisses him.]

Mar. Alas, poor heart, that kiss is comfortless,
As frozen water to a starved snake.

Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an end?

Mar. Now, farewell, flattery: Die, Andronicus;
Thou dost not slumber: see, thy two son's heads;
Thy warlike hand: thy mangled daughter here;
Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight
Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
Ah! now no more will I control thy griefs:
Rent off thy silver hair, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight
The closing up of our most wretched eyes!
Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha!

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed:
Besides this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurp upon my watery eyes,
And make them blind with tributary tears;
Then which way shall I find revenge's cave?
For these two heads do seem to speak to me;
And threaten me, I shall never come to bliss,
Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,
Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come, let me see what task I have to do.—
You heavy people, circle me about;
That I may turn me to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.
The vow is made.—Come, brother take a head;
And in this hand the other will I bear:
Lavinia, thou shalt be employed in these things;
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.
As for thee boy, go, get thee from my sight;
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay:
Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there:
And, if you love me, as I think you do,
Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exeunt TITUS, MARCUS, and LAVINIA.]

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father;
The woful'st man that ever liv'd in Rome!
Farewell, proud Rome! till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;

1 This scene, which does not contribute any thing to the action, yet seems to be by the same author as the rest, is wanting in the quarto copies of 1600 and 1611, but found in the folio of 1623.

2 So in The Tempest :—

— sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.

O, 'would, thou wert as thou 'tfore hast been!
But now nor Lucius, nor Lavinia lives,
But in oblivion, and hateful griefs,
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs,
And make proud Saturninus and his empress
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine. [Exit.]

SCENE II. A Room in Titus's House. A Bonnet set out. Enter TITUS, MARCUS, LAVINIA, and young LUCIUS, a Boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit: and look, you eat no more Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus, unknit that sorrow-wreathen knot;²
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot passionate³ our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I thump it down.—
Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs!

[To LAVINIA.]

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl; kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole;
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall,
May run into that sink, and, soaking in,
Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Mar. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already?

Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.
What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands;
To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands;
Lest we remember still, that we have none.—
Fie, fie, how frantically I square my talk!
As if we should forget we had no hands,
If Marcus did not name the word of hands!—
Come, let's fall to: and, gentle girl, eat this:—
Here is no drink! Hark, Marcus, what she says:—
I can interpret all her martyr'd signs,—
She says she drinks no other drink but tears,
Brew'd with her sorrows, mesh'd⁴ upon her cheeks:
Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thou shalt not sigh nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I, of these, will wrest an alphabet,
And, by still practice, learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:

Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas, the tender boy, in passion mov'd
Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender sapling: thou art made of tears,

And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

[MARCUS strikes the Dish with a Knife.]
What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?

Mar. At that that I have kill'd, my lord: a fly.

Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart;
Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of thy tyranny:
A deed of death, done on the innocent,
Becomes not Titus' brother: Get thee gone;
I see, thou art not for my company.

Mar. Alas, my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

3 This obsolete verb is likewise found in Spenser:—
'Great pleasure mix'd with pitiful regard,
That godly king and queen did passionate.'

4 So in Troilus and Cressida:—
— thou

Handlest in thy discourse, O that her hand

& A very coarse allusion to brewing.

Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and mother?¹ How would he hang his slender gilded wings, And buzz lamenting doings in the air? Poor harmless fly! That, with his pretty buzzing melody, Came here to make us merry; and thou hast kill'd him.

Mar. Pardon me, sir; 'twas a black ill-favour'd fly, Like to the empress' Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O, O, Then pardon me for reprehending thee, For thou hast done a charitable deed. Give me thy knife, I will insult on him; Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor, Come hither purposely to poison me.— There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.— Ah, sirrah!²—

Yet I do think we are not brought so low, But that, between us, we can kill a fly, That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Mar. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on him, He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me: I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.— Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young, And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. Before Titus's House.

Enter TITUS and MARCUS. Then enter Young LUCIUS, LAVINIA running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia Follows me every where, I know not why:— Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes! Alas, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Mar. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thine aunt.

Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.

Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.

Mar. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius:—Somewhat doth she mean:

See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee: Somewhither would she have thee go with her.

Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee, Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orator.³

Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess, Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her: For I have heard my grandsire say full oft, Extremity of griefs would make men mad; And I have read that Hecuba of Troy Ran mad through sorrow: That made me to fear; Although, my lord, I know, my noble aunt Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did, And would not, but in fury, fright my youth: Which made me down to throw my books, and fly; Causeless, perhaps: But pardon me, sweet aunt: And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go, I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Mar. Lucius, I will.

[LAVINIA turns over the Books which LUCIUS has let fall.]

Tit. How now, Lavinia?—Marcus, what means this?

Some book there is that she desires to see:—

¹ Stevens conjectures that the words 'and mother' should be omitted. Ritson proposes to read the line thus:—

² 'But! How if that fly had a father, brother?'

³ This was formerly not a disrespectful expression. Pains were the same address to the Prince of Wales in King Henry IV. Part I. Act I. Sc. 2.

⁴ Tully's Treatise on Eloquence, entitled Orator.

⁵ Succession.

Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy.— But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd; Come, and take choice of all my library, And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.— Why lifts she up her arms in sequence⁴ thus?

Mar. I think, she means, that there was more than one

Confederate in the fact:—Ay, more there was:— Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge.

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she tosseth so?

Boy. Grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphosis;

My mother gave't me.

Mar. For love of her that's gone, Perhaps she cull'd it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see, how busily she turns the leaves! Help her:—

What would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read?

This is the tragic tale of Philomel,

And treats of Tereus' treason, and his rape?

And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.

Mar. See, brother, see; note how she quotes⁵ the leaves.

Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet girl, Ravish'd and wrong'd, as Philomela was, Forc'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?— See, see!—

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt, (O, had we never, never, hunted there!)

Pattern'd by that the poet here describes,

By nature made for murders, and for rapes.

Mar. O, why should nature build so foul a den, Unless the gods delight in tragedies!

Tit. Give signs, sweet girl,—for here are none but friends,—

What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:

Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,

That left the camp to sin in Lucrece's bed?

Mar. Sit down, sweet niece;—brother, sit down by me.—

Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,

Inspire me, that I may this treason find!—

My lord, look here;—Look here, Lavinia:

This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst,

This after me, when I have writ my name

Without the help of any hand at all.

[He writes his Name with his Staff, and guides it with his Feet and Mouth.]

Curs'd be that heart, that forc'd us to this shift!—

Write thou, good niece: and here display, at last,

What God will have discover'd for revenge!

Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain,

That we may know the traitors and the truth!

[She takes the Staff in her Mouth, and guides it with her Stumps, and writes.]

Tit. O, do you read, my lord what she hath writ? Stuprum—Chiron—Demetrius.

Mar. What, what!—the lustful sons of Tamora Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?

Tit. *Magne Dominator poli,*⁶

Tam lentus audis scelera? tam lentus vides?

Mar. O, calm thee, gentle lord! although, I know, There is enough written upon this earth,

To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts,

And arm the minds of infants to exclaims.

My lord, kneel down with me: Lavinia, kneel;

And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope;

And swear with me,—as with the woful feere,⁷

And father of that chaste dishonour'd dame,

Lord Junius Brutus sware for Lucrece' rape,—

That we will prosecute, by good advice,

Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths,

And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

⁵ To quote is to observe.

⁶ Magne Regnator Deum, &c. is the exclamation of Hippolytus when Phædra discovers the secret of her incestuous passion, in Seneca's Tragedy.

⁷ Feere signifies a companion, and here metaphorically a husband, as in the old romance of Sir Eglamour of Artoys, sig. A 4:

'Christabele, your daughter freee,
When shall she have a fere?'

Tit. 'Tis sure enough, an you knew how,
But if you hurt these bear-whelps, then beware :
The dam will wake ; and, if she wind you once,
She's with the lion deeply still in league,
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back,
And, when he sleeps, will she do what she list.
You're a young huntsman, Marcus ; let it alone ;
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad¹ of steel will write these words,
And lay it by : the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Sibyl's leaves, abroad,²
And where's your lesson then ?—Boy, what say
you ?

Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bed-chamber should not be safe
For these bad bondmen to the yoke of Rome.

Mar. Ay, that's my boy ! thy father hath full oft
For this ungrateful country done the like.

Boy. And, uncle, so will I, an if I live.

Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury ;
Lucius, I'll fit thee ; and, withal, my boy
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents, that I intend to send them both :
Come, come ; thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou
not ?

Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grand-sire.

Tit. No, boy, not so ; I'll teach thee another course.

Lavinia, come :—Marcus, look to my house ;
Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court ;
Ay, marry, will we, sir : and we'll be waited on.

[Exeunt TITUS, LAVINIA, and BOY.]

Mar. O heavens, can you hear a good man groan,
And not relent, or not compassion him ?
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy ;
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Than foemen's marks upon his batter'd shield :
But yet so just, that he will not revenge :—
Revenge the heavens for old Andronicus ! [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter AARON, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS, at one Door ; at another Door, Young LUCIUS, and an Attendant, with a Bundle of Weapons, and Verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius ;
He hath some message to deliver to us.

Aar. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandfather.

Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honours from Andronicus ;—
And pray the Roman gods confound you both.

Dem. Gramercy,³ lovely Lucius ; What's the news ?

Boy. That you are both decipher'd, that's the news,

For villains mark'd with rape. [Aside.] May it
please you,

My grandsire, well advis'd, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury,
To gratify your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome ; for so he bade me say ;
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your lordships, that whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well :
And so I leave you both, [aside] like bloody villains. [Exeunt Boy and Attendant.]

Dem. What's here ? A scroll ; and written round about ?

Let's see ;
*Integer vitæ, scelerisque purus,
Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arcu.*

Chi. O, 'tis a verse in Horace ; I know it well :
I read it in the grammar long ago.

¹ A gad, in Anglo-Saxon, signified the point of a spear. It is here used for a similar pointed instrument.

² — Folius tantum ne carmina manda,
Ne turbata violent rapidis ludibria ventis.

Æn. vi. 75.

Aar. Ay, just !—a verse in Horace :—right, you have it.

Now, what a thing it is to be an ass !
Here's no sound jest !⁴ the old man hath found their guilt ;

And sends the weapons wrapp'd about
with lines,

That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick.

But were our witty empress well a-foot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit.

But let her rest in her unrest awhile.—
And now, young lords, was't not a happy star

Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height ?

It did me good, before the palace-gate
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely insinuate, and send us gifts.

Aar. Had he not reason, Lord Demetrius ?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly ?

Dem. I would, we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.

Chi. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Aar. Here lacks but your mother for to say
amen.

Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let us go : and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aar. Pray to the devils ; the gods have given us o'er. [Aside. Flourish.]

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish
thus ?

Chi. Belike, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Soft ; who comes here ?

Enter a Nurse, with a Black-a-moor Child in her Arms.

Nur. Good morrow, lords :
O, tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor ?

Aar. Well, more, or less, or ne'er a whit at all,
Here Aaron is : and what with Aaron now ?

Nur. O, gentle Aaron, we are all undone !
Now help, or woe betide thee evermore !

Aar. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep ?
What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine arms ?

Nur. O, that which I would hide from heaven's eye ;

Our empress' shame, and stately Rome's disgrace ;
She is deliver'd, lords, she is deliver'd.

Aar. To whom ?

Nur. I mean, she's brought to bed.
Aar. Well, God

Give her good rest ! What hath he sent her ?

Nur. A devil.

Aar. Why, then she's the devil's dam ; a joyful issue.

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful
issue :

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime.

The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aar. Out, out, you whore ! is black so base a hue ?
Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done ?
Aar. Done ! that which thou

Canst not undo. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aar. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choice !

Accurs'd the offspring of so foul a fiend !
Chi. It shall not live.

Aar. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must : the mother will it so.

Aar. What, must it, nurse ? then let no man but I,
Do execution on my flesh and blood.

³ I. e. grand merci ; great thanks.

⁴ This mode of expression was common formerly.
So in King Henry IV. Part I. :—'Here's no fine villany !'

Dem. I'll broach¹ the tadpole on my rapier's point ;

Nurse, give it me ; my sword shall soon despatch it.

Aar. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels up,

[Takes the Child from the Nurse, and draws.]

Stay, murderous villains ! will you kill your brother ?

Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,

That shone so brightly when this boy was got,

He dies upon my scymetar's sharp point,

That touches this my first-born son and heir !

I tell you, younglings, not Enceladus,²

With all his threat'ning band of Typhon's brood,

Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,

Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what ; ye sanguine, shallow-hearted boys !

Ye white-lim'd walls ! ye alehouse painted signs !

Coal black is better than another hue,

In that it scorns to bear another hue :

For all the water in the ocean

Can never turn a swan's black legs to white,

Although she lave them hourly in the flood.

Tell the empress from me, I am of age

To keep mine own ; excuse it how she can.

Dem. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistress thus ?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress ; this, myself ;

The vigour, and the picture of my youth :

This, before all the world, do I prefer ;

This, maugre all the world, will I keep safe,

Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for ever sham'd.

Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape.³

Nur. The emperor, in his rage, will doom her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy.⁴

Aar. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears :

Fie, treacherous hue ! that will betray with blushing

The close enacts and counsels of the heart !⁵

Here's a young lad fram'd of another leer !⁶

Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father ;

As who should say, Old lad, I am thine own.

He is your brother, lords ; sensibly fed

Of that self-blood that first gave life to you ;

And, from that womb, where you imprison'd were,

He is enfranchised and come to light :

Nay, he's your brother by the surer side,

Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress ?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,

And we will all subscribe to thy advice ;

Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.

My son and I will have the wind of you :

Keep there : Now talk at pleasure of your safety.

[They sit on the Ground.]

Dem. How many women saw this child of his ?

Aar. Why, so, brave lords ; When we all join in league,

I am a lamb : but if you brave the Moor,

The chafed boar, the mountain lioness,

The ocean swells not so as Aaron storms.—

But, say again, how many saw the child ?

Nur. Cornelia the midwife, and myself,

And no one else, but the deliver'd empress.

Aar. The empress, the midwife, and yourself :

Two may keep counsel, when the third's away :⁷

Go to the empress ; tell her, this I said :—

[Stabbing her.]

Weke, weke !—so cries a pig, prepar'd to the spit.

Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron ? Wherefore

didst thou this ?

1 In Lust's Dominion, by Marlowe, a play in its style bearing a near resemblance to Titus Andronicus, Eleazar, the Moor, a character of unmingled ferocity, like

Aaron, and, like him, the paramour of a royal mistress, exclaims :—

'—— Run, and with a voice

Erected high as mine, say thus, thus threaten

To Roderigo and the Cardinal,

Seek no queens here ; I'll broach them, if they do,

Upon my falchion's point.'

2 A giant, the son of Titan and Terra.

3 i. e. this foul illegitimate child. So in King John :—

'No scape of Nature.'

Aar. O, lord, sir, 'tis a deed of policy :

Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours ?

A long-tongu'd babbling gossip ? no, lords, no.

And now be it known to you my full intent.

Not far, one Muliteus lives,⁸ my countryman,

His wife but yesternight was brought to bed ;

His child is like to her, fair as you are :

Go pack⁹ with him, and give the mother gold,

And tell them both the circumstance of all ;

And how by this their child shall be advanc'd

And be received for the emperor's heir,

And substituted in the place of mine,

To calm this tempest whirling in the court ;

And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Hark ye, lords, ye see, that I have given her physic,

[Pointing to the Nurse.]

And you must needs bestow her funeral ;

The fields are near, and you are gallant grooms :

This done, see that you take no longer days,

But send the midwife presently to me.

The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,

Then let the ladies tattle what they please.

Chi. Aaron, I see, thou wilt not trust the air

With secrets.

Dem. For this care of Tamora,

Herself, and hers, are highly bound to thee.

[Exeunt DEM. and CHI. bearing off the Nurse.]

Aar. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow flies ;

There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,

And secretly to greet the empress' friends.—

Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear you

hence ;

For it is you that puts us to our shifts :

I'll make you feed on berries, and on roots,

And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,

And cabin in a cave ; and bring you up

To be a warrior, and command a camp. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A public Place. Enter

TITUS, bearing Arrows, with Letters at the ends of them ; with him MARCUS, Young LUCIUS, and other Gentlemen, with Bows.

Tit. Come, Marcus, come ;—Kinsmen, this is the way :—

Sir boy, now let me see your archery ;

Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight :

Terras Astra relinquit :

Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled.

Sir, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets ;

Happily you may find her in the sea ;

Yet there's as little justice as at land :—

No ; Publius and Sempronius, you must do it ;

'Tis you must dig with mattock, and with spade,

And pierce the inmost centre of the earth :

Then, when you come to Pluto's region,

I pray you deliver him this petition :

Tell him, it is for justice, and for aid :

And that it comes from old Andronicus,

Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.—

Ah, Rome !—Well, well ; I made thee miserable,

What time I threw the people's suffrages

On him that thus doth tyrannize o'er me.—

Go, get you gone ; and pray be careful all,

And leave you not a man of war unsearch'd ;

This wicked emperor may have shipp'd her hence,

And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.

Mar. O, Publius, is not this a heavy case,

To see thy noble uncle thus distract ?

Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns,

4 i. e. ignominy.

5 Thus also in Othello :—

'They are close denotements working from the heart.'

6 Complexion.

7 This proverb is introduced in Romeo and Juliet,

Act II.

8 The word lives, which is wanting in the old copies, was supplied by Rowe. Steevens thinks Muliteus a corruption for 'Muly lives.'

9 To pack is to contrive insidiously. So in King

Learn :—

'Snuffs and packings of the duke's'

By day and night to attend him carefully ;
And feed his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some careful remedy.

Mar. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy.
Join with the Goths ; and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.

Ti. Publius, how now ? how now, my masters ?
What,

Have you met with her ?

Pub. No, my good lord : but Pluto sends you word

If you will have revenge from hell, you shall :
Marry, for Justice she is so employ'd,
He thinks, with Jove in heaven, or some where else,
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.

Ti. He doth me wrong, to feed me with delays.
I'll dive into the burning lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.—
Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we ;
No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclop's size :
But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back ;
Yet wrung with wrongs, more than our backs can bear :

And sith there is no justice in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven ; and move the gods,
To send down justice for to wreak¹ our wrongs :
Come, to this gear.² You are a good archer, Marcus.

[He gives them the Arrows.]

Ad Jovem, that's for you :—Here, ad Apollinem.—

Ad Martem, that's for myself ;—

Here, boy, to Pallas :—Here, to Mercury :

To Saturn, Caius,³ not to Saturnine,—

You were as good to shoot against the wind.—

To it, boy. Marcus, loose you when I bid :

O my word, I have written to effect ;

There's not a god left unsolicited.

Mar. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the court :⁴

We will afflict the emperor in his pride.

Ti. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O, well said, Lucius !

Good boy, in Virgo's lap ; give it Pallas.

Mar. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon ;
Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Ti. Ha ! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done ?
See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.

Mar. This was the sport, my lord : when Publius shot,

The bull being gall'd, gave Aries such a knock,
That down fell both the ram's horns in the court ;
And who should find them but the empress' villain ?
She laugh'd, and told the Moor, he should not choose

But give them to his master for a present.

Ti. Why, there it goes : God give your lordship joy.

Enter a Clown, with a Basket and two Pigeons.

News, news from heaven ! Marcus, the post is come.

Sirrah, what tidings ? have you any letters ?

Shall I have justice ? what says Jupiter ?

Clo. Ho ! the gibbet-maker ? he says, that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hang'd till the next week.

Ti. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee ?

Clo. Alas, sir, I know not Jupiter ; I never drank with him in all my life.

Ti. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier ?

Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, sir ; nothing else.

Ti. Why, didst thou not come from heaven ?

Clo. From heaven ? alas, sir, I never came there : God forbid, I should be so bold to press to heaven in my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal plebs,⁵ to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the imperial's men.

Mar. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be, to serve for your oration ; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor for you.

Ti. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace ?

Clo. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Ti. Sirrah, come hither : make no more ado,

But give your pigeons to the emperor :

By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.

Hold, hold ;—mean while, here's money for thy charges.

Give me a pen and ink.—

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication ?

Clo. Ay, sir.

Ti. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach, you must kneel ; then kiss his foot ; then deliver up your pigeons ; and then look for your reward, I'll be at hand, sir : see you do it bravely.

Clo. I warrant you, sir ; let me alone.

Ti. Sirrah, hast thou a knife ? Come, let me see it.

Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration ;

For thou hast made it like an humble suppliant :—

And when thou hast given it to the emperor,

Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Clo. God be with you, sir ; I will.

Ti. Come, Marcus, let's go ;—Publius, follow me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. Before the Palace. Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, Lords, and others ; SATURNINUS with the Arrows in his Hand that TITUS shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these Was ever seen

An emperor of Rome thus overborne,
Troubled, confronted thus : and, for the extent

Of equal⁶ justice, us'd in such contempt ?

My lords, you know, as do the mighty gods,

However these disturbers of our peace

Buzz in the people's ears, there nought hath pass'd,

But even with law, against the wilful sons

Of old Andronicus. And what an if

His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,

Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,

His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness ?

And now he writes to heaven for his redress :

See, here's to Jove, and this to Mercury ;

This to Apollo ; this to the god of war :

Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome !

What's this, but libelling against the senate,

And blazoning our injustice every where ?

A goodly humour, is it not, my lords ?

As who would say, in Rome no justice were.

But, if I live, his feigned ecstasies

Shall be no shelter to these outrages :

But he and his shall know, that justice lives

In Saturninus' health ; whom, if she sleep,

He'll so awake, as she in fury shall

Cut off the proud'st conspirator that lives.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine,

Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts,

Calm thee, and bear the faults of Tius' age,

The effects of sorrow for his valiant sons,

Whose loss hath pierc'd him deep, and scarr'd his heart ;

And rather comfort his distressed plight,

Supposing the ballad to have been written before the play, this may be only a metaphorical expression, taken from Psalm lxi. 3 :—' They shoot out their arrows, even bitter words.'

⁵ The Clo. means to say, plebeian tribune ; i. e. tribune of the people. Haumer supposes that he means tribunus plebs.

¹ Revenge.

² Gear is here put for matter, business.

³ Caius appears to have been one of the kinsmen of Titus. Publius and Caius are again mentioned, Act v. Sc. 2. Steevens would read Caius, as there was a Roman deity of that name.

⁴ In the ancient ballad, Titus Andronicus's Complaint, the following passage :—

' Then past reliefe I upp and downe did goe,
And with my teares wrote in the dust my woe :
I shot my arrowes towards heaven hie,
And for revenge to hell did often cry.'

Than prosecute the meanest, or the best,
For these contempts. Why, thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to gloze¹ with all : [Aside.
But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick,
Thy life-blood out : if Aaron now be wise,
Then is all safe, the anchor's in the port.—

Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow? would'st thou speak with us?

Clow. Yes, forsooth, an your mistership be imperial.

Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.

Clow. 'Tis he.—God, and saint Stephen, give you good den :—I have brought you a letter, and a couple of pigeons here. [SAT. reads the Letter.

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clow. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hang'd.

Clow. Hang'd! By'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. [Exit, guarded.

Sat. Despicable and intolerable wrongs!

Shall I endure this monstrous villany?

I know from whence this same device proceeds;

May this be borne?—as if his traitorous sons,

That died by law for murder of our brother,

Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully.—

Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;

Nor age, nor honour, shall shape privilege:

For this proud mock, I'll be thy slaughterman;

Sly frantic wretch, that holp'st to make me great,

In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter ÆMILIUS.

What news with thee, Æmilius?

Æmil. Arm, arm, my lords; Rome never had more cause!

The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power

Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil,

They hither march amain, under conduct

Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus;

Who threatens, in course of this revenge, to do

As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?

These tidings nip me; and I hang the head

As flowers with frost, or grass beat down with storms.

Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach:

'Tis he the common people love so much;

Myself hath often overheard them say

(When I have walked like a private man),

That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully,

And they have wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.

Tam. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?

Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius:

And will revolt from me, to succour him.

Tim. King, be thy thoughts imperious,² like thy name.

Is the sun dimm'd, that gnats do fly in it?

The eagle suffers little birds to sing,

And is not careful what they mean thereby;

Knowing that with the shadow of his wings,

He can at pleasure stint³ their melody:

Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome.

Then cheer thy spirit; for know, thou emperor,

I will enchant the old Andronicus,

With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,

Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks⁴ to sheep;

When as the one is wounded with the bait,

The other rotted with delicious feed.

Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will:

For I can smooth and fill his aged ear

With golden promises; that were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,
Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue.—
Go thou before, be our ambassador; [To Æmil.
Say, that the emperor requests a parley
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting,
Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.

Sat. Æmilius, do this message honourably:
And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.

Æmil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

[Exit ÆMILIUS.

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus;
And temper with him all the art I have,
To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths.

And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,

And bury all thy fear in my devices.

Sat. Then go successfully, and plead to him.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. Plains near Rome. Enter Lucius, and Goths, with Drum and Colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends,
I have received letters from great Rome,
Which signify, what hate they bear their emperor,
And how desirous of our sight they are.

Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness,
Imperious, and impatient of your wrongs;
And, wherein Rome hath done you any scath,⁵
Let him make treble satisfaction.

1 Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus,
Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort;

Whose high exploits, and honourable deeds,
Ingrateful Rome requites with foul contempt,
Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st,—

Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day,
Led by their master to the flower'd fields,—
And be avenged on cursed Tamora.

Goths. And, as he saith, so say we all with him.

Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all.

But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading AARON, with his Child in his Arms.

2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd,
To gaze upon a ruinous monastery;⁶
And as I earnestly did fix mine eye
Upon the wasted building, suddenly

I heard a child cry underneath a wall:

I made unto the noise; when soon I heard

The crying babe controll'd with this discourse:

Peace, tawny slave; half me, and half thy dam!

Did not thy hue bewray whose brat thou art,

Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look,

Villain, thou might'st have been an emperor:

But where the bull and cow are both milk-white,

They never do beget a coal-black calf.

Peace, villain, peace!—even thus he rates the babe,

For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth;

Who, when he knows thou art the empress' babe,

Will hold thee dearly for thy mother's sake.

With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him,

Surpris'd him suddenly; and brought him hither,

To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O, worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil,

That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand:

This is the pearl that pleas'd your empress' eye;⁷

chronology, that no very conclusive argument can be deduced from the particular absurdity of these anachronisms relative to the authenticity of Titus Andronicus.

And yet the ruined monastery, the popish tricks, &c. that Aaron talks of, and especially the French salutation from the mouth of Titus, are altogether so very much out of place, that I cannot persuade myself that even our hasty poet could have been guilty of their insertion, or would have permitted them to remain, had he corrected the performance of another.⁸—Steevens.

7 Alluding to the proverb, 'A black man is a pearl in a fair woman's eye.'

And here's the base fruit of his burning lust.—
Say, wall-ey'd slave, whither would'st thou convey
This growing image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speak? What! deaf? No; not a word?

A halter, soldiers; hang him on this tree,
And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Aar. Touch not the boy, he is of royal blood.

Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.—
First, hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul withal.
Get me a ladder.

[A Ladder is brought, which AARON is obliged to ascend.

Aar. Lucius, save the child;
And bear it from me to the empress.

If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
I'll speak no more; But vengeance rot you all!

Luc. Say on; and, if it please me which thou
speak'st,

Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd.

Aar. An if it please thee? why, assure thee,
Lucius,

'Twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak;
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,
Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason; villanies
Ruthful to hear, yet piteously perform'd:¹
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy mind; I say, thy child shall live.

Aar. Swear, that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believ'st no
god;

That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?

Aar. What if I do not? as, indeed, I do not;
Yet, for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called conscience;
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,—
Therefore I urge thy oath:—For that, I know,
An idiot holds his bauble² for a god,
And keeps the oath, which by that god he swears;
'To that I'll urge him:—Therefore, thou shalt vow
By that same god, what god soe'er it be,
That thou ador'st and trust in reverence,—
To save my boy, to nourish and bring him up;
Or else I will discover nought to thee.

Luc. Even by my god, I swear, to thee I will.

Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O, most insatiate, luxurious³ woman!

Aar. Tut, Lucius! this was but a deed of charity,
To that which thou shalt hear of me anon:
'Twas her two sons that murder'd Bassianus;
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her,
And cut her hands; and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.

Luc. O, detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?

Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd;
and 'twas

Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O, barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!

Aar. Indeed, I was thy tutor to instruct them!
That coddling⁴ spirit had they from their mother,
As sure a card as ever won the set:

That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of me,
As true a dog as ever fought at head.⁵—

Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.

I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,

Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay:

I wrote the letter that thy father found,⁶

And hid the gold within the letter mention'd,

Confederate with the queen and her two sons;

And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,

Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it?

I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand;

And, when I had it, drew myself apart,

And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.

I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,

When for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;

Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,

That both mine eyes were rainy like to his;

And when I told the empress of this sport,

She swoonded⁷ almost at my pleasing tale,

And, for my tidings gave me twenty kisses.

Goth. What! canst thou say all this, and never blush?

Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.

Even now I curse the day (and yet, I think,

Few come within the compass of my curse,) ⁸

Wherein I did not some notorious ill;

As kill a man, or else devise his death;

Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;

Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself:

Set deadly enmity between two friends;

Make poor men's cattle break their necks;

Set fire on barns and haystacks in the night,

And bid the owners quench them with their tears.

Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,

And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,

Even when their sorrows almost were forgot

And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,

Have with my knife carved, in Roman letters,

Let not your sorrow die though I am dead.

Tut, I have done a thousand dreadful things,

As willingly as one would kill a fly;

And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,

But that I cannot do ten thousand more.⁹

Luc. Bring down the devil; for he must not die¹⁰

So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aar. If there be devils, 'would I were a devil,

To live and burn in everlasting fire;

So I might have your company in hell,

But to torment you with my bitter tongue!

Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth and let him speak no more.

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome.

Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luc. Let him come near.—

Enter ÆMILIUS.

Welcome, Æmilius, what's the news from Rome?

Æmil. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths

The Roman emperor greets you all by me:

And, for he understands you are in arms,

He craves a parley at your father's house,

Willing you to demand your hostages,

And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

I Goth. What says our general?

Luc. Æmilius, let the emperor give his pledges.

Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,

And we will come.—March away.¹⁰ [Exeunt.

1 I. e. performed in a manner exciting commiseration.
2 Steevens thinks that the allusion is to a custom mentioned in Genesis, xxiv. 9.

3 I. e. lascivious.

4 That love of bed-sports.

5 An allusion to bull-dogs; whose generosity and courage are always shown by meeting the bull in front.

6 Amongst the dogs and beares he goes,

Where, while he skipping cries—To head,—to head.

Davies's Epigrams.

6 Perhaps Young had this speech in his thoughts when he made his Moor say:—

'I urg'd Don Carlos to resign his mistress;

I forg'd the letter; I dispos'd the picture;

I hated, I despis'd, and I destroy.'

7 The verb to swoond, which we now write swoon was anciently in common use.

8 Marlowe has been supposed to be the author of this play; and whoever will read the conversation between Barabas and Ithamore, in the Jew of Malta, Act II. and compare it with these sentiments of Aaron, will perceive much reason for the opinion.

9 It appears from these words that the audience were entertained with part of the apparatus of an execution, and that Aaron was mounted on a ladder, as ready to be turned off.

10 Perhaps this is a stage direction crept into the text.

SCENE II. Rome. Before Titus's House. Enter TAMORA, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS, disguised.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habiliment, I will encounter with Andronicus ; And say, I am Revenge, sent from below, To join with him and right his heinous wrongs. Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps, To ruminat strange plots of dire revenge ; Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him, And work confusion on his enemies. [They knock.

Enter TITUS, above.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation ?

Is it your trick, to make me ope the door ;

That so my sad decrees may fly away,

And all my study be to no effect ?

You are deceiv'd : for what I mean to do,

See here, in bloody lines I have set down ;

And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talk with thee.

Tit. No ; not a word : How can I grace my talk,

Wanting a hand to give it action ?

Thou hast the odds of me, therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou would'st talk with me.

Tit. I am not mad ; I know thee well enough :

Witness this wretched stump, witness these crimson lines ;

Witness these trenches, made by grief and care ;

Witness the tiring day, and heavy night ;

Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well

For our proud empress, mighty Tamora :

Is not thy coming for my other hand ?

Tam. Know thou, sad man, I am not Tamora ;

She is thy enemy, and I thy friend :

I am Revenge ; sent from the infernal kingdom,

To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,

By working wreakful vengeance on thy foes.

Come down, and welcome me to this world's light ;

Confer with me of murder and of death :

There's not a hollow cave, or lurking-place,

No vast obscurity, or misty vale,

Where bloody murder, or detested rape,

Can couch for fear, but I will find them out ;

And in their ears tell them my dreadful name,

Revenge, which makes the foul offender quake.

Tit. Art thou Revenge ? and art thou sent to me,

To be a torment to mine enemies ?

Tam. I am ; therefore come down and welcome me.

Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee.

Lo, by thy side where Rape, and Murder, stands ;

Now give some 'surance that thou art Revenge,

Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels ;

And then I'll come, and be thy wagoner,

And whirl along with thee about the globes.

Provide thee proper palfreys, black as jet,

To hale thy vengeful wagon swift away,

And find out raurderers in their guilty caves :

And, when thy car is loaden with their heads,

I will dismount, and by the wagon wheel

Trot, like a servile footman, all day long ;

Even from Hyperion's rising in the east,

Until his very downfall in the sea.

And day by day I'll do this heavy task,

So thou destroy Rapine¹ and Murder there.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are these² thy ministers ? what are they call'd ?

Tam. Rapine and Murder ; therefore called so,

'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good lord, how like the empress' sons they are !

And you the empress ! But we worldly men

¹ Rape and rapine appear to have been sometimes used anciently as synonymous terms. Gower, De Confessione Amantis, lib. v ver. 116, uses ravyne in the same sense :—

'For if thou be of suche covine

To get of love by ravyne,

Thy love,' &c.

Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.

O, sweet Revenge, now do I come to thee :

And, if one arm's embracement will content thee, I will embrace thee in it by and by.

[Exit TITUS, from above.

Tam. This closing with him fits his lunacy :

Whate'er I forge, to feed his brain-sick fits,

Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches

For now he firmly takes me for Revenge ;

And being credulous in this mad thought,

I'll make him send for Lucius, his son ;

And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,

I'll find some cunning practice out of hand,

To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,

Or, at the least, make them his enemies.

See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter TITUS.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee :

Welcome, dread fury, to my woful house ;

Rapine, and Murder, you are welcome too :—

How like the empress and her sons you are !

Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor :—

Could not all hell afford you such a devil ?—

For, well I wot, the empress never wags,

But in her company there is a Moor ;

And, would you represent our queen aright,

It were convenient you had such a devil :

But welcome, as you are. What shall we do ?

Tam. What would'st thou have us do, Andronicus ?

Dem. Show me a murderer, I'll deal with him.

Chi. Show me a villain, that hath done a rape,

And I am sent to be reveng'd on him.

Tam. Show me a thousand, that hath done thee

wrong,

And I will be revenged on them all.

Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome ;

And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself,

Good Murder, stab him ; he's a murderer.—

Go thou with him ; and when it is thy hap,

To find another that is like to thee,

Good Rapine, stab him ; he is a ravisher.—

Go thou with them ; and in the emperor's court

There is a queen, attended by a Moor :

Well may'st thou know her by thy own proportion,

For up and down she doth resemble thee ;

I pray thee, do on them some violent death,

They have been violent to me and mine.

Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd us ; this shall we do

But would it please thee, good Andronicus,

To send for Lucius, thy thrice valiant son,

Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,

And bid him come and banquet at thy house :

When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,

I will bring in the empress and her sons,

The emperor himself, and all thy foes ;

And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,

And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart.

What says Andronicus to this device ?

Tit. Marcus, my brother !—'tis sad Titus calls

Enter MARCUS.

Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius ;

Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths :

Bid him repair to me, and bring with him

Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths ;

Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are :

Tell him, the emperor and the empress too

Feast at my house : and he shall feast with them.

This do thou for my love ; and so let him,

As he regards his aged father's life.

Mar. This will I do, and soon return again.

[Exit.

Tam. Now will I hence about thy business,

And take my ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me ;

² Similar violations of syntax, according to modern notions, are not unfrequent in our elder writers. Thus Hobbes, in his History of the Civil Wars :—'If the king give us leave, you or I may as lawfully preach as them that do.'

Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tam. What say you, boys? will you abide with him,

Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor,
How I have govern'd our determin'd jest?
Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair,

[Aside.]

And tarry with him, till I come again.

Tit. I know them all, though they suppose me mad;

And will o'er-reach them in their own devices,
A pair of cursed hell-hounds, and their dam.

[Aside.]

Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure, leave us here.

Tam. Farewell, Andronicus: Revenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy foes.

[Exit TAMORA.]

Tit. I know, thou dost; and, sweet Revenge,
farewell.

Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?

Tit. Tut, I have work enough for you to do.—
Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine!

Enter PUBLIUS, and others.

Pub. What's your will?

Tit. Know you these two?

Pub. Th' empress's sons,
I take them, Chiron and Demetrius.

Tit. Fie, Publius, fie! thou art too much deceived;

The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name:
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius;
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them:
Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it; therefore bind them sure;
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.

[Exit TITUS. PUBLIUS, &c. lay hold on CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.]

Chi. Villains, forbear: we are the empress's sons.

Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.—

Stop close their mouths, let them not speak a word:
Is he sure bound? look, that you bind them fast.

Re-enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with LAVINIA; she bearing a Bason, and he a Knife.

Tit. Come, come, Lavinia; look, thy foes are bound;

Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak to me;
But let them hear what fearful words I utter.—
O, villains, Chiron and Demetrius!
Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud;

This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband; and, for that vile fault,
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death:
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest:
Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that, more dear

Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd.
What would you say, if I should let you speak?
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats;
Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
The bason, that receives your guilty blood.
You know, your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad,—
Hark, villains; I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, I'll make a paste;
And of the paste a coffin¹ I will rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads;

¹ A coffin is the term for the crust of a raised pie.

² I. e. her own produce. 'The earth's increase' is the produce of the earth. 'Then shall the earth bring forth her increase,' Psalm lxxvii. 6. So in the Tempest, Act iv. Sc. 1:

'Earth's increase and foilson plenty.'

³ 'And our content runs parallel with thine, be the consequence of our coming to Rome what it may.'

⁴ I. e. begin the parley. We yet say, he breaks his mind.

And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.²

This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you us'd my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd:
And now prepare your throats.—Lavinia, come,

[He cuts their Throats.]

Receive the blood: and, when that they are dead,
Let me go grind their bones to powder small,

And with this hateful liquor temper it;
And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd.

Come, come, be every one officious
To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaur's feast.

So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook,
And see them ready 'gainst their mother comes.

[Exeunt, bearing the dead Bodies.]

SCENE III. The same. A Pavilion, with Tables, &c. Enter LUCIUS, MARCUS, and Goths, with AARON, Prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind,
That I repair to Rome, I am content.

1 Goth. And ours, with thine,³ befall what fortune will.

Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor,
This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil;

Let him receive no sustenance, fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the empress's face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings:

And see the ambush of our friends be strong:
I fear, the emperor means no good to us.

Aar. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!

Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unhallow'd slave!—
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.—

[Exeunt Goths, with AARON. Flourish.]
The trumpets show the emperor is at hand.

Enter SATURNINUS and TAMORA, with Tribunes, Senators, and others.

Sat. What, hath the firmament more suns than one?

Luc. What boots it thee, to call thyself a sun?

Mar. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break⁴ the parle;

These quarrels must be quietly debated.
The feast is ready, which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honourable end,
For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome:
Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your places.

Sat. Marcus, we will.

[Hautboys sound. The Company sit down at Table.]

Enter TITUS, dressed like a Cook, LAVINIA, veiled, Young LUCIUS, and others. TITUS places the Dishes on the Table.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord: welcome, dread queen;

Welcome, ye warlike Goths; welcome, Lucius;
And welcome, all: although the cheer be poor,
'Twill fill your stomachs; please you eat of it.

Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd, Andronicus?

Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,
To entertain your highness and your empress.

Tam. We are beholden to you, good Andronicus.

Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were.
My lord the emperor resolve me this;

Was it well done of rash Virginus,
To slay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deflower'd?⁵

5 Rowe may have availed himself of this passage in The Fair Penitent, where Sciolto asks Calista:—

'Hast thou not heard what brave Virginus did?—
With his own hand he slew his only daughter,' &c.

Titus Andronicus (as Steevens observes) is incorrect in his statement of this occurrence, for Virginia died unviolated. Mr. Boswell seems to think this is qualified by his saying that he had more cause to slay his daughter than Virginus.

Sat. It was, Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, mighty lord!

Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame,

And by her presence still renew his sorrows.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;

A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant,

For me, most wretched, to perform the like:—

Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;—

[He kills LAVINIA.]

And, with thy shame, thy father's sorrow die!

Sat. What hast thou done, unnatural, and unkind!

Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me blind.

I am as woful as Virginius was:

And have a thousand times more cause than he

To do this outrage;—and it is now done.

Sat. What, was she ravish'd? tell, who did the deed.

Tit. Will't please you eat? will't please your highness feed?

Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus?

Tit. Not I; 'twas Chiron, and Demetrius:

They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue,

And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.

Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently.

Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie;

Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,

Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.¹

'Tis true, 'tis true; witness my knife's sharp point.

[Killing TAMORA.]

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed.

[Killing TITUS.]

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?
There's need for meed, death for a deadly deed.

[Kills SATURNINUS. A great tumult. The People in confusion disperse. MARCUS, LUCIUS, and their Partisans ascend the Steps before TITUS's House.]

Mar. You sad-fac'd men, people and sons of Rome,

By uproar sever'd, like a flight of fowl

Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,

O, let me teach you how to knit again

This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,

These broken limbs again into one body.

Sen. Lest Rome herself be bane unto herself

And she, whom mighty kingdoms court'sy to,

Like a forlorn and desperate castaway,

Do shameful execution on herself.

But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,

Grave witnesses of true experience,

Cannot induce you to attend my words,—

Speak, Rome's dear friend; [To LUCIUS] as erst

our ancestor,

When with his solemn tongue he did discourse

To lovesick Dido's sad attending ear,

The story of that baleful burning night,

When subtle Greeks surpris'd King Priam's Troy;

Tell us, what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,

Or who hath brought the fatal engine in,

That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.—

My heart is not compact of flint, nor steel;

Nor can I utter all our bitter grief,

But floods of tears will drown my oratory,

And break my very utterance; even in the time

When it should move you to attend me most,

Lending your kind commiseration:

Here is a captain, let him tell the tale;

Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,

That cursed Chiron and Demetrius

Were they that murdered our emperor's brother;

And they it were that ravished our sister:

For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded;

Our father's tears despis'd; and basely cozen'd²

1 The additions made by Ravenscroft to this scene are much of a piece with it:—

'Thus cramm'd, thou'rt bravely fatten'd up for hell,
And thus to Pluto I do serve thee up.'

[Subs the Empress]

Of that true hand, that fought Rome's quarrel out,
And sent her enemies unto the grave.

Lastly, myself unkindly banished,

The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,

To beg relief among Rome's enemies;

Who down'd their enmity in my true tears,

And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend:

And I am the turn'd-forth, be it known to you,

That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood:

And from her bosom took the enemy's point,

Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body.

Alas! you know, I am no vaunter, I;

My scars can witness, dumb although they are,

That my report is just, and full of truth.

But, soft; methinks, I do digress too much,

Citing my worthless praise: O, pardon me;

For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Mar. Now is my turn to speak; Behold this child,

[Pointing to the Child in the Arms of an Attendant.]

Of this was Tamora delivered;

The issue of an irreligious Moor,

Chief architect and plotter of these woes;

The villain is alive in Titus' house,

Damn'd as he is, to witness this is true.

Now judge, what cause had Titus to revenge

These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,

Or more than any living man could bear.

Now you have heard the truth, what say you,

Romans?

Have we done aught amiss? Show us wherein,

And, from the place where you behold us now,

The poor remainder of Andronici

Will, hand in hand, all headlong cast us down,³

And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,

And make a mutual closure of our house.

Speak, Romans, speak; and, if you say, we shall,

Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Æmil. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,

And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,

Lucius our emperor; for, well I know,

The common voice do cry, it shall be so.

Rom. [Several speak.] Lucius, all hail; Rome's

royal emperor!

LUCIUS, &c. descend.

Mar. Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house;

[To an Attendant.]

And hither hale that misbelieving Moor,

To be adjudg'd some direful slaughtering death,

As punishment for his most wicked life.

Rom. [Several speak.] Lucius, all hail; Rome's gracious governor!

Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans; May I govern so,

To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her wo!

But, gentle people, give me aim awhile,—

For nature puts me to a heavy task;—

Stand all aloof,—but, uncle, draw you near,

To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk:—

O, take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,

[Kisses TITUS.]

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,

The last true duties of thy noble son!

Mar. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,

Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:

O, were the sum of these that I should pay

Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them!

Luc. Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn

of us

To melt in showers: Thy grandsire lov'd thee well:

Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee,

Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;

Many a matter hath he told to thee,

Mect and agreeing with thine infancy;

In that respect, then, like a loving child,

Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,

Because kind nature doth require it so:

Friends should associate friends in grief and wo:

And then 'A curtain drawn discovers the heads and hands of Demetrius and Chiron hanging up against the wall: their bodies in chairs in bloody linen.'

2 i. e. 'and he basely cozen'd.'

3 i. e. 'we the poor remainder, &c. will cast us down.'

Bid him farewell ; commit him to the grave ;
Do him that kindness, and take leave of him.

Boy. O, grandsire, grandsire ! even with all my heart

Would I were dead, so you did live again !—
O, lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping ;
My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with AARON.

I Rom. You sad Andronici, have done with woes ;
Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish him ;

There let him stand, and rave and cry for food :
If any one relieves or pities him,
For the offence he dies. This is our doom :

Some stay, to see him fasten'd in the earth.¹

Aar. O, why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb ?

I am no baby, I, that with base prayers,
I should repent the evil I have done ;
Ten thousand, worse than ever yet I did,
Would I perform if I might have my will ;
If one good deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very soul.

¹ That justice and cooking may go hand in hand to the conclusion of the play, in Ravenscroft's alteration of it, Aaron is at once racked and roasted on the stage.

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence,

And give him burial in his father's grave :
My father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our household's monument.
As for that heinous tiger, Tamora,
No funeral rite, nor man in mournful weeds,
No mournful bell shall ring her burial ;
But throw her forth to beasts, and birds of prey :
Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity ;
And, being so, shall have like want of pity.
See justice done to Aaron, that damn'd Moor.
By whom our heavy haps had their beginning
Then, afterwards, to order well the state ;
That like events may ne'er it ruinate. [Exeunt.]

ALL the editors and critics agree in supposing this play spurious. I see no reason for differing from them ; for the colour of the style is wholly different from that of the other plays, and there is an attempt at regular versification, and artificial closes, not always inelegant, yet seldom pleasing. The barbarity of the spectacles, and the general massacre which are here exhibited, can scarcely be conceived tolerable to any audience, yet we are told by Jonson that they were not only borne but praised. That Shakspeare wrote any part, though Theobald declares it incontestable, I see no reason for believing. JOHNSON

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

MR. DOUCE observes that 'the very great popularity of this play in former times may be supposed to have originated from the interest which the story must have excited. To trace the fable beyond the period in which the favourite romance of Apollonius Tyrtus was composed, would be a vain attempt : that was the probable original ; but of its author nothing decisive has been discovered. Some have maintained that it was originally written in Greek, and translated into Latin by a Christian about the time of the decline of the Roman empire ; others have given it to Symposius, a writer whom they place in the eighth century, because the riddles which occur in the story are to be found in a work entitled Symposii Enigmata. It occurs in that storehouse of popular fiction the Gesta Romanorum, and its antiquity is sufficiently evinced by the existence of an Anglo Saxon version, mentioned in Wanley's list, and now in Bene't College, Cambridge. One Constantine is said to have translated it into modern Greek verse, about the year 1500, (this is probably the MS. mentioned by Dufresne in the index of authors appended to his Greek Glossary,) and afterwards printed at Venice in 1563. It had been printed in Latin prose at Augsburg in 1471, which is probably as early as the first dateless impression of the Gesta Romanorum.*

A very curious fragment of an old metrical romance on the subject was in the collection of the late Dr. Farmer, and is now in my possession. This we have the authority of Mr. Tyrwhitt for placing at an earlier period than the time of Gower. The fragment consists of two leaves of parchment, which had been converted into the cover of a book, for which purpose its edges were cut off, some words entirely lost, and the whole has suffered so much by time as to be scarcely legible. Yet I have considered it so curious a relic of our early poetry and language, that I have bestowed some pains in deciphering what remains, and have given a specimen or two in the notes toward the close of the play.—I will here exhibit a further portion, comprising the name of the writer, who appears to have been Thomas Vicary, of Winborn Minster, in Dorsetshire. The portion I have given will continue the story of Apollonius (the Pericles of the play) :—

Explicit Appoloni Tyrus Rex nobilis & virtuosus, &c.
 This story is also related by Gower in his Confessio Amantis, lib. vii. p. 175—185, edit. 1554. Most of the incidents of the play are found in his narration, and a few of his expressions are occasionally borrowed.—Gower, by his own acknowledgment, took his story from the Pantheon of Godfrey of Viterbo; and the author of Pericles professes to have followed Gower.

Chaucer also refers to the story in The Man of Lawe's Prologue :—

'Or elles of Tyrius Appoloniuz,
 How that the cursed king Antiochus,
 Beraft his daughter of hire maidenhede;
 That is so horrible a tale for to rede,' &c.

A French translation from the Latin prose, evidently of the fifteenth century, is among the Royal MSS. in the British Museum, 20, c. ii. There are several more recent French translations of the story: one under the title of 'La Chronique d'Appolin Roi de Thyre,' 4to. Geneva, blk. l. no date. Another by Gilles Corrozet, Paris, 1530, 8vo. It is also printed in the seventh vol. of the Histoires Tragiques de Belleforest, 12mo. 1604; and modernised by M. Le Brun, was printed at Amsterdam in 1710, and Paris in 1711. 120. There is an abstract of the story in the Melanges tires d'une grande Bibliotheque, vol. lxiv. p. 265.

The first English prose version of the story, translated by Robert Copland, was printed by Wynkyn de Worde, 1510. It was again translated by T. Twine, and originally published by W. Howe, 1576. Of this there was a second impression in 1607, under the title of The Patterne of painful Adventures, containing the most excellent, pleasant, and variable Historie of the strange Accidents that befel unto Prince Appoloniuz, the Lady Lucina his Wife, and Tharsia his Daughter, &c. translated into English by T. Twine, Gent. The poet seems to have made use of this prose narration as well as of Gower.

That the greater part, if not the whole, of this drama, was the composition of Shakspeare, and that it is to be considered as his earliest dramatic effort, are positions, of which the first has been rendered highly probable by the elaborate disquisitions of Messrs. Steevens and Malone, and may possibly be placed in a clearer point of view by a more condensed and lucid arrangement of the testimony already produced, and by a further discussion of the merits and peculiarities of the play itself, while the second will, we trust, receive additional support by inferences legitimately deduced from a comprehensive survey of scattered and hitherto insulated premises.

The evidence required for the establishment of a high degree of probability under the first of these positions, necessarily divides itself into two parts; the external and the internal evidence. The former commences with the original edition of Pericles, which was entered on the Stationers' books by Edward Blount, one of the printers of the first folio edition of Shakspeare's plays, on the 20th of May, 1608, but did not pass the press until the subsequent year, when it was published, not, as might have been expected, by Blount, but by one Henry Gosson, who placed Shakspeare's name at full length in the title page. It is worthy of remark, also, that this edition was entered at Stationers' hall, together with Antony and Cleopatra, and that it (and the three following editions, which were also in quarto) was styled in the title page the much admired play of Pericles. As the entry, however, was by Blount, and the edition by Gosson, it is probable that the former had been anticipated by the latter, through the procuration of a play house copy. It may also be added, that Pericles was performed at Shakspeare's own theatre, The Globe. The next ascription of this play to our author is in a poem entitled The Times Displayed, in Six Sestynads, by S. Sheppard, 4to. 1616, dedicated to Philip Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, and containing in the ninth stanza of the sixth Sestiad a positive assertion of Shakspeare's property in this drama :—

'See him whose tragic scenes Euripides
 Doth equal, and with Sophocles we may Compare great Shakspeare; Aristophanes
 Never like him his fancy could display,
 Witness the Prince of Tyre his Pericles

This high eulogium on Pericles received a direct contradiction very shortly afterwards from the pen of an obscure poet named Tatham, who bears, however, an equally strong testimony as to Shakspeare's being the author of the piece, which he thus presumes to censure :—

'But Shakspeare, the plebeian driller, was Founder'd in his Pericles, and must not pass'

To these testimonies in 1646 and 1652, full and unqualified, and made at no distant period from the death of the bard to whom they relate, we have to add the still more forcible and striking declaration of Dryden, who tells us in 1677, and in words as strong and decisive as he could select, that—

'Shakspeare's own muse, his Pericles first bore.'

The only drawback on this accumulation of external evidence is the omission of Pericles in the first edition of our author's works: a negative fact which can have little weight, when we recollect that both the memory and judgment of Heminge and Condell, the poet's editors, were so defective, that they had forgotten Troilus and Cressida, until the entire folio, and the table of contents, had been printed; and admitted Titus Andronicus and the Historical Play of King Henry the Sixth, probably for no other reasons than that the former had been, from its unmerited popularity, brought forward by Shakspeare on his own theatre, though there is sufficient internal evidence to prove, without the addition of a single line; and because the latter, with a similar predilection of the lower orders in its favour, had obtained a similar, though not a more laboured attention from our poet, and was therefore deemed by his editors, though very unnecessarily, a requisite introduction to the two plays on the reign of that monarch, which Shakspeare had really new-modelled.

It cannot consequently be surprising, as they had forgotten Troilus and Cressida until the folio had been printed, they should have forgotten Pericles until the same folio had been in circulation, and when it was too late to correct the omission; an error which the second folio has, without doubt or examination, blindly copied.

If the external evidence in support of Shakspeare being the author of the greater part of this play be striking, the internal must be pronounced still more so, and, indeed, absolutely decisive of the question; for, whether we consider the style and phraseology, or the imagery, sentiment, and humour, the approximation to our author's uncontested dramas appears so close, frequent, and peculiar, as to stamp irresistible conviction on the mind.

The result has accordingly been such as might have been predicted, under the assumption of the play being genuine; for the more it has been examined the more clearly has Shakspeare's large property in it been established. It is curious, indeed, to note the increased tone of confidence which each successive commentator has assumed, in proportion as he has weighed the testimony arising from the piece itself. Rowe, in his first edition, says, "it is owned that some part of Pericles certainly was written by him, particularly the last act." Dr. Farmer observes that the hand of Shakspeare may be seen in the latter part of the play: Dr. Percy remarks that "more of the phraseology used in the genuine dramas of Shakspeare prevails in Pericles than in any of the other six doubted plays." Steevens says, "I admit without reserve that Shakspeare—

'—whose hopeful colours
 Advance a half fac'd sun, striving to shine,' is visible in many scenes throughout the play;—the purplet panni are Shakspeare's, and the rest the production of some inglorious and forgotten playwright:—adding, in a subsequent paragraph, that Pericles is valuable, "as the engravings of Mark Antonio are valuable not only on account of their beauty, but because they are supposed to have been executed under the eye of Raffaele." Malone gives it as his corrected opinion, that "the congenial sentiments, the numerous expressions bearing a striking similitude to passages in Shakspeare's undisputed plays, some of the incidents, the situation of many of the persons, and in various places the colour of the style, all these combine to set his seal on the play before us, and furnish us with internal and irresistible proofs, that a considerable portion of this piece, as it now appears, was written by him." On this ground he thinks the greater part of the three last acts may be safely ascribed to him; and that his hand may be traced occasionally in the other two. "Many will be of opinion (says Mr. Douce) that it contains more that Shakspeare might have written than either Love's Labour's Lost, or All's Well that Ends Well.

'For satisfactory proof that the style, phraseology, and imagery of the greater part of this play are truly Shakspearian, the reader has only to attend to the numerous coincidences which, in these respects, occur between Pericles and the poet's subsequent productions; similitudes so striking, as to leave no doubt that they originated from one and the same source.

'If we attend, however, a little further to the dramatic construction of Pericles, to its humour, sentiment, and character, not only shall we find additional evidence in favour of its being, in a great degree, the product of our author, but fresh cause, it is expected, for awarding it a higher estimation than it has hitherto obtained.'

Dr. Drake enters much more at large into the argument for establishing this as a juvenile effort of our great poet, and for placing the date of its composition in the year 1590, but we must content ourselves with referring the reader to his work for these particulars.—He continues:—

'Steevens thinks that this play was originally named Pyrocles, after the hero of Sidney's Arcadia, the character, as he justly observes, not bearing the smallest affinity to that of the Athenian statesman. "It is remarkable," says he, "that many of our ancient writers were ambitious to exhibit Sidney's worthies on the stage, and when his subordinate heroes were advanced to such honour, how happened it that Pyrocles, their leader, should be overlooked? Musidorus, (his companion,) Argalut and Parthenia, Phaulant and Eudora, Andromana, &c. furnished titles for different tragedies; and perhaps Pyrocles, in the present instance, was defrauded of a like distinction. The names invented or employed by Sidney had once such popularity, that they were sometimes borrowed by poets who did not profess to follow the direct current of his fables, or attend to the strict preservation of his characters. I must add, that the Appolyn of the Story-book and Gower could only have been rejected to make room for a more favourite name; yet however conciliating the name of Pyrocles might have been, that of Pericles could challenge no advantage with regard to general predilection. All circumstances therefore considered, it is not improbable that Shakspeare designed his chief character to be called Pyrocles, not Pericles, however ignorance or accident might have shuffled the latter (a name of almost similar sound) into the place of the former." This conjecture will amount almost to certainty if we diligently compare Pericles with the Pyrocles of the Arcadia; the same romantic, versatile, and sensitive disposition is ascribed to both characters, and several of the incidents pertaining to the latter are found mingled with the adventures of the former personage, while, throughout the play, the obligations of its author to various other parts of the romance may be frequently and distinctly traced, not only in the assumption of an image or a sentiment, but in the adoption of the very words of his once popular predecessor, proving incontestably the poet's familiarity with and study of the Arcadia to have been very considerable.

'However wild and extravagant the fable of Pericles may appear, if we consider its numerous chorusses, its pageantry, and dumb shows, its continual succession of incidents, and the great length of time which they occupy, yet it is, we may venture to assert, the most spirited and pleasing specimen of the nature and fabric of our earliest romantic drama which we possess, and the most valuable, as it is the only one with which Shakspeare has favoured us. We should therefore welcome this play as an admirable example of "the neglected favourites of our ancestors, with something of the same feeling that is experienced in the reception of an old and valued friend of our fathers or grandfathers. Nay, we should like it the better for its gothic appendages of pageants and chorusses, to explain the intricacies of the fable; and we can see no objection to the dramatic representation even of a series of ages in a single night, that does not apply to every description of poem, which leads in perusal from the fireside at which we are sitting, to a succession of remote periods and distant countries. In these matters faith is all-powerful; and without her influence, the most chastely cold and critically correct of dramas is precisely as unreal as the Midsummer Night's Dream, or the Winter's Tale."

'A still more powerful attraction in Pericles is, that the interest accumulates as the story proceeds; for, though many of the characters in the earlier part of the drama, such as Antiochus and his Daughter, Simonides and Thaisa, Cleon and Dionysa, disappear and drop into oblivion, their places are supplied by more pleasing and efficient agents, who are not less fugacious, but better calculated for theatrical effect. The inequalities of this production are, indeed, considerable, and only to be accounted for, with probability, on the supposition that Shakspeare either accepted a coadjutor, or improved on the rough sketch of a previous writer, the former, for many reasons, seems entitled to a preference, and will explain why, in compliment to his dramatic friend, he has suffered a few passages, and one entire scene, of a character totally dissimilar to his own style and mode of composition, to stand uncorrected; for who does not perceive that of the closing scene of the second act not a sentence or a word escaped from the pen of Shakspeare.

'No play, in fact, more openly discloses the hand of Shakspeare than Pericles, and fortunately his share in its composition appears to have been very considerable; he may be distinctly, though not frequently, traced in the first and second acts; after which, feeling the incompetency of his fellow-labourer, he seems to have assumed almost the entire management of the remainder, nearly the whole of the third, fourth, and fifth acts bearing indisputable testimony to the genius and execution of the great master.*

'The most corrupt of Shakspeare's other dramas, compared with Pericles, is purity itself. The metre is seldom attended to; verse is frequently printed as prose, and the grossest errors abound in every page. I mention these circumstances only as an apology to the reader for having taken somewhat more licence with this drama than would have been justifiable if the old copies had been less disfigured by the negligence and ignorance of the printer or transcriber.'—Malone.

Lords, Ladies, Knights, Gentlemen, Sailors, Pirates, Fishermen, and Messengers, &c.

SCENE, dispersedly in various Countries.†

* We meet with Pentapolitana regio, a country in Africa, consisting of five cities. Pentapolis occurs in the thirty-seventh chapter of King Appolyn of Tyre, 1510; in Gower; the Gesta Romanorum; and Twine's translation from it. Its site is marked in an ancient map of the world, MS. in the Cotton Library, Brit. Mus. Tiberius, b. v. In the original Latin romance of Apollonius Tyrius it is most accurately called Pentapolis Cyrenorum and was, as both Strabo and Ptolemy inform us, a district of Cyrenalca in Africa, comprising five cities, of which Cyrene was one.

† That the reader may know through how many regions the scene of this drama is dispersed, it is necessary to observe that Antioch was the metropolis of Syria; Tyre a city of Phœnicia in Asia; Tharsus, the metropolis of Cilicia, a country of Asia Minor; Mitylene, the capital of Lesbos, an island in the Egean sea; and Ephesus, the capital of Ionia, a country of the Lesser Asia.

ACT I.

*Enter GOWER.*¹ Before the Palace of Antioch.

To sing a song that old² was sung,
From ashes ancient Gower is come;³
Assuming man's infirmities,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.
It hath been sung at festivals,
On ember-eves, and holy ales;⁴
And lords and ladies in their lives
Have read it for restoratives:
The purchase⁵ is to make men glorious;
Et bonum quo antiquius, eo melius.
If you, born in these latter times,
When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that to hear an old man sing,
May to your wishes pleasure bring,
I life would wish, and that I might Waste it for you, like taper-light.—
This Antioch then, Antiochus the Great
Built up this city for his chiefest seat;
The fairest in all Syria;
(I tell you what mine authors say:)
This king unto him took a pheeze,⁶
Who died and left a female heir,
So buxom, blithe, and full of face,⁷
As heaven had lent her all his grace;
With whom the father liking took,
And her to incest did provoke:
Bad child, worse father! to entice his own
To evil, should be done by none.
By custom what they did begin,
Was, with long use, account⁸ no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes thither frame,⁹
To seek her as a bed-fellow,
In marriage-pleasures playfellow:
Which to prevent, he made a law
(To keep her still, and men in awe,)¹⁰
That whoso ask'd her for his wife,
His riddle told not, lost his life:
So for her many a wight did die,
As yon grim looks do testify.¹¹

1 Chorus, in the character of Gower, an ancient English poet, who has related the story of this play in his Confessio Amantis.

2 i. e. that of old.

3 The defect of metre (sung and come being no rhymes) points out that we should read—

From ancient ashes Gower sprung;¹
alluding to the restoration of the Phoenix.

4 That is, says Dr. Farmer, by whom this emendation was made, church-ales. The old copy has 'holy days.' Gower's speeches were certainly intended to rhyme throughout.

5 'The purchase' is the reading of the old copy; which Steevens, among other capricious alterations, changed to purpose. That Steevens and Malone were ignorant of the true meaning of the word purchase, I have shown, King Henry IV. part i. act ii. sc. 1. It was anciently used to signify gain, profit; any good or advantage obtained; as in the following instances:—James the First, when he made the extravagant gift of 30,000*l.* to Rich, said, 'You think now that you have a great purchase; but I am far happier in giving you that sum than you can be in receiving it.'

'No purchase passes a good wife, no losse
Is, than a bad wife a more cursed crosse.'

Chapman's Georgics of Hesiod, b. ii. 44, p. 32.

6 Long would it be ere thou hast purchase bought,
Or welthier wexen by such idle thought.'

Hall, Satire ii. b. 2.

7 Wife; the word signifies a mate or companion.

8 i. e. completely exuberantly beautiful. A full fortune, in Othello, means a complete one.

9 Account for accounted.

10 i. e. shape or direct their course thither.

11 'To keep her still to himself, and to deter others from demanding her in marriage.'

12 Gower must be supposed to point to the scene of the palace gate at Antioch, on which the heads of those unfortunate wights were fixed.

13 Which (the judgment of your eye) best can justify, i. e. prove its resemblance to the ordinary course of nature. Thus afterwards:—

'When thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge.'

13 It does not appear in the present drama that the

What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye I give, my cause who best can justify.¹² [Exit.]

SCENE I. Antioch. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTIOCHUS, PERICLES, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre,¹³ you have at large receiv'd

The danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus, and with a soul Embolden'd with the glory of her praise, Think death no hazard, in this enterprise. [Music.]

Ant. Bring in our daughter, clothed like a bride,¹⁴ For the embracements even of Jove himself; At whose conception (till Lucina reign'd, Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence,)¹⁵ The senate-house of planets all did sit, To knit in her their best perfections.

Enter the Daughter of ANTIOCHUS.

Per. See, where she comes, apparell'd like the spring,

Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king

Of every virtue gives renown to men!¹⁶

Her face the book of praises,¹⁷ where is read

Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence

Sorrow were ever ras'd, and testy wrath

Could never be her mild companion.¹⁸

Ye gods that made me man, and sway in love,

That have inflam'd desire in my breast,

To taste the fruit of yon celestial tree,

Or die in the adventure, be my helps,

As I am son and servant to your will,

To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles,—

Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.

Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,

With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;

For death-like dragons here affright thee hard:

Her face, like heaven, enticeth thee to view

Her countless glory, which desert must gain:

And which, without desert, because thine eye

Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.

Yon sometime famous princes, like thyself,

Drawn by report, adventurous by desire,

Tell thee with speechless tongues, and semblance pale,

That without covering, save yon field of stars,¹⁹ father of Pericles is living. By prince, therefore, throughout this play, we are to understand prince regnant. In the Gesta Romanorum, Apollonius is king of Tyre; and Appolyn in Copland's translation from the French. In Twine's translation he is repeatedly called prince of Tyros, as he is in Gower.

14 In the old copy this line stands:—

'Music, bring in our daughter clothed like a bride.'

Malone thinks it a marginal direction, inserted in the text by mistake. Mr. Boswell thinks it only an Alexandrine, and adds, "It does not seem probable that music would commence at the close of Pericles' speech, without an order from the king.'

15 The words whose and her refer to the daughter of Antiochus. The construction is, 'at whose conception the senate-house of planets all did sit,' &c.; and the words, 'till Lucina reign'd, Nature,' &c. are parenthetical. The leading thought may have been taken from Sidney's Arcadia, book ii. — 'The senate-house of the planets was at no time to set for the decreeing of perfection in a man,' &c. Thus also Milton, Paradise

Lost, viii. 511:

— all heaven,

And happy constellations on that hour

Shed their selectest influence.'

16 'The Graces are her subjects, and her thoughts

the sovereign of every virtue that gives renown to men.'

The ellipsis in the second line is what obscured this passage, which Steevens would have altered, because he did not comprehend it.

17 'Her face is a book where may be read all that is praiseworthy, every thing that is the cause of admiration and praise.' Shakspeare has often this image.

18 By 'her mild companion' the companion of her mildness is meant.

19 Hesperides is here taken for the name of the garden in which the golden apples were kept; as we find it in Love's Labour's Lost, Act iv.

20 Thus Lucan, lib. vii:—

— cælo tegitur qui non habet urnam.'

They here stand martyrs, slain in Cupid's wars;
And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist,
For going¹ on death's net, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hath taught
My frail mortality to know itself,
And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must:²
For death remember'd, should be like a mirror,
Who tells us, life's but breath; to trust it, error.
I'll make my will, then; and as sick men do,
Who know the world, see heaven, but feeling wo,³
Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did;
So I bequeath a happy peace to you,
And all good men, as every prince should do;
My riches to the earth from whence they came:
But my unspotted fire of love to you.

[To the Daughter of ANTIOCHUS.]

Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow, Antiochus.

Ant. Scorning advice.—Read the conclusion then;
Which read the world, see heaven, but feeling wo,³
As these before thee thou thyself shalt bleed.

Daugh. In all, save that, may'st thou prove prosperous!

In all, save that, I wish thee happiness!⁴

Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness, and courage.⁵

[He reads the Riddle.]

I am no viper, yet I feed

On mother's flesh which did me breed:

I sought a husband, in which labour,

I found that kindness in a father.

He's father, son, and husband mild,

I, mother, wife, and yet his child.

How they may be, and yet in two,

As you will live, resolve it you.

Sharp physic is the last:⁶ but O, you powers!
That give heaven countless eyes⁷ to view men's acts,

Why cloud they not their sights perpetually⁸
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it?
Fair glass of light, I lov'd you, and could still,

[Takes hold of the Hand of the Princess.]

Were not this glorious casket stor'd with ill;
But I must tell you,—now, my thoughts revolt;
For he's no man on whom perfections wait,⁹
That knowing sin within, will touch the gate.
You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings:
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,

1 l. e. 'for fear of going,' or 'lest they should go.'—
Dr. Percy proposed to read, 'in death's net' but on and in were anciently used the one for the other.

2 That is, 'to prepare this body for that state to which I must come.'

3 'I will act as sick men do; who having had experience of the pleasures of the world, and only a visionary and distant prospect of heaven, have neglected the latter for the former; but at length, feeling themselves decaying, grasp no longer at temporal pleasures, but prepare calmly for futurity.'

4 The old copy reads:—

'Of all said yet, may'st thou prove prosperous;
'Of all said yet, I wish thee happiness!'

The emendation is Mr. Mason's.

5 This is from the third book of Sidney's Arcadia:—
'Whereupon asking advice of no other thought but faithfulness and courage, he presently lighted from his own horse,' &c.

6 l. e. the intimation in the last line of the riddle, that his life depends on resolving it: which he properly enough calls sharp physic, or a bitter potion.

7 Thus in A Midsummer Night's Dream:—

'—who more engilds the night

Than all you fiery oes and eyes of light.

8 —stars hide your fires,

Let not light see,' &c. Macbeth.

9 l. e. he is no perfect or honest man, that knowing,
&c.

10 This is a stroke of nature. The incestuous king cannot bear to see a rival touch the hand of the woman he loves. His jealousy resembles that of Antony:—

'—to let him be familiar with

My play-fellow, your hand; this kindly seal
And pligher of high hearts.'

Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to harken;

But, being play'd upon before your time,
Hell only danceth at so harsh a chime:
Good sooth, I care not for you,

Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not,¹⁰ upon thy life,
For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expir'd;
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.

Per. Great king,
Few love to hear the sins they love to act;
'Twould 'braid yourself too near for me to tell it.
Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut, than shown;
For vice repeated, is like the wand'ring wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself;¹¹
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear
To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts

Copp'd¹² hills towards heaven, to tell, the earth is throng'd

By man's oppression;¹³ and the poor worm¹⁴ doth die for't.

Kings are earth's gods: in vice their law's their will;
And if Jove stray, who dares say, Jove doth ill?
It is enough you know; and it is fit,

What being more known grows worse, to smother it.
All love the womb that their first beings bred,
Then give my tongue like leave to love my head.

Ant. Heaven, that I had thy head! he has found the meaning;—

But I will gloze¹⁵ with him. [Aside.] Young prince of Tyre,

Though by the tenor of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,
We might proceed to cancel of your days;¹⁶

Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree
As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise:
Forty days longer we do respite you;

If by which time our secret be undone,
This mercy shows, we'll joy in such a son:
And until then, your entertain shall be,

As doth befit our honour, and your worth.

[Exeunt ANT. his Daughter, and Attend.]

Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin!

When what is done is like a hypocrite,
The which is good in nothing but in sight.
If it be true that I interpret false,

Then were it certain, you were not so bad,
As with foul incest to abuse your soul;
Where! now you're both a father and a son,

Malefort, in Massinger's Unnatural Combat, expresses the like impatient jealousy, when Beaufort touches his daughter Theocrine, to whom he was betrothed.

11 'The man who knows the ill practices of princes is unwise if he reveals what he knows; for the publisher of vicious actions resembles the wind, which while it passes along, blows dust into men's eyes. When the blast is over, the eyes that have been affected by the dust, though sore, see clear enough to stop for the future the air that would annoy them.' Pericles means by this similitude to show the danger of revealing the crimes of princes; for as they feel hurt by the publication of their shame, they will of course prevent the repetition of it, by destroying the person who divulged.
He pursues the same idea in the instance of the mole.

12 'Copp'd hills' are hills rising in a conical form, something of the shape of a sugarloaf. Thus in Hor-man's Vulgaria, 1519: 'Sometime men wear copped caps like a sugar loaf.' So Baret: 'To make copped, or sharpe at top; cacumino.' In Anglo-Saxon, cop is a head.

13 The earth is oppressed by the injuries which crowd upon her. Steevens altered throng'd to wrong'd;
but apparently without necessity.

14 The mole is called poor worm as a term of com-miseration. In The Tempest, Prospero, speaking to Miranda, says, 'Poor worm, thou art infected.' The mole remains secure till it has thrown up those hillocks which betray his course to the mole-catcher.

15 Flatter, insinuate.

16 To the destruction of your life.

17 Where has here the power of whereas; as in other passages of these plays. It occurs again with the same meaning in Act ii. Sc. 3, of this play

By your untimely claspings with your child,
(Which pleasure fits a husband, not a father;) ¹
And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the defiling of her parent's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antioch, farewell! for wisdom sees, those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night,
Will shun! no course to keep them from the light.
One sin, I know, another doth provoke;
Murder's as near to lust, as flame to smoke.
Poison and treason are the hands of sin,
Ay, and the targets, to put off the shame:
Then, lest my life be cropp'd to keep you clear,²
By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear. [Exit.]

Re-enter ANTIOCHUS.

Ant. He hath found the meaning, for the which we mean
To have his head.
He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,
Nor tell the world, Antiochus doth sin
In such a loathed manner:
And therefore instantly this prince must die;
For by his fall my honour must keep high.
Who attends on us there?

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. Doth your highness call?

Ant. Thaliard, you're of our chamber, and our mind

Partakes³ her private actions to your secrecy;
And for your faithfulness we will advance you.
Thaliard, behold, here's poison, and here's gold;
We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill him;
It fits thee not to ask the reason why,
Because we bid it. Say, is it done?

Thal. My lord,
'Tis done.

Enter a Messenger.

Ant. Enough.

Let your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.⁴

Mess. My lord, Prince Pericles is fled.

[Exit Messenger.

Ant. As thou
Wilt live, fly after; and, as an arrow, shot
From a well experienc'd archer, hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so ne'er return,
Unless thou say, Prince Pericles is dead.

Thal. My lord, if I
Can get him once within my pistol's length,
I'll make him sure; so farewell to your highness.

[Exit.]

Ant. Thaliard, adieu! till Pericles be dead,
My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.]

SCENE II. Tyre. A Room in the Palace. Enter
PERICLES, HELICANUS, and other Lords.

Per. Let none disturb us: Why should this change of thought?

The sad companion, dull-ey'd melancholy,
By me so us'd a guest is, not an hour,
In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night,

'For wisdom sees that those men who do not blush to commit actions blacker than the night, will not shun any course in order to preserve them from being made public.'

² 'To prevent any suspicion from falling on you.'—
So in Macbeth:—

'—always thought, that I Require a clearness.'

³ In The Winter's Tale the word partake is used in an active sense for participate:—

'—your exultation
Partake to every one.'

⁴ These words are addressed to the Messenger, who enters in haste.

⁵ '—Why should this change of thought?' This is the reading of the old copies; which Steevens changed to, 'Why this change of thoughts?' I think without necessity. Pericles, addressing the Lords, says, 'Let none disturb us.' Then apostrophising himself, says, 'Why should this change in our thoughts disturb us?'

(The tomb where grief should sleep,) can breed me quiet!

Hers pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes
shun them,

And danger, which I feared, is at Antioch,
Whose arm seems far too short to hit me here:
Yet neither pleasure's art can joy my spirits,
Nor yet the other's distance comfort me.
Then it is thus: the passions of the mind,
That have their first conception by misread,
Have after-nourishment and life by care;
And what was first but fear what might be done,
Grows elder now, and cares it be not done.

And so with me; the great Antiochus, (Gainst whom I am too little to contend,
Since he's so great, can make his will his act,)
Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence;
Nor boots it me to say, I honour him,⁶
If he suspect I may dishonour him:

And what may make him blush in being known,
He'll stop the course by which it might be known;
With hostile forces he'll o'erspread the land,
And with the ostent of war⁷ will look so huge,
Amazement shall drive courage from the state;
Our men be vanquish'd, ere they do resist,
And subjects punish'd, that ne'er thought offence:
Which care of them, not pity of myself,
(Who am⁸ no more but as the tops of trees,
Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend
them,)

Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish
And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast!

2 Lord. And keep your mind, till you return to us,
Peaceful and comfortable!

Hel. Peace, peace, my lords, and give experience
tongue.

They do abuse the king, that flatter him:
For flattery is the bellows blows up sin;
The thing the which is flatter'd, but a spark,
To which that breath⁹ gives heat and stronger glowing;

Whereas reproof, obedient, and in order,
Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err,
When Signior Sooth¹⁰ here does proclaim a peace
He flatters you, makes war upon your life:
Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please;
I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else; but let your cares o'erlook
What shipping, and what lading's in our haven,
And then return to us. [Exeunt Lords.] Helicanus,
thou

Hast moved us: what seest thou in our looks?
Hel. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' frowns,
How durst thy tongue move anger to our face?

Hel. How dare the plants look up to heaven, from whence

They have their nourishment?

Per. Thou know'st I have power
To take thy life.

Hel. [Kneeling.] I have ground the axe myself;
Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, pr'ythee rise;

⁶ Him was supplied by Rowe for the sake of the metre.

⁷ Old copies:—

'And with the stent of war will look so huge.'
The emendation, suggested by Mr. Tyrwhitt, is confirmed by the following passage in Decker's Entertainment to King James I. 1604:—

'And why you bear alone th' ostent of warre.'
Again in Chapman's translation of Homer's Batrachomachia:—

'Both heralds bearing the ostents of war.'

⁸ The old copy reads, 'Who once no more,' &c. The emendation is by Steevens. Malone reads, 'Who wants no more,' &c.

⁹ i. e. the breath of flattery. The word spark was here accidentally repeated by the compositor in the old copy.

¹⁰ A near kinsman of this gentleman is mentioned in The Winter's Tale:—'And his pond fished by his next neighbour, by Sir Smile.'

Sit down, sit down; thou art no flatterer:
I thank thee for it; and high heaven forbid,
That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid!

Fit counsellor, and servant for a prince,
Who by thy wisdom mak'st a prince thy servant,
What would'st thou have me do?

Hel. With patience bear
Such griefs as you do lay upon yourself.

Per. Thou speak'st like a physician, Helicanus;
Who minister'st a potion unto me,
That thou would'st tremble to receive thyself.
Attend me then: I went to Antioch,
Where, as thou know'st, against the face of death,
I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
From whence an issue I might propagate,
Are arms to princes, and bring to subjects joys.²
Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder;
The rest (hark in thine ear,) as black as incest;
Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father
Seem'd not to strike, but smooth:³ but thou know'st
this,

'Tis time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss.
Which fear so grew in me, I hither fled,
Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem'd my good protector; and being here,
Bethought me what was past, what might succeed.
I knew him tyrannous; and tyrants' fears
Decrease not, but grow faster than their years:
And should he doubt it,⁴ (as no doubt he doth,)
That I should open to the listening air,
How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
To keep his bed of blackness unlaid ope,—
To lop that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done him;
When all, for mine, if I may call't offence,
Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence:
Which love to all (of which thyself art one,
Who now reprov'st me for it)——

Hel. Alas, sir!
Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,

Musings into my mind, a thousand doubts
How I might stop this tempest, ere it came;
And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.⁵

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave to speak,

Freely I'll speak. Antiochus you fear,
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,
Who, either by public war, or private treason,
Will take away your life.
Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
Till that his rage and anger be forgot,
Or Destinies do cut his thread of life.

Your rule direct to any; if to me,
Day serves not light more faithful than I'll be.

Per. I do not doubt thy faith;
But should he wrong my liberties in absence——

Hel. We'll mingle bloods together in the earth,
From whence we had our being and our birth.

Per. Tyre, I now look from thee, then, and to Tharsus

Intend my travel, where I'll hear from thee;
And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.
The care I had and have of subjects' good,
On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can bear it.⁶
I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath;
Who shuns not to break one, will sure crack both:
But in our orbs' we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince,⁷
Thou show'd'st a subject's shine, I a true prince.⁸

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Tyre. An Ante-Chamber in the Palace. Enter THALIARD.

Thal. So, this is Tyre, and this is the court.
Here must I kill king Pericles; and if I do not, I am sure to be hang'd at home: 'tis dangerous.—
Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow, and had good discretion, that being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets.⁹
Now do I see he had some reason for it: for if a king bid a man be a villain, he is bound by the indenture of his oath to be one.—Hush, here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter HELICANUS, ESCANES, and other Lords.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre,
Further to question of your king's departure.
His seal'd commission, left in trust with me,
Doth speak sufficiently, he's gone to travel.

Thal. How! the king gone! [Aside.]

Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied,
Why, as it were unlicens'd of your loves,
He would depart, I'll give some light unto you.
Being at Antioch——

Thal. What from Antioch? [Aside.]

Hel. Royal Antiochus, (on what cause I know not,)
Took some displeasure at him; at least he judg'd so:
And doubting lest that he had err'd or sinn'd,
To show his sorrow, would correct himself;
So puts himself¹⁰ unto the shipman's toil,
With whom each minute threatens life or death.

Thal. Well, I perceive [Aside.]

I shall not be hang'd now, although I would;
But since he's gone, the king it sure must please,
He scap'd the land, to perish on the seas.¹¹
But I'll present me. Peace to the lords of Tyre!

Hel. Lord Thaliard from Antiochus is welcome.

Thal. From him I come,
With message unto princely Pericles:
But, since my landing, as I have understood
Your lord has took himself to unknown travels,
My message must return from whence it came.

Hel. We have no reason to desire it, since¹²
Commended to our master, not to us:

7 i. e. in our different spheres.

'—— in scilpso totius teres atque rotundus.'

8 Overcome.

9 This sentiment is not much unlike that of Falstaff:—
'I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince.'
The same idea is more clearly expressed in King Henry VIII. Act iii. Sc. 2:—

'A loyal subject is Therein illustrated.'

10 Who this wise fellow was, may be known from the following passage in Barnabe Riche's Souldier's Wieke to Briton's Welfare, or Captain Skill and Captain Pill, 1604, p. 27:—'I will therefore commend the poet
Philippides, who being demanded by King Lisimachus, what favour he might do unto him for that he loved him, made this answer to the king—That your majesty would never impart unto me any of your secrets.'

11 Stevens has thought this phrase wanted illustration;
but it is of very common occurrence. 'To put himself in danger of his life; in periculum caput se inferre.'—Bart.

12 The old copy reads:—

'But since he's gone the king's seas must please:
He scap'd the land, to perish at the sea.'

The emendation is by Dr. Percy.

13 The adverb since, which is wanting in the old copy, was supplied by Stevens for the sake of sense and metre.

1 'Forbid it, heaven, that kings should suffer their ears to hear their feelings palliated!'

2 'From whence I might propagate an issue that are arms,' &c. Stevens reads:—

'Bring arms to princes, and to subjects joys.'

3 To smooth is to sooth, coax, or flatter. Thus in King Richard III.:

'Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog.'

So in Titus Andronicus:—

'Yield to his humour, smooth, and speak him fair.'

The verb to smooth is frequently used in this sense by our elder writers; for instance, by Stubbes in his Anatomic of Abusees, 1583:—'If you will learn to deride, coffe, mock, and flout, to flatter and smooth,' &c.

4 The quarto of 1609 reads, 'And should he doot,' &c.; from which the reading of the text has been formed.
'Should he be in doubt that I shall keep his secret, (as there is no doubt but he is,) why, to 'lop that doubt,'
i. e. to get rid of that painful uncertainty, he will strive to make me appear the aggressor, by attacking me first as the author of some supposed injury to himself.'

5 That is, to lament their fate. The first quarto reads, 'to grieve for them.'

6 This transfer of authority naturally brings the first scene of Measure for Measure to our mind.

Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire,—
As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Tharsus. A Room in the Governor's House. Enter CLEON, DIONYZA, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyza, shall we rest us here,
And by relating tales of others' griefs,
See if 'twill teach us to forget our own?

Dio. That were to blow at fire, in hope to quench it;
For who digs hills because they do aspire,
Throws down one mountain, to east up a higher.
O, my distressed lord, even such our griefs;
Here they're but felt, and seen with mistful eyes,¹
But like to groves, being topp'd, they higher rise.

Cle. O, Dionyza,
Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it,
Or can conceal his hunger, till he famish?
Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep our woes
Into the air; our eyes do weep, till lungs
Fetch breath that may proclaim them louder; that,
If the gods slumber,² while their creatures want,
They may awake their helps to comfort them.
I'll then discourse our woes, felt several years,
And wanting breath to speak, help me with tears.

Dio. I'll do my best, sir.

Cle. This Tharsus, o'er which I have government,
A city, on whom plenty held full hand
(For riches strew'd herself even in the streets;) ³ Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss'd the clouds,

And strangers ne'er beheld, but wonder'd at;
Whose men and dames so jettied⁴ and adorn'd,
Like one another's glass to trim them by;⁴
Their tables were stor'd full, to glad the sight,
And not so much to feed on, as delight;
All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great,
The name of help grew odious to repeat.

Dio. O, 'tis too true.

Cle. But see what heaven can do! By this our change,

These mouths, whom but of late, earth, sea, and air,
Were all too little to content and please,
Although they gave their creatures in abundance,
As houses are defil'd for want of use,
They are now starv'd for want of exercise:
Those palates, who not yet two summers younger,⁵
Must have inventions to delight the taste,
Would now be glad of bread and beg for it;
Those mothers who, to nouse⁶ up their babes,
Thought nought too curious, are ready now,
To eat those little darlings whom they lov'd.
So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife
Draw lots, who first shall die to lengthen life:

1 The old copy reads:—

— and seen with mischiefs eye.

The alteration was made by Steevens, who thus explains the passage:—'Withdrawn as we now are from the scene we describe, our sorrows are simply felt, and appear indistinct, as through a mist.' Malone reads:—

— unseen with mischief's eyes.

i. e. 'unseen by those who would feel a malignant pleasure in our misfortunes, and add to them by their triumph over us.'

2 The old copy reads, 'If heaven slumber,' &c. This was probably an alteration of the licencer of the press. Sense and grammar require that we should read, 'If the gods,' &c.

3 To jet is to strut, to walk proudly.

4 Thus in the Second Part of King Henry IV.—

— He was indeed the glass,

Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.'

Again in Cymbeline:—

'A sample to the youngest, to the more mature

A glass that feated them.'

5 The old copy has:—

— who not yet too savers younger.'

The emendation was proposed by Mason. Steevens remarks that Shakspeare computes time by the same number of summers in Romco and Julliet:—

'Let two more summers wither in their pride,' &c.

Malone reads:—

— who not used to hunger's savour.'

6 Steevens thought that this word should be nursle; but the examples are numerous enough in our old writ-

Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping;
Here many sink, yet those which see them fall,
Have scarce strength left to give them burial.
Is not this true?

Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness it.
Cle. O, let those cities, that of Plenty's cup
And her prosperities so largely taste,
With their superfluous riots, bear these tears!
The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here.

Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st, in haste,
For comfort is too far for us to expect.

Lord. We have descried, upon our neighbouring shore,

A portly sail of ships make hitherward.

Cle. I thought as much.

One sorrow never comes, but brings an heir,
That may succeed as his inheritor;
And so in ours: some neighbouring nation,
Taking advantage of our misery,
Hath stuff'd these hollow vessels with their power,⁷
To beat us down, the which are down already;
And make a conquest of unhappy me,⁸
Whereas⁹ no glory's got to overcome.

Lord. That's the least fear: for, by the semblance
Of their white flags display'd, they bring us peace,
And come to us as favourers, not as foes.

Cle. 'Thou speak'st like him¹⁰ untutor'd to repeat,
Who makes the fairest show means most deceit.
But bring they what they will, what need we fear?
The ground's the low'st, and we are halfway there.¹¹
Go tell their general, we attend him here,
To know for what he comes, and whence he comes,
And what he craves.

Lord. I go, my lord.

[Exit.]

Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist:¹²
If wars, we are unable to resist.

Enter PERICLES, with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,
Let not our ships, and number of our men,
Be, like a beacon fir'd, to amaze your eyes.
We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And see the desolation of your streets!
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load;
And these our ships you happily may think
Are like the Trojan horse, war-stuff'd within, ters to show that the text is right. Thus in New Custom: Doddsley's Old Plays, vol. i. p. 284:—

'Borne to all wickedness, and musled in all evil.'

So Spenser, Faerie Queene, i. vi. 23:—

'Whom, till to ryper years he gan aspyre,

He nousel'd up in life and maners wilde.'

'It were a more vantage and profit by a great dele that yonge children's wyttes were otherwyse sette a warke, than nousel them in suche errour.'—Horman's Vulgaris, 1519, fo. 86.

'Nousel'd in virtuous disposidion, and framed to an honest trade of living.'—Udal's Apopthegmes, fo. 75.

So in The Death of King Arthur, 1601, cited by Malone:—

'Being nuzzled in effeminate delights.'

7 Hollow, applied to ships, is a Homeric epithet. See Iliad, v. 26. By power is meant forces.

8 A letter has been probably dropped at press: we may read, 'of unhappy men.'

9 It has been already observed that whereas was sometimes used for where; as well as the converse, where for whereas.

10 The quarto of 1609 reads:—

'Thou speak'st like him¹⁰ untutor'd to repeat.'

'Like him untutor'd,' for 'like him who is untutor'd.' Deluded by the pacific appearance of this navy, you talk like one who has never learned the common adage, —that the fairest outsides are most to be suspected.'

11 The quarto of 1619 reads:—

'But bring they what they will, and what they can,

What need we fear?

The ground's the low'st, and we are halfway there.'

12 i. e. if he rest or stand on peace.

With bloody views, expecting overthrow,¹
Are stor'd with corn, to make your needy bread,
And give them life, who are hunger-starv'd, half
dead.

All. The gods of Greece protect you!
And we'll pray for you.

Per. Rise, I pray you, rise;
We do not look for reverence, but for love;
And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men.

Cle. The which when any shall not gratify,
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,
The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils!
Till when (the which, I hope, shall ne'er be seen),
Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. Which welcome we'll accept; feast here
a while,
Until our stars that frown, lend us a smile.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king
His child, I wis, to incest bring;
A better prince, and benign lord,
Prove awful both in deed and word.²
Be quiet, then, as men should be,
Till he hath pass'd necessity.
I'll show you those in trouble's reign,
Losing a mite, a mountain gain.
The good in conversation,
(To whom I give my benizon,)
Is still at Tharsus, where each man³
Thinks all is writ he spoken can:⁴
And, to remember what he does,
Gild his statue to make it glorious:⁵
But tidings to the contrary
Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?

Dumb Show.

Enter at one Door PERICLES, talking with CLEON;
all the Train with them. Enter at another Door,
a Gentleman with a Letter to PERICLES; PERI-CLES shows the Letter to CLEON; then gives the Messenger a reward, and knights him. Exeunt
PERICLES, CLEON, &c. severally.

Gow. Good Helicane, that staid at home,⁶
(Not to eat honey, like a drone,
From others' labours; for though he strive
To killen bad, keep good alive;
And, to fulfil his prince's desire,)
Sends word of all that haps in Tyre;⁷
How Thaliard came full bent with sin,
And hid intent, to murder him;
And that in Tharsus was not best
Longer for him to make his rest:

1 The old copy reads:—

'And these our ships you happily may think
Are like the Trojan horse, was stuff'd within
With bloody veines,' &c.

The emendation is STEEVENS'S. Mr. Boswell says that the old reading may mean, elliptically, 'which was stuff'd.'

2 I. e. 'you have seen a better prince, &c. that will prove awful,' i. e. reverent. The verb in the first line is carried on to the third.

3 'The good in conversation
(To whom I give my benizon,)
Is still at Tharsus, where'— Gower means to say, 'The good prince (on whom I bestow my best wishes) is still engaged at Tharsus, where every man,' &c. Conversation is conduct, behaviour. See the Second Epistle of St. Peter, iii. 11.

4 'Pays as much respect to whatever Pericles says,
as if it were Holy Writ.'

5 This circumstance, as well as the foregoing, is found in the Confessio Amantis:—

'That thei for ever in remembrance
Made a figure in resemblance
Of hym, and in a common place
Thei set it up; so that his face
Might every maner man beholde,
It was of laton over gylte,' &c.

He knowing so, put forth to seas,
Where when men been, there's seldom ease;
For now the wind begins to blow;
Thunder above, and deeps below,
Make such unquiet, that the ship
Should house him safe, is wreck'd and split;
And he, good prince, having all lost,
By waves from coast to coast is tost:
All perishen of man, of pelf,
Ne aught escapen but himself;
Till fortune, tir'd with doing bad,
Threw him ashore, to give him glad:
And here he comes: what shall be next,—
Pardon old Gower; this 'longs the text.' [Exit.]

SCENE I. Pentapolis. An open Place by the Sea Side. Enter PERICLES, wet.

Per. Yet cease your ire, ye angry stars of heaven!
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly man
Is but a substance that must yield to you;
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you;
Alas, the sea hath cast me on the rocks,
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me breath
Nothing to think on, but ensuing death:
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers,
To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes;
And having thrown him from your watery grave,
Here to have death in peace, is all he'll crave.

Enter Three Fishermen.

1 Fish. What, ho, Pilche!¹

2 Fish. Ho! come, and bring away the nets.

1 Fish. What, Patch-breech, I say!

3 Fish. What say you, master?

1 Fish. Look how thou stirrest now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wannonion.¹⁰

3 Fish. 'Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us, even now.

1 Fish. Alas, poor souls, it griev'd my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to us, to help them, when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.

3 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the porpus, how he bounced and tumbled?¹¹ they say, they are half fish, half flesh: a plague on them, they ne'er come, but I look to be wash'd.
Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.

1 Fish. Why, as men do a-land; the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale; 'a plague and tumbles, driving the poor fry before him,'¹² and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such whales have I heard on a' the land, who never leave gaping till they've swallow'd the whole parish, church, steeple, bells and all.

Per. A pretty moral.

3 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

2 Fish. Why, man?

3 Fish. Because he should have swallow'd me too: and when I had been in his belly, I would

6 Thus the old copy. STEEVENS reads:—
'Good Helicane hath staid at home.'

7 Old copy:—'Sav'd one of all,' &c. The emendation is STEEVENS'S.

8 'Pardon old Gower from telling what ensues, it belongs to the text, not to his province as chorus.'— STEEVENS justly remarks, that 'the language of our fictitious Gower, like that of the Pseudo-Rowley, is so often irreconcilable to the practice of any age, that criticism on such bungling imitations is almost thrown away.'

9 The old copy reads:—

'What to pelche.'

The emendation was suggested by Mr. Tyrwhitt, who remarks that Pilche is a leathern coat.

10 This expression, which is equivalent to with a mischief, or with a vengeance, is of very frequent occurrence in old writers.

11 Sailors have observed, that the playing of porpoises round a ship is a certain prognostic of a violent gale of wind.

12 So in Coriolanus:—

'_____ like scaled sculls
Before the belching whale.'

have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left, till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good king Simonides were of my mind——

Per. Simonides?

3 Fish. We would purge the land of these drones, that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. How from the finny subject of the sea These fishers tell the infirmities of men; And from their watery empire recollect All that may men approve, or men detect! Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

2 Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that? if it be a day fits you, scratch it out of the calendar, and no body will look after it.¹

Per. Nay, see, the sea hath cast upon your coast——

2 Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea; to cast thee in our way!

Per. A man whom both the waters and the wind, In that vast tennis-court, hath made the ball For them to play upon,² entreats you pity him; He asks of you, that never us'd to beg.

1 Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? here's them in our country of Greece, gets more with begging, than we can do with working.

2 Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes then?

Per. I never practis'd it.

2 Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve, sure: for here's nothing to be got now-a-days, unless thou canst fish for't.

Per. What I have been, I have forgot to know; But what I am, want teaches me to think on: A man shrunk up with cold: my veins are chill, And have no more of life, than may suffice To give my tongue that heat, to ask your help; Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead, For that I am a man, pray see me buried.

1 Fish. Die, quoth-a? Now, gods forbid! I have a gown here; come, put it on; keep thee warm. Now, afore me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and, moreover, puddings and flap-jacks,³ and thou shalt be welcome.

Per. I thank you, sir.

2 Fish. Hark, you, my friend, you said you could not beg.

Per. I did but crave.

2 Fish. But crave? Then I'll turn craver, too, and so I shall 'scape whipping.

Per. Why, are all your beggars whipped, then?

2 Fish. O, not all, my friend, not all; for if all your beggars were whipped, I would wish no better office, than to be beadle. But, master, I'll go draw up the net. [Exeunt two of the Fishermen.]

Per. How well this honest mirth becomes their labour!

1 Fish. Hark you, sir! do you know where you are?

Per. Not well.

1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king, the good Simonides.

Per. The good king Simonides, do you call him?

¹ The old copy reads, 'If it be a day fits you search out of the calendar, and nobody look after it.' The preceding speech of Pericles affords no apt introduction to the reply of the fisherman. Some remark upon the day appears to have been omitted. Steevens supplied it thus:—

'Per. Peace be at your labour, honest fisherman; The day is rough, and thwarts your occupation.'

The following speech of Pericles is equally abrupt and inconsistent:—

'Y' may see the sea hath cast me upon your coast.' The emendation is by Steevens.

Dr. Farmer thinks that there may be an allusion to the dies honestissimus of Cicero. The lucky and unlucky days are put down in the old calendars.

² Thus in Sidney's Arcadia, book v.:—'In such a shadow, &c. mankind lives, that neither they know how to foresee, nor what to fear, and are, like tennis balls, tossed by the racket of the higher powers.'

³ Flap-jacks are pancakes. Thus in Taylor's Jack a Lent:—'Until at last, by the skill of the cook, it is

1 Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves to be so call'd, for his peaceable reign, and good government.

Per. He is a happy king, since he gains from his subjects the name of good, by his government. How far is his court distant from this shore?

1 Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey; and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world, to just and tourney for her love.

Per. Were my fortunes equal to my desires, I could wish to make one there.

1 Fish. O, sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for—his wife's soul.⁴

Re-enter the Two Fishermen, drawing up a Net.

2 Fish. Help, master, help; here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law; 'twill hardly come out. Ha! bots on't,⁵ 'tis come at last, and 'tis turned to a rusty armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.

Thanks, fortune, yet, that after all my crosses, Thou giv'st me somewhat to repair myself; And, though it was mine own,⁶ part of mine heritage,

Which my dead father did bequeath to me, With this strict charge, (even as he left his life,) Keep it, my Pericles, it hath been a shield 'Twixt me and death (and pointed to this brace:)⁷ For that it sav'd me, keep it: in like necessity, The which the gods protect thee from! it may defend thee.

It kept where I kept, I so dearly lov'd it; Till the rough seas, that spare not any man, Took it in rage, though calm'd, have given it again, I thank thee for't; my shipwreck's now no ill, Since I have here my father's gift in his will.

1 Fish. What mean you, sir?

Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this coat of worth,

For it was sometime target to a king; I know it by this mark. He lov'd me dearly, And for his sake, I wish the having of it; And that you'd guide me to your sovereign's court, Where with't I may appear a gentleman; And if that ever my low fortunes better, I'll pay your bounties; till then, rest your debtor.

1 Fish. Why, wilt thou tourney for the lady?

Per. I'll show the virtue I have borne in arms.

1 Fish. Why, do ye take it, and the gods give thee good on't!

2 Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend; 'twas wo that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain condolements, certain vails. I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it.

Per. Believe't, I will.

Now, by your furtherance, I am cloth'd in steel; And spite of all the rupture⁸ of the sea, This jewel holds his bidding⁹ on my arm; transformed into the form of a flap-jack, which in our translation, is call'd a pancake.

⁴ 'Things must be' (says the speaker,) as they are appointed to be; and what a man is not sure to compass, he has yet a just right to attempt.' The Fisherman may then be supposed to begin a new sentence—'His wife's soul'; but here he is interrupted by his comrades; and it would be vain to conjecture the conclusion of his speech.

⁵ This comic execration was formerly used in the room of one less descent. The bots is a disease in horses produced by worms.

⁶ i. e. and I thank you, though it was mine own.

⁷ The brace is the armour for the arm. So in Troilus and Cressida:—

'I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver, And in my vant brace put this wither'd brawn.'

⁸ The rupture of the sea may mean the breaking of the sea, as Malone suggests; but I would rather read rapture, which is often used in old writers for violent seizure, or the act of carrying away forcibly. As in the example excited by Malone.

⁹ The old copy reads, 'his building;' but bidding

Unto thy value will I mount myself
Upon a courser, whose delightful steps
Shall make the gazer joy to see him tread.—
Only, my friend, I yet am unprovided
Of a pair of bases.¹

2 Fish. We'll sure provide: thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair; and I'll bring thee to the court myself.

Per. Then honour be but a goal to my will;
This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A public Way, or Platform, leading to the Lists. A Pavilion by the side of it, for the reception of the King, Princess, Lords, &c. Enter SIMONIDES, THAISA, Lords, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph?

1 Lord. They are, my liege;
And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them,² we are ready; and our daughter,
In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,
Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat
For men to see, and seeing wonder at.

[Exit a Lord.]

Thai. It pleaseth you, my royal father, to express
My commendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. 'Tis fit it should be so; for princes are
A model, which heaven makes like to itself;
As jewels lose their glory, if neglected,
So princes their renown, if not respected.
'Tis now your honour,³ daughter, to explain
The labour of each knight, in his device.

Thai. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll perform.

Enter a Knight: he passes over the Stage, and his Squire presents his Shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?

Thai. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is a black Æthiop, reaching at the sun;
The word,⁴ Lux tua vita mihi.

Sim. He loves you well, that holds his life of you.

[The second Knight passes.]

Who is the second, that presents himself?

Thai. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is an arm'd knight, that's conquer'd by a lady:
The motto thus, in Spanish, Piu per dulçura que per fuerça.⁵ [The third Knight passes.]

Sim. And what's the third?

Thai. The third, of Antioch;
And his device, a wreath of chivalry:
The word, Me pompa provexit apex.⁶

[The fourth Knight passes.]

Sim. What is the fourth?

Thai. A burning torch, that's turned upside down;
The word, Quod me alit, me extinguit.

was probably the poet's word. A similar expression occurs in Othello:—

— look, I have a weapon,
A better never did sustain itself
Upon a soldier's thigh.

Any ornament of enchased gold was anciently styled a jewel.

1 Bases were a sort of petticoat that hung down to the knees, and were suggested by the Roman military dress, in which they seem to have been separate parallel slips of cloth or leather. In Ridder's Latin Dictionary, bases are rendered palliohum curtum. The Highlanders wear a kind of bases at this day. In Massin-ger's Picture, Sophia, speaking of Hilarion's disguise, says to Corisca:—

— You, minion,
Had a hand in it too, as it appears
Your petticoat serves for bases to this warrior.

2 i. e. return them notice that we are ready, &c.

3 The sense would be clearer were we to substitute both in this and in the following Instance office for honour. Honour may however mean her situation as queen of the feast, as she is afterwards called. The idea of this scene may have been derived from the third book of the Iliad, where Helen describes the Grecian leaders to her father-in-law Priam,

Sim. Which shows that beauty hath his power and will,
Which can as well inflame, as it can kill.

[The fifth Knight passes.]

Thai. The fifth, an hand environed with clouds;
Holding out gold, that's by the touchstone tried:
The motto thus, Sic spectanda fides.

[The sixth Knight passes.]

Sim. And what's the sixth and last, which the knight himself

With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd?

Thai. He seems to be a stranger; but his present is
A wither'd branch, that's only green at top;
The motto, In hac spe vivo.⁷

Sim. A pretty moral;

From the dejected state wherein he is,
He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish.

1 Lord. He had need mean better than his outward show

Can any way speak in his just commend:

For, by his rusty outside, he appears To have practis'd more the whiptock,⁸ than the lance.

2 Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes
To an honor'd triumph, strangely furnished.

3 Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust
Until this day, to scour it in the dust.⁹

Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan
The outward habit by the inward man.¹⁰
But stay, the knights are coming; we'll withdraw
Into the gallery. [Exeunt.]

[Great shouts, and all cry, The mean knight.]

SCENE III. The same. A Hall of State. A Banquet prepared. Enter SIMONIDES, THAISA, Lords, Knights, and Attendants.

Sim. Knights,

To say you are welcome, were superfluous.

To place upon the volume of your deeds,

As in a title-page, your worth in arms,

Were more than you expect, or more than's fit,

Since every worth in show commends itself.

Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:

You are princes, and my guests.

Thai. But you, my knight and guest;

To whom this wreath of victory I give,

And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than my merit.

Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours;

And here, I hope, is none that envies it.

In framing artists, art hath thus decreed,

To make some good, but others to exceed;

And you're her labour'd scholar. Come, queen o'
the feast

(For, daughter, so you are,) here take your place:
Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simo-nides.

4 i. e. the mot or motto. See Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 6:—
'Now to my word.'

5 i. e. more by sweetness than by force. It should be 'Mas per dalgura,' &c. Piu is Italian not Spanish.

6 The work which appears to have furnished the author of the play with this and the two subsequent devices of the knights, has the following title:—'The heroical Devices of M. Claudius Paradin, canon of Beau-gen; whereunto are added the Lord Gabriel Symeon's, and others. Translated out of Latin into English, by P. S.' 1591, 24mo. Mr. Douce has given copies of some of them in his Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 126.

7 This device and motto may have been taken from Daniel's translation of Paulus Jovius, 1585; in which it will be found at sig. H 7. b.

8 i. e. the corter's whip. It was sometimes used as a term of contempt; as in Albumazar, 1615:—
'— out Carter,
Hence, dirty whiptock.'

9 The idea of this ill-appointed knight appears to have been taken from the first book of Sidney's Arcadia:—'His armour of as old a fashion, beside the rustic poornesse, &c. so that all that looked on measured his length on the earth already,' &c.

10 i. e. 'that makes as scan the inward man by the outward habit.' Such inversions are not uncommon in old writers.

Sim. Your presence glads our days ; honour we love,

For who hates honour, hates the gods above.

Marsh. Sir, yond's your place.

Per. Some other is more fit.

1 Knight. Contend not, sir ; for we are gentlemen, That neither in our hearts, nor outward eyes, Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sit, sir ; sit.

Per. By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts, These cates resist me,¹ be not thought upon.

Thai. By Juno, that is queen Of marriage, all the viands that eat Do seem unsavoury, wishing him my meat ; Sure he's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He's but

A country gentleman ; He has done no more than other knights have done ; Broken a staff, or so ; so let it pass.

Thai. To me he seems like diamond to glass.

Per. Your king's to me, like to my father's picture, Which tells me, in that glory once he was ; Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne, And he the sun, for them to reverence. None that beheld him, but like lesser lights, Did hail² their crowns to his supremacy ; Where³ now his son's a glowworm in the night, The which hath fire in darkness, none in light ; Whereby I see that time's the king of men, For he's their parent, and he is their grave,⁴ And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights ?

1 Knight. Who can be other, in this royal presence ?

Sim. Here, with a cup that's stor'd unto the brim,

(As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips,)

We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace.

Sim. Yet pause awhile ; You knight, methinks, doth sit too melancholy, As if the entertainment in our court Had not a show might countervail his worth. Note it not you, Thaisa ?

Thai. What is it

To me, my father ?

Sim. O, attend, my daughter ; Princes, in this, should live like gods above, Who freely give to every one that comes To honour them : and princes, not doing so, Are like to gnats, which make a sound, but kill'd Are wonder'd at.⁵

Therefore to make his entrance⁶ more sweet, Here say, we drink this standing-bowl of wine to him.

Thai. Alas, my father, it befits not me Unto a stranger knight to be so bold ; He may my proffer take for an offence, Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How !

Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

Thai. Now, by the gods, he could not please me better. [Aside.]

Sim. And further tell him, we desire to know, Of whence he is, his name, and parentage.

1 i. e. 'these delicacies go against my stomach.'—The old copy gives this speech to Simonides, and reads, 'he not thought upon.' Gower describes Apollinus, the Pericles of this play, under the same circumstances :—
'That he sat ever stille and thought,
As he which of no meat rought.'

2 Lower.

3 Where is here again used for whereas. The peculiar property of the glowworm, upon which the poet has here employed a line, is happily described in Hamlet in a single word :—

'The glowworm shows the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire.'

4 So in Romeo and Juliet :—

'The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb ;
What is her burying grave, that is her womb ;

Milton has the same thought :—

The womb of nature, and perhaps her grave.'

Thai. The king, my father, sir, has drunk to you.

Per. I thank him.

Thai. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.

Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thai. And further he desires to know of you, Of whence you are, your name and parentage.

Per. A gentleman of Tyre—(my name, Pericles ; My education being in arts and arms ;)— Who looking for adventures in the world, Was by the rough seas reft of ships and men, And, after shipwreck, driven upon this shore.

Thai. He thanks your grace ; names himself Pericles,

A gentleman of Tyre, who only by Misfortune of the seas has been bereft Of ships and men, and cast upon this shore.

Sim. Now by the gods, I pity his misfortune, And will awake him from his melancholy.

Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles, And waste the time, which looks for other revels. Even in your armours, as you are address'd,⁷ Will very well become a soldier's dance. I will not have excuse, with saying, this Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads ; Since they love men in arms, as well as beds.

[The Knights dance.]

So, this was well ask'd, 'twas so well perform'd.

Come, sir ;

Here is a lady that wants breathing too :

And I have often heard, you knights of Tyre

Are excellent in making ladies trip ;

And that their measures are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them, they are, my lord.

Sim. O, that's as much, as you would be denied [The Knights and Ladies dance.]

Of your fair courtesy.—Unclass, unclasp ;

Thanks, gentlemen, to all ; all have done well ; But you the best. [To PERICLES.] Pages and lights, conduct

These knights unto their several lodgings : Yours, sir,

We have given order to be next our own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.

Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love,

For that's the mark I know you level at :

Therefore each one betake him to his rest ;

To-morrow, all for speeding do their best.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Tyre. A Room in the Governor's House. Enter HELICANUS and ESCANES.

Hel. No, no, my Escanes ; know this of me,— Antiochus from incest liv'd not free ; For which, the most high gods not minding longer, To withhold the vengeance that they had in store, Due to this heinous capital offence, Even in the height and pride of all his glory, When he was seated, and his daughter with him, In a chariot of inestimable value, A fire from heaven came, and shrivell'd up Their bodies, even to loathing ; for they so stunk, That all those eyes ador'd them⁸ ere their fall, Scorn now their hand should give them burial, Esca. 'Twas very strange.

5 'When kings, like insects, lie dead before us, our admiration is excited by contemplating how in both instances the powers of creasting bustle were superior to those which either object should seem to have promised. The worthless monarch, and the idle gnat, have only lived to make an empty bluster ; and when both alike are dead, we wonder how it happened that they made so much, or that we permitted them to make it : a natural reflection on the death of an unserviceable prince, who having dispensed no blessings, can hope for no better character.'—Stevens.

6 By his entrance appears to be meant his present trance, the reverie in which he is sitting.

7 'As you are accoutred, prepared for combat.' So in King Henry V. :—

'To-morrow for the march are we address'd,'

8 i. e. which ador'd them,

Hel. And yet but just; for though
This king were great, his greatness was no guard
To bar heaven's shaft; but sin had his reward.
Esca. 'Tis very true.

Enter Three Lords.

1 Lord. See, not a man in private conference,
Or council, has respect with him but he.
2 Lord. It shall no longer grieve without reproof.
3 Lord. And curst be he that will not second it.
2 Lord. Follow me, then: Lord Helicane, a word.
Hel. With me? and welcome: Happy day, my lords.
1 Lord. Know that our griefs are risen to the top,
And now at length they overflow their banks.
Hel. Your griefs, for what? wrong not the prince you love.

1 Lord. Wrong not yourself, then, noble Helicane;
But if the prince do live, let us salute him,
Or know what ground's made happy by his breath.
If in the world he live, we'll seek him out;
If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there:
And be resolv'd,² he lives to govern us,
Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral,
And leaves us to our free election.

2 Lord. Whose death's, indeed, the strongest in our censure:³

And knowing this kingdom, if without a head,
(Like goodly buildings left without a roof,)
Will soon to ruin fall, your noble self,
That best know'st how to rule, and how to reign,
We thus submit unto,—our sovereign.

All. Live, noble Helicane!
Hel. Try honour's cause, forbear your suffrages:
If that you love prince Pericles, forbear.
'Take I your wish, I leap into the seat,⁴ Where's hourly trouble for a minute's ease.
A twelvemonth longer, let me then entreat you
To forbear choice¹ the absence of your king;⁵
If in which time expir'd, he not return,
I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.
But if I cannot win you to this love,
Go search like noblemen, like noble subjects,
And in your search spend your adventurous worth;
Whom if you find, and win unto return,
You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

1 Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield;
And, since Lord Helicane enjoineeth us,
We with our travels will endeavour it.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll clasp hands;
When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Pentapolis. A Room in the Palace.
Enter SIMONIDES, reading a Letter; the Knights meet him.

1 Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides.
Sim. Knights, from my daughter this I let you know,
That for this twelvemonth, she'll not undertake
A married life.
Her reason to herself is only known,
Which from herself by no means can I get.

2 Knight. May we not get access to her, my lord?

Sim. 'Faith, by no means; she hath so strictly tied her
To her chamber, that it is impossible.
One twelve moons more she'll wear Diana's livery;

1 'To what this charge of partiality was designed to conduct we do not learn; for it appears to have no influence over the rest of the dialogue.'—Steevens.

2 Satisfied.
3 i.e. 'the most probable in our opinion.' Censure is frequently used for judgment, opinion, by Shakspeare.

4 The old copy reads:—
'Take I your wish, I leap into the seas,' &c.
Steevens contends for the old reading; that it is merely figurative, and means, 'I embark too hastily on an expedition in which ease is disproportioned to labour.'

5 Some word being omitted in this line in the old copy, Steevens thus supplied it:—
'To forbear choice¹ the absence of your king.'

This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd,⁶
And on her virgin honour will not break it.
3 Knight. Though loath to bid farewell, we take our leaves. [Exeunt.]

Sim. So,
They're well despatch'd; now to my daughter's letter:

She tells me here, she'll wed the stranger knight,
Or never more to view nor day nor light.
Mistress, 'tis well, your choice agrees with mine;
I like that well:—nay, how absolute she's in't,
Not minding whether I dislike or no!
Well, I commend her choice;
And will no longer have it be delay'd.
Soft, here he comes:—I must dissemble it.

Enter PERICLES.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!
Sim. To you as much, sir! I am beholden to you,
For your sweet music this last night: my ears,
I do protest, were never better fed
With such delightful pleasing harmony.
Per. It is your grace's pleasure to commend;
Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music's master.
Per. The worst of all her scholars, my good lord.
Sim. Let me ask one thing. What do you think, sir, of
My daughter?

Per. As of a most virtuous princess.
Sim. And she is fair, too, is she not?
Per. As a fair day in summer: wondrous fair.
Sim. My daughter, sir, thinks very well of you;
Ay, so well, sir, that you must be her master,
And she'll your scholar be; therefore look to it.
Per. Unworthy I to be her schoolmaster.
Sim. She thinks not so; peruse this writing else.
Per. What's here!

A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre!
'Tis the king's subtlety to have my life. [Aside.]
O, seek not to entrap, my gracious lord,
A stranger, and distressed gentleman,
That never aim'd so high, to love your daughter,
But bent all offices to honour her.

Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter, and thou art
A villain.

Per. By the gods, I have not, sir.
Never did thought of mine levy offence;
Nor never did my actions yet commence
A deed might gain her love, or your displeasure.
Sim. Traitor, thou liest.

Per. Traitor!
Sim. Ay, traitor, sir.
Per. Even in his throat (unless it be the king,) That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage. [Aside.]

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
That never relish'd⁷ of a base descent.
I came unto your court, for honour's cause,
And not to be a rebel to her state;
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This sword shall prove his honour's enemy.

Sim. No!—
Here comes my daughter, she can witness it

Enter THAISIA.

Per. Then as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you?
Thai. Why, sir, say if you had,
Who takes offence at that would make me glad.

6 'It were to be wished, (says Steevens,) that Simonides, who is represented as a blameless character, had hit on some more ingenious expedient for the dismissal of these wooers. Here he tells them, as a solemn truth, what he knows to be a fiction of his own.'

7 So in Hamlet:—
'That has no relish of salvation in it.'
And in Macbeth:—
'So well thy words become thee as thy wounds,
They smack of honour both.'

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?—
I am glad of it with all my heart. [Aside.] I'll tame you;
I'll bring you in subjection.—
Will you, not having my consent, bestow
Your love and your affections on a stranger?
(Who, for aught I know to the contrary,
Or think, may be as great in blood as I.) [Aside.
Hear, therefore, mistress; frame your will to mine,—
And you, sir, hear you.—Either be rul'd by me,
Or I will make you—man and wife.—
Nay, come; your hands and lips must seal it too.—
And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;—
And for a further grief,—God give you joy!
What, are you both pleas'd?

Thai. Yes, if you love me, sir.

Per. Even as my life, my blood that fosters it.¹

Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, please your majesty.

Sim. It pleaseth me so well, I'll see you wed;

Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed.
[Ereunt.]

ACT III.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Now sleep yslanded hath the rout;
No din but snores, the house about,
Made louder by the o'er-fed breast²
Of this most pompous marriage-feast.
The cat, with eyne of burning coal,
Now couches 'fore the mouse's hole;
And crickets sing at th' oven's mouth,
As the blither for their drouth.
Hymen hath brought the bride to bed,
Where, by the loss of maidenhead,
A babe is moulded;—Be attent,
And time that is so briefly spent,
With your fine fancies quaintly eche;³
What's dumb in show, I'll plain with speech.

Dumb Show.

Enter PERICLES and SIMONIDES at one door, with Attendants: a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives PERICLES a Letter. PERICLES shows it to SIMONIDES; the Lords kneel to the former.⁴ Then enter THASIA with child, and LYCHORIDA. SI-MONIDES shows his Daughter the Letter; she re-joices: she and PERICLES take leave of her Father, and depart. Then SIMONIDES, &c. retire.

Gow. By many a dearn and painful perch⁵

1 The quarto of 1619 reads:—

'Even as my life or blood that fosters it.'

We have the same thought most exquisitely expressed in Julius Cæsar:—

'As dear to me, as are the ruddy drops

That visit my sad heart.'

2 So Virgil, speaking of Rhamnes, who was killed in the midnight expedition of Nisus and Euryalus:

'Rhamneten aggredditur, qui forte tapetibus altis

Exstructus, toto proflabat pectore somnum.'

3 Eke out.

4 The Lords kneel to Pericles, because they are now, for the first time, informed by this letter, that he is king of Tyre. 'No man,' says Gower, in his Confessio Amantis:—

_____ knew the soth cas,

But he hym selfs; what man he was.'

By the death of Antiochus and his daughter, Pericles has also succeeded to the throne of Antioch, in consequence of having rightly interpreted the riddle proposed to him.

5 Dearn signifies lonely, solitary. A perch is a measure of five yards and a half. 'The careful search of Pericles is made by many a dearn and painful perch, by the four opposing coignes which join the world together; with all due diligence.'

6 i.e. help, befriend or assist the search. So in Measure for Measure:—

_____ can you so stead me

To bring me to the sight of Isabella?

7 i.e. to suppress: oppress.

8 An exclamation equivalent to well-a-day.

9 'The further consequences of this storm I shall not describe; what ensues may be conveniently exhibited in action; but action could not well have displayed all the events that I have now related.'

Of Pericles the careful search
By the four opposing coignes,
Which the world together joins,
Is made with all due diligence,
That horse, and sail, and high expense,
Can stead the quest.⁶ At last from Tyre,
(Fame answering the most strong inquire,)
To the court of King Simonides
Are letters brought; the tenor these:
Antiochus and his daughter's dead:
The men of Tyrus, on the head
Of Helicanus would set on
The crown of Tyre, but he will none:
The mutiny there he hastes t' oppress;⁷
Says to them, if King Pericles
Come not home, in twice six moons,
He, obedient to their dooms,
Will take the crown. The sum of this,
Brought hither to Pentapolis,
Y-ravished the regions round,
And every one with claps 'gan sound.
Our heir apparent is a king:

Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?

Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre:
His queen, with child, makes her desire,
(Which, who shall cross?) along to go;
(Omit we all their dole and wo;)

Lychorida, her nurse, she takes,
And so to sea. Their vessel shakes
On Neptune's billow; half the flood
Hath their keel cut; but fortune's mood
Varies again; the grizzled north
Disgorges such a tempest forth,
That, as a duck for life that dives,
So up and down the poor ship drives.
The lady shrieks, and, well-a-nea!⁸
Doth fall in travail with her fear:
And what ensues in this fell storm
Shall, for itself, itself perform.
I will relate; action may

Conveniently the rest convey:
Which might not what by me is told.⁹

In your imagination hold
This stage, the ship,¹⁰ upon whose deck
The sea-tost Pericles appears to speak. [Exit.]

SCENE I. Enter PERICLES, on a Ship at Sea.

Per. Thou God of this great vast,¹¹ rebuke these surges,

10 It is clear from these lines that when the play was originally performed, no attempt was made to exhibit either a sea or a ship. The ensuing scene and some others must have suffered considerably in the representation, from the poverty of the stage apparatus in the time of the author.

11 It should be remembered that Pericles is supposed to speak from the deck. Lychorida, on whom he calls, is supposed to be in the cabin beneath. 'This great vast' is 'this wide expanse.' This speech is exhibited in so strange a form in the old editions, that it is here given to enable the reader to judge in what a corrupt state it has come down to us, and be induced to treat the attempts to restore it to integrity with indulgence:—

'The God of this great vast, rebuke these surges,
Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou that hast
Upon the windes command, bind them in brass;
Having call'd them from the deepe, o still
Thy deafning dreadful thunders, gently quench
Thy nimble sulphurous flashes, o How Lychorida!
How does my queene? thou storm venomously,
Wilt thou speat all thyself? the sea-mans whistle
Is as a whisper in the eares of death,
Unheard Lychorida? Lucina oh!
Divinest patroness and my wife gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy deitie
Aboard our dauncing boat, make swift the panguas
Of my queenes travayles? now Lychorida?'

Pericles, having called to Lychorida, without the power to make her hear on account of the tempest, at last with frantic peevishness addresses himself to it:—

_____ Thou storm thou! venomously

Wilt thou spit all thyself?—

Having indulged himself in this question, he grows cooler, and observes that the very boatswain's whistle has no more effect on the sailors than the voices of those who speak to the dead. He then repeats his inquiries

Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou, that hast
Upon the winds command, bind them in brass, Having call'd them from the deep! O still thy deaf'ning,
Thy dreadful thunders; gently quench thy nimble
Sulphureous flashes!—O how, Lychorida,
How does my queen!—Thou storm, thou! venomously!

Wilt thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's whistle
Is as a whisper in the ears of death,
Unheard.—Lychorida!—Lucina, O
Divinest patroness, and midwife, gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy deity
Aboard our dancing boat; make swift the pangs
Of my queen's travails!—Now, Lychorida—

Enter LYCHORIDA, with an Infant.

Lyc. Here is a thing
Too young for such a place, who if it had Conceit² would die as I am like to do.
Take in your arms this piece of your dead queen.

Per. How! how, Lychorida!

Lyc. Patience, good sir; do not assist the storm.
Here's all that is left living of your queen,—
A little daughter; for the sake of it,
Be manly, and take comfort.

Per. O, you gods!
Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,
And snatch them straight away? We, here below,
Recall not what we give, and therein may Vie³ honour with you.

Lyc. Patience, good sir,
Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life!
For a more blust'rous birth had never babe:
Quiet and gentle thy conditions!⁴
For thou art the rudest welcom'd to this world,
That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows!
Thou hast as chiding⁵ a nativity,
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb: even at the first,
Thy loss is more than can thy portage quit,⁶
With all thou canst find here.—Now the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon it!

Enter Two Sailors.

1 Sail. What courage, sir? God save you.

Per. Courage enough: I do not fear the flaw;⁷
It hath done to me the worst. Yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh-new sea-farer,
I would, it would be quiet.

1 Sail. Slack the bolins⁸ there; thou wilt not, wilt thou? Blow and split thyself.

2 Sail. But sea-room, and the brine and cloudy billow kiss the moon, I care not.

1 Sail. Sir, your queen must overboard; the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till the ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That's your superstition.

of Lychorida, but receiving no answer, concludes with a prayer for his queen.

1 Maliciously.

2 i. e. 'who if it had thought.'

3 That is, 'contend with you in honour.' The old copy reads:—'Use honour with you.'

4 Conditions are qualities, dispositions of mind.

5 i. e. as noisy a one.

6 i. e. thou hast already lost more (by the death of thy mother) than thy safe arrival at the port of life can counterbalance, with all to boot that we can give thee.
Portage is here used for conveyance into life.

7 A flaw is a stormy gust of wind. See Coriolanus,
Act v. Sc. 3.

8 Bolins or bowlines are ropes by which the sails of a ship are governed when the wind is unfavourable: they are slackened when it is high. Thus in The Two Noble Kinamen:—

—— the wind is fair;

Top the boeling.'

9 The old copy reads, 'strong in easterne.' The emendation is Mr. Boswell's.

10 Old copy, 'In oars.'

11 The old copies erroneously read:—

'The air-remaining lamps.'

The emendation is Malone's. The propriety of it will

1 Sail. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it still hath been observed; and we are strong in custom.⁹
Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard
straight.

Per. Be it as you think meet.—Most wretched
queen!

Lyc. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible child-bed hast thou had, my dear,
No light, no fire; the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly; nor have I time
To give thee hallow'd to thy grave, but straight
Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the ooze;¹⁰
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And aye-remaining¹¹ lamps, the belching whale,
And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,
Lying with simple shells. Lychorida,
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink, and paper,
My casket and my jewels; and bid Nicander
Bring me the satin coffer:¹² lay the babe
Upon the pillow: hie thee, whiles I say
A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit LYCHORIDA.]

2 Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatches, caulk'd and bitumed ready.

Per. I thank thee. Mariner, say, what coast is this?

2 Sail. We are near Tharsus.

Per. Thither, gentle mariner, Alter thy course for Tyre.¹³ When canst thou reach it?

2 Sail. By break of day, if the wind cease.

Per. O, make for Tharsus.

There will I visit Cleon, for the babe
Cannot hold out to Tyros; there I'll leave it
At careful nursing. Go thy ways, good mariner;
I'll bring the body presently. [Exit]

SCENE II. Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House. Enter CERIMON, a Servant, and some Persons who have been shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter PHILEMON.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men;
It has been a turbulent and stormy night.

Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as
this,

Till now I ne'er endur'd.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return;
There's nothing can be minister'd to nature,
That can recover him. Give this to the 'pothecary,
And tell him how it works.¹⁴ [To PHILEMON] [Exit PHILEMON, Servant, and those who had been shipwrecked.]

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Good morrow, sir.

2 Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Gentlemen,

Why do you stir so early?

be evident if we recur to the author's leading thought, which is founded on the customs observed in the pomp of ancient sepulture. Within old monuments and receptacles for the dead perpetual (i. e. aye-remaining) lamps were supposed to be lighted up. Thus Pope, in his Eloisa:—

'Ah hopeless lasting flames, like those that burn
To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn!'

'Instead of a monument erected over thy bones, and perpetual lamps to burn near them, the spouting whale shall oppress thee with his weight, and the mass of waters shall roll with low heavy murmur over thy head.'

12 The old copies have coffin. Pericles does not mean to bury his queen in this coffer (which was probably one lined with satin,) but to take from thence the clothes of state, in which she was afterwards shrouded.

13 'Change thy course, which is now for Tyre, and go to Tharsus.'

14 The precedent words show that the physic cannot be designed for the master of the servant here introduced.
Perhaps the circumstance was introduced for no other reason than to mark more strongly the extensive benevolence of Cerimon. It could not be meant for the poor men who have just left the stage, to whom he has ordered kitchen physic.

1 Gent. Sir,
Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook, as the earth did quake;
The very principals¹ did seem to rend,
And all to topple;² pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house.

2 Gent. That is the cause we trouble you so early;
'Tis not our husbandry.³

Cer. O, you say well.

1 Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship, having
Rich tire⁴ about you, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden slumber of repose.
It is most strange,
Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cer. I held it ever,
Virtue and cunning⁵ were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches; careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend;
But immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god. 'Tis known, I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o'er authorities, I have (Together with my practice,) made familiar
To me and to my aid, the blest infusions
